- |                                      |                    |                                     |     |     |                    |
|--------------------------------------|--------------------|-------------------------------------|-----|-----|--------------------|
| 1. O Mistress Mine ...               | Shakespeare | 3. No longer mourn for me ...       | ... | ... | Shakespeare |
| 2. Take, O take those lips away ...  | Shakespeare | 4. Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... | ... | ... | Shakespeare |
| 5. When icicles hang by the wall ... | Shakespeare |                                     |     |     |                    |

THIRD SET.

- |  |                 |                               |     |     |                       |
|--|-----------------|-------------------------------|-----|-----|-----------------------|
| 1. *To Lucasta, on going to the wars ... | Lovelace | 4. *Why so pale and wan ...   | ... | ... | Sucklin        |
| 2. If thou would'st ease thine heart ... | Beddoes  | 5. Through the ivory gate ... | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis |
| 3. *To Althea, from prison ...           | Lovelace | 6. Of all the torments ...    | ... | ... | William Wal.   |

FOURTH SET.

- |  |                               |  |     |     |              |
|--|-------------------------------|--|-----|-----|--------------|
| 1. *Thine eyes still shined for me ... | Emerson                | 4. Weep you no more ...                    | ... | ... | Anon. |
| 2. *When lovers meet again ...         | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. There be none of beauty's daughters ... | ... | ... | Byron |
| 3. *When we two parted ...             | Byron                  | 6. Bright star ...                         | ... | ... | Kea   |

FIFTH SET.

- |                               |                       |                                   |     |     |                                |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------|-----------------------------------|-----|-----|--------------------------------|
| 1. *A stray nymph of Dian ... | Julian Sturgis | 4. Lay a garland on my hearse ... | ... | ... | Beaumont &amp; Fletcher |
| 2. *Proud Maisie ...          | Scott          | 5. Love and laughter ...          | ... | ... | Arthur Butt.            |
| 3. *Crabbed age and youth ... | Shakespeare    | 6. A girl to her glass ...        | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis          |
| 7. A Lullaby ...              | ...                   | ...                               | ... | ... | E. O. Jones             |

SIXTH SET.

- |                                       |                    |                                      |     |     |                         |
|---------------------------------------|--------------------|--------------------------------------|-----|-----|-------------------------|
| 1. *When comes my Gwen ...            | E. O. Jones | 4. *A lover's garland ...            | ... | ... | Alfred P. Graves |
| 2. *And yet I love her till I die ... | Anon.       | 5. At the hour the long day ends ... | ... | ... | Alfred P. Graves |
| 3. *Love is a bable ...               | Anon.       | 6. Under the greenwood tree ...      | ... | ... | Shakespeare      |

SEVENTH SET.

- |  |                       |  |     |     |                       |
|--|-----------------------|--|-----|-----|-----------------------|
| 1. On a time the amorous Silvy ...       | Anon.          | 4. O never say that I was false of heart ... | ... | ... | Shakespeare    |
| 2. Follow a shadow ...                   | Ben Jonson     | 5. Julia ...                                 | ... | ... | Herri          |
| 3. Ye little birds that sit and sing ... | Thomas Heywood | 6. Sleep ...                                 | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis |

EIGHTH SET.

- |                            |                               |                         |     |     |                        |
|----------------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------------|-----|-----|------------------------|
| 1. Whence ...              | Julian Sturgis         | 4. Dirge in woods ...   | ... | ... | George Meredith |
| 2. Nightfall in winter ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. Looking backward ... | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis  |
| 3. Marian ...              | George Meredith        | 6. Grapes ...           | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis  |

NINTH SET.

- |                                    |                          |                        |     |     |                          |
|------------------------------------|--------------------------|------------------------|-----|-----|--------------------------|
| 1. Three aspects ...               | Mary E. Coleridge | 4. Whether I live ...  | ... | ... | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 2. A fairy town (St. Andrew's) ... | Mary E. Coleridge | 5. Armida's garden ... | ... | ... | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 3. The witches' wood ...           | Mary E. Coleridge | 6. The maiden ...      | ... | ... | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 7. There ...                       | ...                      | ...                    | ... | ... | Mary E. Coleridge |

TENTH SET.

- |  |                           |                                   |     |     |                               |
|--|---------------------------|-----------------------------------|-----|-----|-------------------------------|
| 1. My heart is like a singing bird ... | Christina Rossetti | 4. The child and the twilight ... | ... | ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| 2. Gone were but the winter cold ...   | Allan Cunningham   | 5. From a city window ...         | ... | ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| 3. A moment of farewell ...            | Julian Sturgis     | 6. One silent night of late ...   | ... | ... | Herri                  |

ELEVENTH SET.

- |                                    |                               |  |     |     |                               |
|------------------------------------|-------------------------------|--|-----|-----|-------------------------------|
| 1. One golden thread ...           | Julia Chatterton       | 5. The faithful lover ...                | ... | ... | Alfred Perceval Graves |
| 2. The spirit of the Spring ...    | Alfred Perceval Graves | 6. If I might ride on puissant wing ...  | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis         |
| 3. What part of dread eternity ... | Author unknown         | 7. Why art thou slow ...                 | ... | ... | Massing                |
| 4. The blackbird ...               | Alfred Perceval Graves | 8. She is my love beyond all thought ... | ... | ... | Alfred P. Graves       |

TWELFTH SET.

- |                                  |                         |                                 |     |     |                |
|----------------------------------|-------------------------|---------------------------------|-----|-----|----------------|
| 1. When the dew is falling ...   | Julia Chatterton | 4. When the sun's great orb ... | ... | ... | H. Warr |
| 2. To Blossoms ...               | Herrick          | 5. Dream pedlary ...            | ... | ... | Beddo   |
| 3. Rosaline ...                  | Lodge            | 6. O World, O Life, O Time ...  | ... | ... | Shelle  |
| 7. The sound of hidden music ... | Julia Chatterton |                                 |     |     |                |

* Published separately, price 1s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

SELECTED EDITION.

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

Price ... .. Eighteen Shillings each.

PREFACE.

This Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, and dances, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and Wales, and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE "STAR" EDITION OF THE

ORATORIOS

Old Notation and Tonic Sol-fa together.

NOW READY.

CREATION - - - -	HAYDN
ELIJAH - - - -	MENDELSSOHN
HYMN OF PRAISE )	MENDELSSOHN
AND LAUDA SION )
JUDAS MACCABÆUS -	HANDEL
MESSIAH - - - -	HANDEL
ST. PAUL - - - -	MENDELSSOHN

PRICE

PRICE

2/6

2/6

EACH.

EACH.

Postage extra, 6d. per volume. Sample copy forwarded, post free, to choirmasters, &c., upon receipt of 2s. 6d.

SPECIAL TERMS TO CHOIRS AND CHORAL SOCIETIES.

SOME RECENT OPINIONS.

.... I am pleased to notice this issue, as I have often thought the combined notations would prove far more serviceable than separately. It will simplify the conductor's efforts in referring to the position of any passage he wishes to call attention to where both notations are used. Sol-faists will have the benefit of following the instrumentation, which itself will lead to far greater intelligence. ...."

".... I think the book is very neatly set up, the printing clear and paper good, and the two notations very convenient. ..."

".... I wish I had known of your edition of the 'Messiah' earlier. It is the best possible edition for a choir composed, as mine is, of Sol-faists and Staff readers. I have thoroughly recommended it, and next year will persuade all new members to have your edition. ...."

".... I think the edition is ideal, and the Tonic Sol-fa adds greatly to its value. ...."

W. PAXTON &amp; CO., 95, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

AIR Within my heart of hearts ... A Stronghold Sure
 AIR Our Jesus hath for aye ... God goeth up
 AIR My heart ever trusting God so loved the world
 AIR O grant us, mighty Lord
Jesus, now will we praise Thee
 AIR Sighing, weeping ... My Spirit was in heaviness

ALTO.

AIR Thou, Whose praises never end ... Bide with us
 RECIT. { The Father hath appointed Him ... God goeth up
 AIR { My spirit Him describes ... " "
 AIR Into Thy hands ... God's time is best
 AIR Rejoice, ye souls, elect and holy
O Light Everlasting

TENOR.

AIR Lord, to us Thyself be showing ... Bide with us
 RECIT. { Why hast Thou then, O God
My Spirit was in heaviness
 AIR { Fast my bitter tears are flowing " "
 AIR Rejoice, O my spirit " "
 RECIT. { The mighty Guardian ... Thou Guide of Isr
 AIR { His face my Shepherd long is hiding " "
 AIR And why art thou, my soul, so fearful
When will God re

BASS.

RECIT. { He comes, the Lord of lords ... God goeth up
 AIR { 'Tis He, Who all alone ... " "
 RECIT. { It is not mine ... God so loved the world
 AIR { On my behalf ... " "
 RECIT. { Yea, this Thy word ... Thou Guide of Isr
 AIR { Whom Jesus deigns ... " "
 AIR Yet silence ... When will God re

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH HARPSICHORD MUSIC.

THE

Complete Harpsichord Works of Henry Purcell.

EDITED BY W. BARCLAY SQUIRE.

IN FOUR VOLUMES (Chester Series, Nos. 36-39).

PRICE, EACH VOLUME - THREE SHILLINGS NET CASH.

THE CONTEMPORARIES OF PURCELL.

SELECTED AND EDITED BY

J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND.

Vols. I. and II. - John Blow | Vol. V. - Jeremiah Clarke
 Vols. III. and IV. - William Croft | Vols. VI. and VII. Various Composers
 (Chester Series, Nos. 51-57.)

PRICE, EACH VOLUME - THREE SHILLINGS NET CASH.

J. &amp; W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

No. 1282.

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.—Granville Bantock.

Price—3d—4d.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

- |   |  |   |
|---|--|---|
| 14 Absence ... H. Goetz 2d.   | No. 464 Autumn is come again (5 V.) ... F. Corder 3d.                            | No. 1272 Call John (humorous) ... arr. W. W. Pearson 3d.  |
| 17 * Do. (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 1d.  | 403 Autumn song ... S. Reay 3d.  | 1122 Calm is the lake ... F. Abt 3d.                      |
| 51 * Do. ... J. L. Hatton 1d.   | 683 Do. ... J. Rheinberger 2d.   | 359 Calm night ... J. L. Hatton 3d.                       |
| 67 Adieu love, adieu G. A. Macfarren 3d.  | 484 Ave Maria ... J. Raff 3d.  | 380 Calm of the sea, The H. Hiles 4d.                     |
| 12 Adieu, my native shore Pearsall 2d.  | 241 * Do. ... H. Smart 1d.   | 911 * Capture of Cremona, The ... arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.  |
| 43 Adieu, sweet Amaryllis ... J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.                               | 968 * Awake, awake ... G. Bantock 3d.  | 314 Caput apri defero ... Pearsall 3d.                    |
| 57 Do. ... C. Macpherson 3d.  | 76 * Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold ... H. Leslie 1d.                          | 178 * Caravan, The ... C. Pinsuti 1d.                     |
| 90 Adieu to the woods ... S. J. G. Egerton 3d.                                    | 25 Awake the starry midnight hour ... Mendelssohn 2d.                            | 1251 * Cargoes ... H. B. Gardiner 3d.                     |
| 56 Advice to lovers ... P. W. Pilcher 2d.   | 923 * Away to the woodlands ... H. W. Warner 3d.                                 | 1273 Carrion Crow, The (humorous) ... W. W. Pearson 3d.   |
| 13 After the battle ... arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.                                    | 978 * Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, A ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.                   | 607 Cavalier, The ... C. Goodall 3d.                      |
| 74 Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.) ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                             | 225 Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 3d.                            | 529 Cavalry song ... C. A. Macrone 3d.                    |
| 75 Ah! what is love ... W. McNaught 3d.   | 193 Bait, The (Come live with me) ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                           | 635 Cephalus and Procris ... A. W. Batson 3d.             |
| 15 Ah! woe is me (6 V.) ... H. Lahee 4d.  | 996 * Ballad, A (8 V.) ... T. Wendt 3d.  | 482 Chaffer's Wedding, A (humorous) ... Lewandowski 6d.   |
| 48 Arley Beacon ... C. V. Stanford 2d.  | 1016 Ballade of Midsummer ... H. Leslie 3d.                                      | 1087 Chapel, The ... C. Kreutzer 3d.                      |
| 66 Airs of Summer ... J. L. Roedel 2d.  | 1017 Ballade of Spring ... 4d.   | 427 * Charge of the Light Brigade, The ... E. Hecht 4d.   |
| 17 All among the barley E. Stirling 3d.   | 1044 * Battle of the Baltic, The ... C. H. Lloyd 4d.                             | 906 Do. ... J. B. McEwen 3d.                              |
| 71 All for my true love H. D. Wetton 3d.  | 861 * Battle song, A arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.                                      | 847 * Chase, The ... E. German 3d.                        |
| 81 All is not gold that shineth bright ... in snow (5 V.) ... W. A. Macfarren 1d. | 578 Do. ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.   | 757 Cherry ripe ... A. H. Brewer 2d.                      |
| 94 * All is still ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.   | 1334 * Beacon, The ... A. Carse 3d.  | 583 Do. ... arr. E. Land 1d.                              |
| 52 All Souls' Day ... J. Rheinberger 3d.  | 689 Beauty, arise ... K. J. Pye 3d.  | 1255 * Do. ... W. G. Ross 2d.                             |
| 09 All ye woods and trees and bow'rs ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                         | 841 Before me careless lying (5 V.) ... C. H. Lloyd 4d.                          | 731 Do. (6 V.) ... S. P. Waddington 3d.                   |
| 83 * Do. (5 V.) ... H. Lahee 1d.  | 238 * Beleaguered, The A. S. Sullivan 1d.  | 1212 Cheshire cheese, The ... arr. J. C. Bridge 3d.       |
| 40 Do. ... H. W. Wareing 3d.  | 56 * Belfry Tower, The J. L. Hatton 1d.  | 734 Chi la Gagliarda ... B. Donato 3d.                    |
| 37 * Allan Water arr. H. E. Button 2d.  | 311 * Belgian National song ... F. Campenhout 1d.                                | 315 Chieftain to the Highland bound, A ... Pearsall 2d.   |
| 28 * Allen-a-Dale ... C. B. McEwen 3d.  | 572 Bells across the snow Ch. Gounod 3d.   | 466 * Do. ... O. Prescott 4d.                             |
| 70 * Do. ... J. B. McEwen 3d.   | 472 * Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The W. Knvett (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart 4d. | 94 Childhood's melody ... F. Berger 1d.                   |
| 13 Already snow has fallen R. Franz 1d.   | 1271 * Ben Bowlegs (humorous) ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                              | 101 Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.) ... J. B. Calkin 4d.   |
| 34 Alton Locke's Song ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.                                     | 984 Bendemeer's Stream ... J. Pointer 2d.  | 1145 Chloe, that dear bewitching prude ... H. Willan 2d.  |
| 11 * Amaryllis I did woo ... John E. West 2d.                                     | 1216 Bend the river ... A. Jensen 3d.  | 1147 * Chorus of Empire ... C. A. E. Harriss 3d.          |
| 22 * American National Songs (Three) ... John E. West 1d.                         | 793 Better music ne'er was known ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.                          | 66 * Christmas ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.                    |
| 72 Amintor's well-a-day ... John E. West 3d.                                      | 184 * Beware ... J. L. Hatton 1d.  | 1109 * Christmas greeting, A E. Elgar 6d.                 |
| 64 An address to the nightingale ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                            | 220 Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 1d.  | 314 Christmas song, A ... Pearsall 3d.                    |
| 75 An Autumn song ... C. Pinsuti 3d.  | 111 * Bird of the Wilderness J. Barnby 3d.                                       | 967 Do. ... M. Pratorius 2d.                              |
| 25 An emigrant's song ... W. Macfarren 3d.  | 196 Do. ... J. L. Hatton 3d.   | 845 Close to my heart ... W. Davies 3d.                   |
| 74 * An Empire song A. C. Mackenzie 3d.   | 1157 Birds are singing, The Hans Sitt 2d.  | 677 * Clouds, The J. Rheinberger 3d.                      |
| 53 An end will I bring ... Schubert 3d.   | 798 Birthday serenade, A G. Elvey 3d.  | 823 Come again, sweet days ... J. Dowland 2d.             |
| 87 * An old Song resung ... H. B. Gardiner 4d.                                    | 1308 Brightlight, The ... E. Elgar 3d.   | 726 * Come away ... E. German 3d.                         |
| 85 And then no more ... R. Raff 2d.   | 300 * Bishop of Mentz, The Pearsall 3d.  | 873 * Do. ... H. Parker 4d.                               |
| 92 * Angelic hunter ... arr. J. Brahms 3d.  | 1107 * Black Monk, The (Welsh folk-song) arr. R. Boughton 3d.                    | 1169 Come away, come away, death ... arr. Arne 2d.        |
| 01 Angel's call The I. I. Viotta 1d.  | 55 * Blow, blow thou winter wind ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.                         | 36 Do. (5 V.) G. A. Macfarren 3d.                         |
| 60 * Angel's greeting, The J. Brahms 3d.  | 1254 Blow, breeze, from the North ... G. Elvey 3d.                               | 51 * Do. (5 V.) ... 3d.                                   |
| 07 * Angelus (Tuscany) ... E. Elgar 4d.   | 1369 Blow, western wind ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                                    | 58 Come celebrate the May ... J. L. Hatton 1d.            |
| 40 * Anglers, The W. W. Pearson 2d.   | 661 * Blue-bottle's fate, The (humorous) A. H. Ashworth 3d.                      | 668 Come, fairies, trip it ... F. Iliffe 3d.              |
| 30 Angler's Trysting-tree, The ... C. W. Corfe 3d.                                | 544 Blue-eyed lassie, The F. Brandeis 3d.  | 102 Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.) ... J. B. Calkin 3d.    |
| 39 * Annie Laurie arr. H. E. Button 2d.   | 933 * Blwyddyn Bywyd D. Protheroe 3d.  | 118 * Come follow me A. Zimmermann 1d.                    |
| 98 Annie Lee ... J. Barnby 1d.  | 187 Blythe is the Bird ... J. L. Hatton 2d.                                      | 143 Come forth, the summer's murmur hear ... E. Franz 2d. |
| 82 April showers ... J. L. Hatton 1d.   | 399 * Boat Song ... E. Prout 4d.   | 14 Come, heavy sleep ... J. Dowland 2d.                   |
| 18 Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... W. Shield 3d.   | 357 Do. ... F. Schubert 2d.  | 745 Come if you dare ... Purcell 4d.                      |
| 16 Arethusa, The ... H. Leslie 1d.  | 1088 Boat, The ... R. Schumann 3d.   | 1210 Come, lasses and lads ... arr. J. C. Bridge 3d.      |
| 37 Arise, sweet love ... H. Leslie 3d.  | 385 Boating Song ... E. G. Monk 2d.  | 899 Come let me take thee J. Pulein 2d.                   |
| 97 Arise, the sunbeams hail F. Berger 3d.   | 521 * Boatman's Good-night, The ... F. Schira 1d.                                | 317 Come let us be merry ... Pearsall 1d.                 |
| 20 Around the maypole tripping ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                               | 545 * Bonnie Bell A. C. Mackenzie 2d.  | 507 * Come live with me W. S. Bennett 3d.                 |
| 59 * Arranmore Boat Song ... arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.                               | 1310 * Boy, The (humorous) ... A. H. Brewer 3d.                                  | 360 Do. (The Bait) ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                   |
| 57 * Arrow and the song, The W. Hay 3d.   | 63 * Break, break on thy cold grey stones, O sea G. A. Macfarren 1d.             | 193 Do. (The Bait) ... J. L. Gregory 2d.                  |
| 73 As Amoret with Phillis sat ... John E. West 2d.                                | 99 Breathe soft, ye winds J. B. Calkin 1d.                                       | 1052 Come, O come, dearest, come ... Schubert 3d.         |
| 54 As dewdrops at morn ... Schubert 2d.   | 1307 * Do. ... W. Paxton 4d.   | 671 Come o'er the burn, Bessie (3 V.) ... 2d.             |
| 25 As I saw fair Clara ... F. Corder 3d.  | 878 Bridal Song ... H. Leslie 1d.  | 1214 Come out across the heather ... A. Jensen 3d.        |
| 46 As it fell upon a day ... S. Reay 3d.  | 639 Bright be thy dreams Oliver King 2d.   | 791 * Come, pretty wag, and sing ... C. H. H. Parry 2d.   |
| 19 As the ripples flow ... E. A. Sydenham 2d.                                     | 402 * Bright-hair'd morn, The S. Reay 3d.  | 38 Come sleep ... J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.                   |
| 55 As the watcher longs ... Schubert 2d.  | 584 Bright Moon ... John E. West 2d.   | 1060 Do. ... J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.                        |
| 60 As through the land ... J. Pulein 2d.  | 1222 * Bring me a golden pen ... F. H. Cowen 3d.                                 | 1110 * Do. ... R. H. Walthew 1d.                          |
| 96 * As torrents in summer E. Elgar 2d.   | 601 Broken Flower, The Oliver King 2d.   | 945 Do. ... A. G. Wathall 3d.                             |
| 80 As when the sun renews his strength (Madrigal) C. E. Miller 3d.                | 447 Brook, The ... C. G. Reissiger 3d.   | 1007 * Come to me, gentle sleep ... F. H. Cowen 3d.       |
| 57 * Ash Grove, The arr. Dunhill 3d.  | 1015 * Brownies, The Moellendorff 3d.  | 701 Do. ... H. W. Schartau 3d.                            |
| 05 At Adernach in Rhineland Abt 3d.   | 223 Busy, curious, thirsty fly (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 2d.                   | 713 Come, tuneful friends (humorous) ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.  |
| 15 At first the mountain rill ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.                             | 743 * Butterfly, The J. Blumenthal 4d.   | 1032 Come with me, fairest J. Brahms 3d.                  |
| 81 At her fair hands ... J. Elliott 2d.   | 1095 * By a gentle river laid ... John E. West 3d.                               | 615 Comfort ... H. Goetz 2d.                              |
| 35 At parting ... C. H. H. Parry 1d.  | 1002 * By the waters of Babylon ... P. Cornelius 2d.                             | 999 * Comfort in tears ... P. Cornelius 4d.               |
| 18 * At the coming of the Spring ... J. L. Hatton 3d.                             | 1141 By woodland and wayside ... E. Franz 2d.                                    | 1182 * Comrades' song of hope, The ... arr. A. Adan 2d.   |
| 95 Auburn ... arr. E. Land 1d.  |  | 383 Confidence (8 V.) ... R. Schumann 3d.                 |
| 82 * Auld Lang Syne ... arr. E. Land 1d.  |  |   |
| 71 Autolycus' Song ... C. A. Macrone 1d.  |  |   |
| 06 * Do. ... C. Lee Williams 3d.  |  |   |
| 58 Autumn ... W. Macfarren 3d.  |  |   |
| 53 * Do. (T.T.B.S.) ... 1d.   |  |   |
| 71 Do. ... A. C. Mackenzie 1d.  |  |   |
| 02 Autumn fields, The W. W. Wade 3d.  |  |   |

MADE IN ENGLAND.

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN

THE WORDS AND AIR BY MARY M. CAMPBELL

FOR CHORUS OF MIXED VOICES (UNACCOMPANIED)

BY

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

I. Con spirito. espress.

SOPRANO. f There's ma - ny a man of the Cam - er - on clan, That has fol - low'd his chief to the ALTO. f There's ma - ny a man of the Cam - er - on clan, That has fol - low'd his chief to the

TENOR. f There's ma - ny a man of the Cam - er - on clan, That has fol - low'd his chief to the

BASS. f There's ma - ny a man of the Cam - er - on clan, That has fol - low'd his chief to the field; . . . He has sworn to sup - port him, or die by his side, For a field; . . . He has sworn to sup - port him, or die by his side, For a

(For practice only.) *I. Con spirito.
f espress.*

cres.

cres.

cres.

field, to the field; He has sworn to sup - port him, or die by his side, For a field, to the field; He has sworn to sup - port him, or die by his side, For a

cres.

cres.

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

deciso.
Cam-er-on nev-er can yield. . . . I.. hear the pi-broch sound-ing, sound-ing,
mf

deciso.
Cam-er-on nev-er can yield. . . . I.. hear the pi-broch sound-ing, sound-ing,
mf

deciso.
Cam-er-on nev-er can yield. . . . I.. hear the pi-broch sound-ing,
mf

deciso.
Cam-er-on nev-er can yield. . . . I.. hear the pi-broch sound-ing,
mf

dim. cres.
Deep o'er the moun-tain and glen; . . . . While light springing foot-steps are

dim. cres.
Deep o'er the moun-tain and glen, and o'er glen; While light springing foot-steps are

dim. cres.
Deep o'er the moun-tain and glen; . . . . While light springing foot-steps are

dim. cres.
Deep o'er the moun-tain and glen, and o'er glen; While light springing foot-steps are

dim. cres.

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er - on men, . . . 'tis the tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er - on men, . . . 'tis the tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er - on men, of the Cam - er - on tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er - on men, of the Cam - er - on march, . . . 'tis the march, . . . 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on men. . . .

march, . . . 'tis the march, . . . 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on men. . . .

men, 'tis the march, 'tis the march, 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on men. . . .

men, 'tis the march, 'tis the march, 'tis the march . . . of the Cam - er - on men.

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

II.

a tempo.

Oh! proud - ly they walk, but each Cam - er - on knows He may

a tempo.

Oh! proud - ly they walk, but each Cam - er - on knows He may

a tempo.
mf espress.

Oh! proud - ly they walk, but each Cam - er - on knows He may tread on the hea - ther no

a tempo.
mf

Oh! proud - ly they walk, but each Cam - er - on knows He may tread on the hea - ther no

II.

a tempo.
mf espress.cres.

tread on the hea - ther no more; But bold - ly he fol - lows his chief to the

cres.

tread on the hea - ther no more; But bold - ly he fol - lows his chief to the

cres.

more; . . . But bold - ly he fol - lows his chief to the field, Where his

cres.

more; . . . But bold - ly he fol - lows his chief to the field, Where his

cres.

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

field, Where his lau - - - rels were gathered be - fore. I hear the pi - broch sound-ing, field, Where his lau - rels, his lau - rels were gathered be - fore. I hear the pi - broch sound-ing, lau - rels were gathered be - fore. . . . I.. hear the pi - broch sound-ing, sound-ing, lau - rels were ga-thered be - fore. . . . I.. hear the pi - broch sound-ing, sound-ing,

Deep o'er the moun-tain and glen ; . . While

Deep o'er the moun - tain and glen ; . . While

Deep o'er the moun - tain and glen ; . . While light - spring-ing foot - steps are Deep o'er the moun - tain and glen ; . . While light - spring-ing foot - steps are

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

light - springing footsteps are trampling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er-on light - springing footsteps are trampling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er-on tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er-on men, . . . 'tis the tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er-on men, . . . 'tis the men, 'tis the march, 'tis the march, 'tis the march of the Cam - - - er-on men.

men, 'tis the march, 'tis the march, 'tis the march of the Cam - - - er-on men.

march, . . . 'tis the march, . . . 'tis the march of the Cam - - - er-on men.

march, . . . tis the march, . . . 'tis the march of the Cam - er-on - men. . . .

espress. f

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

III.

Poco lento. espress.

The moon has a - ris - en, it shines on that path Now trod by the gal - lant and

The moon has a - ris - en, it shines on that path Now trod by the gal - lant and

The moon has a - ris - en, it shines on that

The moon has a - ris - en, it shines on that

III.

Poco lento.

true ; . . . High, high are their hopes, for their chief - tain has said, That what true ; . . . High, high are their hopes, for their chief - tain has said, That what path Now trod by the gal - lant and true, gal - lant and true, path Now trod by the gal - lant and true, gal - lant and true.

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

dim.
 - ev - er men dare, they can do. . . . I

dim. mf espress.
 - ev - er men dare, they can do. . . . I . . . hear the pi - broch

dim. mf
 gal - . . . lant and true. . . . I . . . hear the pi - broch mp sost.

 I hear the pi - broch sound . . .

dim. mf espress.
 hear the pi - broch sound . . . ing, While

dim. mf
 sound - ing, sound - ing, Deep o'er the moun-tain and glen; . . . While

dim. mf
 sound - ing, sound - ing, Deep o'er the moun-tain and glen; . . . While

dim. mf
 ing, sound . . . ing, While

a piacere. mf
 ing, While

dim. mf
 ing, While

a piacere. mf
 ing, While

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

Poco affrettando.

light - springing foot-steps are tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er - on light - springing foot-steps are tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march, 'tis the light - springing foot-steps are tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march of the Cam - er - on light - springing foot-steps are tramp-ling the heath, 'Tis the march, 'tis the

Poco affrettando.

men, . . . . tis the march, . . . 'tis the march, . . . 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on men, 'tis the march, . . . 'tis the march, . . .

men, . . . . 'tis the march, . . . 'tis the march, . . . 'tis the

march of the Cam - er - on men, 'tis the march, . . . 'tis the march, . . .

MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN.

The musical score is written for a vocal part and a piano accompaniment. The key signature has two sharps (F# and C#), and the time signature is 2/4. The score is divided into several systems, each with a vocal line and a piano line. The lyrics are: "march, 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on", "'tis the march, 'tis the march, . . 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on", "men, 'tis the march . . of the Cam - er - on men.", and ". . of the Cam - er - on men, 'tis the march . . of the Cam - er - on men." The score includes various performance markings such as sost. (sostenuto), più f (più forte), feroce. (ferocious), ff (fortissimo), and dim. e morendo. (diminuendo and morendo). The piano part features a rhythmic accompaniment with eighth and sixteenth notes, and the vocal part has a melody with some syncopation.

sost. più f
march, . . . 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on

più f
'tis the march, 'tis the march, . . 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on

sost. più f
march, . . . 'tis the march of the Cam - er - on

più f sost.
'tis the march, 'tis the march, . . 'tis the march

più f
men, 'tis the march . . of the Cam - er - on men.

sost. feroce. ff sost. dim. e morendo.
men, 'tis the march . . of the Cam - er - on men.

sost. feroce. ff sost. dim. e morendo.
men, 'tis the march . . of the Cam - er - on men.

sost. feroce. ff sost. dim. e morendo.
men, 'tis the march . . of the Cam - er - on men.

feroce. ff sost. dim. e morendo.
. . of the Cam - er - on men, 'tis the march . . of the Cam - er - on men.

feroce. ff dim. e morendo.
. . of the Cam - er - on men, 'tis the march . . of the Cam - er - on men.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation

- |      |   |      |   |      |  |
|------|---|------|---|------|--|
| No.  |   | No.  |   | No.  |  |
| 201  | Good wishes ... J. L. Hutton 3d.  | 638  | How sweet the answer Oliver King 2d.                                | 858  | *Irish Reel, The arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.                  |
| 1268 | *Goslings, The (humorous) ... J. F. Bridge 3d.                                | 767  | *Do. ... C. H. H. Parry 2d.   | 886  | *Irish wedding song ... arr. B. J. Rogers 3d.            |
| 295  | *Great God of Love (8 V.) ... Pearsall 3d.                                    | 155  | *Do. ... A. S. Sullivan 1½d.  | 1280 | Iron Horse, The W. W. Pearson 4d.                        |
| 28   | Green leaves ... B. Taylor 2d.  | 737  | *How sweet the moonlight sleeps ... D. E. Evans 1½d.                | 1279 | *Ironfounders, The ... R. Müller 3d.                     |
| 1174 | Had I a cave ... H. Willan 2d.  | 974  | *Do. (8 V.) ... Eaton Fanning 3d.                                   | 449  | Is it to odours sweet that I sing ... C. H. Lloyd 2d.    |
| 727  | *Hag, The (The Hag is a-stride) ... B. Luard-Selby 4d.                        | 77   | *Do. ... H. Leslie 1½d.   | 1275 | Is not that my fancy's Queen ... C. H. Lloyd 2d.         |
| 628  | Hail, hail to the swallow ... A. M. Goodhart 6d.                              | 1173 | How sweet thy modest light ... A. S. Burrows 4d.                    | 828  | It is the hour ... C. H. Fogg 3d.                        |
| 1331 | Hail, sweet peace ... J. B. Lott 3d.  | 1051 | How sweet to wander ... Schubert 3d.                                | 397  | *Do. ... H. Leslie 1½d.                                  |
| 359  | *Hail to the Chief ... H. Leslie 1½d.   | 602  | Hunt is up, The ... J. L. Hutton 1½d.                               | 549  | It was a lass ... H. MacCunn 3d.                         |
| 357  | *Do. ... E. Prout 4d.   | 963  | *Hunter, The ... J. Brahms 2d.                                      | 506  | *It was a lover and his lass ... J. Barnby 3d.           |
| 1085 | *Do. ... F. Schubert 2d.  | 1066 | Hunter went a-riding, A ... arr. J. Brahms 3d.                      | 422  | *Do. ... J. Booth 1½d.                                   |
| 221  | *Happiest land, The (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hutton 1½d.                          | 1126 | Hunter's farewell, The ... Mendelssohn 3d.                          | 822  | *Do. ... A. H. Brewer 3d.                                |
| 935  | *Hard by a fountain H. Waerlant 1½d.  | 556  | Hunters, The ... W. W. Pearson 4d.                                  | 127  | *Do. ... G. A. Macfarren 4d.                             |
| 284  | *Hardy Norseman's house of yore, The... Pearsall 3d.                          | 471  | Hunting chorus ... E. Louis 4d.                                     | 690  | *Do. ... C. Wood 3d.                                     |
| 82   | Hark, how the birds (6 V.) H. Lahee 3d.                                       | 756  | *Hunting song ... J. Benedict 3d.                                   | 1305 | It was the charming month of May ... W. McNaught 3d.     |
| 946  | *Do. ... H. W. Wareing 3d.  | 622  | *Do. ... E. Duncan 3d.  | 292  | It was upon a springtide day (5 V.) ... Pearsall 3d.     |
| 942  | Hark, jolly shepherds ... J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.                               | 719  | *Do. ... R. H. Legge 2d.  | 1317 | Italian National Air ... Arranged 2d.                    |
| 214  | Hark, the convent bells are ringing ... J. L. Hutton 3d.                      | 260  | *Do. ... W. W. Macfarren 1½d.                                       | 991  | *Italian Salad (humorous) ... R. Genée 4d.               |
| 440  | Hark, the lark ... F. Kücken 3d.  | 45   | *Do. ... H. Smart 1½d.  | 854  | Jack and Jill ... C. E. Horsley 4d.                      |
| 130  | *Do. ... G. A. Macfarren 3d.  | 1265 | *Do. ... W. W. Starnier 3d.   | 1360 | *Jack Frost ... A. R. Gaul 3d.                           |
| 663  | *Hark, the Vesper hymn is stealing ... arr. J. Stevenson 1½d.                 | 1374 | *Do. ... J. G. Williams 3d.   | 190  | *Do. ... J. L. Hutton 1½d.                               |
| 723  | *Harvest feast, The ... A. R. Gaul 3d.  | 147  | *Huntsman, rest ... S. Reay 3d.                                     | 230  | *Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... T. Distin 3d.                        |
| 887  | Harvest rose, The ... arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.                                  | 779  | *Huntsmen's Chorus ... Weber 2d.                                    | 854  | *Do. ... C. E. Horsley 4d.                               |
| 13   | *Harvest song ... W. Macfarren 3d.  | 702  | Hurrah for England J. F. Bridge 2d.                                 | 1351 | Jäger Chorus ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                       |
| 754  | Haste thee, nymph ... F. Adlam 2d.  | 854  | Hush-a-bye, baby ... C. E. Horsley 4d.                              | 666  | Jean ... Oliver King 3d.                                 |
| 722  | *Haven, The ... J. Barnby 2d.   | 1077 | *Do. ... J. B. Lott 3d.   | 1003 | *Jerusalem ... P. Cornelius 2d.                          |
| 35   | Haymaker's song ... R. P. Stewart 3d.   | 356  | *Hushed in death ... H. Hiles 6d.                                   | 1211 | Joan to the Maypole ... arr. J. C. Bridge 3d.            |
| 907  | *He is gone on the mountain ... G. A. Macfarren 2d.                           | 1326 | *Hymn before action ... H. W. Davies 3d.                            | 19   | Jolly Cricket Ball, The E. G. Monk 3d.                   |
| 1130 | He left the upland lawns (5 V.) ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.                           | 1148 | *Hymn of the homeland, A ... A. S. Sullivan 1d.                     | 483  | Joy in Spring ... J. Raff 3d.                            |
| 362  | *He that hath a pleasant face ... J. L. Hutton 1½d.                           | 1047 | Hymn of trust ... A. Zimmermann 2d.                                 | 779  | *Joy of the hunter, The ... Weber 3d.                    |
| 126  | Hear, sweet spirit ... H. Smart 1½d.  | 518  | Hymn to Aurora ... H. Smart 1½d.                                    | 153  | *Joy to the Victors ... A. Sullivan 2d.                  |
| 1266 | *Heart of the night, The ... H. Bath 3d.                                      | 244  | Hymn to Cynthia ... E. B. Tours 3d.                                 | 246  | Joys of Spring, The ... H. Smart 3d.                     |
| 558  | Heath rose, The ... R. Schumann 2d.   | 473  | *Do. ... D. B. Buck 3d.   | 1221 | June ... F. H. Cowen 3d.                                 |
| 159  | Hemlock tree, The ... J. L. Hutton 4d.  | 763  | *Hymn to music ... Schubert 3d.                                     | 24   | *Do. (s.s.c.) ... F. Dun 2d.                             |
| 229  | *Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... C. Wood 4d.   | 956  | Hymn to the Eternal ... J. Booth 4d.                                | 1026 | *Justice (8 V.) J. W. G. Hathaway 6d.                    |
| 605  | *Do. ... C. Wood 4d.  | 446  | Hymn to the moon ... J. Booth 4d.                                   | 577  | *Kathleen Mavourneen ... F. N. Crouch 1½d.               |
| 1232 | *Hen wlad fy nhadau ... arr. J. James 3d.                                     | 986  | I call and I call (5 V.) ... C. Wood 3d.                            | 1334 | *Keel Row, The arr. T. F. Dunhill 2d.                    |
| 282  | Hence, all you vain delights ... W. Macfarren 3d.                             | 930  | *I can but love thee (6 V.) ... P. Cornelius 3d.                    | 363  | Keep time, keep time J. L. Hutton 3d.                    |
| 424  | *Hence, loathed melancholy (5 V.) ... H. Lahee 4d.                            | 499  | I love my love ... G. B. Allen 3d.                                  | 883  | Kind words ... H. Leslie 3d.                             |
| 431  | *Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee ... J. Goss 4d.                             | 916  | *I loved a lass ... W. H. Bell 3d.                                  | 1208 | Kindred hearts ... C. Lee Williams 3d.                   |
| 1054 | Her true love ... F. Schubert 3d.   | 237  | *Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hutton 4d.                                | 1192 | King of Thule, The R. Schumann 3d.                       |
| 1312 | Here's a health unto His Majesty Melody by J. Saville ... arr. S. G. Ould 2d. | 191  | I loved her ... C. Wood 3d.   | 1333 | King, The (A Toast) A. H. Brewer 2d.                     |
| 920  | *Heroes, The ... F. H. Cowen 4d.  | 232  | *Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... C. Wood 3d.                                     | 316  | King there was in Thule, A ... Pearsall 2d.              |
| 952  | *Hero's rest, The ... P. Cornelius 3d.  | 198  | I met her in the quiet lane ... J. V. Roberts 3d.                   | 391  | King Winter ... S. Egerton 3d.                           |
| 594  | Hie upon hiellands... V. Caillard 3d.   | 739  | I prithee send me back my heart ... H. Smart 1½d.                   | 227  | King Witlaf's drinking horn ... J. L. Hutton 3d.         |
| 1159 | Hie upon Heaven's domain F. Curti 3d.   | 172  | *Do. ... H. Smart 1½d.  | 458  | *Kings and Queens ... C. Pinsuti 3d.                     |
| 852  | Highland laddie, The H.E. Button 2d.  | 290  | *I saw lovely Phillis ... Pearsall 1½d.                             | 1170 | *Kitty of Coleraine (Irish air) ... arr. C. H. Lloyd 2d. |
| 560  | Highland lassie, The Schumann 3d.   | 87   | I saw the moon rise clear H. Hiles 1½d.                             | 649  | *Knight's tomb, The ... C. V. Stanford 3d.               |
| 275  | Highland war song (T.T.B.B.) ... W. Macfarren 3d.                             | 1325 | I sing the birth (Carol) ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.                     | 1096 | Know ye the land... L. Spohr 3d.                         |
| 773  | *His Majesty the King F.H. Cowen 4d.  | 686  | I think on thee in the night ... E. Fédarb 3d.                      | 918  | Lacking my love ... John E. West 3d.                     |
| 721  | Holiday in Arcadia A. Thomson 3d.   | 541  | If doughty deeds C. Lee Williams 3d.                                | 46   | *Lady, rise, sweet morn's awaking ... H. Smart 1½d.      |
| 6    | Home fairy, The (T.T.B.B.) ... P. Winter 2d.                                  | 910  | If I had but two little wings ... J. F. Barnett 2d.                 | 636  | *Ladye fair, thou hast my life ... W. W. Pearson 3d.     |
| 789  | Home of my heart C. H. H. Parry 3d.   | 627  | If I love, will you doom me to die ... W. Jackson and F. Corder 3d. | 1367 | Lake, The ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                          |
| 581  | Home, sweet home ... E. Land 1½d.   | 527  | If love be dead (5 V.) ... C. Wood 4d.                              | 1209 | Lament, A ... arr. H. E. Button 3d.                      |
| 340  | *Home that I love ... F. Abt 1½d.   | 982  | If love his arrows H. W. Wareing 3d.                                | 890  | *Do. ... arr. T. R. G. Jozé 2d.                          |
| 107  | Home they brought her warrior dead ... J. Barnby 1½d.                         | 199  | If thou art sleeping, maiden ... J. L. Hutton 3d.                   | 716  | *Do. ... R. H. Legge 2d.                                 |
| 1148 | *Homeland, The ... A. S. Sullivan 1½d.  | 983  | *If to my lady fair ... J. Pointer 3d.                              | 1031 | *Do. ... John E. West 2d.                                |
| 443  | *Homeward ... H. Leslie 4d.   | 1052 | I'm in no hurry ... Schubert 3d.                                    | 78   | Land ho ... H. Leslie 1½d.                               |
| 590  | Hope ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.  | 1131 | In a harbour grene ... C. H. H. Parry 2d.                           | 1118 | Land of beauty ... Mendelssohn 3d.                       |
| 676  | *Do. ... J. Rheinberger 2d.   | 1080 | In absence ... D. B. Buck 2d.                                       | 1232 | *Land of my fathers arr. J. James 3d.                    |
| 795  | *Do. ... E. Sachs 2d.   | 16   | In all thy need ... J. Dowland 2d.                                  | 255  | Land of wonders, The H. Smart 3d.                        |
| 439  | Hope and faith ... Weber 2d.  | 462  | *In April time ... C. Pinsuti 2d.                                   | 369  | Lark, The ... J. L. Hutton 3d.                           |
| 874  | *Hope of my heart (5 V.) J. Ward 3d.  | 348  | *In Autumn ... F. Hensel 1½d.                                       | 501  | *Lass of Richmond Hill, The ... arr. J. Hook 1½d.        |
| 298  | *How bright is the May Pearsall 3d.   | 296  | *In Dulci Jubilo ... Pearsall 3d.                                   | 724  | Last lord, The ... H. Clarke 3d.                         |
| 550  | How can a bird help singing F. Abt 3d.  | 966  | *In praise of Mary ... J. Brahms 2d.                                | 809  | Last prayer, The J. Rheinberger 2d.                      |
| 842  | *How dear to me the hour ... arr. A. A. Needham 3d.                           | 1245 | *In praise of Neptune E. German 2d.                                 | 310  | Laugh not, youth, at age Pearsall 4d.                    |
| 1253 | *How eloquent ... John E. West 3d.  | 944  | *In praise of Song C. H. H. Parry 4d.                               | 839  | *Laughing waves, The ... R. Somerville 3d.               |
| 352  | How I love the festive boy ... A. C. Mackenzie 3d.                            | 551  | *In Spring-time ... F. Abt 3d.                                      | 320  | *Lay a garland (8 V.) Pearsall 3d.                       |
| 257  | How soft the shades of evening creep ... H. Smart 1½d.                        | 1021 | In the garden ... C. Lee Williams 2d.                               | 1231 | *Lee shore, The ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d.              |
| 258  | How sweet is summer morning ... H. Smart 2d.                                  | 1142 | In the lazy Summer noon E. Franz 2d.                                | 1166 | *Leprehaun, The (Irish Air) ... G. Bantock 4d.           |
|      |   | 488  | In the moonlight ... J. Raff 3d.                                    | 811  | Let Erin remember ... L. Dix 2d.                         |
|      |   | 1168 | In the North land... C. Forrester 3d.                               | 922  | *Let me the canakin clink ... J. B. MacEwen 2d.          |
|      |   | 1165 | *In the silent West (8 V.) ... G. Bantock 4d.                       | 694  | Let me wander ... L. Spohr 2d.                           |
|      |   | 388  | In the woods ... S. Egerton 3d.                                     | 1061 | Let the bells ring ... J. W. G. Hathaway 4d.             |
|      |   | 502  | *In this hour of softened splendour ... C. Pinsuti 1½d.             | 815  | Let the hills resound B. Richards 4d.                    |
|      |   | 557  | Inconstants, The ... Schumann 1½d.                                  |      |  |
|      |   | 60   | Indian maid, The ... J. L. Hutton 1½d.                              |      |  |
|      |   | 11   | Indegar Vita (T.T.B.B.) F. Flemming 4d.                             |      |  |
|      |   | 754  | Invitation to mirth ... F. Adlam 3d.                                |      |  |
|      |   | 38   | Invocation to sleep ... J. Benedict 3d.                             |      |  |
|      |   | 1180 | Irene (Madrigal) ... C. E. Miller 3d.                               |      |  |

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 944.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

OCTOBER 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

FIFTY-FIRST SEASON, 1921-22.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

LIJAH - - - MENDELSSOHN
MISS AGNES NICHOLLS. | MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
R. BEN DAVIES. | MR. HERBERT BROWN.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE MUSIC-MAKERS - - - ELGAR
THE GOLDEN LEGEND - - - SULLIVAN
MISS DORIS VANE. | MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. WALTER HYDE. | MR. WALTER SAULL.
MR. CHARLES TREE.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

CAROLS

MISS LAURA EVANS-WILLIAMS. | MISS OLGA HALEY.
R. JOHN COATES. | MR. HARRY DEARTH.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1922, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - HANDEL
MISS CARRIE TUBB. | MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
R. WILLIAM BOLAND. | MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1922, AT 2.30 P.M.

IAWATHA - - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR
MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MR. BEN DAVIES. | MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1922, AT 2.30 P.M.

SONG OF DESTINY - - - Brahms
HYMN OF JESUS - - - Gustav Holst
CONCERTO FOR ORGAN AND ORCHESTRA Handel
THE MASQUE IN DIOCLESIAN Purcell
THE WASPS—ORCHESTRAL SUITE R. Vaughan Williams First performed at the Royal College of Music Patron's Fund Concert, July 23rd, 1912.

THE FORGING OF THE ANCHOR - - - Bridge

MISS CARRIE TUBB.
MR. PARRY JONES. | MR. ROBERT RADFORD.
Organ: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1922, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR
MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. JOHN COATES. | MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 1922, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - HANDEL
MISS RUTH VINCENT. | MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
R. FRANK MULLINGS. | MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

FULL CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

Organist: MR. H. L. BALFOUR, Mus. Bac.

THE EIGHT CONCERTS to be given, Seven, including the Carol concert on December 17, will be comprised in the Subscription Series of Subscription for these Seven Concerts: Stalls, £2 14s. 6d.;
Aisles, £1 19s.; Balcony (Reserved), £1 7s. 6d.
Prices of Tickets for each Concert: Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.;
Aisles (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.
Subscribers' names will be received and tickets issued at the Singing Office, Royal Albert Hall, and the usual Agents.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: SIR A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.
TWO LECTURES by Mr. J. B. McEWEN, F.R.A.M., on "Sound Waves," will be given on Wednesdays, October 5 and 12, at 3.15.

A LECTURE, by Dr. F. G. SHINN, Hon. R.A.M., on Haydn and Mozart, will be given on Wednesday, October 19, at 3.15.

THREE LECTURES, by the PRINCIPAL, on Beethoven, will be given on Wednesdays, October 26, November 2 and 9, at 3.15.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, October 8 and 22, at 3.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Monday, October 31, at 3.

L.R.A.M. Christmas Exam. Last day for entry, October 31.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams:

"Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone:

"1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

Intending Students who wish to enter the College are asked to send in their forms of application as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

ESTABLISHED AND MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION OF LONDON.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... LANDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s.
per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and Orchestra.

AUTUMN HALF-TERM commences Monday, October 31st.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

Telegrams: Euphonium Fleet, London.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL,

CORNHILL, E.C.

DR. HAROLD DARKE

IS ARRANGING TO GIVE

SIX BACH RECITALS

ON
THURSDAYS, OCTOBER 6th to NOVEMBER 10th, at 6 p.m.

The complete Book of Programmes (price Sixpence) can be obtained at the Church, or post free by sending 7d. stamps to

DR. HAROLD DARKE, 22, Greville Road, N.W. 6.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical Instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Thirtieth Year begins on October 10.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

The School Opera Class and Orchestra will give "La Fille de Madame Angot," on October 27, 28, and 29, in the Whitworth Hall, Manchester University.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, Mus. Bac.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.
DR. F. J. KARR, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom DECEMBER. Last day of entry, November 8.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary. Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A.M.L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L.Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.
Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 38.

ADVISORY BOARD FOR COMPOSERS.

Director:—Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

Advisory Committee:

Arnold Bax	B. J. Dale	S. H. Nicholson, M.A.
York Bowen	Edward J. Dent	Dr. R. R. Terry
Frank Bridge	Eugène Goossens	Dr. Vaughan Williams
Albert Coates	Hamilton Hart

Interpretative Committee:

J. Francis Harford	Albert Sammons
William Murdoch	Philip Wilson

For particulars, Rules, &c., apply to the Secretary of Advisory Board for Composers, c/o Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, W.1.

THE TECHNIQUE AN APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING THE HANDS OF INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Extract from a letter received from H. COWARD, Esq., M. Mus. Doc. Oxon.: May, 1921.

"Re your 'Technique.'—Having now had proof of its usefulness I may say that you are at liberty to use my name as a supporter of the invention. I am ordering another. "H. COWARD."

Send for particulars and list of testimonials.

"Hand Development," 7d., post free. Set of 15 photos, 4s.
Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O., Secretary;
Miss I. R. PITCHER, Assistant-Secretary,
21, Boundary Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTES. 6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT,Paddington, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone, Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

L.R.A.M.

Coaching by Specialists for the Practical Examination (all subjects) and also in the Harmony, Form, and Art of Teaching Particular Special Class for Aural Tests. Apply, Registrar.

METROPOLITAN ACADEMY OF MUSIC
72-74, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.

THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE. 21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C.1.

APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses have been drawn up by an experienced teacher of this subject. These are non-technical, and are enjoyable to all interested in Music.

Further particulars from Secretary.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "From Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Mr. FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my system, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse on his own personal experience. More than 14,000 successful students add their testimony.

From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C. 1.

THE CORRECT USE of "ARM BALANCE"

RELAXATION AND WEIGHT TOUCH TO PIANOFORTE PLAYING.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSE IN MODERN PIANOFORTE PLAYING based on the playing of the great Artists.

Those who have marvelled at the EXQUISITE TONE of Bachmann in a Chopin Valse or Nocturne, must surely have asked themselves how it is obtained. A great Pianist is rather by instinct than by method, still there is method in such playing.

PRINCIPLES ARE DERIVED FROM A CLOSE STUDY OF THE BEST PLAYERS, AND ARE NOT A MERE BUILDING UP FROM A PURELY MECHANICAL TRAINING OF THE FINGERS BY ORDINARY EXERCISES. THE PRODUCTION OF BEAUTIFUL TONE IS THE FIRST THING I DEAL WITH, FOR WITHOUT IT NO TECHNIQUE CAN BE PLEASING OR PRODUCE A MUSICAL RESULT.

F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M. writes:

"You ask me what I think of your Fingerwork Lessons. Let me tell you the opening sentence of G. H. Mair's English Literature. There are times in every man's experience when some sudden breaking of the boundaries of his knowledge, some vision of hitherto untried and unrealised possibilities, has come and seemed to bring a new life and the inspiration of fresh and splendid endeavour."

"Well, musically, that is what your lessons have done for me."

Write for full particulars, stating your difficulties.

(Radio M.T.)

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
School of Pianoforte Playing, 11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET,
NEW BOND STREET, W. 1.

ST. LUKE'S, HAMPSTEAD.

Next to Westfield College (London University), Kidderpore Avenue, Finchley Road, N.W. 3.

GRAND ORGAN RECITALS

By MATTHEW KINGSTON (Mus. Bac., Cantab.),
On Saturday Afternoons, at 5.25, throughout October and November, 1921.

Programmes of Classical and Modern Music, with special attention to Blind Composers' Works.

Accomplished Vocalists. Willis Organ. Saturdays, 5.25 p.m.

MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give an ORGAN RECITAL on October 4th (1.677th recital), and every Tuesday, at 1 p.m., at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, on the four-manual pneumatic organ.

LONDONDERRY "FEIS."

MARCH 7, 8, 9, & 10, 1922.

COMPOSER'S COMPETITION, open to Professionals and Amateurs.

A Perpetual CHALLENGE CUP, together with MINIATURE CUP to be retained, for best Setting of a Song to words selected by the "Feis" Committee.

For words and particulars apply to

Mrs. A. McC. STEWART, Hon. Secretary,
Holly Lodge, Londonderry.

BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 18th to 22nd, 1921.

WINTER GARDENS.

ORCHESTRAL, VOCAL, CHORAL, AND INSTRUMENTAL CLASSES, RECORD ENTRIES. OVER 6,000 COMPETITORS.

Particulars, G. W. STANSFIELD, Hon. Sec., 91, Church Street, Blackpool.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

Mr. Tree begs to correct the rumour that he is accepting the invitation to sing in Berlioz's "Faust," and other works, at the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir Concerts in February, 1922, to be followed by a tour of Lecture-Recitals. Home engagements prevent this.

LECTURE-RECITALS on

HOW TO SING with ease FOR FORTY YEARS or more.

Italian Production. At last it is being realised that the foundation of the so-called Italian production (true vocal production is the better term) is correct placement and nasal resonance, as advocated for many years in "How to acquire ease." Reports from all parts show that the lecture is having its intended effect. There is not the slightest doubt that if the method be closely followed we shall become in a very few years a nation of vocalists, singing with all that ease which means quality, quantity, and long life of the voice.

In the coming Lecture-Recitals Mr. Tree will go still more fully into the matter of nasal resonance. It is in this respect that our present teaching fails—hence the short life of the voice.

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s. 2d.) (If difficult to obtain this work, write direct to author.)

Mr. BESWICK (Manchester critic): "A veritable mine of information; it is the best book of its kind I have read."

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5.

MR. JACQUES E. HOPKINS

GRAND PRIZE WINNER OF SINGING OF THE PARIS CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Figaro.—"An interpretation profoundly musical."

Commedia.—"Sang with a charm, a musical quality, an assurance unique."

La Liberté.—"Who phrases with a taste and an exquisite delicateness."

Excelsior.—"Voice and art that places him well above his comrades."

Paris Journal.—"An artist of remarkable style."

La Petit Journal.—"Showed remarkable qualities."

La Coulisse.—"A sure taste and a musical quality undisputable."

Le Monde Musical.—"The artist the most complete—a charm to listen to his beautiful phrasing."

Le Monde Illustré.—"Showed perfect taste—style very pure and noble."

La Minsirel.—"The most interesting—the most gifted."

Failliton du Journal des Débats.—"Conducts his voice with a quality of style and tone remarkable."

Is now available for Concerts, Recitals, Oratorios, &c. &c.

Also Lessons given in

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Write 160, Wymering Mansions, Maida Vale, W. 9.

Telephone: Hampstead 7246.

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR MCALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

MUS. BAC.

The Guarantee Course for the complete degree has become very popular with students. A student can reach Matric. standard in from 4 to 6 months, providing he can devote from 10 to 12 hours weekly to the work. The number of students now working for Matric. with the M.C.C. vary from 15 years to 50. As the musical work is sent concurrently with the Matric. course, the whole degree can be gained in 2 years. Commence at once and qualify for a Cathedral post, or for an important Parish Church.

A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O.

A student wrote to the Principal and stated that he had FAILED SEVEN TIMES in paper work for the F.R.C.O., but that he intended to try again in January, 1922. It was patent that this student had been working on wrong lines. What a fine advertisement for the M.C.C. if we can pass this man in January, 1922! An M.C.C. student who passed A.R.C.O. in July writes: "When I wrote to you I did not expect to pass in July, but just went up TO SEE WHAT IT WAS LIKE."

If you join the M.C.C. you can pass A.R.C.O. in January, 1922, and F.R.C.O. in July, 1922. Our courses are based on sound educational principles, and a student of average ability is bound to pass.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

You would like to gain both Diplomas in less than 12 months. By joining the M.C.C. you can take L.R.A.M. (Teaching of Singing), December, 1921, and A.R.C.M. (Teaching of Pianoforte), April, 1922. Students of the M.C.C. have at their service a staff of Specialists. At the A.R.C.M. examination in April, 1921, our students gained 100 per cent. of passes. We have carefully graduated Courses for every subject of the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

The L.R.A.M. has instituted another subject, (VIII.) Aural Training and Singing (Teacher's Diploma), which is a valuable Diploma for Teachers. We can get you ready for December, 1921.

A.Mus. T.C.L.,

A.T.C.L.

The A.Mus.T.C.L. can be gained in Theory only, and if you are an A.R.C.O. you need take only "The Art of Teaching." The courses of the M.C.C. cover completely:

- |                      |                   |
|----------------------|-------------------|
| (a) Rudiments.       | (d) Harmony.      |
| (b) Art of Teaching. | (e) Counterpoint. |
| (c) History.         |                   |

Single Subjects.

These Courses have been prepared for the Teacher who wishes to improve his teaching methods. Tuition can be taken in a single subject or a Special Course of 10 Lessons, comprising the following group of subjects:

- |                |                          |
|----------------|--------------------------|
| (a) Rudiments. | (d) Musical Form.        |
| (b) Harmony.   | (e) Memory Training.     |
| (c) Ornaments. | (f) Principles of Touch. |

PRACTICAL WORK.

Arrangements have been made for students of the M.C.C. to receive two or three Lessons per Week at Nottingham.

ORGAN ... ..	A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O.
PIANOFORTE AND SINGING ... ..	L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

FREE

Guide to Matric.,
Mus. Bac., &c.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL :

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

F.R.C.O.

t. 1st. AN OFFER.

In September the M.C.C. offered students who had failed at F.R.C.O. to send in a specimen of their worked papers.

t. 8th. A REPLY.

"Anent your advertisement in the current issue of the Musical Times re Correspondence Lessons, I desire to take them up PROVIDING THEY ARE WHAT YOU CLAIM THEM TO BE. I sat for the F.R.C.O. in July last, and am sorry to say I made a mess of it.

"Will you kindly examine the enclosed workings, and return to me with your criticisms, for which I enclose P.O. 5s."

t. 12th. A RETURN.

Return of work with detailed criticism.

t. 15th. ENROLMENT
OF STUDENT.

"I thank you for your letter and corrections of the 12th inst. I WAS VERY MUCH IMPRESSED BY THE THOROUGHNESS IN WHICH IT WAS DONE, and I have decided to place myself under your tuition for the next F.R.C.O. examination."

L.R.A.M. (PIANOFORTE PLAYING).

t. 15th, 1921. ANOTHER LETTER.

"I am glad to inform you that my daughter, a student of the M.C.C., was successful in the Paper Work, Rudiments, Harmony, Ornaments, and Aural Tests, last week.

"I thank your Mr. McAlister for your coaching, and the staff. I must tell you my daughter created quite a sensation amongst the candidates when she took her place in the theory room, I suppose on account of her youthful age." (Age 15.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (TEACHING OF SINGING).

The M.C.C. has been fortunate in securing the services of two specialists for this particular mination, and a carefully graduated Course of Lessons, covering completely every phase of the mination, has been prepared.

The M.C.C. Courses are so well organized, that for some of the Examinations a student has the ices of four or five specialists. THIS IS THE AGE OF THE SPECIALIST, and it is possible for one tutor to cover all the phases of a particular Examination.

PRACTICAL WORK (PIANOFORTE AND SINGING).

Arrangements have been made so that students can receive personal tuition either in the middle or end of a term.

This refers to L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.	...	...	Pianoforte and Singing.
A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O.	...	...	Organ.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

MILGROM'S

CONCERT DIRECTION,

RECITALS AND CONCERTS ARRANGED.

324, REGENT STREET, W.

(NEAR QUEEN'S HALL). 'PHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

FIRST-CLASS OPERATIC AND ORATORIO VOCALISTS,
 ... INSTRUMENTALISTS, CONCERT PARTIES, ETC. ...
 ON MY BOOKS.

PLEASE STATE YOUR REQUIREMENTS TO ABOVE ADDRESS.

ALBERT DOWNING (CANADIAN TENOR),
 WILL BE IN ENGLAND OCTOBER, AND AVAILABLE FOR ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.

"TORONTO GLOBE," March 24th.

"Mr. Downing acquitted himself with honour. In fact he has not been heard to better advantage this season. His first solo 'If with all your hearts,' was excellent in vocal finish and in the realization of the spirit of the words and music."

"INDEPENDENT," GRIMSBY.

"Albert Downing, of Toronto, came to Grimsby a stranger, but left an adopted son. The people just naturally took him to the hearts. His rich tenor voice filled the hall to overflowing with melody. Seldom if ever have Grimsby people had the opportunity of listening to a singer of his ability. His songs were well chosen and most beautifully rendered."

OWEN SOUND "SUN."

"Mr. Albert Downing's beautiful tenor voice delighted everyone, and he was insistently recalled several times. Very few tenors have been so warmly received here, and there will always be a welcome in Owen Sound for Mr. Downing. He sang, 'Then shall the Righteous,' from Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' 'Homing,' by Del Riego."

"TORONTO TELEGRAM,"

"Albert Downing won an ovation for his rendering of the tenor parts."

For Terms, please apply to MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION, 324, REGENT STREET, W.1. (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

PIANOS. PIANOS. PIANOS.

PIANOS (NEW AND SECOND HAND)

From 28 Guineas.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Can be seen at

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,
 324, REGENT STREET, W.1.

'PHONE: MAYFAIR 4123.

(NEAR QUEEN'S HALL).

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

MUS. DOC. (LONDON).

INDIVIDUAL COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

- (1) L.R.A.M. Paper Work - For Xmas Examination.
- (2) A.R.C.M. Paper Work - For April Examination.
- (3) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. For January Examination.

Complete Preparation also for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., and all Diplomas of Trinity College, London.

The Lessons are specially devised to give a complete grip of all vital points essential to success.

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly novel, interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Full Particulars, address: Mr. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

COMPOSERS' PROBLEMS SOLVED.

PAXTON'S COMPOSERS' DEPARTMENT, staffed by experts, is at the service of all Composers, and undertakes the following work:

CRITICISM OF COMPOSITION.	COPYING (SAME KEY).
RIGHT REVISION OF COMPOSITION.	TRANSPPOSITION FROM ONE KEY TO ANOTHER (OLD NOTATION).
WRITING AND IMPROVING.	TRANSPPOSITION (OLD NOTATION TO TONIC SOL-FE-A).
SETTING LYRICS.
SETTING MUSIC TO LYRICS.
ACCOMPANIMENT.

ALSO

ENGRAVING AND PRINTING MANUSCRIPTS.

LOWEST TERMS.

EFFICIENT SERVICE.

Send your Manuscripts for Production to
W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., COMPOSERS' DEPARTMENT,
22, High Street, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.2.
Stamps for return should accompany all MSS.

R.A.M. PAPER WORK. Candidates can assure success with the aid of my GUARANTEE "CORRESPONDENCE COURSE. Write to-day for particulars." "C. S.", 6, Holmfield, Burbage, Buxton.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me."

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).
Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

FRANK CARLETON

TENOR.

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.

Address:

13, Grosvenor Road, Hyde, Cheshire.

RALPH WILLIAMS

L.R.A.M. TENOR.

Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

(CAPTAIN)

LEWIS STANTON

(BASS).

ORATORIOS, ETC.

The Cloisters,
Windsor Castle.

Telegrams:
Stanton, Cloisters, Windsor.

MR. CHARLES THORNTON

(BASS BARITONE).

Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

"Possesses a magnificent baritone voice."—Recent press notice.

Address: Rook's Nest, Whytecliffe Road, Purley, Surrey.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS).

8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E. 5. 'Phone: Gerrard 7253.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8

Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

ROMAN JACOWLEW

Violinist to the Royal Court of Spain. 1st Prize Paris Conservatoire, 1st Diploma Leipzig Conservatoire, Pupil of Alfred Brun, Henry Berthelier, and Hans Sitt, has vacancy for a few pupils. Preparation and recommendation to Paris and Leipzig Conservatoire. 6, Angell Park Gardens, S.W. 9.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method.

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and Lusitania, Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

GERRARD WILLIAMS (COMPOSER)

(Publishers: Novello, Curwen, Winthrop Rogers, Chester, Stainer & Bell, &c.)

Coaches in Composition (all forms), Orchestration, &c.
59, Bishop's Mansions, S.W. 6.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER

Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—

Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch," and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."

Over 500 Successes at Exams.

"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

THE HARMONISTS

The only Quartet which is comprised exclusively of Singers direct
FROM

ST. GEORGE'S, CHAPEL ROYAL,
WINDSOR CASTLE.

FREDK. SMITH.

MALCOLM BOYLE.

ALTO.

TENOR.

EATON COOTER. A.R.C.M.

CAPT. LEWIS STANTON,
BASS.

Address, MALCOLM BOYLE,

22, THE CLOISTERS, WINDSOR CASTLE, OR USUAL AGENTS.
'Phone: 166 Windsor.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

*** The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR
O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),

c/o "The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidate who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. I.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., A.Mus. L.C.M. (1921), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O.
(1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarship
Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music)
the number of eight hundred and eighty-seven. Dr. Allison is willing teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examination Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theor Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITION

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by po for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course wi Models. 44 Successes in One Year.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDEN, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1920-21 ... 171 Correspondence Pupils successful

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 45 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce th he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSE

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING

L. ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pian
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), gives

Lessons, by post, in Harmony and other Theoretical Subject and prepares for Examinations. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanc Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 300 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-E Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orche stration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or give lessons) on the four-manual pneumatic organ at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes. Streatham Place, S.W. 2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

R. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Recent successes, 1921, after preliminary course in Composition, Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. "Exercises" (7), all at first attempt. Over 100 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

R. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

R. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920), specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working, dress, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,
R. A. Music, will resume her lessons in Singing on September 1, at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 32, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, Form and Teaching, &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence) Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

R. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and L.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

F.R.C.O. has VACANCIES for Pupils,
Organ and Harmonium. West-End church magnificent organ. "Prelude," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Aldour Street, W. 1.

R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F."
W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), Leside, Goldswong Terrace, Nottingham.

R. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) A.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (3) F.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	31 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. PLAYING TESTS.

SPECIAL COURSE of FIVE CORRESPONDENCE
Examinations has been designed, giving guidance on the following tests only:

- (1) EXTEMPORIZATION.
- (2) HARMONIZING MELODIES.
- (3) HARMONIZING UNFIGURED BASSES.

All particulars will be sent on application.

Several Candidates who worked through this course of Lessons were successful at the January, 1921, examination; also July, 1921.

MR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
undertakes to develop Perfect Memory
Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for 35s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

Oxford Preliminary Arts and Durham Matriculation.
Also B.A. and B.Sc.

EXPERT PREPARATION BY CORRESPONDENCE.

For Terms, Testimonials, &c., address

Mr. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Honours Oxon. and London),
14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W. 14.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

CHORISTERSHIPS.—Board, Lodging, Education, and Medical Attendance free. Candidates must have a good voice and correct ear, and should be between 8 and 11 years of age. Education for the Public Schools. Apply by October 15th, to the Reverend The Precantor, The College, Durham.

WANTED, a SOLO BOY. Board, lodging, and education free. Apply to Evelyn Countess of Craven, Ashdown Park, Shrivensham.

ST ALBAN'S CHURCH, HOLBORN.—SOLO BOY WANTED. Good salary if competent. Particulars from G. D. Cunningham, 6, Leaside Avenue, N. 10.

ST. JOHN'S, Notting Hill.—ALTO REQUIRED. Salary, £12 per annum, plus £4 per annum temporary bonus. Write, J. S. Robson, 33, Colville Terrace, W. 11.

PARISH CHURCH, Stoke Newington.—ALTO WANTED. £15-£20. Apply by letter to Norman Collie, 37, Queen Elizabeth's Walk, N. 16.

ALTO (male), experienced, good reader, desires
CHOIR APPOINTMENT. Or would deputise. Disengaged owing to change of address. 82, North Road, Highgate, N. 6.

TENOR and BASS WANTED, All Saints',
Devonshire Road, South Lambeth. £15. Walter Attersoll, 21, Thurlstone Road, West Norwood.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Congregational Church, 70 miles from London. State qualifications, experience, and salary required to "X.Y.Z.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED, for Congregational Church in N.W. London. Small honorarium. Apply by letter to R. H. Smith, 20, Downside Crescent, N.W. 3.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for the Parish
Church, Wembley. Must be good disciplinarian, and thorough choir trainer. Salary, £60 per annum. New 3-manual hydraulic organ. Letters to Rev. J. W. P. Silvester, B.D., J.P., The Vicarage, Wembley, Middlesex.

GENTLEMAN with slight knowledge of the ORGAN willing to give services. Any denomination. Write "S. H. W.," 478, Hornsey Road, N. 19.

£100 SINGING, £50 PIANO, Free Scholar- ships, Souvenir Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes.
Mr. CLIFTON COOKE'S OPEN COMPETITIONS, 5th and 12th November. Entries close 1st and 8th November. Adjudicators: Miss Muriel Overton and Mr. Lewis Hawes, Editor Musical Mirror.—Prospectus, Secretary, 26m, Guilford Street, W.C. 1.

YOUNG LADY PIANIST, Advanced Grade
Associated Board, requires POST as an accompanist to singer or instrumentalist. Wingrove, 70, Adelaide Road, Swiss Cottage, N.W. 3.

ACCOMPANIST desires ENGAGEMENTS.
Orchestra, School, or Concerts. "A. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Redwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two
Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

CHAMBER ORGAN, 2-Manuals and Pedals,
11 Speaking Stops, Hydraulic Blower. Will accept £400. Apply Northernhay, Dollis Avenue, Finchley, N. 3.

FOR SALE.—CHAMBER ORGAN, Mason &
Hamlin. Light Oak, 3-Manuals, CC Pedals, 23 Stops throughout, Balance Swell, Hydraulic. Apply Arthur Willmot, Beethoven House, Dingwall Road, Croydon.

ESTEY ORGAN, in handsome walnut case, 14 stops, 3 complete sets of reeds, 16, 8, 4-feet, sub-bass 16-feet, octave coupler, tremulant, 2 knee swells. Price, £50. Seen by appointment. Miss Banks, 8, Lydon Road, Clapham, S.W. 4.

WANTED TO BUY.—Three-Manual Pipe Organ.
Age and details to Rhodes, 70, Corporation Street Manchester.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

October 31st.—The HALF-TERM begins.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

FIVE

GOOD TEACHING SONGS

KATHERINE HEYMAN.

PRICE NET.
s. d.

MINYA DUSCHKA (Russian Cradle Song).

In G (B to E) and A ... 2 0

MISCHA-LEON.

TWO SONGS { 1. "Twilight" } ... 2 0
                  { 2. "Smiles" }

Medium and High Voice.

MONTAGUE RING.

AN ASSYRIAN LOVE-SONG.

In E (D to E) and G ... 2 0

CYRIL SCOTT.

OUR LADY OF VIOLETS.

In C (C to E) and D ... 2 0

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH'S BRIGHT AND BREEZY BOOKLETS.

This is not the publishers' title for the series of booklets on musical subjects, a selection from which has just come to hand, but ours. We choose it for two reasons, firstly because of its sonorously alliterative "artful aid"—it looks well at the head of a magazine article and gives a certain degree of distinction to, and awakens a passing sense of interest in, an index, which is always a dreary thing to read—and secondly because the pamphlets are indeed both bright and breezy. Their essential purpose is educational, and if ever a Royal Road to knowledge was created, it certainly has been incorporated within the structure of these little books. One reads them as one might read a newspaper article or a novel, so clear is their diction and so interestingly is the matter served up and arranged, and one at the end is astounded at the vast amount of information one has assimilated in the process.

The first two are dedicated to pianists, the next two to singers, and the fifth—there are five in all—to all (musicians or others) whom I may concern. Mr. E. Douglas Tayler has written the pianistic treatises respectively entitled The Secret of Musical Expression and The Secret of Successful Practice. And we are let into these secret and have become quite mysterious about it before we realise—I indeed we ever do so—that they never were secrets at all. But that is where the genius of the author emerges. He tells us a secret—only pretending of course—and we are so delighted at having been let into his confidence that we never forget it again. Mr. Cecil Lawrence also makes a secret of necessity in one of his volumes, The Secret of Acquiring a Beautiful Voice and becoming a Successful Singer. But perhaps it is a real secret in this case, for as every teacher of singing knows, there is only one genuine method of voice-training: his own How to Sing a Song is the title of his other book. This volume deals chiefly with the great problem of interpretation, and it should have very extensive sale, as most of the present works of the kind are somewhat large and expensive. Musical Sound, by Edward Watson is a well arranged and clearly expressed Introduction to the Study of Acoustics. It has been specially written for the use of Candidate for the Higher Musical Examinations: R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M. Trinity College, and so on, and it is really a masterly exposition of the subject, which in so small a compass is indeed remarkable in more senses than one. The volumes are tastefully got up, and published at the small price of 1s. 3d. each.

SIGMA.

From The Scottish Musical Magazine.

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

The Royal College of Organists

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. J. S. Bach. (Novello & Co. Book 10, p. 214; Augener & Co., p. 382; Peters, Vol. I.)

Choral Prelude on "Darwell's 148th." No. 2 of Three Choral Preludes. H. E. Darke. (Novello & Co.)

Prelude and Angel's Farewell (Gerontius). E. Elgar. Arranged by A. H. Brewer (this arrangement only). (Novello & Co.)

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the January, 1922, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for July 1921.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only Vol. I., 1881-96, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1897-1906, price 8s. 3d. (including postage).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

OCTOBER 1 1921

ALBÉRIC MAGNARD

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

That so few music-lovers—and indeed so few of those who might become his warmest admirers—could be familiar with Albéric Magnard's works is the most tragic feature in a destiny more tragic than ever befell a composer.

Whether those who so far have passed judgment on his output have done so blindly, or with undue harshness, matters little. Averse criticism, which often uses the same language towards the misunderstood man of genius as towards the self-deceiver and the impostor, has treated him exactly as it has treated and still treats other composers whose music ultimately fares no worse for all the destructive comments passed upon it. And—in France and Belgium at least, the only countries where he is known to any extent—he has found a modicum of support. In what has been written about him, the proportion of praise and censure will perhaps not be found very different from what it is in writings on d'Indy, Debussy, or Poulenc.

The pity is, that what has been written about him should amount to so very little, and that he should have been refused the advantages which he could have derived from the free play of criticism—which even at its worst acquaints the public at large with the existence of works, and generally provokes suitable reactions.

He will never, I think, become popular in the usual sense of the word. But his music has power and depth; it is remarkable for a singular and oppressive quality of impassioned earnestness, stern resolution, gravity, and concentration, which will appeal to far greater a number of music-lovers than it has hitherto reached.

He might, in my opinion, find many admirers outside France, where many of those who know his music are repelled by some of its external—especially its ruggedness, and the abstractness of which a constant tendency to appeal to the intellect is the main feature.* But the reasons why he does not occupy among modern composers the rank which even those who do not love his music wholeheartedly would never think of grudging him, are many. And in considering his career and the fortune of his works, it is necessary to bear in mind the incredible amount of obstacles which he met at every turning: some the unavoidable consequences of his nature, of his excessive scruples, diffidence, and suspiciousness; others due to sheer ill-fortune.

To all appearances, Albéric Magnard was born with the traditional silver spoon in his mouth. The only son of the wealthy influential editor of a leading Paris daily paper, it seemed as though none of the difficulties with which earnest-minded composers generally have to contend were to exist for him. Indeed, his first works were welcomed with an eagerness whose real motives he was not long in suspecting. Naturally saturnine, distrustful, intent upon ideals as austere as they were lofty, he determined to owe nothing to favouritism nor to compromise. He developed, together with a tendency to receive all advances with suspicion, an intense dislike for anything resembling self-advertisement. He avoided taking even the most usual and natural steps by which works are brought to the notice of performers and public. Distrust of publishers led him to publish his works himself, with consequences which proved disastrous in more ways than one. His music was played but seldom, and as often as not under conditions that exaggerated its defects and displayed little of its merits. To know which works of his were published was practically impossible. To secure copies for performance or for study was not easy. And so, under most unfavourable circumstances, things went on until the outbreak of the war, which brought the crowning disaster. Magnard, having fired from his window upon the German invaders, was killed, and his house burned. The fire destroyed the whole stock of his published works and his manuscripts, among which was a newly-completed set of twelve songs. Other works irretrievably lost were the orchestral scores of his six songs Op. 3, of his lyric drama 'Yolande,' and of two Acts of his 'Guerceur,' which many agree in considering as his masterpiece in dramatic music.*

The one bright spot in the tragedy of his artistic career was the staunch support of a few enthusiasts. Among these were Guy Ropartz, the able conductor, who has done so much for French music at Nancy, and the late Gaston Carraud, a thoughtful and enlightened critic, whose book 'La Vie, l'Œuvre, et la Mort d'Albéric Magnard' (Paris, 1921, Rouart & Lerolle), constitutes a vindication as sober and judicial as it is fervid and thorough.

It is something of the light which that book throws upon Magnard's outlook and achievements that I should like to convey in this article.

Magnard's music, Carraud tells us, is essentially inner music; music of thought, but 'in which thought is ever action.' His ideal as regards music not associated with words (that is, in song or in drama) was one of unqualified abstractness. According to him, there could be no such thing as poetic expression in music; and he disliked the very notion of forms suggested by a programme. So far did he carry that dislike, that d'Indy's 'Istar,' despite the rigorous logic of its form (it consists of a set of variations, perfectly regular,

* I hope that the above summary utterance will lend itself to no interpretation of my estimate of the standards according to which music is appreciated in France. But in an article not specially devoted to the subject, I cannot deal with it more fully.

* The remainder of his output has been republished from extant copies.

but inverted, i.e., in order of decreasing complexity) elicited from him the following:

I am astonished to see you reverting to the tone-poem: at its best a mongrel, spurious form, semi-musical and semi-dramatic.

Deeply interested in musical architecture, he devoted his utmost attentions to form, his one desire being to achieve new forms without infringing any of the traditional principles in which he unswervingly believed.

The emotional purport of his music is always dependent upon the working of the mind, but only in the broadest sense of the term, and to the exclusion of association or ratiocination proper:

There is no indefiniteness in the impressions which that music conveys, unassisted, and without the need for explanation being felt. His works of pure music are equally easy to analyse as fragments of inner life revealed, statements and workings of feeling and thought, or as musical structures. Both analyses will run a parallel course: for technical terms and moral terms will be found to define the same elements and the same relations.

For colour, or for ornamentation of any kind, Magnard cared very little; plainness and definiteness of patterns, of harmonic and orchestral schemes, in perfect keeping with the austerity of his thought, are the hall-mark of his music.

His dislike for poetic expression did not extend to dramatic expression. On the contrary, his tendency was increasingly to intensify the dramatic element in his instrumental music. Conversely, he attempted to introduce into dramatic music something of the logic and restraint particular to the principles of the symphony:

What Magnard expects from the co-operation of symphony and drama is that symphony should govern the flow of dramatic matter, endow that matter with an order, a logic, a rhythm similar to its own. For him, symphony and drama are two parallel things, which, in the course of their evolution, may be brought closer to one another, but never intermingle. Symphonic music will acquire a greater wealth of dramatic significance without ceasing to be self-supporting; and the texture of dramatic music will be improved by the operation of principles which are those of pure music.

His later works illustrate his progress in that two-fold respect: the lyric drama 'Bérénice' is an instance of pure, severe classicism; whereas in the Violoncello Sonata and the fourth Symphony the dramatic character is more intense than ever.

From the interpenetration of drama and music, Magnard expected the long-desired form which would satisfy both senses and mind, æsthetic conceptions and spontaneous emotions. His works are as many steps towards that gradual concourse of two modes of expressing the same inner activity.

Here we have a topical description of that restless eagerness, those qualms and scruples, that uncompromising ideality which, whilst acting as stimuli to creation, rendered Magnard so diffident, so pessimistic with regard to his achievements. His death came at the very time when he was beginning to feel greater confidence in his methods and direction. Carraud's conclusion is:

Had he lived, further works would have given us a full key to things which may not be quite clear to us now. The future, however, will perhaps reveal what remains enigmatic in his music, and show in the light of a precursor a composer whom at present no few people consider retrogressive solely because of his love for pure form and the lack of neologisms in his idiom.

I have no desire to qualify Carraud's definition of Magnard's instrumental music. There is one point, however, which I should like to make; and that point, I think, is more than implied by what Carraud says.

I believe that the appeal of Magnard's music will depend upon the extent of special affinities existing between the composer and his listeners to no less a degree than, for instance, at the opposite pole, that of Debussy's music. Magnard, in his own fashion, is no less exceptional and recondite. To define his music adequately we have, it is true, to resort only to broad generic terms, terms that appear to convey nothing which does not conform with the broadest and plainest characterisation of music in general. It is impossible to do more than hint at its specific quality, to state what the idiosyncrasies are to which it owes a character so distinctive, so unusual, that there appears to be no medium between wholehearted admiration for it and complete indifference or dislike.

Gaston Carraud rightly notes that Magnard, despite his fondness for logic and unity of form, had little use for the 'cyclic' methods, too abstract, too mathematical, and conducive at times to artificiality and parcimony. On the other hand, his dramatic music is not altogether free from features which might be considered equally abstract and mechanical.

For instance, Carraud lays stress upon the all-important part played in scores like 'Yolande' and 'Guercœur' by certain tonal relationships or contrasts—the functions of certain keys being almost those of leading motives.

We have noted something of the kind in d'Indy's works.* And even after duly taking into account a passage in the 'Treatise of Composition' in which d'Indy states that keys have no expressive value per se, and that all depends upon their mutual relationship in a work, we have felt that a modulatory system founded upon too strict an observance of any such principle might become purely mechanical.

Whether Magnard oversteps the limit beyond which the artifice becomes obtrusive, may be questioned. But I am sometimes annoyed by the way in which he uses certain motives. At one time I wrote:

In 'Guercœur,' as well as in 'Bérénice,' whenever the text offers a possibility for dramatic suggestion—for instance, the words or ideas 'love,' 'flight,' 'anguish,' 'heroism'—he does not fail to underline it with appropriate, or at least customary, combinations of sounds, rhythms, and instrumental colours. He does it in a brief, primitive, and perfunctory way.

It will be remembered that last month I made a similar remark with reference to certain passages in d'Indy's 'Saint-Christophe'†—finding it easier to ascribe slight importance to the criticism than I do in the use of Magnard's works. Carraud, on the other hand, has nothing but praise for the quality of Magnard's motives, and for the regnancy of their functions.

* Musical Times, June, 1921.

† Musical Times, p. 615, col. 2.

Magnard's published works comprise, besides the three scores, 'Yolande' (one Act, 1892), 'Guercœur' (three Acts, 1904), and 'Bérénice' (three Acts, 1909), four Symphonies (1890, 1893, 1895, and 1913), the 'Chant Funèbre,' for orchestra (1895), an Overture (1895), the 'Hymne à la Justice' (1902), the 'Hymne à Vénus' (1904), a few important works of chamber music, a few songs, and a few pianoforte pieces.

ROME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

(Continued from July number, page 472)

BY GUIDO M. GATTI

VII.—VITTORIO GUI

The compositions of an orchestral conductor, in any case, are rarely either interesting or worthy of notice, and, apparently, the same is true of the other countries (in Germany, for instance, it is nothing but complimentary to call a composition 'Kapellmeistermusik'). So far as the writer knows, Martucci was the only example in Italy of a great conductor who was at the same time a notable composer. His personality, which may attract us in a greater or lesser degree, is still of interest, and that not only from an historical point of view. Naturally, I am speaking of composers whose musical activity was dedicated almost entirely to their work as directors of an orchestra, and I leave aside the performances of those composers who, often for fear of yet worse things, adapt themselves to directing their own works and, in order to complete the programme, include some other classical piece as well.

As a rule, the music of orchestral conductors is conspicuous for its absolute correctness and impeccable form; it is like a beautiful unnequin who displays the latest fashions in the most elegant way possible, but is absolutely devoid of expression, as we find if we raise our glance from the dress to the eyes. And the composers of such music resemble those clever dressmakers who, while possessing no particular originality, succeed in producing very charming models, the characteristic features of which are taken from this or that creation by the leading masters of fashion. To be fine, to leave metaphor behind, no trace of this music will survive its author, who, as a rule (alas! for the ingratitude of colleagues), is the only one to perform it in public. No trace will survive, of course, in the most favourable of hypotheses, it will, as Benedetto Croce would say, dissolve again into its original sources. (As a proof of the lack of creative individuality in the compositions of orchestral conductors, and of their consequent subservience to the taste and fashion of their time, we may mention that in the works of other composers it is difficult to find a marked difference between the compositions of twenty years ago and those of the present:

the difference is between contemporary musicality and that of twenty years ago. With the imitative conductor-composer each work follows and moulds itself exactly on the type in vogue the year it was written; nor is there any sign of logical and gradual evolution linking them together.)

Vittorio Gui represents a happy exception worthy of note. This is not the place to discuss his work as a conductor: we will only say that we find revealed in his interpretations that same delicacy and attention to detail, together with a profound vision of the composition as a whole, that forms one of the characteristic features of his original work. It is this anxiety for every detail, for the just importance of every element (a characteristic which brings Gui's interpretations remarkably close to those of Arturo Toscanini for quality), that at times renders the eloquence of the composer's pages too artificial and minute, and that checks inspiration, arresting the impetus in the search for detail and arabesque.

We are speaking especially of his youthful compositions—that is, of those composed up to a few years ago, or to be still more precise, from his twentieth year (he was born at Rome on September 14, 1885), up to 1915.

His art, originating in a slender lyrical nucleus which led to his translating into music with evident sympathy the vibrations of decadent and symbolistic poetry (Mendès and Mallarmé) developed in later years, his lyricism growing more robust, and reaching therefore to higher altitudes; his song breathes out a voluptuousness full of life and desire, and blossoms into designs which are harmonic in line and solid in construction. Everything grows deeper and fuller of emotion; the spirit of the music glides swiftly towards an expressive intimacy, and the beauty is illumined by a warmer light. This evolution is a mark of good quality; all great artistic spirits have known dark days without a noon-tide, when the world trembles and shudders, when the essence of life itself escapes our vigil and all is dominated by matter, in which the word conceals and clouds the thought.

I think that in Gui's case this stylistic crisis was prolonged beyond measure, however much it may have found itself in agreement with the spirit of his musicality: but in its fundamental lines this phenomenon is visible in many of our musicians whose artistic youth was passed in the first ten years of this century. On their entrance into the musical world they found a type of music, wholly violent, appealing to the popular taste, made up of cries and gestures, where detail hardly existed except as a quite unimportant technical necessity not helping in the least to give a complete vision of the scene. Against this music—which was perhaps sincere but which could not be called widely human, shutting itself up as it did in a narrow circle of elementary emotions expressed with stale, schematic formulæ—they strove actively: and the reaction showed itself in the search for even the smallest sensations and in the preponderance given to the most tenuous elements—those which at the most might serve to give us a vague feeling of atmosphere and to trace a pallid halo round each word of the music. In all these compositions—chiefly vocal, this being the field principally contaminated—there is often nothing but a musical interest; emotion rarely peeps out from between the folds of the discourse which is perfection itself: the musician is convinced that when he has attained to a form so pure that nothing further can be desired, he has then attained the summit. But this is not yet art: it is but a kind of half-way house where we may rest for a longer or shorter time, profiting only on condition that we continue our journey. (Ruggero Bonghi remarked of poets what we might repeat of musicians, that in order to be true and simple in feeling and expression they must first have been solitary, exquisite, and 'precious' in form.)

The Cinque Liriche (five lyrics), written by Gui when he was twenty-three, suffer from this tendency. Inspired by poetry of a turbid and sensual nostalgia or of a refined sensiblerie as that of Samain and Catullo Mendès, they derive from this a restlessness of pose which if continued cannot but generate a confusing co-existence of style and performance. There is a groundwork of unity, but it is in certain features which belong to an unworthy past rather than to a fresh present, and in some parts lacking in taste. But it is the feeling of instability which is chiefly noticeable in these lyrics: not even the influence of other composers, justifiable in so young an artist, is decided and predominant, and side by side with unmistakably Debussyan methods (but a 'Debussyism' more tortuous than that of Debussy himself) we find reminiscences of Wagner or of Strauss.

At the same time some signs of personality—possibly more formal than substantial—appear, and these we shall find again in the later compositions, much clearer and more expressive inasmuch as they are freed from the outer husk. We find them already in 'Vespro' and more markedly still in the 'Ombre Cinesi' ('Chinese Shadows'), the six lyrics in which the true artistic figure of the Roman composer begins to stand out clearly. 'Ombre Cinesi' comprise six short poems, possessing that strange dream perfume in which all the poetic creations of the East are steeped: poems which are purposely simple and unadorned in form and yet vastly human and full of suppressed emotion; poems which we cannot sing but only murmur to ourselves, and which those poets recited with impassible faces; poems, in fine, of soulful dreamers without gestures or violence, the essence of which was intuitively grasped by the musician. In these six lyrics which make up in their brief cycle the confessions of a man face to face with Love, exalted and in despair, calmed again, and in the end aspiring to a dawn of peace, victory over senses and passion, the musical expression grows chaste and almost schematic: and all its emotion is contained in the line of song, smooth, almost free from corners or sharp turns—save in some transitory passages of the drama—but rising by degrees to so many levels of successive potentiality. Some of the characteristics in the preceding lyrics remain, but strengthened both by greater condensation of the musical thought, and by being isolated and stripped of all superfluity. Here, even if a first perusal gives us the impression to the contrary, there is never cold ingenuity: the musician gives life even to the flights of fancy with which the first three lyrics of the cycle are adorned, because he takes a lively interest in them—he loves them—he composes them in order to enjoy them, he caresses them with the magic of his style. But it is to the last three lyrics that he gives all his soul and the line is no less pure and classic: it stands out and is strongly delineated in the crystalline transparency of the instrumental speech which does not create it but is entirely animated by it. The beauty of certain crescendos is given by the masterly, well-balanced, and consecutive arrangement of the whole, though certain stereotype methods are discarded so that we may stop at any point of the progressional scale; and the crown which crowns the summit is so necessary an adequate that it wakes innumerable echoes in our hearts.

If the 'Ombre Cinesi' are for us the most expressive of Gui's compositions, showing us as they do without reticence the true essence of his 'aisthesis,' the lyrics of Mallarmé undoubtedly present us with the fruit of a wider experience—that of a grown man—which is no longer ingenuousness but which goes deeper than that of the youth. Whilst each of the 'Ombre' unfolds, and, at the same time, determined a single lyric and sentimental accent, almost schematizing and limiting it, the lyrics of Mallarmé follow the text in all its various windings, conforming to all its most changeable expressions. From a rather monochordal and elementary unity we have reached a polyptic unity, the joint fruit of condensation and excavation; from a vision limited to one cardinal point we have attained to a survey which embraces the whole spiritual horizon.

Of the four lyrics 'Renouveau' is, in our opinion, the best, not only for its perfect harmony with the spirit of the exquisite Mallarmé lyric, but for the cohesion of the composition and the coherence of the style. And this is Gui: a delicate artist-soul in love with unreal things and passing phantasms with a sensibility which is keen but slightly monochrome; with a vision of his art neither cold nor ratiocinated, but, all the same, reserved and sometimes timid, so that to those who approach him superficially he may appear lacking in emotion; with an exquisite sense of detail, of touch of nuance, which he generally succeeds in bringing under the common denominator of the sum total of the composition's economy.

I find these impressions of æsthetic biography, as indicated above, renewed in their general outline in the successive works—for example, in the 'Canti della Morte' ('Songs of Death'), here there is, moreover, a certain leaning towards drama still more clearly shown in the two pieces 'Commiato' ('Farewell') and 'Ritorno' ('Return'), written during the war, which period the musician passed almost entirely in the trenches. And, perhaps, the war has something to do with the change in the spirit and, therefore, in the expression of the musician. The phenomenon of the war will not have any immediate influence on modern art (as Gui himself says in one of his recent articles on the criticism and philosophy of music); but, at the same time, considering its stress, complexity, and profundity, it would be absurd to deny that it has brought about changes in the psychology of men, here re-awakening instincts, there suffocating sentiments:

'It has brought us to the crude and perfect knowledge of ourselves, of the nature of our spirit, to the profound reason of our existence . . . for him who was alive there is, perhaps, a new word shaping itself in the centre of his being and which will turn, little by little, from the darkness of ignorance to the light of revelation.'

Is this the word that we see in 'Ritorno'? Perhaps. But whether the new conception dramatic or lyric—or, perhaps, a collaboration of the two elements—it still has the original elements; there is nothing before us but the development of pre-existent nuclei whose expression was foreseen in the past. It is true, too, that we find for the first time bursts of passion and a certain tumult of ideas; but immediately everything calms down, with a more marked desire for restraint and serenity.

And, in fact, Gui's latest works—written between these seasons, as conductor, at Palermo and one at Lisbon—transport us once more to that land of dreams which is natural to the artist and which his sensibility so intimately and surely perceives by intuition. I am speaking of the symphonic poem 'Voci nel Silenzio' ('Voices in the Silence'), and the musical fairy-tale 'Fata Malerba' ('The Fair Malerba'). The former is taken from the music which accompanied an artistic film with a sentimental and romantic plot—'Fantasia bianca,' the opera as a whole—considered as an attempt to join vision to music or vice versa—is not a success, although both parts are far superior to their subjects of the kind treated by famous composers; but these pages for orchestra and a small chorus of male and female voices to be sung with closed lips are really notable. 'Voci nel Silenzio,' the composer has called them; and in truth they seem to come from very far away, perhaps from the beyond—and perhaps from our inner consciousness—and they serve to remind us that besides the world we see every day and outside, which it seems to us impossible to leave, so selfishly we bound to it, there are other regions, other horizons where all souls and things have their language, and where we can find a refuge in our dark hours and comfort for earthly griefs. The score, woven lightly and tenuously, is finely embroidered, and slowly unfolds, attracting us little by little with its subtle charm. Here the musical interest, and more especially the harmonic—as in the preceding pages—is subordinate to the emotion which reveals itself in the simplest and at the same time most adequate tones. Intimate emotion of hearts which suffer in silence; children's hearts—like those which cheer us as we listen to 'Fata Malerba,' written for them—and poets' hearts, which are children's hearts in love with dreams and illusions.

COMPOSITIONS BY VITTORIO GUI

- 1902. 'Julia and Romeo.' Poem for orchestra and chorus.
- 1905. 'The Sea.' Duet for two mixed voices. (Casa Musicale Italiana, Rome.)
- 1907-10. 'Le Temps qui fût' (after Shelley). Poem for orchestra.
- 1908-09. Five Liriche (words by Samain et Mallarmé). For voice and pianoforte. (Margiotta, Rome.)
- 1910. 'Vespro' (poem by V. Gui). (Ditto.)
- 1911. 'Scherzo Fantastico.' For orchestra. (Casa Musicale Italiana, Rome.)
- 1913. 'Ombre Cinesi.' For voice and pianoforte. (Ditto.)
- 'Passacaglia.' For violin and pianoforte. (Ditto.)
- 1913-14. 'Four Liriche' (words by Mallarmé). For voice and pianoforte. (Pizzi, Bologna.)
- 1914-15. 'Four Chants de la Mort' (popular Greek lyrics, translated by Tommaséo). For voice and pianoforte. (Ditto.)
- 1916-17. 'Commiato,' 'Ritorno' (words by V. Gui). For voice and pianoforte. (Ditto.)
- 1919. 'Voci nel Silenzio.' Poem for orchestra and choir. (Ditto.)
- 1921. 'Fata Malerba' (words by Salvatori). Musical Fable.

THE FALSE MASTERPIECES OF MUSIC

BY CAMILLE SAINT-SAËNS

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell)

Many readers, on seeing the title of this article, will imagine that it is my intention to support the demolishers of the past. This is by no means the case; respectful of the past, I can even respect the dead. Not without a feeling of involuntary veneration do I turn over the pages of these old scores, once the objects of so much fame and glory, though now plunged in eternal oblivion. In certain parts there is still about them an uncommon degree of majesty. Moreover, are we certain that the works which at present fill us with enthusiasm will retain all their prestige as time goes on? Who can tell what will be said of them a century hence? The most eulogistic commentators of the present day do not surpass what the littérati of their age wrote on 'Moses' and 'Semiramis.' In them new worlds were discovered; but then, it was added, the French are not sufficiently sensitive to understand such music: of that the Italians alone are capable!

Rossini, with mournful smile, saw the public gradually cease to take an interest in his operas. When the suggestion of giving 'Semiramis' at the Opéra was made, he wrote a letter in which he disclaimed all responsibility. 'This work,' he said, 'was written for a public and for singers who no longer exist.' He allowed the proposition to be carried into effect so that his old friend Carafa might receive author's rights, it being his task to supervise the performance, though Rossini himself refused to be present.

Youth is ever inclined for war: on many occasions has it attacked immortal masterpieces, like the little mad-headed serpent of the fable. The futile assault upon Racine by the romanticists of 1830 is not yet forgotten. Vacquerie, who had written 'What have I against Phèdre? The dragoonades of the Cevennes!' thus arbitrarily confusing quite different sets of ideas, made way for Racine towards the end of his life. More recently we have seen scorn poured upon the heads of Lamartine, Hugo, and Musset, though no harm to them seems to have resulted. In music, when they began to fight 'for the good cause,' they imagined it their duty to wage upon Mozart a war with which, from the outset, I deliberately refused to associate myself. The cloud is now past, and the star of Mozart shines more brilliantly than ever.

Now, there are some who attack Beethoven's ninth Symphony. The Finale, in which the gaiety of the gods insolently bursts forth, would appear to lack distinction in the opinion of certain persons who confuse 'distinction' with 'a distinguished air.' In vain will they try to sully the purity of this diamond. Other works are more assailable, though there is every reason why they should be respected. It will not be easy to induce me to believe that music could have delighted or thrilled generation after generation unless it possessed the true ring. This is easy to recognise, by the way, if we will take the trouble to study it, and not judge by degenerate performances which stultify it.

This is not what I mean by the 'false masterpieces of music.' I refer to pieces, either ridiculous or mediocre, which the masses have thought they were compelled to admire, falling headlong into the snares set for them by publishers of too knavish a type.

First, there were the 'Waltzes' of Beethoven. These were authentic, written by the author in his youth; slight, insignificant morceaux devoid of charm, in no way resembling the modern idea of the waltz, but simply a three-time rhythm.

This vogue appeared at a time when, the Conservatoire concerts having begun a series of performances of the Symphonies, it became a matter of bon ton to appear to admire Beethoven. The publisher of the 'Waltzes' supplied these admirers—hungry enough, though of feeble digestion—with such nourishment as they were able to swallow. He had cleverly placed at the head of the collection the delightful 'Désir' of Schubert, naturally attributed to Beethoven. All these waltzes were played very slowly, with an excessively affected expression, contrasting in the most ridiculous manner with the vapid platitude of the music.

About the same time, Weber's 'Dernière Pensée' (known in England as 'Weber's Last Waltz') was at the height of its popularity. Here is the story of this spurious composition:

A German company had performed the 'Freischütz' at Paris with great success; in the salons, Liszt had played the 'Invitation à la Valse.' Weber was in the fashion. Then a publisher took a waltz of Reissiger, a composer unknown in France, and made of it the 'dernière pensée' of the composer who died in the prime of life. By playing this morceau slowly and with many nuances, being very careful to play with one hand after the other in accordance with the strict principles of bad playing, holding the head on one side and raising the eyes to heaven, melomaniac women of romantic disposition converted the piece into something very affecting to ears of the Midas type. I was a child at the time, and completely ignorant of music as of everything else. All the same, my instinct rebelled, and I remained cold when listening both to Beethoven's Waltzes and to Weber's 'Dernière Pensée'; all that I felt was a sense of the most profound boredom.

There is another mystification that has been more dangerous, for it has lasted until now—Schubert's 'Lebewohl' ('Farewell').

Schubert's first 'Lieder,' when imported into France, were a revelation. As is well known, instead of being a simple accompaniment intended to support the voice, they united for the first time—to my knowledge, at all events—the melodic charm of the vocal part with an interesting and strongly emphasised pianoforte part. These diversified accompaniments being impossible of execution by unskilful or immature players, a publisher came to their assistance by bringing out under Schubert's name a 'Lied' composed by von Weihrach, an amateur. The morceau, being well written, did no dishonour to Schubert's name, but if it is closely examined a great difference between the two composers is seen in the banal simplicity of the accompaniment, and in the melodic poverty of the cantus which repeats the same note a dozen times. The success of the 'Lebewohl' was very great, owing largely to an extreme facility of execution which the authentic works did not present; moreover, the song dealt with the immortality of the soul:

La mort est une amie
Qui rend la liberté;
Au ciel reçois la vie
Et pour l'éternité!

When a superbly-built woman, gifted with a splendid voice, sang these words, which ended in a succession of formidable chest notes, the effect was irresistible.

The colossal success of the 'Lebewohl' reached the ears of the true author. It was perfectly reasonable that von Weihrach should loudly protest and claim his rights. Vain, however, were his efforts! The 'Lebewohl' was Schubert's so far as the public was concerned, and it will remain so for all time. Many an amateur has spoken enthusiastically of Schubert, though the only thing of his that he knew was this 'Lebewohl.'

The strangest of these bogus works is, perhaps, the one of which Victor Hugo was a victim. Whose idea was it to give him—as emanating from Beethoven—a nondescript melody taken, it would appear, from a 'Revue des Variétés'? Diligent investigators might, perhaps, succeed in discovering the author of this marvel. Utterly ignorant of music as is well known, Victor Hugo readily swallowed the enticing bait. He was induced to write some lines for this 'admirable musique,' to present the world with the spectacle of a collaboration between the great French genius and the great German genius. He wrote 'Stella,' which agrees neither in character nor in prosody with the following somewhat bizarre melody:

Andante.

Là haut, qui sou - rit? Est - ce un es - prit? Est - ce u - ne fem - me? Quel front sombre et doux! Peu - ple à ge - noux! Est - ce notre â - me Qui vient à nous?
Cet - te fi - gure en deuil Par - aît sur no - tre seuil, Et notre an - tique or - gueil Sort du cer - cueil Ses fiers re - gards vain - queurs Ré - veil - lent tous les cœurs, Les nids dans les buis - sons Et les chan - sons.

FINE.

The ninth bar is superfluous; it breaks up the phrase and produces an effect similar to that of a line which contains thirteen feet.

Hugo doted on this air, and had it played for him every evening by Madame Drouet. When the idea came to me to write a 'Hymne à Victor Hugo,' I, thinking to produce something special for the poet, undertook to give a musical turn to this legendary melody. By suppressing the parasitic bar, presenting the theme in a certain way:

Fl., Ob., and Cl.

Cor.

superposing two fragments of the melody:

a word, by applying all the tricks of the trade, I succeeded in obtaining from this artificial diamond a few flashes. . . .

So true is it that 'the trade' is not without its uses! There are some who disdain it, and acknowledge nothing but inspiration. Inspiration is the priceless and indispensable material, the rough diamond, the virgin metal; 'the trade' is the art of the lapidary and the jeweller: it is equivalent to saying that it is Art itself. Those who despise 'the trade' will never be more than amateurs.

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XXI.—ROBERT JONES

It is well perhaps to warn the reader that Robert Jones, the early Tudor composer, is quite a different person from the Robert Jones of the 'Triumphs of Oriana,' for there is more than half a century separating the musical activities of the two composers. As a matter of fact, the earlier of the two namesakes was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1512, while the later Robert Jones was not born till about the year 1560. The early Tudor composer has the distinction of figuring among the contributors to Wynkyn de Worde's unique printed book of 'Twenty Songs, ix. of iiiii. parts and xi. of iii. parts,' dated from London, on October 10, 1530. He is also included in Morley's oft-quoted list—published in 1597—of famous English composers who flourished before the Reformation, and hence he deserves inclusion in the present series, all the more by reason of the fact that his biography does not appear in any of our standard books of reference.

Robert Jones was born c. 1485, and was a boy chorister in the Chapel Royal under William Newark. On the death of Edward Johns, or Jones (who may, possibly, have been a relative), he was appointed a 'Gentleman of the King's Chapel,' in March, 1512, under William Cornish.* He accompanied King Henry VIII. in the summer of 1513 as one of the Chapel Royal, and there are contemporary notices of the magnificent singing of the English monarch's chapel at Thérouann, on September 3 following, when 'a Te Deum was sung by the King's singers,' followed by 'an Anthem of Our Lady and another of St. George.' On September 17, at Tournai, in a pavilion of purple and gold, after a sermon by the Bishop of St. Asaph, a Te Deum was again sung by the choristers of the Chapel Royal, led by Dr. Robert Fayrfax, under the direction of William Cornish, Master of the Boys. It is interesting to add that there is a German account of the Picardy campaign in the 'Calendar of Letters of Henry VIII.,' with an English translation, from which we learn that for amusement, 'for field music the English had a shalm player and a bagpiper who play together,' while the military music consisted of 'flutes, trumpets, and drums.'

Between the years 1514 and 1519 Jones was living at East Greenwich, as we learn from an interesting document in the 'Patent Rolls of Henry VIII.' In this grant, which was formally enrolled on November 21, 1520, Thomas Farthing, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, 'and his heirs for ever,' was constituted the owner of 'a tenement in East Greenwich, formerly in the tenure of Robert Jones.'

* For an account of Cornish see No. III. of the present series (Musical Times, November, 1919).

The only rent payable for Jones' tenement was 'the service of a red rose, if it be asked.'

At the historic Field of the Cloth of Gold, in June, 1520, Robert Jones was one of the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, whose magnificent singing was much admired by French critics (Musical Times, June, 1920). On his return to England he obtained another tenement, but the new owner of his former residence, Thomas Farthing,* did not long enjoy it, as his death occurred on December 12 of the same year (1520).

The next glimpse we get of Robert Jones is in the official 'List of the Ministers of the King's Chapel,' in the Eltham Ordinances of 1526, where his name figures as seventh in the roll of Gentlemen of the King's Chapel. Very little else seems to be chronicled of him save that he contributed to Wynkyn de Worde's Song Book of 1530, as previously stated. In this unique collection, now housed in the British Museum, Jones is represented by a song, 'Who shall have my fair lady,' set for three voices.

I can find no trace of Robert Jones after the year 1535, so it is safe to conclude that he died about that date. The appearance, however, of the name R. Jones in a document of the year 1538 at one time led me to imagine that, probably, this reference was to the early Tudor composer, but an examination of the original record revealed the fact that the person therein named was in reality a certain Richard Jones, who turned out to be 'Chief Master of St. Paul's School'—quite a different personage. In any case, the position of Robert Jones as Gentleman of the Chapel Royal was filled up in 1536, certainly before the year 1537.

As regards his compositions, we have previously alluded to his song in Wynkyn de Worde's book (1530), and to his fame as a composer on the testimony of Morley. However, there is more tangible evidence of his powers in his Mass and Magnificat, both of which are among the Peterhouse MSS. The former, namely, his Mass 'Spes Nostra,' will be found in MS. both at Peterhouse, Cambridge, and in Add. MS. 34191. It may be noted that the tenor part is wanting. Further, the name of the composer appears in the MS. as 'Robard Joonys.' The latter MS. displays much invention, even from a cursory examination, and, together with the Mass, ought to be printed by the Carnegie Trust or the British Music Society. It is a distinct advance on the technique of Cornish and Crane, and shows a glimmering of the great polyphonic work afterwards achieved by Tallis and Byrd, though, it must be added, not to be compared with Ludford, whose memoir will form the next number in the present series.

A LOST HANDEL MANUSCRIPT

BY W. BARCLAY SQUIRE

The story of the various shapes assumed by Handel's settings of the legend of 'Acis and Galatea' is one of considerable intricacy. Its earliest form is the Serenata for three solo voices, 'Aci, Galatea, e Polifemo,' which was written at Naples in 1708. Nothing is known as to its origin, but the incomplete autograph is preserved in the Royal Collection now housed in the British Museum, and the work was printed by Dr. Chrysander in vol. liii. of the German Handel Society's edition. The second setting, which is practically 'Acis and Galatea' as now known, dates from about 1720, and was written for performance at Cannons at the end of Handel's career there. It owes hardly anything to the early Italian work and was entirely composed to English words—mainly by John Gay, but with interpolations from Dryden, Hughes, and Pope.

The Serenata does not seem to have been performed in London for some years, though songs from it were published by Walsh at various intervals. Particulars of these will be found in the note on p. 263 of vol. ii. of Chrysander's 'G. F. Händel' (1860). In 1731, 'at the desire of several persons of quality,' 'Acis and Galatea' was given at the Lincoln's Inn Field Theatre 'for the benefit of Mr. Rochetti,' who sang the part of Acis, Galatea being Mrs. Wright Polyphemus, the veteran Leveridge; Corydon, Legar and Damon, Salway. Corydon does not appear in the original work, and Chrysander surmises that this part was introduced to fill up the blanks left by the omission of the choruses, which were probably not sung on this occasion. But this performance which took place on March 26, remains something of a mystery; probably it was given without the composer's authority. The Lincoln's Inn Field production, however, served its purpose in awakening interest in the work, for in May, 1732, 'Acis and Galatea' was given as 'an English Pastoral opera' at the Little Theatre in the Haymarket, then under the direction of Dr. Arne's father. In this performance Mountier was Acis and Susanna Arne (afterward Mrs. Cibber) Galatea, while the part of Polyphemus was taken by Waltz, Handel's cook, whom Burne says had 'a coarse figure and a still coarser voice but 'as an actor had a great deal of humour.' The presence of Waltz in the cast, and the fact that the Arne family was more or less in Handel's circle makes it probable that this performance took place with the composer's sanction. Its success evidently induced Handel to make some profit out of the work for in the following June he announced that at the King's Theatre, Haymarket, would be performed:

... a Serenata called Acis and Galatea, formerly composed by Mr. Handel, and now revised by him, with several additions, and to be performed by a great number of the best Voices and Instruments. There will be no action on the Stage, but the Scene will represent, in a picturesque manner, a Rural Prospect with rocks, groves, fountains, and grottoes, amongst which will be disposed a chorus of nymphs and shepherds; the habits and every other decoration suited to the subject.

The libretto of this production, which has been printed in the German Handel Society's edition, shows that it was an extraordinary mixture of the early 'Aci, Galatea, e Polifemo' and the English 'Acis and Galatea.' The inartistic character of the performance has much exercised Handel biographers, who have found considerable difficulty in defending it. But, clearly, the real reason for Handel's procedure is that things were going badly with the opera, and the success of Arne's production showed a chance of reimbursement for the season's losses at the King's Theatre. Handel's company there included Italian singers who could not sing English, and to make use of them he hit upon the plan of interlarding the English 'Acis and Galatea' with parts of his old Italian Serenata. The result was certainly inartistic, but it answered its purpose. The polyglot work was performed at Oxford, 1733, and was frequently repeated during the owing years until about 1740, when it was replaced by 'Acis and Galatea' as we now know it. At the 1732 performance, Acis was sung by Mesino, Galatea by Strada, and Polifemo by Battagiana; the new characters introduced were Ari (Roberts), Eurilla (Davis), Filli (Bagnoli), Linda (Bertolli), and Silvio (Pinacci); the name Damone occurs in the list of characters in the libretto, but nowhere else. The work was divided into three Acts, the second of which ends with the chorus, 'Smiling Venus, queen of love,' which was written expressly for the production.

* For an account of Thomas Farthing, see No. XIII. of these articles (Musical Times, December, 1920).

In 1892, Dr. Chrysander printed (as vol. liii. of the edition of Handel) the whole of the 1708 'Acis and Galatea, e Polifemo,' from the imperfect autograph in the Royal Collection, and (in the same volume) the libretto of the 1732 version, together with most of the pieces which Handel either altered or composed for this performance. In a preface to this volume the editor says:

The autograph in Buckingham Palace wants the last leaf, which must have contained the date. This leaf has been transformed [transferred?] to the conducting score which Handel used at performances after 1732, and which still exists in England, though its possessor cannot now be traced. About thirty years ago the latter showed it to Victor Schoelcher, but, unfortunately, Schoelcher did not succeed in obtaining it, and could not subsequently discover the possessor, who he thought had the name Lambert and lived in the country [Yorkshire?]. The autograph of the original Neapolitan cantata breaks off in the last aria, 'Del mar fra l'onde,' at the sixteenth bar. . . . Unfortunately Schoelcher took a note of the date, which was given at the end of the now lost volume.

In printing the Serenata, Chrysander completed (as he thought) from a copy in the Royal Library, Berlin, which dated only from 1840; this gave the end of 'Del mar fra l'onde' and the final 'Chi ben ama.' But a slight perusal of the manuscript shows that something must be missing between the air and the trio, for Acis, who has been killed at the end of the first act, reappears to join Galatea and Polifemo in the final trio.

Fortunately the matter can now be made clear owing to the acquisition by the British Museum a few years ago of the missing volume seen by Schoelcher. It seems originally to have belonged to Robert Smith, at whose sale in 1813 it was bought by Thomas Gresham for £1. With the manuscript letters from Schoelcher and from Rophino, both of whom saw it in 1857 and 1858, when it belonged to Mr. W. B. Lambert. After that it disappeared until it was offered to the Museum from the extreme North of England. An examination of the manuscript enables some corrections and additions to be made to Chrysander's vol. liii. Both the name of the binding and the title-page are singularly correct. The latter reads:

Acige è Galatea. Drama composta dal Sr. Giorgio Freder. Handel. Napoli. 16 Guignio 1708
It was afterwards altered and performed at the Haymarket.

This inscription, as well as a good many of the words (where no music is given) is in a hand which must be considerably later than the rest of the volume. The music seems to be the work of three copyists: A (ff. 2-16 v.), B (ff. 17-21, 27 v.-42, 49-60 v.), C (ff. 61-76 v., and 87), and C—who occupies the rest of the volume and was almost certainly the elder brother. In addition to this, ff. 98-101 are in Handel's autograph, and belong to the 'Acis and Galatea, e Polifemo' in the Royal Collection. In portions of the Smith copies Handel has also written the words. This is the case on ff. 43-46 ('Ferito son d'Amore'—the Italian version of 'O ruddier than the cherry'), ff. 47 and 48 ('Would you gain the tender creature?'), and ff. 80 et seq. ('Delfin vivra sul monte'—the Italian of 'The flocks shall leave the mountains'). There are many blank pages, on some of which the words of the missing numbers have been written in the same handwriting as the incorrect title-page. In the opening chorus of Act 3, 'Viver e non amar,' 'Francesca' (i.e., Francesina) is written above Strada's part of Galatea; later names for Acis and Filli occur in the same number, and on folio 70 v. 'Mr. Powell' appears as Acis. But in fixing the date of the volume the watermarks are of most importance. The copyists described as A and B use paper which bears the name of J. Whatman in a watermark; this does not occur in the paper used in the portions written by C (Smith) or Handel. I am kindly informed by a present representative of the Whatman family that James Whatman married in 1740 the widow of Richard Harris, who owned the Turkey Mills at Boxley, and that this was the beginning of the connection of the Whatmans with paper-making. It follows that 1740 is the earliest possible date in which Whatman's name can occur as a watermark, and that the portions of the Lambert MS. written by the copyists described as A and B cannot have been written before that year. It is therefore impossible that this part of the manuscript should be the original conducting score of 1732. The pages in Smith's handwriting may well be older, and the presence in them of words in Handel's autograph points to their having to do with the 1732 production. But the chief interest of the Museum's acquisition consists in the recovery of the end of the early 'Acis, Galatea, e Polifemo' autograph. This breaks off at the sixteenth bar of Galatea's air, 'Del mar fra l'onde.' The Lambert manuscript then continues it with four leaves—not one, as Chrysander surmised. These contain the end of Galatea's air, which is followed by a long recitative for Polifemo, partly accompanied by figured bass (continuo) and partly by strings (senza cembalo). This recitative explains the action preceding the final trio. The words are as follows:

Ferma, ma già nel mare
Con l'algose sue braccia
Nettun l'accoglie,
E nel suo sen l'allaccia.
Stupido ma che veggio!
Acis disciolto in fiume
Siegue l'amato bene!
E mormorando
Così si va lagnando:

Vissi fedel mia vita
E morto ancor t'adoro,
E de' miei chiari argenti
Col mormorio sonoro
Non lascio di spiegare
I miei tormenti.
Or dolce mio tesoro
Con labro inargentato
Forse più fortunato
Ti bacierò
Del tuo Nereo fra l'onde
E l'arenose sponde,
Che imporporai collsangue,
Mentre d'empio destin
Solo mi lagno
Co' miei puri cristalli,
E lavo e bagno.'

Et io che tanto ascolto,
 Cieli come non moro ?
 Ah, la costanza
 Di chi ben ama
 Un giorno non sa
 Ne può mai variar sembianza.

The trio, 'Chi ben ama,' then follows in the form printed by Chrysander, and at the end is the signature, 'Napoli li 16 di Guignio. 1708. d'Alvito.'

What is meant by 'd'Alvito' is a decided puzzle. It can hardly mean the name of the author of the words, for, so far as I know, there is no Italian poet of this name, nor was it Handel's custom to give the names of the authors of the words that he set. 'Alvito' is the name of a Portuguese title, but this does not help one much in solving the riddle. 'd'Alvito' might mean that the work was written at Naples in a district or palace of the name, but none can be found in Carletti's 'Topografia' (Naples, 1776). A 'Strada della Vita' occurs in that work, marked in the map just below Capo di Monte, but it would be too wild a guess to suggest that this was intended. Possibly some Neapolitan archæologist may find a solution of the puzzle.

THE HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL

This has been a critical time for the Three Choirs Festival, but most of all for Hereford, where, since the last Festival in 1912, there has been a remarkable change among the more prominent of its organizers—a new secretary, a new conductor, a new Bishop, and a new Dean. Happily, neither of the two most important officials were inexperienced in the traditions; the hon. secretary, Mr. George Holloway, has for many years been (and still is) superintendent of the choir, and Mr. Percy Hull had a long connection with the music of the Cathedral, first as choirboy and afterwards as assistant to the late Dr. Sinclair. None the less, Mr. Hull had an arduous and exacting task in conducting his first festival, and although no doubts existed concerning his musicianship, his experiences at Ruhleben, and his subsequent illness, made some fearful of his staying powers. It may at once be said that he achieved an unqualified success; he gained the confidence of orchestra and choir, he kept his head, and he gave evidence of a distinctly musical temperament. His tempi were on the side of vivacity, which afforded a contrast with those of his predecessor, but his readings were never exaggerated, and when he acquires the assurance which comes from experience, they should become individual and interesting.

When we come to analyse the programme, the curious fact emerges that three-quarters of the time was taken up by three composers—Handel, Mendelssohn, and Elgar. 'Elijah' to begin the Festival, 'The Messiah' to close it. This is in accordance with a practically uninterrupted tradition, and for it there are two very sound reasons—first, that these two works maintain their popularity with the public on whose support the Festival chiefly depends; secondly, they materially reduce the work of full rehearsal, for which, even then, the time is barely sufficient. As for Sir Edward Elgar, his world-wide fame finds its focus in the Three Choirs Festival, and if he owed something to them in his youth, he is now paying back the debt with interest. On this occasion he lightened Mr. Hull's responsibility by conducting 'The Dream of Gerontius,'

'The Apostles,' and the Violoncello Concerto (of which a really poetic reading was given, with Miss Beatrice Harrison as soloist); and the chamber concert, which at Hereford forms a unique supplement to the Festival, ended brilliantly and impressively with the Pianoforte Quintet.

Nor was Sir Edward the only composer who appeared to conduct his own music, for no fewer than seven others introduced their works, and these were either new or recent, they are of a more general interest, and deserve to be dwelt upon a somewhat greater length than the familiar things. Dr. Vaughan Williams came first, and conducted his Fantasy for Strings on a Theme by Tallis, which has before been heard at one of these Festivals. It is work in which old wine has been put into new wine skins without disaster, for the character of the theme is well preserved, the strings being handled with power and worked up to a fine climax of intensity. Prof. Walford Davies' setting of 'Heaven's Gate' from Blake's 'Jerusalem,' is a serious effort to realise the mystical nature of the text in which the poet-seer draws a picture of England very applicable to the present distress. The composer is happier in the optimistic conclusion than in depicting the desolation caused by the 'terrible devouring sword,' for he failed to make so distinct an impression, and here the ensemble of solo voice (Miss Margaret Balfour) and orchestra was less effective than in the more delicately-handled portions. The work, however, of a character that can hardly produce its full effect when given on festival scale; it demands more intimate treatment. Mr. B. J. Dale, Mr. E. L. Bainton, and Mr. F. Keel all shared with Mr. Percy Hull the experience of captivity at Ruhleben, and theirs must have been a pleasant reunion at the Festival, where each of them contributed a piece to the programme. Mr. Dale has hitherto been known chiefly as a composer of works of smaller calibre, but his setting for chorus and orchestra of Christina Rossetti's 'Christmas Hymn,' though quite modest in conception, proved perfectly effective in the Cathedral. He has striven to suggest the simple, folk-like quality of the carol, and has avoided elaboration even preserving, at the risk of monotony, the original rhythm throughout the three stanzas. It is eminently smooth and gracious music, pastoral and tender in mood, and decidedly attractive. Mr. Bainton's work was his series of three pieces for orchestra, an Elegy, an Intermezzo, and a Humoresque, all of which were written at Ruhleben. They show a complete musicianship and refined taste, and the orchestra is handled with unobtrusive but satisfying effect. There is no very marked originality in the ideas, but the 'Bacchanal Humoresque,' originally intended as an entr'acte for 'Twelfth Night,' is quite rollicking and vivacious. The only actual novelties were also heard at the same concert. One was the third cycle of 'Pastorals' which Mr. Brewer has composed, entitled 'Jillian of Bern.' He has just the lightness of touch necessary for such work, and I would certainly echo an opinion I have seen advanced, that he is the very man to write comic opera. His music is simple, melodious, and flowing, yet it always evades commonplace by little unexpected touches, and the orchestra is most deftly handled. Again he had in Mr. John Coates, an interpreter who threw himself heart and soul into the spirit of the music—whose only fault, indeed, was that he inclined to put into his performance more 'point' than it would bear, and might in some places have the music to speak for itself. A striking contrast is afforded by Mr. W. H. Reed's brilliantly clever piece, which he styles 'A Whimsical Fantasy for Orchestra,' and entitles 'The Lincoln Imp.' It professes to illustrate the apocryphal story of the mischievous little effigy in Lincoln Cathedral, some of the details of which Mr. Reed seems to have evolved for the occasion. He supposes the Imp to have been blown away by the wind into the Cathedral, where he wreaks his playful malice by jangling the bells, rumbling on the organ, tearing the vestments, and shaking the candlesticks, till at last his course of mischief is stayed by an angel, who turns him into stone. The music is most graphic, and quite as lively as it should be. Mr. Reed is up to every possible orchestral device, and all his effects come off. Some periods of repose would be welcome, but it is not easy to imagine any that would be in keeping of the boldest and most original choral works that have been produced for many years past. It has by now been heard on several occasions, but never under such favourable conditions. In the spacious Norman nave, with its massive grey pillars and ancient history, this mystical, archaic-sounding music, which so fits the quaint text, had its fitting environment. Its harmonic crudities were toned down, its fragments of plainsong melody seemed in place, and, though as is so often the case we wished the performers were out of sight, the impression made by the work was felt to be just what the composer intended. Its grandiose proportions were justified, and the sense of scale which is, perhaps, the composer's most salient characteristic, was fully realised. The performance was an excellent one: possibly some flaws in detail may have existed, but the general character of the work was admirably brought out. The choir sang

Photo by

MR. PERCY HULL.

DR. HERBERT BREWER.

Wilson-Phillips, Hereford.
SIR IVOR ATKINS.

such a tricky subject: perhaps a short epilogue suggesting the calm dignity returning to the great arch when its tormentor had been incorporated in the fabric would not be inappropriate, and would leave as pleasant an impression behind as is caused by the ending of another rogue's history, that of Till Eulenspiegel, as told by Strauss. It may as well be imagined, a tricky, restless piece, though much too well written to provide great technical difficulty, requires careful and thorough rehearsal, so that, brilliantly as it was given, the performance by the London Symphony Orchestra seemed not altogether devoid of effort. It may, however, be due in a measure to its being given in a hall much too small for noisy orchestral effects. I have reserved Mr. Holst's share in the festival till the last, because I think that it afforded the most distinctive feature of the event. His 'Hymn of Jesus,' whether we like it or not, is one with remarkable freedom, the solo tenor voice away from the orchestra had exactly the right effect in the 'Pange Lingua,' and the insufficient organ erected for the Festival was most effectively reinforced by the occasional use of a pedal stop in the big organ in the Choir. It was indeed so great a success that I trust it may be repeated next year at Gloucester—where the surroundings and the acoustics should be at least as favourable—before the impression has been forgotten.

To show to what an extent native art was represented I may here record the other pieces by British composers that were heard. Foremost was the splendid Motet for unaccompanied seven-part chorus, 'At the round earth's imagined corners,' a setting of Donne's poem, which is one of the group that Sir Hubert Parry, with a strange prevision, entitled 'Songs of Farewell.' It is a noble work, worthy to rank with the best things of its class, and, for all its brevity, was felt worthy to represent a composer who had a close association with these festivals. It also enabled one to appreciate the quality of the choir, which struck me, after a long experience of the Three Choirs, as one of the very best I have heard. Good in every part, and unusually well-balanced, it stood the fatigues of the week well, and seemed as fresh in 'And the Glory of the Lord' on the last day as it was in 'Elijah' at the opening. It was always equal to the occasion, and I observed only one noticeable slip, and that was a conspicuous lapse in 'The Apostles.' I ought to add here that both 'The Apostles' and 'Gerontius' met with exceptionally good all-round performances. In the former the semi-chorus of nine male voices, representing the apostles, was for the first time employed in accordance with the composer's intentions. At the orchestral concert, Bantock's 'Sappho' songs were sung by Miss Phyllis Lett, who has, by the way, advanced her reputation of late by showing more restraint in her readings, and Mackenzie's 'Britannia' Overture ended the programme. The chamber concert was 'all British,' and included Dr. Ethel Smyth's musicianly String Quartet in E minor, Elgar's Quintet (as already mentioned), and songs by Parry, Stanford, Vaughan Williams, Dunhill, Ireland, and Edward German, besides a series of four delightful Elizabethan love-songs by Campion, Bartlet, and Dowland, arranged with good effect by F. Keel for the accompaniment of a string quartet. They were sung by Miss Dorothy Silk, whose fresh voice and refined style were welcome. For the sake of completeness it must be stated that at the opening service a slow movement—from a Symphony in E minor by Dr. H. Holloway—was played and proved very melodious and graceful music. The Canticles were sung to C. Lee Williams' setting in D.

The other features of the Festival may be dealt with more briefly. Two of Bach's vocal works were heard, the unfamiliar Church cantata, 'Come, Redeemer of our Race'—which was received with interest, though it is not among the most sustained or characteristic of these works—and the air, 'Comfort sweet, my Jesu comes,' for soprano voice, flute, and string quartet—a really charming piece. The other choral works were the first part of Haydn's 'Creation,' Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' which, if memory does not fail me, made one of its earliest appearances in this country at a Hereford Festival in the 'eighties, and Brahms' Alto Rhapsody (in which the male-voice choir was far too large for the intimate nature of the work). The Grail scene from 'Parsifal' had for twenty-four years been a constant feature at Hereford, where the acoustics of the Cathedral and the possibility of stationing the boys' choir in the triforium of the central tower have made it so effective, that we are never tired of hearing it under conditions which go far to reproduce the peculiar rapture of Bayreuth. Save that the boys were a little too anxious, and their voices just a shade too keen, and that the mammoth instrument devised to suggest the sound of bells was not effective (it should surely be coupled with actual bells of higher pitch), the performance was as effective as ever. In one respect a unique distinction possessed by Hereford was abandoned. It used to be the one place where we could hear Handel's 'Messiah' without a single cut, but at last it has succumbed, and the limitations of human endurance have been recognised by the omission of the customary pieces in the later sections. One hardly knows whether to be glad or sorry. Bach's third 'Brandenburg' Concerto, Mozart's C minor Symphony, and Brahms' Haydn Variations were the orchestral works chosen.

The principals, other than those already mentioned, were Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Mary Foster, Mr. Roland Jackson, Mr. Frank Mullings, Mr. Norman Allin, Mr. Herbert Heyner, Mr. George Parker, and Mr. Robert Radford. Miss Foster was a newcomer at the Festival, but her pleasant, unaffected style made her singing of the contralto solos 'The Messiah' enjoyable. The others need no eulogy; but this at least may be said of them, that I notice no square pegs in round holes. Sir Ivor Atkins, whose direction of the first of the revived Festivals has since last year's Worcester Festival received official acknowledgment, and Dr. Brewer were at the organ, and Dr. H. G. Ley, of Christ Church, Oxford, was the pianist in Elgar's Quintet.

One or two records have been achieved at Hereford on this occasion. The amount of the collections and the receipts from the sale of tickets are, I am glad to hear, greater than they have ever been, though must be remembered that, with enhanced expenses and 'entertainment' tax, the profits may not be correspondingly phenomenal. Fine weather is a traditional at the Three Choirs Festivals that we should hesitate to style the glorious week of sunshine a record, but at any rate it cannot have been exceeded in brilliance. The choir, too, has never been better, and I think that few conductors could have made a more successful début than Mr. Hu. I understand that he has had little or no previous experience with an orchestra, and in acknowledging some formal congratulations at the final concert, he modestly confessed the great help he had received from Mr. W. H. Reed, the leader of the Symphony Orchestra, which suggests that here history has repeated itself, for I recollect how, when Dr. Sinker began his conducting, he stayed with Carrodus, his leader, for some time before the Festival in order to learn something of the technique of the conductor's art.

HERBERT THOMPSON.

Music in the Foreign Press

FASHION IN MUSIC

To the Revue Musicale (August) Charles Koechlin contributes a long, thoughtful article, whose general object is to emphasise the following point:

Taste and sincerity are nowadays so uncommon that we can see no connection between fashion, which patronises all works of a certain type indiscriminately, and beauty, which does not depend upon subservience to any particular type.

He has a good many things to say upon musical matters: in praise of Fauré, Debussy, Magnard, and Ravel; in deprecation of the iconoclastic theories which are in fashion just now among the spokesmen of certain groups of French composers; upon the differences between traditionalism and academism; upon contemporary life as a source of inspiration for artists. He deplores

... the callousness, the pettishness, the lack of imagination evinced by the attitude of certain would-be leaders of fashion. But not all the young composers obey the dictates of a few incompetent fanatics. Read Darius Milhaud's 'Poèmes de Léo Latil,' and you will see that they lack neither expressiveness nor lyricism. Honegger's 'Mort d'

Sainte Alméenne' and 'Pastorale d'Été' are instinct with expression; his choreographic work, 'Le Combat des Horaces et des Curiaces,' is spirited and powerful. Those young folk, obviously, are attracted by the notion of simplicity and power as opposed to sentimentality and turgidity. It is to be hoped that their musical gifts will prevent their going astray along the path of artificial simplicity. That they should evince a predilection for plain, direct methods, is after all in accordance with tradition. What they still lack is technical proficiency. And in any case, to overlook the teachings of the past, to hold aloof, systematically, from all influences, can in no circumstances be a sound course.

LILI BOULANGER

Lili Boulanger won the French Prix de Rome at the age of twenty (being the first woman to achieve that distinction), and died (in 1918) before having completed her twenty-fifth year. What Camille Maclair and Georges Migot write about her in the August Revue Musicale is in complete agreement with other opinions available so far. She is represented as a composer of high genius, whose music embodies not mere promise but achievement. Her output consists of a dozen important works, vocal and orchestral, songs, an unfinished Sonata, and an all but finished lyric drama in five Acts, Maeterlinck's 'La Princesse Maleine.' Maclair, in his general article, and Migot, in his account of a recent concert devoted to her works, agree in singling out for special praise the set of thirteen songs, 'Clairières sous le ciel,' the 129th Psalm, and 'Pour les unes d'un Soldat.' According to them, Lili Boulanger's output comprises no single page that could leave us indifferent.

STENDHAL ON MUSIC

Henry Prunières, having unearthed a number of Stendhal's feuilletons on Italian Opera in 1826, publishes them in the same issue. They are highly interesting for the student of Stendhal, and not devoid of interest so far as the history of opera and littantism in France are concerned.

LA FONTAINE AND LULLY

Prunières also investigates, in a most interesting article, the reasons why La Fontaine never succeeded in writing a libretto to please Lully. La Fontaine, he claims, lacked the sense of dramatic situations which Lully wanted and found in Quinault:

La Fontaine's ideals remained restricted to the obsolete Air de Cour, Ballets, and Pastorals. His tendency was to bring opera back in the rut from which Lully had succeeded in disengaging it. History, indeed, ever repeats itself. Every two-score or three-score years, the aspects of music change; and people start protesting, unable to realise that nothing in Art is perishable but the successive forms which Art adopts. They deplore the death of Music at the very moments when Music, having shed a threadbare garment, is revealing itself in virgin splendour.

MUSICIANS OF ARMENIA, HOLLAND, AND POLAND

In the same issue, Marguerite Babaian briefly scribes the career of Father Komitas (1870-1915), whose untiring and judicious activities as teacher, collector of folk-tunes, and composer, Armenian music stands deeply indebted. She expresses the hope that the many manuscripts of his which lie unuttered at Paris, at Constantinople, and in the Caucasus, will be published, and promises notices on other Armenian composers.

Henry de Groot commends for their originality and power of expression the works of the young Dutch composer James Zwart, whose output is considerable.

Alexandre Tansman names, among Polish composers whom he deems worthy of notice, Ludomir Rozycki (born 1883), Felician Szopski (born 1865), Franciszek Bzezinski (born 1867), Gregori Fotelberg (born 1879), and Karol Hubert Rostworowski. He places special faith in the first-named.

ILDEBRANDO PIZZETTI

The August number of Il Pianoforte, devoted to Pizzetti's works, comprises articles by F. Liuzzi, Castelnovo Tedesco, A. della Corte, and Guido Gatti.

A CONTRIBUTION TO REGER'S BIOGRAPHY

In Die Musikwelt (September) Dr. Fritz Stein relates how, in 1910, Reger strongly felt the impulse to compose a Mass and a Te Deum, but never carried out the plan. His 100th Psalm remains his only great choral work of the religious order. Dr. Stein tells in full the history of its genesis, illustrating it with quotations from the composer's correspondence.

ALFRED BRUNEAU

Le Ménestrel continues the publication of the lectures on French composers recently given at the Concerts Padeloup. Some are moderately useful, others are valuable as permanent contributions to the history of French music. Several have already been noticed in this column; and the issues of August 19 and 26 bring us an excellent paper by Charles Koechlin on Bruneau, whose works deserve far wider recognition than they have as yet met with.

HAUD PASSIRUSÆQUIS

In the Nouvelle Revue Musicale (August), Leon Vallas writes:

How difficult it is for the critical mind to keep pace with the creative mind is exemplified by the fact that so intelligent and scholarly a man as Saint-Saëns protests against the new developments in music.

In his speech at the 'École des Hautes Etudes Musicales,'* he declares that it is impossible for music to proceed further along the path which it now follows without reverting to its primitive cacophonous state. The assertion calls for one answer only: Galileo's 'e pur si muove!'

PIANOFORTE DUETS

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (August), Martin Frey enumerates music originally written in the form of pianoforte duets, which he thinks ought to be better known than it generally is. He regrets that the attention which duet players pay to transcriptions should often lead them to overlook works such as Mozart's Fantasy in F minor, Beethoven's Variations on 'Ich denke dein,' Schubert's Fantasies, 'Grand Duo,' 'Variations,' and 'Divertissement à la Hongroise.' He refers to Jensen, Moscheles, Dvorák, Brahms, and others. But of more modern composers, the only two whom he mentions are Paderewski and Hans Huber.

GERMAN MUSIC ABROAD

In the same journal (August, second issue), Dr. Georg Göhler explains how German music may maintain its preponderance abroad. He lays stress upon the demand that existed in other countries for German instrumentalists, and the advantages which Germany and German music used to derive from the export of such 'pioneers':

* See Musical Times, September, 1921, p. 625.

The German instrumentalist must become one of the most sought after and best-paid 'imported articles.' He should be the best and most capable. Likewise the German music-teacher.

Our music-publishers' activities have ensured a wide diffusion of German music abroad. The State should do everything in its power to assist those publishers in resisting their competitors. German editions must always occupy the first place on the world's markets.

In the same issue, Carl Schöffner describes the progress of German music and German music industries in South America from the 17th century onwards. He shows how wide and fertile a field that continent affords for propaganda both artistic and commercial.

HANDEL'S 'RODELINDA' AT GÖTTINGEN

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (July), Rudolf Steglich discusses the conditions under which 'Rodelinda' was produced last year at Göttingen. Whilst admitting that it would have been impossible to give the work in its full original form, he thinks that it was a mistake to leave out certain Arias, thereby impairing the architecture and fine tonal balance of the whole. It would have been better to suppress the middle section and da Capo of all Arias.

AN UNPUBLISHED LETTER OF MOZART

In the Bulletin de la Société Française de Musicologie (July) Charles Bouvet publishes a letter from Mozart to the Paris publisher, Sieber, offering him three Pianoforte Concertos and six String Quartets (the former being Köchel's 413, 414, 415, and the latter K. 387, 421, 428, 458, 464, 465). The letter is dated Vienna, April 26, 1783.

BERNARDO PASQUINI

In the same issue, F. Boghen publishes a catalogue of B. Pasquini's works, and asks those who possess information on that composer to communicate with him (c/o G. Ricordi & Co., Milan).

MODERN DEVELOPMENTS IN HARMONY

In the Musikblätter der Anbruch (August) Hermann Grabner has some interesting things to say about the origin and functions of 'fourth-chords' and similar recent appearances. Dr. Dasatiel writes about the new applications which the polyphonic principle receives in contemporary music, showing how the results can be properly defined as 'homophonic polyphony,' viz., music polyphonically written, but with a view to a homophonic effect. Both authors refer to works by Dr. Ernest Kurth ('Linear Counterpoint' and 'Romantic Harmony'), which appear to contain interesting views.

VIENNA AND MUSIC

The September issue of the same periodical is devoted to Vienna as a music-centre. Various articles describe the city's musical life, libraries and collections, church music, opera, and concerts. Most useful is Richard Specht's contribution, a survey of the younger Viennese composers' activities. He gives many names, and has something topical to say about all the composers mentioned—most of them unknown in this country.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

MODESTY OR ARROGANCE?

BY ALFRED KALISCH

Those who read foreign criticism as well as that of our own country are often struck by a subtle difference between the mental outlook of our own writers and the others, which, consciously or unconsciously, affects their judgments. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that it is apparently unconscious with us, and conscious in the case of foreigners. A German, a Frenchman, or an Italian will let you know expressly or by implication that he is judging from the standpoint of his own country, and naturally wishes the reader to understand that the criterion that he applies is the only one legitimate for him, and therefore the best possible. This tendency is more marked among Frenchmen than among critics of other countries. The Englishman, on the other hand, writes as if he were judging a new work or a new artist from a general standpoint outside the conflicting claims of nationality, and in this respect the American (unless he is simply 'stunting') is rather like the Englishman.

It is difficult to say whether this is an instance of racial modesty or national conceit. Do we write in this way because we think we have no right to claim that we have a distinctive British standpoint, or is the implication that ours is the one and only right one—that we look on these things from a higher plane, whence wider horizons are open than to those who take their stand only on their own national ideas?

It is difficult to dogmatise; naturally things vary with each individual. It is not unnatural, too, that men of the older generation should be more likely to take the first view, because it was so constantly dinned into their ears, in their most impressionable years that this country was musically naught—a mere appanage of musical Germany. Then came the phases when we were supposed to be the vassal of Russia, or merely subservient to France and Italy and the Slavs. It is much easier for the younger men to rid themselves of such preoccupations and to think or say frankly that we are entitled to frame our judgments as Britons. This should not surprise us—it is rather an inevitable result of our growing national musical consciousness, and it is on the whole a thing to be welcomed, though it hurts our vanity to be called insular. It is at least open to argument that there can be no such thing as a universal international standard of criticism in music, and that any attempt to set it up is running counter to human nature.

This suggestion will perhaps come as a shock to those who talk glibly of music as a universal language, and think loosely about it. Dispassionate analysis will show that it is impossible for people of one nation to know exactly what the songs of another race can mean to it. Anybody of any nationality will of course see that 'God save the King' and the 'Marseillaise' are magnificent tunes, but no Englishman can really know all that the 'Marseillaise' means to a Frenchman; no Frenchman can feel all that thrill the Englishman when he hears 'God save the King.' These are extreme and obvious examples, but the line of argument can be carried further. Take, for instance, the case of Sibelius' 'Finlandia.' The cultivated musical listener in London or New York can realise that it contains some stirring tunes, but we were all surprised when we heard that the piece and been prohibited by the police because of the political passions it aroused. The classical instance of this kind of feeling is the riot caused by Berlioz's audacious treatment of the 'Rakoczy' March when it was heard in Hungary.

After all, such things should not disturb a generation to which heredity and environment are commonplaces. A French audience must have been moulded by forces very different from those which have gone to make up the mentality of an English or a German crowd. The ordinary English music-lover, for example, cannot really know—from his own personal experiences—all the kinds of influences which went, for instance, to shape the artistic personality of a Debussy. We half-automatically take it for granted that French composers are trained in the same sort of way as are the English composers, whose art rests ultimately on the foundation of solid Church music, on the 'Songs without Words,' on 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah,' with its classical Symphonies and Quartets on the top.

(To digress for a moment. 'Elijah' and 'The Messiah'—as a very eminent foreigner once remarked—are excellent foundations; the only trouble is that so many people were accustomed to consider that the foundation was the whole structure.)

The ordinary British musician will forget in admiring Debussy how much French music must have played from his earliest childhood, how much of Massenet, Gounod, Saint-Saëns, and César Franck he must have absorbed into himself before he reached years of discretion, at a time when, with the exception of 'Faust,' the music of all these composers conveyed mere names to the best people of this side of the Channel. It is not necessary to dwell on the cases of Italians and Germans, for it is easier for us to realise how their artistic personalities were created. If we look at the picture from the other standpoint, it is clearly not possible for French or German judges to understand what Elgar means to us in this country, nor do foreign critics understand how it comes that the music of Sullivan's light operas has got such an extraordinary hold on the whole English-speaking world. The music of the Parry generation is a neglected book to them.

It would be easy to multiply instances of this kind of inevitable differences in the very foundations on which musical judgment are built, and the full appreciation of these should show us how far it is true to speak of music as a universal language, and in what degree it falls short of absolute universality. A comparison with poetry may be a little help to the understanding of the question, but naturally the analogy does not hold at all points. Critics of literature are given by the very nature of their work to think deeply of the barriers which are erected between themselves and the great prose and poetry of other countries, however well they may be acquainted with languages other than their own.

It would be better for the mental health of many musicians if they were to realise that in the fields of music too there are similar paths which lead nowhere, and end in a brick wall through which or over which they cannot see; in other words to realise that, whether consciously or not, if we are sincere with ourselves, we must confess that our outlook must be national. Let us not be timid about it. It is nothing to be ashamed of.

THE PLACE OF MUSIC IN A LIBERAL EDUCATION

SIR HENRY HADOW'S ADDRESS TO THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION

From the musician's point of view last month's meeting of the British Association was memorable, because for the first time music has been admitted to a place in the inner sanctum of the sciences. More than that, Sir Henry Hadow, who is as well known to musicians as to the learned world, was chosen to preside over the Educational Section, and chose as his subject: 'The Place of Music in a Liberal Education.' It was a singularly able piece of work most felicitously phrased and closely reasoned—but, as will be seen later, it was open to some criticisms.

He began by deploring the neglect of music in the last century or so by the learned world, and quoted the Oxford Don who, when asked whether he knew the meaning of a simple technical term in music, answered, 'God forbid.' He quoted too, as typical, Byron's lines:

'John Bull with ready hand
Applauds the strains he cannot understand';

John did not even realise there was anything to understand. Sir Henry pointed out how remarkable it was that works like 'The Cambridge History of Literature' omitted all reference to music, while Macaulay did not even mention Purcell. Macaulay did mention Burney and Hawkins, but made no reference to their musical work.

His first reason for claiming a place for music in a liberal education was that it is in the true sense of the word a language. Secondly, 'it is as truly a form of mental discipline as any subject in science or mathematics.' It is a 'peevish asceticism' which denies its educational value because its study is a source of enjoyment. It differs from a language because its laws are wholly its own laws and 'the impulse of its own spirit.' It has been said that poetry appeals to the intelligence and music to the emotions: if this were the whole truth Euclid would be the greatest of poets.

It has a meaning: the difference between a melody of Beethoven and a 'beastly tune' is that the former has a noble meaning, the latter an ignoble meaning or none at all. If representatives of the other arts are disposed to adopt a superior attitude because of the popularity of bad music, let those who live in glass-houses not throw stones, and remember the huge sales of bad literature and the vogue of bad pictures.

Sir Henry next criticised the defects of a lot of writing on music which, he said, is as much musical criticism as a grammatical treatise is literary criticism. This is not wholly the fault of the writers, for there is an inherent difficulty in putting into words the ideas on which music is based and which it suggests. Another sin committed against music is the sharp separation between music and the general history of civilisation. This led him to remind his hearers of the most brilliant period of English music, when 'Drake circumnavigated the world and Bacon circumnavigated the human mind,' and music was part of the education of an English gentleman. This was no isolated phenomenon—it was a natural outcome of the whole mental outlook of the nation. We are not so much superior to the Elizabethans that we can afford to neglect one of the things to which they devoted themselves. He gratefully acknowledged the improvement which has taken place. Universities, colleges, and schools are recognising music. At school it is no longer an unpopular substitute for cricket. It is especially Oxford and Cambridge which have progressed. More, however, remains to be done. There should be more scores and more musical books in our public libraries. Every educated man and woman ought to be able to read music.

Lastly we must 'simplify our attitude towards music.' People who have any musical gifts are inclined to stress them unduly for fear they may be underrated. The outside world should be made to cease to regard it as 'a kind of hieroglyphic or sacerdotal secret.' Conversation on music seems to make some people uneasy. We should be able 'to meet each other as frankly and openly in this field as educated men are accustomed to do in the discussion of science or poetry,' and this aim can be attained only 'if music is enfranchised in our educational system, if it takes its assured place in the community and is invested with the full rights of intellectual citizenship.'

The address was enlivened by a wealth of good stories. There is space to quote only two: Sir Henry was once asked to provide music for a certain function, and had to engage a band. The conductor submitted a programme which was an outrage. He protested, and the answer was, 'I did not know you wanted good music.' He asked, Would a greengrocer say, 'I did not know you wanted good strawberries'?

About seventy-five years ago Gore Ouseley, then a very young man, asked the Dean of Christ Church to give him the use of the Hall for a concert. The Dean did not grant this request, and did not refuse it. He simply told Gore Ouseley to leave the room. A few years ago Sir Hugh Allen had induced the Vice-Chancellor and an ex-Vice-Chancellor to play a duet in public. The contrast is significant.

Anyone reading this summary of the address will be surprised perhaps at the absence of any allusion to certain subjects which are in the minds of all musicians just now. There is no hint that the very first principles which used to be universally questioned are being questioned, and that violent controversies are raging about the foundations of the art. There is, therefore, no suggestion as to what attitude the educator should adopt to such questions. To a certain extent Sir Henry was wise. It was his aim to show that music is a subject that can be treated as a science and be made a mental discipline, and it is arguable at least that such things are both unscientific and undisciplined. Unfortunately, however, there are some controversialists who are not negligible because they have the public ear, and who will regard this as a confession of weakness. They will claim to have scored a point—indeed, a good many points.

It is probably due also to the nature of the occasion that Sir Henry emphasized the intellectual in comparison with the emotional appeal of music, and severely castigated 'that lamentable class of people, not yet quite extinct, who talk emotionally of music without any understanding.' They are trying, no doubt, but they have their proper place in the world of music. To seek to exclude them is inconsistent with the plea that music is not a sacerdotal mystery, but free and open to all men. It is indeed almost a contradiction in terms to say that those to whom music makes an emotional appeal do not 'understand'; in a sense they may even 'understand' better than those who can analyse the structure of a symphony or name every chord with unerring accuracy.

It was a great pity that no representatives of Edinburgh music, especially University music, were present to give an official benediction to Sir Henry Hadow. Their absence to some extent weakened the effect of his plea, and showed that the attitude of the learned world to music is still not what it should be, and this is proved, too, by some of the remarks made to the writer by some very learned men. We must not be too optimistic. There is yet much spade work to be done.

A. K.

Ad Libitum

Attention arrested at breakfast few mornings ago by headline in newspaper—'Wireless Music: How a Melody was sent to London from the Atlantic.' Thought at once of all kinds of cunning devices—read par.—found simply matter of wireless from ship to Devizes—ordinary telegram thence to London. Paper went on admiringly: 'The music wirelessly in mid-Atlantic by Mr. James W. Tate for "The Peep Show" at the Hippodrome is still much discussed. How was it done?'

This is shown by a copy of an ordinary post office telegram which arrived in London from Devizes. There is a wireless station at Devizes where the Atlantic messages are transferred to the Post Office telegram lines. The telegram read as follows:

Eyre, Funniosity, London.

Echo song Hippodrome Wylie Tate Peep Show key a two four time each word one bar stop sohlahate tedohdoh mera soh mera soh sohlahate tedohdoh mere soh mere soh lasohmedoh reme sofadohla fela meradohla medoh remedoh re repeat first twelve lasohmedoh sohfa sohfadohre fame mesoh soh mesoh soh me echo me re echo re doh (stop) Gillespie aboard approves number put into rehearsal Monday.—Tate.

Not a bit impressed. All tonic sol-faist accustomed to use letter notation for dotting down themes—stump of pencil—back of envelope—unpaid bill—any other superfluous document—no bother with ruling lines. Remember years ago when in charge of alleged singing-class in Jewish Lad's Club in Far East (Whitechapel), young member of Chosen Race handing up chorus of song class wishe to learn—youth of resource—wisely refused to trust cracked voice—had written out tune—very blue lead pencil—paper in which goods had come from grocer—apparently sugar of Demerara. However 'Musicians [said newspaper] will observe the ingenious way in which the time has been indicated.'

In decoding the telegram the first step is to draw a bar-line between each of the tonic sol-fa 'words,' which are then separated, and thus automatically receive their proper time value.

Musicians will observe nothing of sort—time only partly indicated—even words would not decide rhythm conclusively—what is rhythm of 'remedoh' for example? Might be:

(that ragtime be not absent)

In fact, practically every one of those compound words may be divided in various ways—also r indication as to whether certain notes are high or low—apparently details don't matter in music of this kind—any old way will do—you take the high soh and 'I'll take the low soh; and I'll be—However. Still somebody must settle points. Clearly composer hasn't settled them, or anyway hasn't wirelessly them. Paper goes on:

The notes were received in London by Mr. Tate's orchestrators, who arranged the scores, and the song and the ballet have been put into rehearsal.

There is explanation. Bet those 'orchestrators' did needful. Handy people to have about house. Composing made easy—sit in deck-chair—evolve tune, of sorts—no need bother about harmonizing or coloring—wire inspiration to 'orchestrators'—go on sitting in deck-chair—nothing more to do with song but draw royalties. Thus are 'winners' turned out.

What will not public swallow in this way? Read another paper that 'all London will shortly be lamouring for song written and composed by Charlie Chaplin.' No doubt. Here is as much of refrain as I can find space for:

CHORUS.

There's al - ways one you can't for - get,

There's al - ways one, one vain re - gret,

Tho' grief is dead mem - ry sur - vives,

Fate linked we (sic) two ma - ted our lives. . . &c.

Quote this because amongst columns slush written about Mr. Chaplin on arrival were many references to talent for music. 'With systematic training,' said Elsie Codd in Daily News, 'he might have made a great musician. He plays the violin, 'cello, and pianoforte—the violin exceedingly well—but is somewhat handicapped because he can only play from ear.' Much virtue in 'somewhat.' No doubt Hero of Hour is fond of music—so are lots of people who share his independence of printed page—but we do not describe them as potential 'great musicians.' Sorry to be sceptical, but we are not so easily coddled. If above 'music' is sample of what Mr. Chaplin can do, should say no sign of musical talent whatever.

Futility of song makes us shy at rapturous accounts of Mr. Chaplin's exploits in fields of literature, philosophy, sociology, &c. Thus Arthur Weigall in Daily Mail after heart to heart talk with Mr. Chaplin at Ritz. 'I left the building [he says] with the conviction that I had met the most remarkable—I might say the most abnormal—man it has ever been my fortune to encounter.' After reading interview can only wonder what kind of intellectual circle Arthur has so far adorned. You shall judge:

He has a handsome face—one might almost call it a beautiful face. The grey eyes are thoughtful; the expression is that of a dreamer.

He asked me earnestly whether I thought the excitement indicated affection or mere curiosity. 'There's evidently something about me that people like,' he mused.

'English people need to let themselves go sometimes. I don't think the old restraint was altogether a good sign. We are very human. And then, you see, they must know that I am so deeply interested in them. They must know I want to help them and to make them happy.'

'Life is such a problem for so many,' he went on presently, 'and there is so much hopelessness to be seen all around, I feel it weighing on me sometimes.'

'We all need to get at the truth of things, for after all truth is beauty. Truth is everything. I love it for its hardness, its logic, almost for its cruelty. The world is such a perfect organism, if only people would face the great fact of existence itself instead of side-tracking in a search for a motive.'

His face brightened as he spoke of the scientific wonders of the age in which we are living. 'It's a privilege to live at this period, when we are getting to know so much more about the meaning of things, about the subconscious.'

Suddenly he broke off. 'Can you tell me,' he asked, 'why it was that Sir Oliver Lodge walked out of that meeting of the Royal Society when they were discussing Einstein's theory of Relativity?'

I assured him that, so far as I remembered, it was only because he had another engagement; but he shook his head.

I wish I had the space to tell more of what I remember of our conversation. He talks so well, pausing every now and then for the right word, as though his thoughts were bigger than himself. He is a great man, a great personality, and I realise now why it is that he has the world at his feet. It is not because of a funny walk and a pair of baggy trousers, believe me!

Well, believe me or believe me not, as another great man says, it is not because of his oracular pronouncements. If Arthur doubts it, let him ask himself how many dollars Great Man would have made as writer or lecturer or anything else but comedian. Am not superior person with no use for comic—on contrary, was so much amused at first experience of Charlie on film that ached with laughter. Charlie Chaplin, wearing his right boots, trousers, and hat, is real genius. Mr. Charles Chaplin, faultlessly clad at Ritz, is very ordinary individual indeed. Hope to see former many more times, despite resultant aches. Have no use for latter, whether as song composer, philosopher, or Relativity expert. Above extracts show how public is bamboozed on any question of art. But they like it, bless you! Hardly have they swallowed the great thoughts of Mr. Chaplin as recorded by Mr. Wiegall when there are interviews with Tetrazzini waiting. The Diva arrived just as comedian began to recede—picturesque reporter sharpens pencil to some purpose:

She is travelling in her usual semi-regal fashion. A suite at the Savoy has been booked for her, and her retinue will probably include her two pekingese and other pets, the most favoured of which is a parrot.

But main point is that she is to sing all over this happy land at five hundred guineas per concert. 'Delighted to be in dear England again,' she told reporter. Who wouldn't be, with prospect of pouching five hundred of the best wherever one's caravan has rested? Surprising though, when you think of it, that manufacturing towns, which are just now manufacturing so little that wolf is at thousands of doors, can spare £525 for what paper calls 'an opportunity of hearing the famous E in alt.' Must be good deal of loose change lying round somewhere, even though you and I seem to escape it. In fact, judging from article in Evening News, this so-called England of ours is shortly to be Tom Tiddler's ground for musicians from ends of earth. Bright little contemporary—its eye as usual on things that matter—gives exact fees certain visitors are arranging to gather. This being musical journal artistic data of importance must be recorded. Thus: Casals, £130 5s., Cortot £136 10s.; Chaliapin, we hear, could command fee of 600 guineas if chose; why not choose? Has just been offered 850 guineas to sing in America. Money talks—New York evidently about twenty-five per cent. more musical than London. Evening News writer, full of information other than financial, has somehow found out two things about Arthur Rubinstein the pianist: (1) he is touring in Spain, and (2) he is 'not the composer of the "Melody in F."' Thanks. Talking of musical information in lay press, reminds me of paragraph in Sunday paper to effect that Kubelik is coming—bringing with him famous £25,000 fiddle specially made for him by Stradivarius. Good. Hope famous fiddler and equally famous fiddle will join forces in Sonata dedicated to Jan by Tartini.

Returning to Hero of Hour—feeling that enterprising musical journal should not lose opportunity for obtaining views on music—deputed emotional member of staff to wait on Mr. Chaplin. A part of result follows:

We talked of his favourite works. His face lighted up. 'Ah, yes! the Largo in F—the best thing old Handel ever wrote. And then his Blankenburgh Concertos; they want a bit of beating, especially the one where the Cuckoo and Nightingale do a turn. Do you know' (and his pale and slightly distracted face took on a wistful expression), 'Do you know that at times I feel that music is almost a kind of speech, as it were, though infinitely less definite than ordinary language. It seems to be capable of expressing all our emotions, and has a wonderfully calming and soothing effect, though it can be stirring as well. It seems to solve all our doubts. As Longfellow says, in his "Idols of the King," "The rest may reason as much as they like, 'tis we musicians know."'

It was easy to see that this man, so pathetically lonely in spite of his amazing popularity, was himself no mean musician. If any proof be wanted, we have only to turn to a tender little song he has recently composed. Here is no piling up of complexity or technical difficulties: the soul of this genius speaks in the simplest strains. And withal he is a poet in words as well as in tone—for the lyric of this little masterpiece is also from his pen. Again note the simplicity, both of idea and expression. And what a haunting line is that: 'Fate joined we two.' Ah! till death we do part, or mayhap earlier; us cannot tell. . . .

I wish I had space to report more of our conversation. For he is a brilliant talker, and like all brilliant talkers is constantly at a loss for a word. So urgent and full is the thought that his very speech is dammed, as it were. Of his attainments as a scholar I have no room to speak. Suffice it to say that they point to a solid foundation having been laid by the nineteen Kennington schoolmasters who had charge of Mr. Chaplin's education from his seventh to his twenty-second year. They may well be proud of their scholar.

New Music

THE 'BIG FOURS' AND VIOLIN TECHNIQUE

It had to come. When the very science of government—most complex and profound of all sciences—condescends to seek the help of catchwords it is absurd to expect writers on the technique of music to hold austere aloof from the common tendency. After all, there is no harm in a catch-phrase. It may do good in helping to fix in the popular mind a principle, a canon of art or of conduct. But it must be clearly expressed and easily understood if it is not to be mistaken for a cabalistic sign. Millions remember 'houses for heroes'; only a few hundred have heard of 'the quincunx of heaven.'

M. Jean Noceti, whose 'Summary of Daily Technique' (Noceti, Paris) suggests these considerations, is the first to adopt a catch-phrase as a help to learning. Very modestly he disclaims in fact any other worth whatever. The only merit he claims, in the brief preface, is that of having been 'inspired' to classify his studies in accordance with a new method—the 'method of the four sevens.' What are the 'big fours' discovered by M. Noceti? Well, there is nothing alarming about them, and with all due deference to the eminent Parisian musicians who endorse M. Noceti's method (autographs reproduced in facsimile) we must confess that these four do not seem likely to revolutionise the study of the violin. There are seven positions, seven lessons, seven tonics for seven days of the week—these are M. Noceti's 'big fours.' Sabbatarians may object that in truth there are only six working days in the week; violin players will urge that beyond the seventh position there are other fields that must be conquered; others may ask what has happened to accidentals that the tonics are reduced to seven. It is, however, undeniable that the author has written seven 'lessons,' and thus the 'four' hold good, for it cannot be denied that the week has seven days, the scale seven notes, and the fiddle seven positions. I will probably be asked, What of double stops, what of bowing, harmonics, &c.? They are to be collected in other volumes called, perhaps, 'The trying threes' or 'The simple six.' It would be a pity to spoil the 'four sevens,' especially if we consider that the fiddle has four strings.

Be that as it may, the exercises are, in themselves, quite good. They are not unlike the better-known exercises evolved in the Sevcik school, but do not go quite to the root of the matter as Sevcik does. They will do well enough for the study and practice of positions, but the daily practice of the conscientious student must needs go far beyond positions. They are to be commended in the case of students who find positions specially difficult to master, or as a preparation for the seven Campagnoli Sonatas. As a compendium of daily study they are, of course, inadequate. But violin practice is not less individual a thing than violin playing. All the greatest technicians of the present day owe their art to different sources—Kreisler, Ysaye, Kubelik, drew their inspiration from very different ideals. Similarly, the young and aspiring student will profit sometimes more by the study of one special example than of countless others. The teacher's duty is, of course, to find out as soon as possible the special example. In individual cases M. Noceti's work may be of considerable help.

The 'Four Sevens' method is published in French, with translations in English and Italian. The English version is a particularly glaring example of careless and incompetent work. It is not merely a case of murdering the King's English. This translation is often pure nonsense. The very first line tells us that the composer possesses 'autografic attestations' from the 'National Music Professors' of Paris. We knew, of course, that national music was sacred to every Frenchman, but we did not know that the cult had also its professors. Still, on the front page we read this fine piece of information: 'Inedited classing—deposited.' After this gem the 'enchainement of exercises,' the 'elevated positions,' or the illuminating 'one can also have but twelve exercises only by line (horizontal enchainment),' find us bound but resigned.

F. B.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

William Baines' 'Four Poems,' published under one cover, by Augener, show a good command of the keyboard idiom; but, on the whole, the manner is more important than the matter. This balance on the wrong side is shown especially in the first two pieces, 'Poem-Fragment' and 'Elves,' which are dry rather than poetic or elvish. There is a good deal of the expected warmth in 'Poem-Nocturne' and 'Appassionata,' but both leave us with a feeling that the result is hardly a fair return for the considerable amount of technical effort called for.

Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb have courageously issued Arthur Bliss' 'Rout' as a pianoforte duet. Of course it loses a great deal in the process, because so much of its effect depends upon cunning use of instrumental colour. Many of the dissonant incongruities that are enjoyable in the original version become merely ugly when transferred to the keyboard. But there remain the high spirits, the exciting rhythms, and the genuine humour that made the work one of the successes of the past concert season. Mr. Bliss shows here, as in his 'Conversations' and elsewhere, that he can meet Stravinsky and 'The Six' at this particular kind of game, and beat them at it.

It is good to see so much of the harpsichord music of our old native composers being made accessible. Slight and tentative as it is in some cases, there is a abundance of material excellent for technical purposes, and with a charm of its own. Messrs. Chester have just published seven books of such pieces; entitled, 'Contemporaries of Purcell,' two books being devoted to Blow, two to William Croft, one to Jeremiah Clark, and two to various composers. The selecting and editing has been done by Mr. Fuller-Maitland. Each book contains a preface in English and French. The set is a delightful addition to the pianist's repertory.

It is fatally easy to write music in the old style, because the conventions in rhythm, harmony, and idiom generally are at every composer's fingers' ends. The difficulty lies in imbuing the result with emotional or other significance. Two examples come from Messrs. Elkin—a 'Gavotte Classique,' by Robert Elkin, and a 'Suite Ancienne' (d'après les vieux maîtres), by Albert Coates. Mr. Elkin's Gavotte is pleasant, but it might have been written by anybody. We shall be able to judge the composer's attainments when he gives up his present liking for working on old forms, and tries to score off his own bat. Mr. Coates' Suite is a far more ambitious affair. There are six movements, and the writing is a curious mixture of ancient and modern—ancient as to matter (we've heard all the themes before, more or less), and modern in its lay-out for the keyboard. In the extended—one might almost say somewhat sprawling—disposition of the parts at times, Mr. Coates sacrifices ancient neatness and polish, in his search for resonance. At such moments the Suite is a very long way d'après his models. I am sorry to have to say that the Suite, effective as much of it would be in the hands of a good pianist, strikes me as dry.

It is like old times to receive for review a batch of novelties in the Universal Edition. Here are seven new works for pianoforte solo: Five Preludes and Interludes, by Walter Braunfels; Three Etudes, by Béla Bartók; Eight Studies, by Cramer, amplified by Felix Petyrek; 'Profils de jeunes filles,' Twelve characteristic pieces, by Richard Stohr; Sonata, by Alois Haba; Sonata, by Josef Rosenstock; and a set of Symphonic Variations on an Original Theme, by Wilhelm Grosz. These works give us almost the first glimpse of composers' activities in Germany and Austria since 1914. Those of us who anticipated a return to simplicity will not find it here. The main influence is that of Schönberg, and the writing as a whole is more complex and difficult than that of pre-war days. This would matter little if the composers were saying much worth saying, but it must be confessed that, on the whole, the pianist who wrestles with the fearful difficulties of this music will find a poor return in musical interest. It is impossible to realise mentally the effect of the Bartók Studies, and, as a mere reviewer can do no more than labour painfully through them at the keyboard, it would not be fair to express an opinion. Bartók, we know, is a composer who counts, and we may presume that in this case he says something worth saying. What that something is we shall know when one of our pianoforte recitalists gives us a chance of hearing it. One may, however, with some confidence, decide that the Haba Sonata is dry, with a good deal of Regerish turgidity; that Rosenstock's essay in the form is courageously expressive at times (the slow movement taps a sentimental vein that we are apt to regard as pre-war); and that Grosz has invented a good theme and from it spun some clever variations. Stohr's 'Profils de jeunes filles' is unexpectedly amusing because of some of the French and English versions of the German titles. The music is of no great originality, and the composer depends far too much upon verbal indications sprinkled about the music after the manner of 'The Battle of Prague.' For example, in 'Die Linkische' ('La Maladroite,' 'The Awkward One'), at the top of the second page we read, 'Sie bringt eine glaserne Kostbarkeit,' and a few bars later the expected disaster occurs—a chord of D flat in the left hand against one of D in the right, superscribed 'Lasst sie fallen, sie zerbricht.' Three bars later, 'Weint bitterlich' appears over appropriate chromatic harmony. This kind of thing is too elementary to waste good music engraving over.

Taking up a 'Valse Sérieuse' by Edward Mitchell (Elkin), and assuming that the composer is the well-known exponent of Scriabin's pianoforte works, one expects something epoch-making in the waltz line. The piece, however, turns out to be quite an ordinary affair, not far removed from the efforts of the various waltz kings, though showing more enterprise here and there in the laying-out. On the whole I am disappointed, possibly because I expected too much. Perhaps after all the composer is not the fine pianist at whose feet I have sat so often, but merely an inferior musician of the same name. H. G.

ORGAN MUSIC

The success of Reubke's Sonata on the 94th Psalm has been such that we are surprised to find the Psalter so little used as a basis for organ music of a programmatic type. In his Three Psalm-Preludes, just published by Novello, Herbert Howells thus breaks ground that has so far scarcely been touched. He works on a smaller scale than Reubke, taking only a verse where Reubke took the greater part of a long psalm. No. 1 has for motto Ps. 34, v. 6. (It is a pity the bare reference is given. Why could not the text have been quoted?) The verse runs 'Lo, the poor crieth, and the Lord heareth him: yea, and saveth him out of all his troubles.' The opening theme is simple and plaintive, in five-bar rhythm. We soon meet with some startling key-changes, e.g., this passage in D minor is at once repeated in F minor, and in the second page we pass in the course of a few bars through G minor, C, F minor, C sharp minor, F, and A flat minor. This kind of thing occurs more or less in all three pieces, and always with perfectly natural effect. A fine climax is worked up on page 5, and the main theme is repeated fff, a secondary climax being obtained on the following page by means of an accelerando. The music then dies down to a peaceful ending. No. 2 is on quiet lines throughout, as befits its motto—'The meek-spirited shall possess the earth: and shall be refreshed in the multitude of peace.' It opens with a very simple theme, pp, with a beautiful harmonization in which consecutive six-four chords are a feature. This theme starts again on the second page as a solo, but soon develops along fresh lines, leading to a brief middle section, the core of which is a derivative of the opening subject, now in E, played on a soft Great solo stop, with an undulating three-part accompaniment on the Choir and Swell. This is a passage that one plays again and again with increasing delight. It leads to a quasi climax in which some grinding dissonances are encountered. The work then ends with a Coda based on the opening. No. 3 is the longest of the set, and is perhaps the best—though we hesitate to make a comparison of the kind in the case of three pieces so dissimilar.

Let us say instead that it will probably be the most popular, chiefly because it is more picturesque. This is partly due to its programme, which is of a type that lends itself to vivid and contrasted treatment: 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff comfort me.' An ominous note is struck at the start, by repeated crotchets in the bass under a single part of troubled character in the tenor register. This uneasy theme appears fully harmonized on page 2, the rhythm being free and the flavour modal. It becomes more urgent on the following page, with a sudden change from C minor to B minor, and then works up a tremendous climax, a broad theme in the manuals gradually walking down the keyboard while the crotchet figure that first appeared in the pedals on page 1 is more or less apparent as an under or inner part. The approach to this broad theme is very striking:

The music gradually subsides with a quiet repetition of the troubled theme, now in the key G sharp minor, having stepped thither from C, into which key it steps back as suddenly. A tranquil last page brings a very graphic work to an effective close. These Psalm-Preludes are in the writer's opinion among the most striking of recent contributions to English organ music. They are not difficult to play, register, or understand. The idiom is modern, and the blend of modal, diatonic, and chromatic harmony is a refreshing change from so much modern music in which the chromaticism is so constant as to lead to monotony. Mr. Howells evidently finds the organ a sympathetic medium, and players with a taste for organ music of a fresh and individual character will look to him for further additions to their repertory. It should be added that the Preludes are published separately, and that they lose little or nothing if played without regard to their poetic bases.

H. G.

PART-SONGS

A group of part-songs of more than ordinary interest has just been published by Novello. Not the least striking point about them is the way in which they remind us of the unexpected variety of style possible in this small and necessarily simple form. Percy Fletcher contributes two for S.A.T.B. and two for T.T.B.B. The two mixed-voice examples are very different in character. 'Dream Love,' a setting of a poem by Christina Rossetti, is throughout lusciously harmonized—a trifle too much so, perhaps. It offers abundant opportunities to a choir able to command beauty of tone and warmth of expression. In 'Folly's Song' (words by Keats), the composer is boldly rhythmic and diatonic. He makes very effective use of the alternation of single parts and full choir, and the tune is banded about from voice to voice with exhilarating result. Sung as the composer directs, 'with a jolly rhythmic swing,' this part-song should stir the duller audience. In 'A Lullaby of Love,' for T.T.B.B., Mr. Fletcher turns on the expressively amorous stop again, on the whole with better effect than in 'Dream Love,' because the harmony is less cloying. There is some excellent polyphony, and the unprepared change from A flat to B flat for the middle section is striking.

But male-voice choirs cannot always be languishing; they have strong leanings towards the descriptive and dramatic—not to say theatrical. In Mr. Fletcher's dramatic ballad, 'Vision of Belshazzar' (Byron), they will find all they can reasonably demand in the way of programme music. As a rule his type of part-song touches the depths of obviousness and banality. The harmonic scheme is often over-erotic, and the form has a tendency to scrappiness because the music is made to illustrate the details of the text rather than the whole. Mr. Fletcher easily avoids the first fault. His harmony is bold and striking, and his occasional use of consecutive fourths and fifths adds the right elemental touch. Some want of continuity is inevitable in a setting of this type, so we are not disposed to complain on that score. The effect is really that of a dramatic excitation. A large—or at least powerful—body of voices is needed, and the attack and release must be first-rate. The directions range from 'Fiery and forceful' to 'Mysterious and Ominous.' A choir with a good variety of tone-colour will revel in this ballad.

Edward German has done well to make a couple of mixed-voice arrangements for S.A.T.B. and S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B. of his popular S.S.A. setting of 'Orpheus with his Lute.' Both are even more effective than the original. The eight-part version is specially good, great sonority and breadth being obtained with the minimum of difficulty. The piano-forte part is retained in both arrangements, but the music would be better sung unaccompanied, in accordance with the composer's suggestion.

Two part-songs for S.A.T.B. by John Ireland will appeal to those with a palate for the slightly tart rather than the sweet. 'When May is in his prime' abounds in roughnesses of the bracing, tonic kind. In a curious way, too, modern as it is, it reproduces admirably the spirit of the 16th century words. The polyphony is free and the harmony mainly diatonic. This part-song is a good example of choral music that should not be judged from a 'try over' on the piano-forte. Only when sung, and sung at the right animated pace, does its fine quality show itself. 'Fain would I change that note' is more suave, partly because it has a more immediately attractive melody part. In every respect a delightful part-song, it reminds us of the best work of Stanford in this field. No higher praise can be given. H. G.

CANTATA

A new cantata, 'The Vision of the Simple,' for female voices, in three parts, by Ethel Boyce, has just been published (Novello). It is not too long, the workmanship is excellent, and it is well within the powers of an average choir. The composer is also responsible for the libretto, which provides ample opportunities for contrasted musical treatment.

In the main the cantata calls for light, delicate presentment. A particularly attractive feature is the dance movement. Very quick (Allegro leggiero,  $\text{♩} = 152$ ), it opens quietly, and works up to a fine climax. A delightful effect is produced when the melody is taken up by the altos, with short, light ejaculations from the upper voices. The instrumental part of this movement is very sparkling and dainty.

The writing for the voices is throughout straightforward and melodious, and yet avoids the commonplace. The piano-forte part is always appropriate and effective. Miss Boyce's admirable little work is a welcome addition to our rather meagre stock of really good cantatas for female voices. G. G.

London Concerts

THE PROMENADES

Mr. Edgar Bainton's 'Paracelsus,' which the composer conducted on August 31, impressed the audience as the work of a thorough musician able to give effect to ideas that are well-conceived rather than inspired.

The following evening brought an Elgar programme, the Violin Concerto being played by Miss Margaret Fairless, and 'Falstaff' following later under the composer's direction. This work is taking time to come into its own. Though universally admired whenever chance brings a hearing, it appears in a programme but rarely. It is interesting to note that it was down for a second 'Promenade' performance on September 22, and is included in the L.S.O. scheme. Its brilliance, humour, and humanity will win in the end.

Much has been written about Mr. Bernard van Dieren as a musical freethinker, an innovator, a technician, a composer sui generis. When it came to hearing his music played it was a great disappointment to find that such qualities could go with so little inspiration. His Introit to 'Les Propous des Beuveurs,' heard under the composer's direction on September 6, had so laboured a surface that its hidden meanings had to be taken as read, and that is not how music is understood or enjoyed. The puzzle was to guess at the connection between these forbidding strains and anything so jolly as a drinking scene in Rabelais.

On September 8 Mr. Montague Phillips conducted his second Piano-forte Concerto, Mr. William G. James being the soloist. The work made a better impression than on its first performance a year ago. Roger Quilter's 'Children's Overture' was heard on September 10, Vaughan Williams' 'Fantasy for Strings on a Theme by Tallis' on September 13, Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions on September 14, Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations and Dorothy Howell's 'Lamia' on September 15, Cyril Scott's Two Passacaglias on September 17. Thus the flag has been kept flying with vigour. W. McN.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Established orchestra on symphony basis has few vacancies for September. Violas, 'celli, bass, French horn, trombones, timpani, and drums only. Best music, classical and modern. Particulars, 'ZEALOUS,' c/o Musical Times.

Double-bass (gentleman) and violinist, wish to join Sunday evening orchestra. Church or chapel orchestra would suit.—M. F. N., c/o Musical Times.

Gold medal pianist would be glad to meet soprano to complete mixed-voice quartet with orchestra. Practice rooms Central London, Thursday evenings.—W. T., 12, Sandmere Road, S.W. 4.

Musical enthusiast, conducting small orchestra, would be glad to hear of other string instrumentalists to augment the party. Weekly rehearsals held in New Oxford Street.—H. C., c/o Musical Times.

A Saturday afternoon Chamber Music Club is being formed in connection with the Bedford Institute Orchestra. The club will be coached and directed by Mr. Henry F. W. Horwood (late of Queen's Hall and Philharmonic Orchestras). Amateurs wishing to join should apply at the Institute (adjoining Bishopsgate Goods Station, G.E.R.), on Wednesdays, at 6.30 p.m., or write to E. J. COATES, 86, Highbury Hill, N.5.

'Cellist would like to join trio or quartet. Practice classes, &c. Two or three evenings weekly.—Apply 18, Chesney Grove, Hunslet, Leeds, Yorks.

Tenor and bass wanted to balance a musical party with own orchestra and L.R.A.M. pianist. Rehearsals Thursdays, 7-9 p.m. Central London.—W. T., 12, Sandmere Road, S.W. 4.

Advanced pianist wishes to meet with a capable violinist. Classical and modern music. Would also collaborate in trio (pianoforte, violin, 'cello).—BENNIE SOPHER, 388, Victoria Road, Crosshill, Glasgow.

'Cellist wishes to meet capable chamber musicians, Wallasey district.—RAWCLIFFE, 12, Westminster Road, Wallasey.

There are vacancies for instrumentalists and vocalists (ladies and gentlemen) in the Bowes Park Choral and Orchestral Society, in connection with the Carter Memorial Club, St. Michael's-at-Bowes. Weekly rehearsals commenced in September.—All communications to Mr. ALBERT HAZELL (conductor), 54, Belsize Avenue, Palmers Green, N.

The Croydon Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Mr. W. H. Reed, F.R.A.M.) invites applications from amateurs for all instruments. Rehearsals commenced end of September, on Fridays, at 8.15 p.m., at South Croydon. Full particulars from hon. secretary, C. J. E. CABLE, 118, Fairholme Road, Croydon.

The Fulham Cecilian Orchestral Society has vacancies for good amateur brass and wood-wind, 'cellos, violins, &c. Double-bass provided. Rehearsals Mondays. For membership apply hon. secretary, 209, Munster Road, Fulham, S.W. 6.

Wanted for special musical services to be given at an Islington Church in October, November, and December next, the help of a small orchestra which would provide illustrative music to addresses on Rossini, Haydn, and Beethoven.—Mr. WILL F. SALMON, 58, Berwick Street, W.1.

Pianist and 'cellist (young men) would like to meet violinist for regular practice. (Nottingham.) Large library of classical and modern music.—'LENTON,' c/o Musical Times.

Good 'cellist, capable of playing classical and modern chamber music, is invited to join pianist and violinist for the study and practice of trios, quartets, &c. Large library available. Herne Hill, Norwood, or Clapham districts.—W. H. C., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist (trained) wishes to play in trio or quartet, also wishes to meet good pianist with whom to play pianoforte duets. (London).—E. L., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist desires to form or join chamber music party Tuesday or Wednesday afternoons or evenings. Could arrange for rehearsal room. Brighton and district. M. I., c/o Musical Times.

Lady viola player seeks practice with orchestra or chamber music party. London, S.W. district preferred.—'OMEGA,' c/o Musical Times.

Young tenor vocalist-violinist would be glad to meet capable pianist (lady or gentleman) for mutual practice. Wakefield district.—S. M., c/o Musical Times.

Young violinist desires to join trio or quartet for practice and study of classical and modern chamber music. Hampstead or Brondesbury district.—Write F. C. W. c/o Musical Times.

The Balsall Heath Amateur Orchestra requires good instrumentalists of all kinds (pianoforte excepted).—ALBERT BASTICK, 122, Edward Road, Balsall Heath Birmingham.

Church and Organ Music

NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATIONS: ANNUAL CONGRESS

This important event took place on September 20, 21, and 22—an unfortunate date from the point of view of a monthly journal, because it is so near press time that a full report is impossible.

The Congress opened with a meeting at the Royal College of Music. Sir HUGH ALLEN welcomed the company, and in the course of his remarks said that, on the whole, organists as a body did not lack a feeling of responsibility toward their duties. What was chiefly needed now was that the public should develop a sense of what was due to the organist.

Sir CHARLES NICHOLSON followed with a paper on 'Church Architecture and Organs.' We understand that this will appear in full in the next issue of the N.U.O. 'Quarterly Record,' so we will devote such space as can be spared to those parts of the paper dealing with a subject on which organists frequently need counsel—the position of the organ. After describing the positions of early organs in England and on the Continent, Sir Charles said that if we considered these various methods of placing the organ adopted by the old master organ-builders we found they all had certain points in common. First, the instrument was placed near the choir. This was not at once apparent in the west gallery organs in France, where the tradition of placing the choir between the high altar and the congregation had been preserved, but it became intelligible when we remembered that in most French churches the choir, when placed at a distance from the main organ, was provided with a smaller instrument for accompaniment. In those churches where the organ was at one end of the building and the choir at the other, there was generally a second choir seated in the organ loft, or, as an alternative, the west end organ was used for solo playing only, though it was doubtless originally intended to accompany those parts of the service sung by the people. The practical objection to this dual arrangement is that it requires two organists, and that there is the difficulty of keeping the two instruments in tune. Otherwise, it is ideal. The English Cathedral custom of placing the organ on the rood loft fulfilled the same conditions. When these organs were built the naves of our Cathedrals were disused, and the congregation and singers crowded into the choir, at the west end of which stood the rood loft with the organ on top, and the choir as a rule just below the organ.

The second characteristic of all these old organs was that they were raised well above the church floor. Hardly, they were always placed in a part of the church where there was plenty of space above the tops of the pipes.

Now, in the ordinary English parish church we generally found an organ built during the last sixty years, and arranged in defiance of (at any rate) the second and third of the principles invariably followed by the old builders. In dozens of parish churches the fatal mistake had been made of placing the organ in one of the aisles or chapels flanking the chancel. This was absolutely destructive of the architectural effect of many fine church interiors. It had also the disadvantage of placing the organ on the church floor with a roof immediately above the tops of the pipes, the instrument being thus deprived of the necessary amount of open space round it.

Even the much abused organ chamber was to the speaker's mind a better arrangement than that which locked up an entire chapel or aisle with the organ. The disadvantages of an organ chamber were no greater than those of the arrangements to which he had taken exception, and its architectural drawbacks were much less. If he were responsible for placing an organ in a church, and circumstances necessitated its being placed at the east end of an aisle, he would strongly urge the authorities to be content with a small organ, and to place it standing free in the aisle and not in a corner of the church. He wished it to be understood that he was speaking principally of old churches; in a new one it was possible to make proper provision from the outset.

Referring to the importance of ample space over the pipes, Sir Charles said this could generally be attained by placing the organ at the west end of the nave, the nave being as a rule much loftier than the aisles. Moreover, a west-end organ is not as a rule cut off from the body of the church by arches of masonry. The speaker advocated the provision of substantial organ cases. He said that such a proposition might seem inconsistent coming from one who a few moments before condemned the boxing-up of an organ in a chamber or low aisle. Why box up the instrument at all if we object to boxing it up with masonry? But the two things are not the same. A wood casing has resonant and mellowing effects; a stone boxing merely deadens and muffles the tone. That a fairly close organ case is not detrimental is evident from the fact that considerable portions of modern organs are enclosed in Swell boxes. Of course, a properly designed organ case exposes as many as possible of the pipes of the Great organ, generally those of the open diapason. And there is no artistic reason why organ pipes should not form part of the design of the sides and back of an organ case, though, as a general rule, this is not a convenient arrangement for the organ-builder, except as regards the pipes of the Pedal organ. The organ case, then, should be regarded as a rectangular framework of joinery with some of the panels left open in order to expose such organ pipes as gain in effect by being exposed. The top of the case is, of course, left open, and the whole thing may be compared to a grand pianoforte with the lid off. In order that a pianoforte performance may be well heard in a large building, we place the instrument in the centre of the stage and not under a low-roofed alcove. Nevertheless, we do not strip off the pianoforte case and expose all the mechanism of the instrument; it is sufficient to open the lid. To obtain an analogous result with an organ we must place it in the loftiest part of the church, leaving as much space round it as possible, and we must have a suitable organ case, certainly for the sake of appearance, possibly also for reasons of acoustics.

As to the proper level for the organ, his view was strongly in favour of raising the whole instrument on a gallery. Architecturally the effect is much better. Valuable floor space is saved, and an instrument of considerable size can be introduced with a minimum of inconvenience. A further advantage of placing both player and organ in a gallery is that of simplicity of construction. There are all kinds of ingenious contrivances to enable us to play on detached consoles, but they cost money which would be much better spent on honest pipe work and the perfecting of a simple and straightforward system of mechanism. An organ in a loft can be arranged in the very simplest fashion because there is in such cases no necessity to accommodate the plan of the instrument to the surroundings, such as the seating and gangways.

The position of the loft may be either at the west end, in a transept, or on the rood screen. In settling this point we should be guided by the type of musical service aimed at, i.e., one rendered solely by the choir, or by choir and congregation or by the congregation alone.

Sir Charles concluded with some remarks on organ cases. He said that in all such fine cases as those at Gloucester, Exeter, King's College, Cambridge, and in the best examples in City churches, a large number of pipes are displayed in the front, grouped in blocks of three or more large pipes divided by flats of smaller pipes, sometimes in two stages. In the later examples the groups of large pipes were often arranged in projecting towers of semicircular form, a plan rarely adopted in the mediæval cases, which were usually flush-faced, and were often enclosed by great hinged shutters, some of which may still be seen in Spanish organ cases.

The old case-makers invariably carried the work up above the tops of the organ pipes, these being screened by carved and pierced wooden shades. The outline of the best examples was usually a broken one, the towers of the large pipes rising above the flats. Nothing could be more practical and effective architecturally. He objected to the 19th century organ-builders' custom of leaving the tops of organ pipes standing out above the case work—the arrangement was stumpy and ungraceful. It had no advantage beyond saving a few shillings' worth of wood. He begged his hearers, for the sake of the architecture, to have their cases designed on the lines accepted by the master-builders and players of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries.

At the conclusion of the lecture, Sir Charles answered questions put by members of the audience. He was warmly thanked for a paper of great interest and practical value. As was said during the discussion, it was a refreshing novelty to find an architect discussing the question with an eye to its musical side. As a rule, organ-builders and architects are regarded as inevitably antagonistic, and such points as those discussed by Sir Charles Nicholson are too often left out of consideration until fatal mistakes have been made.

In the afternoon the Convention was received at the Mansion House by Sir Edward Cooper, the Deputy Lord Mayor. Sir Edward said that he was specially pleased to meet the company because for a good many years he had been connected with church music both as organist and chorister. He bade them heartily welcome.

Dr. Charles Macpherson welcomed the National Union on behalf of the Royal College of Organists. He said there was some fitness in their meeting place, for there were probably more organ recitals given in the square mile of the City of London than in any other square mile in the world—a fact that reminded them of the important part played by the organist in the spiritual and artistic life of the community.

The company was addressed by Mr. Sydney Nicholson, Mr. Edgar Cook, Dr. W. Prendergast, Mr. W. S. Pilling, Councillor Brook (who, remarking on the growth of the movement, said that the affiliated associations now numbered thirty-one, with a membership of three thousand), Dr. Warriner, and others. Tea was then taken.

During the Congress visits were made to St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, Southwark Cathedral, and Westminster Cathedral, the buildings and organs being inspected.

On Wednesday morning the music department of the National Institute for the Blind was visited, Mr. H. C. Warrilow giving a recital, and explaining the Braille notation, &c., &c. The afternoon of the same day found the Congress members at the House of Novello, where they were shown over the printing and publishing departments, and entertained to tea by the directors.

A most successful Congress was happily rounded-off by a banquet at the Criterion Restaurant. H. G.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC: THE DIARY OF A MEMBER

Diocesan Training College, Fishponds, Bristol.

September 12-16.

Monday.—Most of the seventy odd members of the School have arrived, and it is safe to say that not many of them entered the grounds of the Training College without feeling that a more delightful place for the week's work could hardly be found. To-day's activities have consisted merely of Evensong in the College Chapel, unaccompanied, the chairman's opening address on 'The Purpose of the School,' and a go-as-you-please discussion in the Common Room, followed by a half-hour's practice of the hymns for to-morrow's services. A good proportion of those present have attended the preceding four Schools, so there is the minimum of reserve to be broken down. The new members at once become new chums. It is pleasant to note that as in former years we have several cases of the lion and the lamb going to school together—parsons accompanied by their organists.

In his opening address the chairman (the Rev. A. S. Duncan-Jones) set forth the aims of the School as expressed by the letters on the front page of the programme—A. M. D. G., 'To the greater Glory of God.' He thought that the weaknesses which had attended Church music during the past half-century had been largely due to the fact that that motive had been too often absent. Their aim at the School was to help people who wished to use music suitable as an accompaniment to a liturgy. A great deal of Church music was beautiful and suitable as an offering to God, but it was not well adapted for use at a liturgical service. The members of the School aimed, too, at helping one another to perform the service in a worthy manner. They had in view the parish church rather than the cathedral. Most of our troubles in Church music matters were due to our failure to distinguish clearly between what was possible and suitable in a cathedral and what was possible in a suitable in a parish church. The kind of worship which they had in view was that which, roughly speaking, fell under the head of 'Priest and People'—that is, a congregational type of service. That must not be understood to exclude the idea of a choir. There would always be ample scope for the use of a body of skilled singers, but those responsible for the conduct of services must define the position clearly. Were the choir the leaders of the congregation, or were the congregation merely an appendage of the choir? Surely the former was the ideal at which they should aim. The School did not advocate plainsong as the only desirable type of Church music, but in its favour there were certainly some powerful arguments which could hardly be overlooked. If this and previous Schools devoted the greater part of their study to plainsong and kindred types of Church music, it was for the practical reason that admirable expositions of modern Church music could be heard at our cathedrals, collegiate chapels, and at scores of our larger and best-equipped parish churches. This was not the case with plainsong. When the cathedrals and principal parish churches became, as it were, schools, in which clergy and organists could study the plainsong of the Psalms, hymns, and Communion office as easily as they could now study anthems and service settings, there would no longer be need for such organizations as the Summer School.

Tuesday.—To-day's conferences have been on 'Plainsong for the Holy Communion,' and 'Anglican Chants for the Psalms.' Mr. HARVEY GRACE, opening the former, said that in churches where plainsong was the staple there was a tendency to confine the repertory to Merbecke, the 'Missal de Angelis,' the 'Missal Regia,' and some modern French versions of the ancient chant, instead of drawing on the beautiful melodies in the Plainsong and Mediaeval Music Society's 'Ordinary of the Mass.' He discussed apparent reasons for this, and pleaded for editions of the 'pure' chant in modern notation, and even in tonic sol-fa. Now that Solesmes had approved of modern notation for the purpose, the Plainsong Society need not hesitate. Gregorian notation would never be discarded, but it was an undoubted bar to popular use. Tonic sol-fa had made the great choral masterpieces accessible to thousands who would otherwise have missed them, and the ancient song of the Church ought to be democratized in the same way. A first step had been taken in the recently published English Gradual edited by Captain Burgess, in the People's Edition of which the melody appeared in both staff and tonic sol-fa notations. The speaker thought that this branch of plainsong had suffered, too, from the policy of those who, when introducing it to their congregations, began with the most simple and austere specimens. Surely this was a mistake. Appreciation of the very simple in any kind of art came late rather than early. The conventional objection to plainsong was that it had no tune. The best answer was to introduce some of the numerous examples that were as melodious and singable as folk-song, leaving the extremely simple specimens till prejudice had been overcome.

The proceedings then took the form of a discussion, followed by a practice of a complete setting of the Office from the 'Ordinary' for use in the Chapel on the following morning.

Mr. A. S. WARRELL advocated greater freedom of rhythm in Anglican chanting, and set his audience to work trying to get it, a few verses of a Psalm being written on one blackboard and a double chant on another. We got on pretty well, though the chant itself, by one Turton, did not over-stimulate. There was an animated discussion which, of course, soon developed into one of our annual series of test-matches, 'Anglicans v. Gregorians.' On a wicket a good deal the worse for wear, the attack on both sides was deadly, Dr. Bairdow and Mr. Geoffrey Shaw being practically unplayable. The result was, as always, a draw, with no score worth adding up. This will always be the

(Continued on page 713.)

FOUR-PART SONG FOR MIXED VOICES.

Set to "The Londonderry Air" and arranged for S.A.T.B. by HAROLD RHODES.

Words by MATHILDE BLIND, from "Love in Exile."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante, con tenerezza.

pp

RANO.

ah,

LTO.

mf cantando.

I would I were the glow-worm, thou the ENOR.

pp

ah,

ah,

ah,

BASS.

pp

ah,

ah,

Andante, con tenerezza. ♩ = 69.

COMP.

(For practice only.)

pp

ah,

flow - er, That I might fill thy cup with glimmering light; I would I

ah,

ah,

ah,

ah,

ah,

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Also published for T.T.B.B. in THE ORPHEUS, No. 561; and in NOVELLO'S TONIC SOL-FA SERIES, No. 2330.

pp

ah, . . . . . ah.

were the bird, and thou the bow - er, To sing thee songs throughout the sum-mer

pp

ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . . ah.

pp

ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . . ah.

f

. . . I would I were a pine-tree deep-ly root - ed, And thou the night. I would I were a pine-tree deep-ly root - ed, And thou the

. . . I would I were a pine-tree deep-ly root - ed, And thou the

f

. . . I would I were a pine-tree deep-ly root - ed, And thou the

f

This Supplement is part also of the October issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 159.

FEDERATING THE FESTIVALS.

By JOHN GRAHAM.

Somewhere South there is docile submission whenever the North puts in a claim to musicality. The Scottish Advisory Council invited the representatives of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals to Edinburgh, and thither we trooped, surprising ourselves by finding there colleagues from Cornwall, Isle of Man, London, many counties of England, even Ireland, not to speak of Scotsmen ranging from the Borders to the Highlands. Every man spake in his own tongue, and a common complaint of the Northerners was that we Southrons spoke too fast. We crowded together in the Freemasons' Hall as the morning of September 9 proceeded; then when we were sitting at lunch, we decided to stay where we were, the better to use our ears, in the Lower Hall. We had to go back to the large hall in the evening to hear a fine choir brought all the way from Clydebank. Then we were really docile, because that was music indeed.

The occasion was the first annual conference of the British Federation, which is an enlargement rather than a succession to the Association of Musical Competition Festivals. The movement for uniting the town and country Festivals began at a meeting of secretaries and others at Birmingham in May, 1920. Numerous meetings have since been held in London, resulting in the adoption of the Memorandum and Articles of Association required in forming a Company by Guarantee (Association not for Profit). The Board of Trade has passed the Articles, but the actual incorporation is not quite completed. The Edinburgh meetings had to be somewhat informal in the meantime, but the Executive Board, which is already at work, has power to take all necessary action. It is setting an organizing secretary to work, choosing offices in London, and settling about the continuance of a grant-in-aid from the Carnegie Music Trust.

Sir HENRY HADOW, chairman of the Federation, presided at the Conference. He explained the three fundamental principles on which the Constitution was based, viz.: (1) That the Federation be managed and controlled by the Festivals themselves. (2) That the management and control be decentralised into districts. (3) That every Festival retain full control and management of its own affairs. Under the Articles, which would be the charter for the future, autonomy would be preserved. As the larger Festivals would be in the minority, the security of the smaller Festivals was abundantly safeguarded. The individual Festivals would be represented on one of the twelve area councils, which would be advisory and non-legislative. While there was such decentralisation, there was concentration in a central board, whose help would be valuable in matters of detail and technical knowledge.

Sir HUGH ALLEN spoke on the first set topic: the general organization and policy of the Federation. Festivals might come to grief in the choice of music. A repertoire should be built up. Instead of individual desires, the general view should be voiced. The Federation should amplify the corpus of works, and this corpus should be revived every year. When the general want was known, composers might be induced to write music for the Festivals, and publishers would be ready to consider the publication of such works. The Federation would be found to be a kindly and helpful body to which they would look in the end with great affection.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE said that this amalgamation of large and small Festivals was going to be one of the greatest things in our time. He hoped that the Federation would shortly have a journal which would disseminate useful information, reports, advice, and special articles.

Mr. F. H. BISSET regarded the area councils as the key to progress; they would pool information in their frequent meetings, and attend to propaganda. On national questions and appeals to Government departments, the Federation would be the spokesman for the Federation movement. A journal was necessary to give more detailed attention to its needs, though the assistance given by the Competition Festival Record was recognised. With advertisements added, such a journal should be made to pay. The central office would be valuable when secretaries wanted an official list of adjudicators with a record of their experience for two previous years. The printing of mark-sheets for general use would save printing costs. If a quinquennial national Festival were held, the chief competitors throughout the country might be brought together. Educational authorities varied in their attitude; some were actively interested and gave support. The policy in this movement should be one of live and let live, not that of dogmatism as to details. The problems of urban Festivals differed from those of rural Festivals.

A general discussion followed on the relationship between the components of the Federation: central board, area councils, and individual Festivals. Mr. F. CLUCAS (Speaker of the House of Keys) explained the Manx arrangements as to publicity. He thought that the secretaries of the various areas might meet to consider adjudicators and other matters. Lady MABEL HOWARD asked if area councils would have to subscribe towards expenses. Nottinghamshire Festivals asked about delimitation of areas, an important point which the chairman said would require meetings of the councils to secure equality and agreement.

At a second session held in the afternoon, several subjects previously announced were discussed. These, however, have been under review many times, and do not demand much attention at the present stage. The co-ordination of Festival dates will come up again. Secretaries were asked to notify the central office of their settled dates, and a temporary list for this season would be issued as soon as possible. Marking schemes caused much discussion—their meaning varied with the adjudicator. The speakers all picked holes in the mark-sheets. Uniformity was desirable, but not a rigid standard. Competitors wanted to know where they differentiated. There should be a grading for prizes, and first, second, and third class certificates. After all, the general effect was the main thing, and the details of the headings should be settled by a meeting of adjudicators, and this should not be a small selection. The oldest Festival, for example, had a hundred and fifteen adjudicators. On the proposal of Mr. H. S. ROBERTON, it was agreed to call adjudicators together with a view to the adoption of a standard scale of marks by the Federation. As to money prizes, the Conference again took Mr. Robertson's view; such prizes should be discountenanced. Birmingham, said Mr. F. W. STEVENS, was adopting trophies and certificates. North London, said Mr. J. GRAHAM, found medals and graded certificates were popular. In other places—Birmingham and Newcastle-on-Tyne were instanced—a small grant was given to choirs that reached a certain standard. Money prizes, however, could not be given up altogether in towns that attracted choirs from a distance, and six representatives were in favour, while the rest of the Conference voted against the practice of giving money prizes.

We visitors were generously entertained by the Scottish Advisory Council. We thanked our hosts cordially, with a special word for Mr. David Latto, their hon. secretary. Scottish hospitality is proverbial, and it had on this occasion the finishing touch of an evening concert, given by medallists at the Edinburgh Musical Competition Festival. The soloists were Misses Nan Donaldson, Eleanor B. Gregorson, Fanetta L. D. Smith, and Marjorie Greenfield, Messrs. David Hutchison and W. Sim, and special enjoyment was afforded by the St. Johnstone Trio, Perth, and Clydebank Co-operative Junior Choir, ably conducted by Miss Catherine B. Wood.

BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The real hold which the Blackpool Festival has upon the affections of amateur singers and players in the North and Midlands will never receive more convincing testimony than is afforded by a perusal of this year's syllabus of the gathering to be held in the Winter Gardens, October 18-22, and the list of entries recently closed. Here are no concessions to public taste in the choice of music; indeed, a deliberate attempt to raise severely the standard in the vocal solo classes by the substitution of song-cycles of definitely high value for the single song hitherto prescribed, and a reduction of such classes from nine to six, has brought these entries within more manageable compass; yet, despite industrial depression, notwithstanding the heavier cost of all music and incidental expenses and the more exacting technical and interpretative demands made upon them, between six and seven thousand performers will take part during the Festival.

The juvenile solo classes, both instrumental and vocal, are crowded as never before. The local public elementary schools have again not rallied as might have been expected, but some compensation has been found in the increased entry for the Sunday School Choirs, the Village Choirs, and other classes for junior girls. Orchestral and chamber music promises increased support in comparison with last year, and the various Church and Chapel Choir Classes show an increased entry from fourteen to twenty-three.

The song-cycle innovation has been abundantly justified as regards the number of entries:

	Candidates.
Soprano.—Julius Harrison's 'Fiammetta' Cycle ...	70
Mezzo-Soprano.—Berlioz's 'Summer Nights' (only Nos. 1, 2, and 4) ...	47
Contralto.—Bantock's setting of Browning's 'Dramatic Lyrics' ...	105
Tenor.—Vaughan Williams's 'On Wenlock Edge' ...	41
Baritone.—Somervell's setting of Tennyson's 'Maud' ...	63
Bass.—Brahms's 'Four Serious Songs' (Op. 121)...	30

It will be seen that not merely have competitors to prepare more work of a definitely higher order, but the audience is spared much of the tedium of repetition, and the Rose Bowl Competition acquires a far higher significance than in former years, for any one of these cycles constitutes a much higher test of all-round musicianly qualities than could any single song, however great, of former years.

Competitors in the Operatic Classes have selections drawn from 'Don Giovanni,' sixty-four sopranos singing 'Non mi dir' and 'Mi tradi,' and thirty baritones three more Arias including 'Deh, vieni alla Finestra'; a considerable portion from Act 1 of this opera forms the test in the Operatic Quartet, but only one party from Burslem has entered.

An entire afternoon will have to be devoted to Mixed- and Male-Voice Quartets, so numerous are the entries, and much the same will happen in a new Pianoforte Class for adults in which the test is Benjamin Dale's 'Night Fancies.' All the pianoforte work would appear to have been drawn from native writers such as York Bowen, Swinstead, McEwen, &c. The English Folk-Dance Class introduced last year would already appear to be a formidable rival to the action-songs, four entries having been received for the former, one for the Maypole, and only two for the action-songs—may be the latter have outlived their utility.

Saturday (October 22) promises a repetition of the keen rivalry and high attainment of the years before 1914. As regards the premier mixed-voice class last year, with a few notable exceptions there was considerable evidence of a decline from the purity of the old standards and ideals characteristic of the finest choral-singing—too much point-making, absence of true perspective, madrigal work handled in the part-song manner, and so on. The selection committee has probably followed a sound instinct in prescribing a severe course of Bach singing as the surest way of killing these obnoxious tendencies, and restoring in the shortest possible time the old standard of accomplishment. Bach's double-choir Motet, 'Sing ye to the Lord,' has been chosen, and ten choirs have entered: Blackpool Glee and Madrigal (present holders of the Challenge Shield), Blackpool Orpheus, Blackburn (Dr. H. Brearley), Gledholt (Huddersfield), Hebburn (Durham), Halifax, Kendal, Lancaster, Morecambe, and Sale and District (Manchester). Each choir sings two of the three movements in the afternoon, and the four best are each to sing the entire work in the evening.

Nine choirs of ladies—Blackpool Orpheus (last year's victors), Blackpool Lyric, Blackpool Glee and Madrigal, Blackburn, Grimsby (winners of this year's Royal Eisteddfod), Horbury Bridge (Wakefield), Kendal, Lancaster, Sale and District (Manchester)—sing Sibelius's 'Impromptu' and Wagner's 'Rhine Maidens' music, again a very stiff advance on last year's music, especially in the intellectual aspect of interpretation. Nineteen choirs of tenors and basses and eight of the 'alto-lead' variety constitute, I believe, a record for any Festival at which such a high standard of music is prescribed, e.g., Bantock's ironic setting of Villon's grim ballad written on the eve of his expected execution, Balfour Gardiner's romantic choral song, and John Masefield's 'Cargoes,' and, again, Bantock in the ripe, homely sentiment of Burns's 'My love is like a red, red rose.' The alto-lead men have a Webbe glee and Dr. Naylor's 'Land of little people.' The probationary mixed-voice choirs—i.e., the winner must pass up next year to the challenge shield class—are to sing a pastoral madrigal by the old lutenist, John Dowland, and, in 'The Fountain,' what the writer deems the priceless pearl among Elgar's choral miniatures.

The adjudicators are: Madame Edith Hands, Madame C. Gleeson White, Sir Hugh Allen, Frederic Austin, John Bridge, F. Bonavia, H. Plunket Greene, Harvey Grace, Dr. T. Keighley, Charles H. Kelly, Walter S. Nesbitt, C. Kennedy Scott, and Paul le Vallon.

THE SOUTH-EAST LONDON FESTIVAL.

In view of the success of the first South-East London Festival, the decision to hold a second was a foregone conclusion. It is announced that this will take place on March 3 and 4 for the children's competitions, and on March 20 to 25 for the senior competitions.

There are no solo competitions, the object being to encourage concerted performance. The nearest approach to solo work in the scheme is a class for violin and pianoforte. Instrumental trios and quartets are invited, and vocal quartets, trios, and duets. These classes for small groups are seven in number. Four are for bands and orchestras, the rest are for choral singing.

In the area covered by the Festival, choral technique and traditions have still to be nurtured through their beginnings, and this is the task of the Festival. In the test-pieces, therefore, there is no place for difficulty or need for novelty. Old competition war-horses are freely chosen: 'Diaphenia,' 'Twelve by the clock,' 'Where the bee sucks,' 'Brightly dawns our wedding-day,' 'Cherry ripe,' 'It was a lover and his lass' (Morley), 'Oh no, John' (for Mothers' Meetings), and so forth. It is altogether a well-selected list.

Competing choirs are expected to learn special music for combined performance at the final concert. For adults this consists of 'Turn back, O man' (Holst), 'Then round about the starry throne,' and 'Jerusalem' (Parry), and the conductor is Mr. Adrian C. Boult. Mr. Geoffrey Shaw will conduct the children in 'O England, my country' (Holst), 'Charlie is my darling,' and 'You'll get there' (Parry).

The adjudicators are Dr. Emily Daymond, Mr. Harvey Grace, and Mr. T. F. Dunhill.

No. 1393. ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE (4-part).—Edward German. Price—3d 4d.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

- |  |   |  |
|--|---|--|
| No. 614 Absence ... H. Goetz 2d.   | No. 464 Autumn is come again (5 V.) ... F. Corder 3d.                             | No. 1272 Call John (humorous) ... arr. W. W. Pearson 3d.   |
| 217 * Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 2d.                                    | 403 Autumn song ... S. Reay 3d.   | 1122 Calm is the lake ... F. Abt 3d.                       |
| 181 * Do. ... J. L. Hatton 1d.   | 683 Do. ... J. Rheinberger 2d.  | 359 Calm night ... J. L. Hatton 3d.                        |
| 67 Adieu love, adieu G. A. Macfarren 3d.                                     | 484 Ave Maria ... J. Raff 3d.   | 380 Calm of the sea, The ... H. Hiles 4d.                  |
| 312 Adieu, my native shore Pearsall 2d.                                      | 241 * Do. ... H. Smart 1d.  | 911 * Capture of Cremona, The ... arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.   |
| 943 Adieu, sweet Amaryllys ... J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.                         | 968 * Awake, awake ... G. Bantock 3d.   | 314 Caput apri deferro ... E. Hecht 3d.                    |
| 1227 Do. ... C. Macpherson 2d.   | 76 * Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold ... H. Leslie 1d.                           | 178 * Caravan, The ... C. Pinsuti 1d.                      |
| 390 Adieu to the woods ... S. J. G. Egerton 3d.                              | 25 Awake the starry midnight hour ... Mendelssohn 2d.                             | 1251 * Cargoes ... H. B. Gardiner 3d.                      |
| 658 Advice to lovers ... P. W. Pilcher 2d.                                   | 923 * Away to the woodlands ... H. W. Warner 3d.                                  | 1273 Carrion Crow, The (humorous) ... W. W. Pearson 3d.    |
| 912 After the battle arr. T. R. G. Jozé 2d.                                  | 978 * Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.                      | 607 Cavalier, The ... C. Goodall 3d.                       |
| 674 Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.) ... 3d.                                    | 225 Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 3d.                             | 529 Cavalry song ... C. A. Macrone 3d.                     |
| 1375 Ah! what is love ... W. McNaghten 3d.                                   | 193 Bait, The (Come live with me) ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                            | 635 Cephalus and Procris ... A. W. Batson 3d.              |
| 515 Ah! woe is me (6 V.) ... H. Lahee 4d.                                    | 996 * Ballad, A (8 V.) ... T. Wendt 3d.   | 482 Chafer's Wedding, A (humorous) ... Lewandowski 6d.     |
| 648 Airley Beacon ... C. V. Stanford 4d.                                     | 1016 Ballade of Midsummer ... " 3d.   | 1087 Chapel, The ... C. Kreutzer 3d.                       |
| 566 Airs of Summer ... J. L. Roedel 2d.                                      | 1017 Ballade of Spring ... " 4d.  | 427 * Charge of the Light Brigade, The ... E. Hecht 3d.    |
| 17 All among the barley E. Stirling 2d.                                      | 1044 * Battle of the Baltic, The ... C. H. Lloyd 4d.                              | 85 * Charm me asleep (6 V.) H. Leslie 3d.                  |
| 671 * All is not gold that shineth bright in snow (5 V.) W. J. Westbrook 3d. | 861 * Battle song, A arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.                                       | 906 Do. ... J. B. McEwen 3d.                               |
| 394 * All is still ... G. A. Macfarren 3d.                                   | 578 Do. ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.  | 847 * Chase, The ... A. H. Brewer 3d.                      |
| 802 All Souls' Day J. Rheinberger 3d.  | 1334 * Beacon, The ... A. Carse 3d.   | 583 Do. ... W. G. Ross 2d.                                 |
| 59 All ye woods and trees and bow'rs ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                    | 689 Beauty, arise ... K. J. Pye 3d.   | 1255 * Do. ... S. P. Waddington 3d.                        |
| 83 * Do. (5 V.) ... H. Lahee 1d.   | 841 Before me careless lying (5 V.) ... C. H. Lloyd 4d.                           | 731 Do. (6 V.) ... S. P. Waddington 3d.                    |
| 940 Do. ... H. W. Wareing 3d.  | 1238 * Beleaguered, The A. S. Sullivan 2d.  | 1212 Cheshire cheese, The ... arr. J. C. Bridge 3d.        |
| 1037 * All an war arr. H. E. Button 2d.                                      | 56 * Belfry Tower, The J. L. Hatton 1d.   | 374 Chi la Gagliarda ... B. Donato 3d.                     |
| 478 * Allen-a-Dale ... C. H. Lloyd 4d.                                       | 1311 * Belgian National song ... F. Campenhout 1d.                                | 715 Chieftain to the Highland bound, A ... Pearsall 3d.    |
| 1020 * Do. ... J. B. McEwen 3d.  | 572 Bells across the snow Ch. Gounod 3d.  | 466 * Do. ... O. Prescott 4d.                              |
| 334 Already snow has fallen R. Franz 1d.                                     | 432 * Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The W. Knyvett (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart 4d. | 94 Childhood's melody F. Berger 1d.                        |
| 113 Alton Locke's Song ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.                               | 1271 * Ben Bowlegs (humorous) ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                               | 101 Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.) ... J. B. Calkin 4d.    |
| 1011 * Amaryllys I did woo ... John E. West 2d.                              | 984 Bendemeer's Stream J. Pointer 3d.   | 1145 Chloe, that dear bewitching prude ... H. Willan 2d.   |
| 1322 * American National Songs (Three) ... John E. West 3d.                  | 1216 Beside the river ... A. Jensen 2d.   | 1147 * Chorus of Empire ... C. A. E. Harris 3d.            |
| 972 Amintor's well-a-day ... John E. West 3d.                                | 793 Better music ne'er was known ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.                           | 66 * Christmas ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.                     |
| 1364 An address to the nightingale ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                     | 184 * Beware ... J. L. Hatton 1d.   | 1109 * Christmas greeting, A E. Elgar 6d.                  |
| 175 An Autumn song ... C. Pinsuti 3d.  | 220 Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... " 1d.  | 314 Christmas song, A ... Pearsall 3d.                     |
| 20 An emigrant's song W. Macfarren 3d.                                       | 111 * Bird of the Wilderness J. Barnby 3d.  | 967 Do. ... M. Praetorius 3d.                              |
| 1074 * An Empire song A. C. Mackenzie 3d.                                    | 196 Do. ... J. L. Hatton 3d.  | 345 Close to my heart ... W. Davies 3d.                    |
| 1053 An end will I bring ... Schubert 3d.                                    | 1157 Birds are singing, The Hans Sitt 2d.   | 677 * Clouds, The J. Rheinberger 3d.                       |
| 1387 * An old song resung ... H. B. Gardiner 2d.                             | 798 Birthday serenade, A G. Elvey 3d.   | 823 Come again, sweet days ... J. Dowland 2d.              |
| 485 And then no more ... R. Raff 2d.   | 1308 Birthday, The ... E. Elgar 3d.   | 726 * Come away ... E. German 3d.                          |
| 1103 * Angelic hunter, The ... arr. J. Brahms 3d.                            | 300 * Bishop of Mentz, The Pearsall 1d.   | 873 * Do. ... H. Parker 4d.                                |
| 1091 Angel's call The I. I. Viotta 3d.                                       | 1107 * Black Monk, The (Welsh folk-song) arr. R. Boughton 3d.                     | 1169 Come away, come away, death ... arr. Arne 2d.         |
| 960 * Angel's greeting, The J. Brahms 4d.                                    | 55 * Blow, blow thou winter wind ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.                          | 36 Do. (5 V.) G. A. Macfarren 3d.                          |
| 1167 * Angelus (Tuscan) ... E. Elgar 4d.                                     | 1254 Blow, breeze, from the North ... G. Elvey 3d.                                | 51 * Do. (5 V.) ... " 3d.                                  |
| 1340 * Anglers, The W. W. Pearson 2d.  | 1369 Blow, western wind ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                                     | 58 Come celebrate the May ... J. L. Hatton 1d.             |
| 30 Angler's Trysting-tree, The ... C. W. Corfe 3d.                           | 661 * Blue-bottle's fate, The (humorous) A. H. Ashworth 3d.                       | 668 Come, fairies, trip it ... F. Liffie 3d.               |
| 1039 * Annie Laurie arr. H. E. Button 2d.                                    | 544 Blue-eyed lassie, The F. Brandeis 3d.   | 102 Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.) ... J. B. Calkin 3d.     |
| 108 Annie Lee ... J. Barnby 1d.  | 933 * Blwyddyn Bywyd D. Protheroe 3d.   | 118 * Come follow me A. Zimmermann 1d.                     |
| 182 April showers ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                                       | 187 Blythe is the Bird J. L. Hatton 2d.   | 1143 Come forth, the summer's murmur hear ... E. Franz 2d. |
| 218 Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... " 1d.   | 399 * Boat Song ... H. Leslie 1d.   | 14 Come, heavy sleep ... J. Dowland 2d.                    |
| 1318 Arethusa, The ... W. Shield 3d.   | 357 * Do. ... F. Schubert 2d.   | 745 Come if you dare ... Purcell 4d.                       |
| 137 Arise, sweet love ... H. Leslie 1d.                                      | 1088 Do. ... R. Schumann 2d.  | 1210 Come, lasses and lads ... arr. J. C. Bridge 3d.       |
| 97 Arise, the sunbeams hail F. Berger 3d.                                    | 385 Boat, The ... R. Schumann 2d.   | 899 Come let me take thee J. Pullen 2d.                    |
| 520 Around the maypole tripping ... J. L. Hatton 1d.                         | 3 Boating Song ... E. G. Monk 2d.   | 317 Come let us be merry Pearsall 1d.                      |
| 859 * Arranmore Boat Song ... arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.                         | 521 * Boatman's Good-night, The ... F. Schira 1d.                                 | 507 * Come live with me W. S. Bennett 1d.                  |
| 457 * Arrow and the song The W. Hay 3d.                                      | 545 * Bonnie Bell A. C. Mackenzie 2d.   | 360 Do. ... J. L. Hatton 3d.                               |
| 973 As Amoret with Phillis sat ... John E. West 2d.                          | 1310 * Boy, The (humorous) ... A. H. Brewer 3d.                                   | 193 Do. (The Bait) ... " 1d.                               |
| 1054 As dewdrops at morn ... Schubert 3d.                                    | 63 * Break, break on thy cold grey stones, O sea G. A. Macfarren 1d.              | 497 Come, May, with all thy flowers ... J. L. Gregory 2d.  |
| 525 As I saw fair Clara F. Corder 3d.  | 99 Breathe soft, ye winds J. B. Calkin 1d.  | 1052 Come, O come, dearest, come ... Schubert 3d.          |
| 146 As it fell upon a day ... S. Reay 3d.                                    | 1307 * Do. ... W. Paxton 1d.  | 671 Come o'er the burn, Bessie (3 V.) ... J. B. Calkin 3d. |
| 169 As the ripples flow ... E. A. Sydenham 2d.                               | 878 Bridal Song ... H. Leslie 4d.   | 1214 Come out across the heather ... A. Jensen 3d.         |
| 1052 As the watcher longs ... Schubert 3d.                                   | 639 Bright be thy dreams Oliver King 3d.  | 791 * Come, pretty wag, and sing ... C. H. H. Parry 2d.    |
| 900 As through the land J. Pullen 2d.  | 402 * Bright-hair'd morn, The S. Reay 3d.   | 38 Come sleep ... J. Benedict 3d.                          |
| 796 * As torrents in summer E. Elgar 2d.                                     | 584 Bright Moon ... John E. West 2d.  | 1060 Do. ... J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.                         |
| 1180 As when the sun renews his strength (Madrigal) C. E. Miller 3d.         | 1222 * Bring me a golden pen ... F. H. Cowen 3d.                                  | 1110 * Do. ... R. H. Walthew 1d.                           |
| 1257 * Ash Grove, The ... arr. Dunnhill 3d.                                  | 601 Broken Flower, The Oliver King 3d.  | 945 Do. ... A. G. Wathall 3d.                              |
| 1105 At Andernach in Rhineland Abt 3d.                                       | 447 Brook, The ... C. G. Reissiger 3d.  | 1007 * Come to me, gentle sleep ... F. H. Cowen 3d.        |
| 393 At first the mountain hill ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.                       | 1015 * Brownies, The Moellendorff 3d.   | 701 Do. ... H. W. Schartau 3d.                             |
| 981 At her fair hands ... J. Elliott 3d.                                     | 223 Busy, curious, thirsty fly (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 4d.                    | 713 Come, tuneless friends (humorous) ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.  |
| 788 Do. ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.   | 743 * Butterfly, The J. Blumenthal 4d.  | 1032 Come with me, fairest J. Brahms 3d.                   |
| 335 At parting ... R. Franz 1d.  | 1095 * By a gentle river laid ... John E. West 3d.                                | 615 Comfort ... H. Goetz 2d.                               |
| 358 * At the coming of the Spring ... J. L. Hatton 3d.                       | 1002 * By the waters of Babylon ... P. Cornelius 2d.                              | 999 * Comfort in tears ... P. Cornelius 4d.                |
| 195 Auburn ... arr. E. Land 1d.  | 1141 By woodland and wayside ... E. Franz 2d.                                     | 1182 * Comrades' song of hope, The ... arr. A. Adan. 2d.   |
| 582 * Auld Lang Syne ... C. A. Macrone 1d.                                   |   | 383 Confidence (8 V.) ... R. Schumann 3d.                  |
| 71 Autolycus' Song ... C. A. Macrone 1d.                                     |   |  |
| 1006 * Do. ... C. Lee Williams 3d.   |   |  |
| 158 Autumn ... W. Macfarren 3d.  |   |  |
| 274 Do. (T.T.B.S.) ... " 1d.   |   |  |
| 353 Do. ... A. C. Mackenzie 1d.  |   |  |
| 1162 Autumn fields, The N. W. Gade 3d.                                       |   |  |

MADE IN ENGLAND.

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE

FOUR-PART SONG

FROM THE MUSIC TO "HENRY VIII"

MUSIC BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES BY THE COMPOSER.

(MAY BE SUNG WITHOUT ACCOMPANIMENT IF DESIRED.)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro moderato. (Beat quick 3 in bar.)

PIANO.

Or - pheus with his lute, with his lute... made trees... And the

Or - pheus with his lute, his lute made trees... And

Or - pheus with his lute, his lute made trees... And the

Or - pheus with his lute, his lute made trees, made trees, And

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Also published as an Eight-part Song in NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK, No. 1394; and as a Trio for S.S.A. in NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION OF TRIOS, &amp;c., FOR FEMALE VOICES, No. 263; and in NOVELLO'S TONIC SOL-FA SERIES, No. 846

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

p

mountain tops that freeze . . . Bow them - selves when he did

p mountain tops that freeze . . . Bow them - selves when he did

p mountain tops that freeze . . . Bow them - selves when he did

p mountain tops that freeze . . . Bow them - selves when he did

p

Ped. * Ped. *

pp

sing, bow them - selves when he did sing; . . . To his

pp

sing, bow them - selves when he did sing, when he did

pp

sing, bow them - selves when he did sing, when he did

pp

sing, bow them - selves when he did sing; . . . To his

pp

Ped. * Ped. *

p

mu - sic plants and flow'rs Ev - er sprung, To his mu - sic plants and

mf

sing; To his mu - sic plants and

mf

sing; To his mu - sic, his mu - sic plants and

mf

mu - sic plants and flow'rs Ex - er.

p

trem.

mf

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

poco allargando.

flow'rs ev - er sprung, as sun . . and show'rs, as sun . . and show - ers

flow'rs ev - er sprung, as sun . . and show'rs, as sun . . and show - ers

flow'rs ev - er sprung, as sun . . and show'rs, as sun . . and show - ers ev - er sprung, as sun and show'rs . . .

poco allargando.

Ped.

*

Ped.

*

Ped.

*

a tempo.

There had made a last - - - - - ing, a

There had made a last - - - - - ing, a

There . . . had made a last - ing spring, . . . a

There . . had made, had made a last - ing spring, . . . a

a tempo.

Ped.

*

Ped.

*

Ped.

*

Ped.

*

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

(if sung without Piano accompaniment.)

last . . . ing spring. . . . .

last . . . ing spring. . . . .

last . . . ing spring. . . . .

last . . . ing spring. . . . .

ff Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * cres. * Ped. *

p Ev . . . 'ry . .

p Ev - 'ry thing that

p Ev - 'ry thing that

p Ev - 'ry thing,

p Ped. * Ped. *

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

thing that heard him play, . . Ev - en the bil - lows of the sea heard, that heard him play, . . E'en the bil - lows of . . the sea . . .

heard, that heard him play, . . Ev - en the bil - lows of . . the sea . . .

ev - 'ry thing that heard him play, E'en bil - lows of the sea

Ped. * Ped. *

Tranquillo.

p pp

Hung their heads and then lay by, . . . hung their heads and then lay

p pp

Hung their heads and then lay by, hung their heads and then lay

p pp

Hung their heads and then lay by, . . . hung their heads and then lay

p pp

Hung their heads and then lay by, hung their heads and then lay

Tranquillo.

p pp

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

by. . . In sweet mu - sic is such art, . . . in sweet mu - sic by, and then lay by. . . In mu - sic, sweet mu - sic by, and then lay by. In sweet mu - sic, sweet mu - sic
 by. . . In sweet mu - sic is such art,

cres.
cres.
cres.
cres.
trem.
Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

rall. e cres. Poco allargando.
 is such art, Kill - ing care . . and grief of heart . .
rall. e cres. f con espress. p
 is such art, Kill - ing care . . and grief of heart . .
rall. e cres. f con espress. p
 is such art, Kill - ing care . . and grief of heart . .
rall. e cres. f con espress. p
 such art, Kill - ing care and grief of heart
 Poco allargando.
rall. e cres. f p
Ped. * Ped. *

ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

a tempo (Tranquillo).

pp dim. rall. e dim.

Fall a - sleep, a - sleep, . . . or, hear - ing,

pp dim. rall. e dim.

Fall a - sleep, a - sleep, . . . or, hear - ing,

pp dim. rall. e dim.

Fall a - sleep, fall a - sleep, a - sleep, . . . or, hear - ing,

pp dim. rall. e dim.

Fall a - sleep, fall a - sleep, a - sleep, . . . or, hear - ing,

a tempo Tranquillo).

pp dim. rall. e dim.

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

a tempo (Tranquillo).

ppp die.

ppp die.

ppp die.

ppp die.

a tempo (Tranquillo).

ppp rall. e dim. pppp

Ped.

poco rit. a tempo. più f

lof - ty, cloud-be - lea-guered rock, Still, while the blasts of heav'n a-round us

poco rit. a tempo. più f

lof - ty, cloud-be - lea-guered rock, Still, while the blasts of . . heav'n a - round us . .

poco rit. a tempo. più f

lof - ty, cloud-be - lea-guered rock, Still, while the blasts of heav'n a-round us

poco rit. a tempo. più f

lof - ty, cloud-be - lea-guered rock, Still, while the blasts of . . heav'n a-round us . .

Poco più lento. meno f rit.

hoot - ed, . . . To cleave to thee . . and wea-ther ev-'ry shock.

meno f rit.

hoot - ed, . . . To cleave to thee and wea - - ther ev - 'ry shock.

meno f rit.

hoot - ed, To cleave to . . thee . . and wea - - ther ev - - 'ry shock.

meno f rit.

hoot - ed, To cleave to . . thee and wea - - ther ev - 'ry shock.

Poco più lento. meno f rit.

pp a tempo.

Ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . .

a tempo. mf cantando.

I would I were the rill, and thou the

pp a tempo.

Ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . .

pp a tempo.

Ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . .

pp a tempo.

Poco più animato.

ah, . . . . .

più f

riv - er, So might I, leap - ing from some head-long steep, With all my

ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . .

ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . .

Poco più animato.

meno p

ah, . . . . . ah.

wa - ters lost in thine for ev - er, Be hur - ried on - wards to th'un-fathomed

meno p

ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . . ah.

meno p

ah, . . . . . ah, . . . . . ah.

Tempo 1mo. f meno f dim. mp

I would—what would I not? O fool-ish dream-ing! My words are

f meno f dim. mp deep. I would—what would I not? O fool-ish dream-ing! My words are..

f meno f dim. mp

I would—what would I not? O fool-ish dream-ing! My words are

f meno f dim. mp

I would—what would I not? O fool-ish dream-ing! My words are..

Tempo 1mo. f meno f dim. mp

leaves by au - - tumn shed, That in the fa - ded moon-light i - dly

but as leaves by au - - tumn shed, That in the fa - ded moon - light i - - dly

leaves by au - - tumn shed, That in the fa - ded moon-light i - dly

but as leaves by au - - tumn shed, That in the fa - ded moon - light i - dly

poco rit. a tempo. p poco rit.

Più lento. dim. rit. pp

gleam - ing, . . . Drop on the grave where all our love lies dead.

dim. rit. pp

gleam - ing, . . . Drop on the grave where all our love lies dead.

dim. rit. pp

gleam - ing, Drop on the grave where all our love, . . . our love lies dead.

dim. rit. pp

gleam - ing, Drop on the grave where all our love lies dead.

Più lento. dim. rit.

MR. MARTIN SHAW.
REV. MAURICE BELL.MR. GEORGE SHAW.
MR. A. S. WARRELL.DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW.
MR. C. HYLTON STEWART.

MR. E. G. P. WYATT.

Photo by]

THE COMMITTEE AND LECTURERS

[Bristol Times and Mirror.

MR. HARVEY GRACE. REV. J. R. THOMAS. REV. A. S. DUNCAN-JONES. LADY MARY TREFUSIS.

ase till one of the teams goes to the School prepared to give a perfect demonstration of the merits of their chosen method. We had another set-to after supper, Mr. E. G. P. WYATT dealing with an historical paper on 'Plainsong for the Psalms.' Dealing with the historical side of psalmodic plainsong, he described the various methods in which the Psalms were used in the early days: (1) saying or singing them straight through, by a single voice, just as a priest commonly reads the Psalms at certain special offices to-day; (2) singing them straight through with a choir; (3) the responsorial method, that is, singing them by a single voice, the choir or congregation responding with an unvarying refrain, somewhat like a Litany. (Examples of such refrains are Amen, Alleluia, For His mercy endureth for ever, &c., and, in Christian times, Gloria Patri); (4) the antiphonal method, in which one choir sang the Psalm, and another choir sang an unvarying refrain after each verse, or set of two or three verses. This method seemed to have been introduced into the West from Syria. The refrains so used were called antiphons. Mr. Wyatt suggested that it was worth considering whether the occasional use of these two latter methods—the responsorial and antiphonal—could not be revived with profit, e.g., in processions. Certainly, 'Benedicite omnia opera' would be very effective or processional use, sung in either of these ways. The Psalm tunes as we knew them to-day were not really heard to full advantage. They were intended to be sung in conjunction with antiphons—short melodies sung at the beginning and end of a Psalm. This arrangement provided the most artistic contrast between the melody of the antiphon and the recitative of the Psalm. Mr. Wyatt said that the Plainsong and Medieval Music Society was about to publish a complete set of antiphons for use with the Psalms. An essential point in the chanting of the Psalms to plainsong was the distinct pause at the half-verse. This was sometimes objected to, chiefly, the speaker thought, because it was liable to be exaggerated. The length of the pause should vary according to the size of the church, number of voices, &c. After pointing out the practical advantages of a well-defined pause in the middle of the verse, Mr. Wyatt said that the principle of the pause was a far-reaching thing, and went far beyond the practice of psalmody. Thus, in plainsong hymn melodies the effect was largely dependent upon a substantial pause between each pair of lines, while only a breath should be taken between the lines forming each pair. In the service itself the observance of pauses was a vital matter. Apparently it was the one thing the clergy tried to avoid at all costs. If pauses and breaks were not filled up with organ playing, they put things right by giving out irrelevant notices in order to prevent a momentary silence. When the people were finding the Psalms some clergy, in addition to notifying them of the day of the month, would inform them of the number of the opening Psalm, and even tell them if the service they were attending were the evening or the morning! But the worst examples of this restlessness were in the Eucharist, where every interval was filled up with the singing of hymns or playing of organs, so that no one had an opportunity for private prayer. Dealing with the question of rhythm, Mr. Wyatt said that complaints were sometimes made that advocates of plainsong talked too much about rhythm. The complaint was really a compliment—a tribute to our determination to make the music subordinate to the claims of the text. The ordinary Anglican chantist started from the opposite point of view. He was so dependent upon the bars to which he was used in modern music, that when he sang the Psalms he started from the bars which he found in the Anglican chant, and adapted the words to them as best he could. It did not occur to him to form a mental picture of the rhythm of the whole verbal phrase. The tune was the thing, and naturally he complained of the plainsong psalm tone that it had no tune.

Mr. Geoffrey Shaw then turned us into a choir, and made us work at the Psalms for the following day. This was no ordinary choir, however, for it made no bones about heckling the choirmaster on such questions as accent and rhythm. Messrs. Bairstow and Shaw had another spirited duel, and one that was useful to the spectators, a good many practical points being made on both sides. At the close of the day's proceedings, however, most of us felt that the question of Anglicans v. Gregorians is so largely a matter of taste that argument is futile. The advocates on both sides are moved by preferences rather than by any question of fitness. Is there a champion of plainsong who can lay his hand on his heart and say, 'I use plainsong because I think it is a more suitable medium than Anglicans, although, so far as mere liking goes, I very much prefer the latter'? And can any Anglicanite assure us that he is really fond of plainsong, and is prevented from using it only by his conviction that the Anglican chant has a special claim on him, as being an English contribution to musical form, and in various ways suited to the genius of the race and language? No doubt both honestly believe in the merits of their chosen chant, but they felt its attraction long before they saw its merits. Wherefore there is room for both.

Still, we gathered some useful points from the discussion. First, if the freedom aimed at by the forthcoming 'speech rhythm' psalter is to be attained, there must be a careful choice of chants. The majority of the established favourites will serve, because their part-writing is smooth and they are not weighted by too many chords. But the inferior type, consisting of a poor tune hobbled by clumsy harmonization, will prevent any choir from getting over the ground with the freedom and lightness required. Second, in churches where only unison singing is possible, the ordinary Anglican chant must give way to plainsong or to chant melodies written on pretty much the same lines. Third, the Summer School will do a valuable work if next year it lays itself out to give its members something like model chanting on both plainsong and Anglican lines. And it should rigorously taboo the test-matches alluded to above. The time and energy spent on an argument that always leaves the disputants where they were should be spent on one or two subjects left untouched this year, e.g., choir training and organization, voluntaries, the choice of music for weddings, children's services, &c., &c.

Wednesday.—Most of the morning was devoted to 'Merbecke for the Holy Communion.'

Mr. WYATT opened with a paper on the historical side. He said that Merbecke's 'Book of Common Prayer Noted' was no doubt intended to hold an official position. It consisted partly of plainsong and of adaptations (not to say mutilations) of plainsong, and partly of Merbecke's own compositions. The Creed was among the latter; the Kyries, one Sanctus, one Agnus, and the Pater Noster, were adapted from plainsong. The other parts are doubtful. The question was sometimes asked, 'Is Merbecke's service plainsong?' No doubt Merbecke himself would have said 'Yes,' for he makes no distinction between his own work and the genuine plainsong. Most people are now agreed that the best way to sing his service is to treat it as plainsong. Mr. Wyatt then discussed some of the variations in the text of the different editions of Merbecke. These variations are due (1) to the fact that the music was written for the First Prayer-book, the text of which differs from that of our present book; and (2) there were two editions of Merbecke's original book, both differing considerably. The speaker pointed out that the Helmore and Stainer editions contained music not written by Merbecke. People who thought that Merbecke set the Comfortable Words to music were mistaken. Some of Merbecke's book is undeservedly neglected. For example, Mr. Wyatt cited his version of the Ambrosian Te Deum as a very skilful simplification of the original melody, and one with considerable possibilities for use in various ways to-day. (He mentioned in passing that the Te Deum was never intended to be sung to psalm chants, and was not divided into half-verses by colons until a comparatively recent date.) Merbecke's anthems in the Burial Service are of considerable merit, and should be used where the old plainsong is thought to be too difficult. Though something of a makeshift from a plainsong point of view, Merbecke's service has many merits—it is suitable, melodious, simple, easy, and widely known. It offers the one hope of a setting generally familiar, which is a great boon, especially as regards the Creed, though this is not nearly so fine as the plainsong Creed, which is in practice found to be perfect congregational. Merbecke's service is often recommended as a kind of introduction to plainsong proper. But some good judges think otherwise. Mr. Wyatt thought the best advice would be, 'Introduce Merbecke where you have an expectation of being able to use genuine plainsong; where you have such expectation, start straight away with the genuine thing.' One small historical point: Has Merbecke ever been widely used until the 19th century?

Mr. MARTIN SHAW spoke on Merbecke from the practical point of view. He thought they would agree that Merbecke's Communion Service was one which every assembly of English Church people ought to know by heart. Should it be treated as plainsong? He said 'Yes,' though well aware that it was not pure plainsong. It had suffered and still suffered, from a too lavish use of bar-lines in modern editions. Moreover it was often sung too slowly. The pace should be that of ordinary deliberate reading, and the accentuation should be dictated by the text rather than by the music. The question of pace was affected, too, by the style of the accompaniment. Stanford and Harwood had produced splendid editions from a purely musical point of view. He could not help feeling, however, that in both cases too many chords were used. The more frequent the change of chord, the slower must be the pace of the singing. He thought Merbecke should be accompanied on plainsong principles—a good deal of the melody should be treated as passing-notes, with the result that the singing would be spirited and free.

The question of accompaniment was discussed at some length. Mr. HYLTON STEWART said that recently at Rochester Cathedral they were without organ for nine Sundays, the authorities having seen fit to economise by cutting off the electricity. On those nine Sundays various Communion services were sung unaccompanied, including Merbecke's Kyrie and Creed. His experience was that Merbecke 'went' better without than with organ.

We then practised Merbecke's Communion Service in preparation for the following day's service. The practice over, various points were discussed. It seemed to be generally agreed that the accompaniment should be of a type in which a good deal of the melody was treated as passing-notes, and that the pace should be quick. On this latter point, it was observed that the pace adopted on this occasion, and generally approved, was such as raised considerable opposition at the School a few years ago.

Dr. BAIRSTOW dealt with the subject of 'Organ Accompaniment.' He said the subject of rhythm was very little understood, and was difficult to teach. There were special difficulties in the matter so far as organ playing was concerned. It was obvious that the more complex the mechanism of an instrument the less it lent itself to the expression of rhythm. There were so many contractions between the player and the tone, that the organ was the least rhythmical of instruments. The voice led the way as a medium of expression, then came the strings and the wind instruments, then the pianoforte, then, a long way after, as an 'also ran,' the organ. How were we to make rhythm on the organ? The most valuable means was the lift-up before the important chord—comparable to our habit in speech of a slight check before a specially emphatic word, e.g., 'Well, I'm v ———!' There must be discretion in the use of heavy pedal stops. If music weight meant length; if we were lavish with heavy 16-ft. tone we slowed things down. But though the organ lacked rhythm it was rich in colour. Severe people told us not to use the organ orchestrally, but as a matter of fact we should do so—not by imitating the actual effects of the orchestra but by adopting its principles. The average organist did not know what he could get out of his instrument. He did not know how to mix his colours how to obtain variety and contrast by the use of single stops, or by such a simple and obvious expedient as by resting his pedals. The speaker illustrated this latter point by saying that in his work as an examiner he recently went through fifteen exercises by aspirants for the

ius. Bac. degree. In at least a half of these the double-basses were droning away through a whole movement! It was a safe guess that the composers of all these were organists. We should use our big pedal stops with reticence in accompanying. For example, in a Psalm we should save them for an occasional verse that mattered. 'Always keep something up your sleeve. And [said Dr. Bairstow] if you have a stop that you think is the most beautiful on the organ, don't play on the darned thing all the time. Keep it for a few special moments when it can really score.' After discussing the value of reserve, the speaker said that then we felt that the moment of climax had arrived, we must not be afraid to go all out, even if we swamped everybody for a moment. But such moments must be rare and brief. Speaking of the importance of the right atmosphere for a church service, Dr. Bairstow said that people ought to be able to come away from a service without having been bothered by a single distraction. That was a difficult matter, however, because it depended upon so many different people—the organist especially. Good organ accompaniment was impossible unless the choir was good. No organist could play freely and expressively if he were wondering all the time how in the world his choir would get on if he did such and such a thing. All special effects should be suggestive rather than imitative. When the Psalm spoke of the singing of birds, the organist should merely suggest the right happy atmosphere called up by the text. If he produced imitative twitters, people at once said, 'Oh, ark! the birds!' and at once we had a distraction. The good accompanist attracted attention to the music; the bad one attracted attention to himself.

Discussing free accompaniment, Dr. Bairstow said we must beware of the obvious. There were lots of little touches that could be added to the vocal score with good effect—inversion of parts, extra parts, and so on. But inversion was so easy that it was apt to become irritating. For example, the conventional tenor part in a cadence, with the voice going down from the dominant through the seventh to the third of the tonic:

is best left alone. Inverted, especially with the tenor part given to a 4-ft. stop, an already commonplace progression becomes an inflection:

Our free treatment should be something more subtle than this. Finally, said the lecturer, 'Don't show off.' The organist who played to show off himself or his organ—the choir who sang to show off—in each case there was a Nemesis. Inevitably such performers ended in choosing the wrong kind of music, because they chose it not for its fitness but for the opportunities it gave them, and the whole moral and musical tone of the choir suffered. On the question of pace in large buildings, Dr. Bairstow said he was convinced from practical experience that it was fatal to take any piece of music at any other than the natural pace it seemed to demand. If you could not make it effective at that pace in your building choose something else. Rapid runs, as in Bach and Handel, sung slowly in a large church did not thus become clear. If anything, the confusion was worse than ever. He emphasised the importance of using various degrees of staccato when playing in large and resonant buildings.

A member of the audience remarking that he had heard of a case where the Swell pedal had been abolished on the ground that the organist couldn't keep his foot off it, Dr. Bairstow said that such a policy was like prohibition: because some people got drunk the rest of us were supposed to go without alcohol. There were organists who were Swell pedal drunkards, but that did not alter the fact that the Swell pedal rightly used was a valuable thing. Speaking of the players who cannot accompany a simple piece of music without putting down handsful and feetful of notes, he called them 'chordslingers,' and said their performances were like street noises and other disturbances—things which were bound to be heard, but which need not be listened to.

This stimulating address was followed by a capital discussion, Mr. Wyatt opening it cheerfully by telling us of a church in which the following inscription appeared over the organ: 'Hear Thou from Heaven Thy dwelling place, and when Thou hearest, forgive.'

Later in the day Mr. WYATT gave us a paper on some of the more elaborate forms of plainsong, beautiful examples being sung by Mrs. Wyatt.

Thursday.—The first paper was one by Mr. HYLTON STEWART on 'Modern Modal Services.' The revival of interest in the Modes (he said) was of great benefit to Church music. There was no doubt that a few modal progressions gave an ecclesiastical atmosphere in the simplest and most direct way. He hoped we had got past the time when this atmosphere was thought to be produced by a lavish use of diminished sevenths. In regard to modern services he found it difficult to see that we could progress much further along the lines indicated by such composers as Bairstow, Alcock, and Macpherson, and at the same time remain within the limits of what was practicable for a choir of from twelve to sixteen boys and six or eight men. He was glad to see such a composer as Charles Wood turning his attention to the modal movement, and producing the Polyphonic Service they had sung in the Chapel on Tuesday morning—a service with a distinction rare in music, so simple and unpretentious was it. Ley's Service on the same lines was also to be commended. He wished there were more services of this type. In places where Matins was sung before the Communion Service, organists would welcome settings worthy of a place in the Cathedral repertoire and yet so short as to make the whole morning services of a reasonable length. The list of services showing modal influence was large, e.g., Walmisley in D minor, Noble in B minor (especially the Gloria Patri of the evening Canticles), Ireland's Communion Service in C, and much of Stanford's work. All these, however, were for choir. Simple modal music for congregational use was so far scarce, though Mr. Martin Shaw had lately done good pioneer work with his Modal Mass, Parish Communion Service, and Folk Mass. Mr. C. E. Hoyland had just published through Messrs. Novello a Communion Service in modal style for unison singing—really a kind of modern plainsong.

Mr. GEOFFREY SHAW then took the floor with a talk on 'Proportion.' He began what proved to be a telling plea for a sense of values in Church music by telling us of a little incident he once witnessed at Victoria Station. A very large and bony lady hurrying along the platform knocked down a small, meek man. The latter got up and dusted himself, while the lady angrily asked, 'Why don't you look where you're standing?' 'Why don't we Church musicians look where we are standing?' asked Mr. Shaw. We never do. We go on doing the same things Sunday after Sunday whether we can give a reason for them or not. Our services are on a dead level simply because we do not realise the opportunities presented for climax and contrast. It was not so much that we did bad music as that we did good music in such a way as to rob it of its uplifting power. Suggesting that we needed more intervals of silence during our services, Mr. Shaw told us of the man who remarked to a Quaker that there was no religion without art. 'We have no art in our services,' said the Quaker. 'You have,' rejoined his friend, 'you have the rare and difficult art of silence.' Apropos of proportion, Mr. Shaw said that any artist avoided a long, low level of emotion. There must be rise and fall in intensity. The compilers of the Prayer Book did not overlook this point. Look at the order of Evensong, and see how the service began plainly and quietly, gradually rising to its climax at the Magnificat and then sinking again.

How many of us realised this curve in our music at Evensong? Take the very opening as an example of our want of proportion. The organist is playing an in-voluntary; the clock strikes, the organ stops, we hear garments being hastily donned behind a curtain, or through the half-open vestry door, and a good deal of loudish whispering, with admonitory 'sh-h-h!' A clerical voice intones something on the sacred note G, after which we hear a long-drawn Amen in four-part harmony. The choir then enters, while the organist resumes, probably something in this style:

Here we have already two examples of want of proportion: (1) the private devotions of the choir have been intoned in precisely the same way as important parts of the service will be intoned later, and (2) they have been obtruded on the congregation. And so on all through the service. The opening versicles and responses are introductory, and should be said in the speaking voice or sung to a simple inflection at the normal speaking pace, and preferably in unison and unaccompanied. Instead they are declaimed by the officiant and sung by the choir, with a great deal of circumstance, in four-part harmony, usually with organ. This constant use of four-part harmony and organ continues the whole way through the service, for big things and small, from the Magnificat down to the Aens after the prayers, with monotonous result. Mr. Shaw then showed how variety and contrast could be obtained by means so simple as to be within the reach of any choir or congregation. For example, special verses and refrains in the Psalms and hymns could be marked by special treatment, e.g., the alternations of choir and congregation, or solo voice answered by choir and congregation. The choice of hymns was important too. It was easy to choose three good hymns, and yet produce monotony by choosing three of the same type. They should be not only good but contrasted.

A very shrewd and practical lecture.

The third paper to-day was on 'Fauxbourdon for the Psalms,' by Captain FRANCIS BURGESS. He had no difficulty in proving from historical and other sources that the use of fauxbourdon in this way was fully justified. Perhaps his best answer to objectors was the quotation from Dr. Frere, in 'The Elements of Plainsong':

'In some kinds of plainsong—the simple parts, such as the Tones and hymns—there is a real place for vocal harmony, even though it is almost inevitable that the rhythm should suffer from it to some extent.'

As there will no doubt be developments in psalmodic fauxbourdon, it may be well to give Captain Burgess' summary of what appears to be desirable: (a) such fauxbourdons must be an embellishment of the chant, just as organ accompaniment is; (b) they must not lengthen the time taken in performance; (c) they must be constructed so simply that they can be sung from the pointing of the ordinary psalter without confusing the singers; (d) all the added parts must be capable of being sung with the same rhythmical freedom as the unison tone; (e) they must be capable of abbreviation to the same extent as the cantus firmus; (f) it is advisable to keep the plainsong in the tenor, because your tenors can then sing straight from the ordinary psalter without referring to the harmonized chant. This simplifies things, and helps to preserve the same rhythm throughout the Psalm.

A small choir then sang examples from the 'Fa-Burden Chantbook.' Though they were reading at sight they were able to show that this treatment of plainsong is very effective. We did not, however, feel that it should be employed for alternate verses, as Captain Burgess suggested. Surely a few special verses in each Psalm and, of course, the Gloria Patri, would be better. This corresponded with the plan adopted in hymn fauxbourdons—on an average, one verse in four or five.

Friday.—A light day, with only two lectures—Mr. HARVEY GRACE on 'The Accompaniment of Plainsong,' and Mr. GEOFFREY SHAW on 'Hymns.' The first cannot well be reported, because it consisted chiefly of answers to questions from the audience, with illustrations on the pianoforte.

Mr. SHAW dealt with an important point that is often overlooked. However much we may cherish our old hymn-tunes, he said, we must add to the common stock, if the art of hymn-tune-writing is not to be lost. The 'English Hymnal' was now generally accepted as a fine collection, but as time went on we were conscious of two defects. First, too few of the best of the 18th century tunes had dropped out of the repertory, and it was not representative of the work of living composers. Fine strong tunes were now being written in plenty, as a glance at the recently issued 'Public School Hymn Book' would show. The Church could not afford to ignore the efforts of contemporary composers, even in so (apparently) small a matter as the hymn-tune.

Like its predecessors, this Summer School has been a jolly affair on the social side. There has been the minimum of formality. All the lectures have been delivered to an audience sitting very much at its ease, and usually smoking. The after-supper discussions owed much of their success to the fact that they have been attended by the whole School, and that the proceedings never languished for want of speakers—very much the reverse, in fact. On the Thursday evening the place of the discussion was more than filled in an impromptu smoking concert of folk-songs in the Common Room, a comprehensive programme ranging from 'Widdicombe Fair' to Parry's 'Jerusalem.' Congregational singing? The choruses must have been heard by a good proportion of the population of our end of Bristol. A pleasant interlude was provided on Wednesday afternoon by a visit to St. Mary Redcliffe, at the invitation of the Vicar, who kindly gave us tea after showing us the magnificent church. Dr. Bairstow played some Bach to us.

The part of the clergy in musical services was forgotten, the Rev. Maurice Bell dealing with the subject in two very practical sessions.

The music sung during the week was inevitably on a simple side. A fine selection of good strong hymns, the Fauxbourdon Evening canticles of Tallis and Byrd, in addition to the music mentioned above, gave proof, if any were needed, that music need not be elaborate in order to be interesting and effective. On the Tuesday evening the canticles were sung to a MS. setting, 'Mr. Hunt, Short Service in Fower Parts.' Mr. Hunt was an Elizabethan of whom little is known. His service suggests a somewhat later date here and there, though at times it makes his 'four parts' grind and clash in the true Tudor and Elizabethan way. The service was well sung by a choir prepared and conducted by Mr. A. S. Warrell, from sin voice parts supplied by Mr. H. D. Statham, of St. Michael Tenbury. The organ accompaniments during the week were shared by Messrs. Martin and Geoffrey Shaw, Mr. W. A. Macduff, and Mr. Harvey Grace.

Much of the success of the School was due to the generous and ungrudging way in which the Principal of the College, Rev. J. R. Thomas, and his staff, looked after our comfort.

At the close the chairman announced that the committee hoped to hold the 1922 School at York—an excellent choice. In the meantime the executive will no doubt do its best to enlarge the field of operations. Speaking as a member (and with some knowledge of the mind of at least a few other members), I suggest that room be found for lecture-demonstrations on choir training and on organ accompaniment, both of modern music and plainsong (with illustrations provided by a choir and organ, not by a solo voice and pianoforte). Useful, too, would be a discussion of the relationships between incumbent, organist, choir, and congregation. The work of the School on the modern side may well be extended. A capable choir should be in hand, and all the illustrations and service music should be rehearsed with an attention to detail that was apparently impossible on this occasion. Finally, there is need for more small classes at which real instruction—even technical—can be given.

The Summer School is already a considerable factor; with courageous widening of its scope it may, in a few years, influence a hundred parsons and organists where it now influences one. There is no reason why it should not develop to such an extent that decentralisation will be necessary. Correspondents frequently write to the ecclesiastical and musical press suggesting all sorts of methods by which our Church music can be revitalised. Here is the remedy, surely: an annual Summer School in every Diocese.

DICTIONARY OF ORGANS AND ORGANISTS

The second edition of this work has recently been published (London: G. A. Mate & Son, Fleet Street, 25, 6d.). It is a good deal more than a professional directory, valuable as it is in that respect. Directories number our shelves when more than a year old, because a large proportion of organists, like other folk, are 'here to-day and gone to-morrow.' The publishers have been wise in seeing that a good half of this volume of four hundred and fifty pages is of permanent interest. It leads off with a long article—nearly seventy pages—on 'Records of British Organ Builders, 940-1660,' by the Rev. Andrew Freeman. Readers of the Musical Times are well aware of Mr. Freeman's attainments as a writer on the historical side of the organ. Here, with more ample space than is available in a magazine, he is able to spread himself on a subject that, so far as we know, has hitherto not been dealt with systematically. He gives all the available information concerning no fewer than a hundred and sixty-one worthies who made, repaired, or tuned organs in various parts of the country, from St. Dunstan, who gave (and probably helped to make) organs at Glastonbury, Abingdon, &c., down to Christianus Schmidt, one of Father Smith's nephews, who in 1643 built an organ at Norwich. There is abundance of quaint lore in these records, with their copious extracts from old account-books, registers, &c., and further interest is supplied by numerous illustrations. Eleven of these are reproduced from beautiful photographs taken by Mr. Freeman. We hope that in the next edition of the Dictionary Mr. Freeman will take up his parable where he dropped it here, and carry the record down to our own times, or as near as space will allow. There will be so much to deal with that possibly several years may elapse before the last instalment is published. What a fascinating book the whole will make!

Mr. Herbert Westerby's article, 'The Study of Church Music,' strikes us as well-intentioned rather than convincing. To-day when so many of our leading composers are discovering that the modal system, so far from being a rude effort at scale construction, was a subtle and varied scheme still full of possibilities, it is odd to find a writer seriously stating that 'Plainsong was the outcome of a primitive era, and one that tried to express itself musically under very primitive circumstances and before the sense of melody or tonality had developed. It is almost as akin to the art production of the 20th century as the drawing of the bushman in his prehistoric cave is to the artistic effort of to-day.' One wonders if Mr. Westerby has heard even a tiny part of the wealth of beautiful melody to be found among the great mass of ancient liturgical music recently made available through the researches at Solesmes and elsewhere. However, he admits that 'the germ was there,' indeed, he goes even farther later on, and handsomely says that 'some fine melodies have survived the test of time for the Psalms, Hymns, and Responses.' If Mr. Westerby will examine the Sequences, Introits, and numerous settings of the Communion Service, he will find even more beautiful melodies, and will see that so far from being the musical equivalent of 'the bushman's drawing in his prehistoric cave,' they comprise some of the most perfect vocal music extant.

Is Mr. Westerby right in saying that 'in Anglican churches it is a common custom to sing the Responses without organ'? Our impression is that the organ is far too frequently used for this part of the service. However, Mr. Westerby thinks the Responses should always be accompanied, lest the choir should form the habit of singing pitch. Would it not be better to see that it develops the habit of singing in tune? A choir that cannot sing the simple music of the Responses without flattening has not learnt the A B C of its job.

By the by, what is Mr. Westerby's authority for saying that an objection to the 'English Hymnal' is 'the enormous amount of Welsh secular folk-song which glares at one from nearly every page'? The words are put in quotation marks, but no source is given. Here is a pinch of cold fact, however, to show the absurdity of the statement. The 'English Hymnal' contains nearly eight hundred hymn tunes. Of this huge number only three are Welsh folk-songs; there are eleven traditional Welsh hymn tunes (e.g., 'Ebenezer,' 'Meirionydd,' &c.) and a sprinkling of more modern Welsh melodies by Prichard, Parry, &c. Actually, then, the 'enormous amount of Welsh secular folk-song' turns out to be three tunes—a total far too modest to 'glare' or even to appear at all 'on nearly every page.'

We have not space to deal with other debatable paragraphs in Mr. Westerby's article. He is evidently very much in earnest, and he is often right, but the value of his pronouncements is discounted by his obvious antagonism to such revivals as those of plainsong and descant, which he scorns as mediævalism, and calls 'a vain attempt to put back the clock,' being evidently unaware that both revivals are justifying themselves by marked progress. It would be interesting to know how he will greet the revival of our old English polyphonic music. Not enthusiastically, we fear, for he considers that 'lack of emotional and interpretative effect was the weak point of the a cappella school, and the development of modern harmony proved its decay. Other factors there were too.' Exactly, and some of these 'other factors' were the ones that mattered.

A valuable feature of Mr. Westerby's article is the bibliography, or, rather, the bibliographies, for there are seven, placed at the close of the article-section to which they refer. We recommend the article to our readers' careful attention. It is all the better for being downright and provocative, but it is somewhat the worse for some apparent haste both in preparation and in correction of the proofs.

We have been so intrigued by the first two articles that we have space left for no more than bare mention of their companions. The Rev. John Henry Burn contributes a 'Bibliography of the Organ,' a valuable list of seven hundred and fifty-six books. Who would have thought that the organ had such a literature?

Mr. John Brook writes on 'Organists' Associations,' and Dr. Bedart, of Lille University, deals with 'A Few Points of the Organ Building of the Future,' a paper which we hope to discuss later.

A hundred and fifty pages are filled with brief particulars of organs in London, the provinces, and abroad—a list of great value to players who, when travelling, desire to look up interesting organs—and what organist doesn't?

'The Organist's Who's Who' concludes the volume. We have discovered a few instances in which this section already shows signs of being out of date, as is inevitable. Still, it is of great personal interest, owing to the biographical and other details.

We have tried to show in the above comments, however, that the 'Dictionary of Organs and Organists' is only partially described by its title. It is really a valuable contribution to the literature of the instrument, and we wish it all the success it so richly deserves.

BACH RECITALS IN THE CITY

Dr. Harold Darke announces a series of six Bach recitals at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on Thursdays, at 6 p.m., from October 6 to November 10. These recitals will be in addition to the usual mid-day recitals on Mondays. The programmes will include a good deal of Bach's music that is not familiar to recital audiences. Practically all the finest of the Chorale Preludes will be played. Four of the delightful Trio-Sonatas will also be included. The complete book of programmes may be obtained at the Church, price 6d., or by post from Dr. Darke, at 22, Greville Road, N.W. 6, for 7d.

The post of organist at Peterborough Cathedral has not yet been filled, so far as we are able to ascertain. Perhaps the conditions are such that there is no eager rush. We learn (the italics are ours) that 'the stipend is £80 a year, to which the Dean and Chapter during their pleasure will add £200 a year. There is no house.' Six weeks holiday will be allowed 'at times approved by the Dean and Chapter, during which, and at other times when for reasons satisfactory to them he is unable to be present, he must provide at his own cost a sufficient Deputy to whose employment they have given their consent.' The new organist must give an undertaking to remain at the post for at least two years 'if the Dean and Chapter wish him so to remain.' These conditions seem to us to leave the organist far too dependent upon the goodwill of the Dean and Chapter. So long as the goodwill is there he may find the post a happy one. But if the supply runs short . . .

Mr. Bertram Hollins has just commenced a series of monthly recitals at Beckenham Congregational Church on Wednesdays, at 8 p.m. An excellent list of works is promised. The next three recitals will be on October 19, November 16, and December 14.

From a provincial paper:

'Mr. ——— then gave a fine rendering of the Dead March from Mendelssohn's "Saul," rising from those agonising opening passages, through soft, tender music, lifting upwards, then, rending the curtain, as it were, bursting all bonds, and reaching finally a note of triumph, exultation.'

From Le Canada Musical:

'Le 2e prix d'Orgue au Conservatoire de Lyon, a été adjugé à M. Joz. Violoncelle. Avec un pareil nom, on devrait chercher à émuler Pablo Casals!'

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. F. B. Porkess, Minehead Parish Church (two recitals)—Sonata in G sharp minor, Rheinberger; Postlude, Stanford; Prelude on a Welsh tune, Vaughan Williams; Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Three Chorale Preludes, Parry; Carillon, Sowerbutts; Sonata No. 1, first two movements, Mendelssohn. (String Trios by the Misses Vernon and Mr. Porkess: Adagio Cantabile, Beethoven; Serenade, Widor.)

Mr. Stuart Sparrow, St. Buans, Bodveau—Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Sonata No. 4, Guilmant; Triumphant March, Lemmens. St. Peter's, Pwllheli—March on a Theme of Handel; Chorale Prelude, Georg Böhm; Offertoire in D minor, Batiste. (Choral items by the Pwllheli Glee Choir.)

Mr. F. J. Livesey, St. Bees Priory Church—Chorale No. 2, Franck; Sonata in D minor, Best; Festive March, Smart; Fugue in C minor, Bach.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Marche Pontificale, Lemmens; Pastorale (Symphony No. 2), Widor; Three Sea Pieces, MacDowell; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. John Pullein, Calne Parish Church—Concerto in A, Handel; Sarabande and Fantasia on 'The Old rooth,' Blow; Andantino, Franck; Evening Song, Baird; Finale, Bossi.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral (three recitals)—Chorale-Improvisation on 'In dulci Jubilo,' Karg Elert; Valse Triste, Sibelius; Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; 'The Harmonious Blacksmith,' Handel; Sonata (MS.), W. Griffith; Carneval Overture, Dvorák; 'From Hebride Seas,' Nesbitt; Overture, '1812'; Festival Suite, Lemare; Two Sarabandes, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Andante in G, S. S. Wesley.

Mr. S. Phillips Thornley, West U.F. Church, Forfar (two recitals)—Imperial March, Elgar; Prière, Guilmant; Spring Song, Hollins; Overture, 'Oberon'; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Scherzo, Hoffmann.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, St. Stephen's, Bristol—Festa March, Colborn; Concert Intermezzo, Hailing; Grand Chœur, Henniker.

Mr. F. E. Wilson, St. John's, Eastbourne—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Concert Rondo in B flat, Hollins; Finale in E flat, Guilmant.

Miss Charlotte Gorst, Christ Church, Bala—Solemn Melody Walford Davies; Barcarolle, Sterndale Bennett; Grand Chœur, Hollins. Vocal Solos by Miss Dilys Jones ('Prepare thee, O Zion,' Bach; 'But the Lord is mindful of His own') and Mr. Tudor Owen ('Friend,' Novello Davies; 'Save me, O God,' Randegger).

Mr. H. H. Fowler, St. Peter's, Budleigh Salterton—Preludes on 'Martyrdom' and 'Eventide,' Parry; Andante con Moto, Frank Bridge; Gothic Suite Boëllmann. (Unaccompanied anthems by Sterndale Bennett and Stainer. Collection for local Cottage Hospital, £19 12s.)

APPOINTMENT

Mr. J. Goodwin, organist and choirmaster, Aldershot Parish Church.

Letters to the Editor

EARLY ENGLISH CHAMBER MUSIC

SIR,—In reading the very interesting article on 'Early English Chamber Music' which appeared in the September issue, I was considerably surprised at the writer's remark on Mr. Moffat's edition of old English Violin Sonatas. Of course, a deep debt of gratitude is owed to Mr. Moffat for rescuing so much good music from oblivion, but surely the results are in every way 'hyphenated' works, and contain a good deal which is not 18th century music. I was familiar with the fine D minor Sonata of Joseph Gibb before I met with Mr. Moffat's edition, and it was somewhat of a shock to find the extreme freedom with which he had treated the composer's figured bass. In one place he had not only altered a chord of the diminished seventh to a chord of the sixth, but altered the violin part to make it fit. The same tendency to use completely different harmonies from those indicated by the composer is frequently noticeable, and in the Sonata by Richard Jones in the 'Meisterschule' edition a slow movement has been inserted from a different sonata without any acknowledgment of the fact.

A number of movements from these old English sonatas appeared some time ago, published by Messrs. Robert Cocks, and edited by the late Otto Peiniger, while other appeared in the latter's 'Violin Method.' These were excellent examples of the way in which an interesting accompaniment may be produced without departing from strict faithfulness to the original. Unfortunately this edition has been allowed to go out of print.—Yours, &c.,

Harrow-on-the-Hill.

HUGH GARDNER.

September 5, 1921.

CHURCH MUSIC.

SIR,—In answer to your correspondent in the September number of the Musical Times, may I venture quite briefly to suggest a means by which Church music may be improved?

Undoubtedly the music must be sung in such a way that the congregation can take their part, which under existing conditions is impossible, especially in the psalms and canticles.

The root of the trouble is that they lack support. Consider the situation: The average church choir consists approximately of eighteen boys and twelve men, placed in the chancel well removed from the general congregation; moreover in the psalms the verses are usually sung antiphonally. How is it to be expected that a congregation of from (say) six hundred to eight hundred can be supported by een voices, however perfectly they may render the service? e congregation merely hear the singing.

Now, I do not suggest that the chancel choir be abolished, that an additional choir called the 'congregational choir' be formed and placed in the body of the church, and that psalms and canticles be sung in alternate verses as follows: Verse 1, chancel choir alone (in harmony); Verse 2, by general congregation supported by congregational choir (in unison) and so on. In the hymns the two choirs should sing together. By this means the general congregation would be 'enveloped in sound' from the two files of trained singers.

As regards the type of music to be sung, the only vital point is that of pitch, the music being such as would be suitable both in harmony and unison.

I venture to think that by this means church authorities would at least make it possible for every worshipper to join in our correspondent's suggestion of an organists' convention excellent.—Yours, &c.,

LIONEL WIGGINS

(Organist and choirmaster of Holy Trinity Church, Leamington Spa).

SIR,—I should like to reply to the letter signed 'eregrine,' for it voices a just grievance, and one about which I have frequently complained. The principal reasons why, in my opinion, Church music is so poor are:

- (1.) Very few organists get any training in accompanying a service. Like the clergy, they get their experience at our expense.
- (2.) They seldom or never hear anyone but themselves, and if they did, they would probably consider their own way superior to any other. The late Charles Lunn used to say: 'Before any improvement can be made, the peacock's tail must be clipped.'
- (3.) It is the exception, and not the rule, to find organists who have a strong sense of time and rhythm, and unless hymns are played in strict time, no congregation can follow with certainty. I was taught to count two beats between the verses of a hymn in common time, and three in a 3/4-timed hymn, and it has always been successful.
- (4.) Why cannot the congregation be consulted as to the choice of hymns to be sung? This can be done—and has in some churches been done successfully—by inviting the congregation to write the numbers of their favourite hymns on slips of paper, and to place them in a box for that purpose in the porch.

These, of course, are only a few suggestions out of hundreds.—Yours, &c.,

A. M. GIFFORD.

Hunstanton.

MODERN MUSIC

SIR,—I don't think Mr. à Becket Williams is playing quite fair. He quotes one sentence of mine ('All great composers are to some extent innovators'), and then misrepresents with heavy irony: 'Every goose is a swan, and every experiment a work of genius.' Now your correspondent knows very well that I implied nothing of the sort; on the contrary, I was careful to admit that there are plenty of failures in modern music, just as there were in every other musical epoch. My quarrel with Mr. Williams is at he lumps all the modern swans in with the geese.

Mr. Williams is himself a composer, I believe. It must be great fun to be composer and critic, or (to use his own metaphor) to be the reckless motorist driving headlong downhill as well as the 'expert adviser' trying to apply the brakes.

But, after all, this question of the value of modern music must obviously remain a matter of opinion; and I do hope, rather, that you will cut short this correspondence before it generates into an unseemly wrangle after the manner of the Stravinsky controversy.—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT ELKIN.

26, Lansdowne Road, W.

September 4, 1921.

[Correspondence cut short.—ED., M.T.]

AUTHOR AND REVIEWER

SIR,—'Feste,' in his review of my 'Sir Edward Elgar,' suggests that the inclusion of publishers' names would have improved its value. If he had taken the trouble to look, he would have found a list of the publishers of Elgar's music near the end of the book in question. I suppose the fact that the proprietors of the Musical Times are also the biggest publishers of Elgar's music makes the reason for the hasty criticism apparent. As for the criticism in general, which is rather wild and venomous, it is a good half-column free advertisement, for the best way to interest the public in a play or book is to attack it in the Press! A reader of the Musical Times writes to me asking if 'Feste' has any grudge against me, and whether I think he really read the book through! As I do not know who 'Feste' is, I cannot answer the first part, and as regards the second part I am one of those who doubt with Cyril Scott as to whether critics ever are broad-minded. Praise from them brings mild contempt and criticism brings mild amusement.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN F. PORTE.

56, Mayall Road, Herne Hill, S.E.24.

September 5, 1921.

['Feste' writes: I admit that Mr. Porte gives the names of the publishers of Elgar's music. My complaint is (1) that the information is not given in the obvious and most useful place, i.e., under the title of each work, and (2) that it is not complete. The most difficult works to trace are the early ones, and here Mr. Porte does nothing for us. He merely tells us that such and such a firm issue 'a number of songs without opus number,' or 'a few early works,' or 'one or two odd pieces,' or 'lighter pieces (not all),' or 'other songs.' Consequently a reader in search of one of the smaller works may try half-a-dozen publishers before being successful.

As for my 'wild and venomous' review, if it gives Mr. Porte's book a good, free advertisement, and causes him 'mild amusement,' he ought to be pleased. But he doesn't seem to be, somehow. I need hardly say that I don't know him personally, and that I wrote without the least animus. My job was to give my opinion of the book. I thought it was a very bad book, and said so, giving reasons for my opinion. I could give lots of additional reasons if I had space. As I haven't, I refer Mr. Porte to the September Musical Student, where he will find a whole pageful of them, set forth by a reviewer who refuses to take the book otherwise than as a joke.]

SIR,—I think 'Feste's' criticism of Mr. J. F. Porte's 'Sir Edward Elgar' is quite unfair. I find the book most interesting and useful to members of the musical reading public. 'Feste' quotes a mere printer's error, and also allows religious prejudice to blur his judgment on Mr. Porte's account of 'Gerontius'—which is perhaps occasionally prejudiced on the opposite side. Furthermore, I believe 'Feste' is no other than Mr. Ernest Newman, in which case the criticism was totally unfair, for Mr. Newman naturally regards his little book on Elgar as the best, and also he does not like Mr. Porte's criticism of it. It is most amusing when these literary men fly at each other's throats, although both 'Feste' and Mr. Porte are kindred satirical (sic) spirits!—Yours, &c., (Miss) A. SEYMOUR.

2, Milton Road, S.E.

September 10, 1921.

HE IS NOT UNKNOWN

SIR,—In a recent review which appeared in the Musical Times, the name of F. Bennicke Hart was mentioned as that of a composer hitherto unknown. I think it only fair to Mr. Hart to point out that as Fritz Hart he is well known to a large circle of friends and former colleagues in this country. His works, although little known here, are well-known and highly appreciated in Australia, where he has for some years past been resident as Director of the East Melbourne Conservatorium of Music.—Yours, &c.,

40, Inverness Terrace, W. 2.

B. J. DALE.

August 23, 1921.

'A CORELLI FORGERY'

SIR,—The work published at Antwerp in 1692 as Corelli's Opera Quarta, which Mr. F. T. Arnold showed in his paper at the Musical Association last April (summarized in last month's Musical Times) to have had nothing to do with Corelli, presents a very interesting bibliographical puzzle. The earliest editions known of Corelli's five works are, according to Eitner, as follows: Op. 1, Rome, 1683; Op. 2, Rome, 1685; Op. 3, Modena, 1689; Op. 4, Bologna, 1694; and Op. 5, Rome, 1700. Aertssens, the Antwerp publisher, reissued Op. 1 in 1688 and Op. 2 in 1689, and in 1692 published as Op. 4 'Suonate da Camera, a tre . . . Da Arcangelo Corelli . . . Prima Parte, Nuovamente Ristampata.' The work is in separate part-books, each of which contains an address to the 'Benigno Lettore,' signed 'A. Corelli' (inter alia), promising the publication of a second part of 'questa mia Opera Quarta.' Mr. Arnold has shown that this Antwerp publication has nothing to do with Corelli, whose genuine Op. 4 was first published two years later, nor is it the Sonate da Chiesa, Op. 3, first published in 1689. Mr. Arnold asks: 'Who wrote the Antwerp Sonatas?' Though unfortunately, at present, it is impossible to give exact proof, I think there can be no doubt that they are the composition of G. B. Vitali (1644?-1692). Each sonata consists of a string of short dance-tunes, the names of some of which are curious and uncommon. 'Neando' and 'Borea' occur in some, as well as Gavottes, Sarabands, Minuets, Jigs, &c., and all these are found in Vitali's 'Balletti' Op. 3 (1667), Op. 4 (1668), Op. 11 (1684), Op. 12 (1685), and probably in others of his works, which I have not seen. The largest collection of Vitali's music is that in the Estensian Library at Modena, and this has been kindly examined for me by Prof. Fava, to whom I sent the themes of the spurious Corelli sonatas. Prof. Fava has looked at all Vitali's printed works, from Op. 1 to Op. 14 (the last he published in 1692), with the exception of Op. 2 and of Op. 10, but has not identified any of them with the Antwerp Corelli. Vitali's Op. 2 is in the Royal College of Music, and has been examined unsuccessfully; but Op. 10 seems to have completely disappeared, and even its name is unknown, though it must have been published about 1683 or 1684, probably at Modena. Whether this is the original of the Antwerp Sonatas, or whether they are an unpublished work of Vitali's, passed off after his death as the composition of Corelli, it is unfortunately impossible to decide. But a comparison of the spurious sonatas with the accessible works of Vitali cannot, I think, fail to convince a musician that they are the composition of the Modenese master. My own theory is that Aertssens employed someone in Italy to send him works which he pirated at Antwerp, and that the 1692 sonatas were thus palmed off on him as by Corelli. The mistake or fraud must evidently have been discovered, for an edition of the genuine Op. 4 is recorded by Goovaerts as having been published by Aertssens at Antwerp in 1695.—Yours, &c.,

W. BARCLAY SQUIRE.

14, Albert Place, W. 8.

'THE IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT PLACING OF THE VOICE': AN INVITATION

SIR,—We shall be very interested to know who Mr. A. Keay is, who, like a bolt from the blue arrives among us, after, as he states, 'an absence abroad of quite thirty years.' Does he expect to be taken seriously, on the strength (or the weakness) of the two letters he has written to the Musical Times? Take, for instance, the third paragraph in the September edition—what is it all about? And what is this 'classical method' of voice production which is 'capable of surmounting any difficulties of language, &c.'? Does the reading of paragraph five bring us any fresh knowledge? Paragraph six only bears out what we are showing the public. Paragraph seven—Oh! No, Mr. Keay! it's naughty of you. How can one be expected to make you understand? Mr. Keay states: 'Mr. Tree ignores control of breath . . .—come and listen to one of his lectures, and read his little book 'How to acquire ease, &c.' The letter says, 'probably Mr. Tree knows Mr. Landon Ronald,' of whom a friend has spoken so highly to Mr. Keay. The writer has complete confidence in the knowledge and judgment of Mr. Ronald on vocal matters. He was invited by Mr. Ronald to join the Guildhall School of Music—a professor some year or so ago, but was unable to accept the compliment.

Mr. Tree much regrets that he cannot do as Mr. Keay suggests as to teaching 'a rejected candidate.' He is a busy man. Paragraph nine: Surely there should be little difficulty in training such a paragon—how dare a school reject such!

In June last Mr. Keay did not know who the writer was and he now asks 'That Mr. Tree prove that he has decided claim to be reckoned with seriously.' Evidently his identity is still unknown, so let it be stated that 'he is a young gentleman what has been singing' to the British public for the past thirty years, and on the strength of that he perhaps, some remote claim 'to be taken seriously.' A knowledge he has gained by the short experience he is now giving to the public. No! Mr. Keay, we have been listening to 'camouflage' talk for too many years, hence the chaos of the 'physical' voice to-day, and the very small number who can sing, with ease, at the age of sixty years.

Now let us have Mr. Keay's knowledge of the matter and allow the writer to assure him that we shall be honest and thankful for any good which may accrue. If Mr. Keay's voice is as he states, 'as fresh now as it was at the end of the 'eighties' ('in the most strict conformity to the classical method,' as he puts it), I can assure him that he will be conferring a tremendous benefit on the vocal world if, instead of writing about it, he will give a vocal lecture, or lecture and personally illustrate, by a dozen or more songs, the 'ease' which he professes.

Mr. Tree will, engagements permitting, be a keen interested and receptive listener, eager to grasp any fresh knowledge on vocal matters. The vocal world will certainly eagerly await the date of Mr. Keay's first vocal lecture.—Yours, &c.,

CHARLES TREE.

14, Courtfield Gardens,
Kensington, S.W. 5.THE UNIMPORTANCE OF INCORRECT
PLACING OF THE VOICE

SIR,—I make no apology for the above title. It does not matter a demisemiquaver to me whether the voice is placed under the left arm-pit or over the right shoulder-blade. My contention is that it is the placing of the individual, not the voice, that matters.

On the subject of voice-production I am an ignoramus. The nomenclature and functions of the tit-bits of the throat—so beloved of some teachers of singing—are almost unknown to me. The functions of the vocal cords may be to pull down the soft palate when it is misbehaving or to trip-up the epiglottis when it has got an unfair hold on the neck of the thorax, causing the latter to indulge in the most incorrect form of nasal resonance. As I say these may be the functions of the vocal cords. Possibly I am wrong. Most likely I am. But I am not wrong when I state that it is the placing of the individual that matters.

Have you never felt this during a concert? Of course you have. Taking it for granted, you may have a faint idea of what it means to a sensitive soul to have that feeling increased a thousand-fold in the early hours of the morning by a feline monster—I swear she is a contralto—who utters disregards the correct placing of the voice, for she always places it directly under my bedroom window. That is why I know it is incorrect.

Quite apart from the voice, however, I have taken an intense dislike to the lady herself. I want her placed. I care not where she is placed, but placed she must be. It is my life or hers.

I cannot trust myself to decide on her destination for naturally, I am prejudiced; so I appeal to Sir Alexander Mackenzie and Sir Hugh Allen to help me in my distress and place the lady in an appropriate temperature. I have every faith in their discretion.

Your correspondent, Mr. A. Keay, stipulates that his prospective pupil shall (1) be seriously and enthusiastically devoted to singing; (2) have perfect intonation; and (3) be over eighteen years of age.

My songster complies with the first condition only. If I could not have the good fortune to obtain the assistance of Mr. Alexander and Sir Hugh, I challenge Mr. Keay and Mr. Tree to do their worst with my nocturnal contralto—it they must devote their attention to the placing of the dividual, not the voice. As Mr. Keay did not propose giving the permission of his prospective pupil, I of course will follow his example. Neither of us could afford to risk refusal.—Yours, &c.,

CODA.

Crown Office Row,
Temple, E.C. 4.

THE GRAMOPHONE—PRESENT AND FUTURE

SIR,—I fear your correspondent has attached an erroneous conclusion to my article on the above subject. Two sentences which he combines had absolutely no bearing on one article!

One is obliged to use guarded terms when alluding to a commercial secret, but my words were carefully chosen when I hinted that the wonderful results given by the new machine were dependent mainly upon the 'acoustic properties of the cabinet.' Here there was no suggestion at the cabinet merely housed an enormous horn, as your correspondent seems to imagine!

I agree with him, and admit that the machine with the large horn which he describes must be a great improvement on the average 'table' or 'cabinet' model; but the instrument in question is something more than that—as several independent critics have since generously admitted. I understand that an entirely new principle of 'sound amplifying chambers' is substituted for the familiar open horn, and to this is due the wonderfully distinct, realistic, and faithful reproductions obtainable from ordinary gramophone records.—Yours, &c.,

ULRIC DAUBENY.

THE GRAMOPHONE AS AN AID IN TEACHING ORCHESTRATION

SIR,—May I add a few words to Mr. J. H. Blair's suggestive letter in your September issue, concerning the gramophone as an aid in teaching orchestration?

Your correspondent expresses surprise that the gramophone has not, up to the present, been used by teachers. I think, however, that many teachers nowadays are fully alive to the value of this instrument in teaching orchestration, though, perhaps, its use is not as general as could be desired. I have been constantly using a H.M.V. machine for the last two-and-a-half years for my theoretical courses, and have found it of the utmost benefit not only to orchestration pupils, but in other directions as well. If your correspondent is not aware of the existence of the fine harpsichord records of Mrs. Woodhouse, and the recently-issued records of early English madrigals (Weelkes, Wilbye, Byrd, &c.), I could draw his attention to these. They are invaluable for illustrations in studying history; not many average students have ever heard the works of Bach, Purcell, Scarlatti, &c., played on the instruments for which they were written. Or is the performance of our own fine choral music of the original period of frequent occurrence in many provincial and country towns.

I should like to add my testimony to the worth of the orchestral instruments' records to which you refer in your note to Mr. Blair's letter. The reproductions are altogether admirable, and when used in conjunction with carefully selected records of orchestral works, are just the thing teachers have been longing for for a long time.

Finally, the gramophone is a real boon to the busy musician as an aid to learning new scores. A work like Grieg's 'Poem of Ecstasy' is learnt much more expeditiously with the score in front of one and the gramophone giving an actual rendering, than it would be without.

Yours, &amp;c.,

A. F. MILNER.

3, Roseworth Crescent,
Gosforth, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

September 6, 1921.

GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

SIR,—In view of your recent articles on gramophone music, I venture to suggest two matters, in which your influence might be usefully exerted.

(1) It is becoming generally realised that the gramophone is a musical and educational instrument of value; to satisfy the new public thus being formed, a large selection of orchestral and chamber music is now issued. Unfortunately, these records to a very great extent only present 'potted' versions of the works concerned. To give two or three instances out of many hundreds, I have a single-sided record of the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture, which includes the exposition only, and that incomplete. Even the double-sided record by the London String Quartet of the first movement of Mozart's G minor Quintet omits the second subject in the recapitulation, so destroying the balance of the movement. The Aeolian Vocalion Company has recently recorded the Elgar String Quartet, which fares far worse, as only one side of a 12-in. record is given to each of the three movements.

Sooner or later the makers are bound to give us an instrument capable of taking a much larger record—16-in. or even 20-in.; but meanwhile it is certain that those who wish for this class of music would infinitely prefer to change the records, if necessary, more than once, in the course of a movement, rather than listen to such inartistic mutilations.

(2) You referred in your article last month to the comparative rarity of the records of good songs. This is the more remarkable, as such songs are most frequently of the right length, and vocal records are on the whole the most satisfactory as reproductions.

The catalogues are crammed with operatic extracts and ballads, and it needs time and patience to find in them even a few examples of folk-song, of the great classical song-writers, or such modern composers as Debussy, Ravel, Parry, or Stanford.

The Aeolian Company has recently issued three albums of Russian songs: it is time that the same was done, for example, with a series of English songs sung by John Coates, or of modern song literature sung by, say, Anne Thursfield. There are many other leading singers who might be invited to reproduce selections (not as sometimes happens only the weakest items) from their repertoires.—Yours, &c.,

The Mount House,
Brasted, Kent.

N. SCHUSTER.

September 14, 1921.

A RARE INSTRUMENT

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. Walter Haskell, will find an account of the nail violin in Grove's Dictionary, second edition. It is also described, with a woodcut, in Victor Mahillon's remarkable 'Catalogue Descriptif et Analytique du Musée Instrumental du Conservatoire Royal de Musique de Bruxelles,' 1893. The Brussels example has sympathetic strings, and a compass of four octaves with the chromatic intervals. It belonged to Fétis. In Chouquet's catalogue of the Museum of the National Conservatoire of Paris (1884), three examples occur under the name 'Violon de fer.' One has three octaves, and one has sympathetic strings. Chouquet says little about the instrument but that it 'passe pour avoir été inventé vers le milieu du 18 siècle par Johann Wilde.' Grove and Mahillon give fuller accounts, but both refer to Carl Engel of the Kensington Museum as their authority. As to the value in money, I doubt if it is large.—Yours, &c.,

C. F. ABDEY WILLIAMS.

A WARNING TO LONDON ORGANISTS

SIR,—Will you kindly permit me, through your columns, to warn my fellow organists in the Metropolitan area against a music thief who may be visiting a number of churches? Last week a quantity of music, which would cost £4 or £5 to replace, was stolen from St. George's, Bloomsbury, and I have since traced a small quantity of it to a second-hand music shop in Charing Cross Road.—Yours, &c.,

F. G. DENT.

9, Woodfield Avenue,
Ealing, W. 5.

August 29, 1921.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

J. B. SHAW, the founder and only conductor of the London Scottish Choir. He brought the Choir into being in 1888. It first became known by its association with the St. Andrew's Night Concerts at the old St. James's Hall, where it shared the platform with such artists as Edward Lloyd, Santley, Patey, and Antoinette Sterling. Mr. Shaw brought great gifts to his work—wide culture, high ideals, unflinching enthusiasm, and exceptional ability—and the loss to the Choir can scarcely be estimated.

JAMES MATTHEWS, at Mount Ararat Road, Richmond, on August 24, at the age of eighty-eight. He was choir-master at St. Mary's, Stoke Newington, for nearly fifty years, a member of the Henry Leslie Choir, and of the Sacred Harmonic Society. He sang in many services of historic interest, such as Queen Victoria's Jubilee Service at Westminster Abbey, the Coronations of King Edward and King George, the Purcell, Wesley, and Gibbons Festivals, &c. His genial personality endeared him to a host of friends.

CYRIL F. MUSGROVE, who was drowned while bathing at Keewatin, Winnipeg, on August 13. He was thirty-four years of age. A native of Yorkshire, he acted for some years as deputy-organist at York Minster, afterwards becoming organist at St. Martin's, Scarborough. He was appointed organist of Holy Trinity, Winnipeg, in 1920, taking up at the same time the conductorship of the male-voice choir. He was also conductor of the Orpheus Club.

'LA CHAUVE-SOURIS'

No need to describe this remarkable Bat, which flitted into London a month ago and set tongues and pens wagging furiously. From the moment M. Balieff first opened his mouth at the London Pavilion, on September 2, he became one of London's star turns, and he immediately turned the audience's head with him. To them, nothing in the entertainment could be anything but first-rate. The greater part was—emphatically—but there were times when a mere musical critic, like the writer, was troubled in his mind. Some of the singing was distinctly crude, although given forth with the air of serving up a finished product, and much of the seriously-delivered music was sheer emptiness. The 'Black Hussars' was a case in point. It was distressing to find that in an entertainment that bore the impress of acute intelligence in all other matters, music was treated in so off-hand a manner. Even the 'Wooden soldiers,' the 'Sudden death of a horse,' the comic glee singers, Katinka, and the unique M. Balieff himself, could not quite reconcile the sensitive musician to these endurances.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of October, 1861:

The author, in conclusion, cannot but regret that the preference of English organists for the old method of tuning [unequal temperament] is (as he is informed) hitherto so strong and determined, as to have resisted and repelled the attempts made to introduce the equal temperament into our Cathedrals and Churches. He has for many years uniformly recommended that this system should have a fair trial, upon the principle that as all tempered fifths and thirds offend the ear, those systems which contain such as are most tempered and most discordant cannot be preferable; especially in an age when the keys which have four sharps and three flats can no longer be excluded from general use. . . . He continues to press these opinions, not merely because they are his own, but because, in so doing, he is contending for the far higher authority of the judgment and practice of one whom, he trusts, his opponents must venerate and admire—the greatest of all composers for this sacred instrument—SEBASTIAN BACH.

[Dr. Crotch, in an article on 'Tuning and Temperament.']

THE LONDON CONCERT SEASON

THE ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

The concerts of this Society promise to be of extreme interest. The new works to be given are as follows:

- |   |     |                  |
|---|-----|------------------|
| Concerto in D minor for viola               | ... | Arnold Bax       |
| Mr. Lionel Tertis.                          |     |                  |
| 'Juventus'                                  | ... | De Sabato        |
| Ballet Music from Opera, 'The Perfect Fool' | ... | Holst            |
| Concerto Fantasia for pianoforte            | ... | Bainton          |
| Miss Winifred Christie.                     |     |                  |
| Pastoral Symphony                           | ... | Vaughan Williams |
| Requiem, for soli, chorus, and orchestra    | ... | Delius           |
| The Philharmonic Choir.                     |     |                  |

The familiar works include the 'Enigma' Variations, 'Petrouchka,' Holbrooke's 'Les Hommages,' the Choral Symphony, and Concertos to be played by M.M. Cortôt, Casals, and Thibaud. An item of unique character is a Bach Fugue transcribed by Sir Edward Elgar. Mr. Albert Coates conducts on November 3 and 17, December 1, and at the choral concert on March 23; Mr. Adrian C. Boult on January 26; Mr. Landon Ronald on February 23.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Ten symphony concerts are announced by the Orchestra for the following Mondays: October 24, November 7, 21, and 28, December 5, January 2, February 13, March 20, April 24, and May 8. Mr. Walter Damrosch conducts the sixth and seventh concerts, the remainder being in the hands of Mr. Albert Coates.

Works to be heard for the first time are 'The song of the night' by Schyamaunovsky, a Pianoforte Concerto by d'Erlanger, an Overture, 'Bronwen,' by Holbrooke, 'Jewish Poems' by Block, a symphonic poem, 'Orphée' by Roger-Ducasse, and a Pianoforte Concerto by Prokofiev (with the composer as pianist). Other works include Elgar Violin Concerto (to be played by Mr. Albert Sammons) and 'Falstaff,' 'The Planets,' 'Ein Heldenleben,' Vaughan Williams' 'Norfolk Rhapsody,' César Franck's Symphony, Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' Brahms' 'Requiem,' a 'Parsifal' excerpt, and Beethoven's Mass in D—the last three with the Philharmonic Choir.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The British works to be given in the course of these twelve concerts are Holst's 'Planets' (four movements—Mars, Mercury, Saturn, and Jupiter), instrumental excerpt from Dr. Ethel Smyth's 'The Boatswain's Mate,' Bantock's 'The Pierrot of the Minute,' Vaughan Williams' Overture 'The Wasps,' and the Prelude to 'The Dream of Gerontius.' The concerts take place under Sir Henry Wood's direction on Saturday afternoons from October 8 to April 20. The soloists make a distinguished list.

The Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society has an excellent programme for performance under Mr. Joseph Ivimey's direction. It includes (in three concerts) Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture, Howard Carr's 'Jolly Roger' Suite, Holst's 'Shropshire Rhapsody,' Landon Ronald's 'Garden of Allah,' Symphonies by Beethoven (No. 5) and Tchaikovsky (No. 6), and a 'Brandenburg' Concerto.

The London Chamber Concert Society offers five concerts during the autumn, the artists being the Chamber Music Players, the Catterall Quartet (twice), the Allied Quartet and Mr. Harold Samuel (in a Bach recital). The programmes include the following names: Chausson, Pizetti, Bax, Novacek, Howells, d'Indy, Ravel, and Aubert, the last being represented by a new pianoforte work and song-cycle. The composer will make his first appearance in England as pianist. These concerts are well worth supporting, for they show the best tendencies in modern music as well as certain respectable tendencies from the past (vide Harold Samuel supra).

CHORAL SOCIETY PROGRAMMES

LONDON AND DISTRICT

The Royal Choral Society has included a miscellaneous concert in its arrangements for the coming season. This takes place on March 4, and the programme is as follows:

A song of Destiny' ... ..	Brahms
Hymn of Jesus' ... ..	Gustav Holst
Concerto for organ and orchestra ... ..	Handel
The Masque in 'Dioclesian' ... ..	Purcell
The Wasps, 'Orchestral Suite' ... ..	Vaughan Williams
The forging of the anchor' ... ..	Bridge

For the rest the season follows old plans. The works to be performed are 'Elijah' (October 29), 'The Music-Makers' (November 1), 'The Golden Legend' (November 26), 'Carols' (December 17), 'The Messiah' (January 7), 'Hiawatha' (February 4), 'The Dream of Gerontius' (April 1), and 'The Messiah' (April 14). Sir Frederick Bridge conducts. The Philharmonic Choir, whose hon. conductor is Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, sings Brahms' 'Requiem' and the full scene from 'Parsifal' on December 5, and Beethoven's 'Missa Solennis' on May 8. These performances are part of the London Symphony Orchestra's series of concerts at Queen's Hall. On March 23, also at Queen's Hall, the choir will sing for the Royal Philharmonic Society, the works chosen being a new 'Pagan Requiem' by Delius, a 'Marschtrabande' by Roger-Ducasse, and the ninth Symphony. A performance of Bach's B minor Mass is contemplated in June.

The Central London Choral and Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. David J. Thomas, will give 'The Messiah', 'Tom Jones', and Percy Fletcher's Choral Apocryph on Scottish Airs.

The Basing Philharmonic Society has a new plan for its concert on February 18. The programme, entitled 'Eminent Encounters,' consists of selected numbers from Bach's Mass in B minor, 'Israel in Egypt,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'The Golden Legend,' and 'The Dream of Gerontius.' For the remainder of the season the works chosen are 'Elijah' (on November 26 and 28), 'Merrie England,' 'Tom Jones,' and choral songs and madrigals. The conductor is Mr. E. Victor Williams.

The Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, will give 'Tom Jones,' Verdi's 'Requiem,' Bach's 'Sleepers, wake,' and other numbers. The orchestral programme includes Brahms' Theme and Six Diversions.

The South London Philharmonic Society announces that the following works will be put into rehearsal: 'Faust,' 'The Spectre's Bride,' Bach's 'St. Matthew's Passion' or 'The Mass,' 'Requiem,' Balfour Gardiner's 'News from the Olden,' with part-songs and madrigals. The conductor is Mr. William H. Kerridge.

The Lavender Hill Choral Society has chosen Brahms' 'Requiem' and Leonini's 'The Gate of Life,' for performance in December under Mr. George Lane's direction. Bromley Choral Society, conducted by Mr. F. Fertel, announces three concerts, at which 'King Olaf,' 'The Messiah,' 'The Hymn of Praise,' and Dvořák's 'Stabat Mater' will be performed.

PROVINCIAL

The plans of the principal musical societies in the provinces are outlined by our local correspondents. We have received also the following particulars from other sources:

BEDFORD MUSICAL SOCIETY.—Conductor, Dr. Harding. Programme: 'The Apostles.'

BEDFORD FREE CHURCH CHORAL UNION.—Conductor, Mr. Percy Burke. 'Samson' and 'The Golden Legend.'

STOKE-ON-TRENT CHORAL SOCIETY.—Conductor, Mr. Ernest C. Redfern. 'The Messiah' and 'Hiawatha.'

STOCKPORT VOCAL UNION.—Conductor, Dr. T. H. Hingley. 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'Acis and Galatea,' part-songs, madrigals, &c.

LULLE HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Conductor, Mr. Walter H. Hingley. 'Aida,' 'The Messiah,' Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.'

AN INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER MUSIC COMPETITION

The Circolo degli Artisti, Turin, in co-operation with the Double Quintet Society of the same town, announces an international competition for a chamber music work for all or part (not fewer than seven) of the following instruments: violin I., violin II., viola, 'cello, double-bass, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, pianoforte, and harp. The chosen combination must include wind instruments. Length of performance must not exceed forty minutes. Composers may submit unpublished works that have not yet been played in public. MSS. must be received by December 31, 1921. Works proved to have been posted under registered cover by that date will also be accepted. Each work must be accompanied by a sealed envelope containing the name and address of the sender, and bearing on the outside a motto which should appear also on the first page of the MS. Entries are to be sent by registered post to the Circolo degli Artisti, Turin, Italy, via Bogino, No. 9.

A copy of each part should accompany the full score. Competitors are advised to aid the judges by including also a reduction for pianoforte.

The first prize will be 5,000 lire, the second 3,000 lire. The prize works will be performed by the Double Quintet of Turin in the spring of 1922.

The jury (consisting of five or seven members of the Circolo) will be empowered to recommend for performance other works in addition to those gaining prizes.

The copyright of the prize and performed works will remain with the composer. The scores and parts are to become the property of the Circolo. The prize works will be included in the repertory of the Double Quintet of Turin, to whom the composers shall assign the sole right of performance in Italy during the two years following December 31, 1921.

THE ROTTERDAM CARILLON

On Saturday, September 10, the Queen of Holland paid a State visit to the new City Hall of Rotterdam.

Amongst the many gifts made to enrich this noble structure one of the most munificent is that by Mr. P. van Ommeren and Mr. J. J. van Ommeren, consisting of a carillon of forty-nine bells—four octaves chromatic—made at the famous Taylor Bell Foundry, Loughborough. A special recital was given to the Queen by Mr. A. Krul, Jun., the City carillonneur. The largest bell weighs 4½ tons, the smallest 21-lbs., the total weight being 28 tons.

It is the largest completely chromatic carillon in the world, the most perfectly tuned (equal temperament), and the greatest bell project carried out anywhere during the past century.

The harmonious effect of the bells is magnificent, and is undoubtedly enhanced by the excellent position in which they are placed in the tower—the bell-chamber being over 160-ft. above the level of the street.

NICCOLO JOMMELLI

BY CLAUDE TREVOR

At a time when in Italy there is a movement on foot to exhumate certain operas of Niccolò Jommelli's, and place them before the public with all possible care, it may not be devoid of interest to amateurs to have some information on the career of one who in the 18th century exercised an immense influence on musical art. His music has—unjustly we think—been allowed to drop out of programmes where other compositions of the same epoch have been heard ad nauseam and might well be allowed a temporary rest. The one item ever heard, or apparently known by a large number even of those who may claim to be called musicians, is 'La Calandrina,' which is sometimes included in concert programmes. Had it not been for the outbreak of war in 1914 there was every indication that Italy would have seen great festivities in celebration of Jommelli's bi-centenary.

Born at Aversa (Caserta) on September 10, 1714, Jommelli, though not apparently an enfant prodigue, was placed under the Canonico Muzzillo to foster his decided aptitude and leaning towards the divine art. When barely sixteen he entered the Conservatorio dei Poveri di Gesù Cristi, at Naples, among the students of the second-class, though some authorities say he entered the School of St. Onofrio.* In any case, he was soon at the Conservatorio di la Pietà dei Turchini, where he studied harmony under Feo, and, finishing his course with him, was placed for composition under Leo (for whom he always had a warm place in his heart), at the same time studying vocal music with Prato and Mancini. The first of his compositions to be noticed were some ballets, after which followed a cantata, first executed in a private house, but which received some sincere applause from his venerable master, Leo, who, unlike many, felt no jealousy at the success of the rising star.

In 1737, at the Teatro Nuovo at Naples, Jommelli's first opera, entitled L'errore Amorofo, was given; but such little faith had he in his own powers, and so modest and retiring was he, that instead of his own name appearing as the composer, its place was taken by that of Valentini—at least so says Piccini.† Jommelli was of a kind, generous, and affectionate disposition, particularly so towards the composers of his time, and was generally more cultured than the majority of his colleagues. He never stooped to meanness to get a hearing or success, his chief failing being that he was too prone to accept what was offered him as subjects for his operas without sufficient examination of the contents. But while he feared the judgment of the public, he would not pander to it, though at the same time he did not possess enough strength of character to be a real fighter.

After the success of another opera, Odoardo, Jommelli received an invitation to Rome, from the Cardinal Duke of York, the last of the unhappy Stuart dynasty. In the Eternal City were produced two fresh works for the stage—Ricimero and Astianatte—both written for the Argentina Theatre in 1741, where they were received with enthusiasm, so much so that their composer was asked to write an opera the same year for Bologna, where resided the profound and greatly-feared musician, Padre Martini, whose musical knowledge may be gauged by the fact that both Gluck and Mozart submitted some of their writings to him for criticism. The meeting with the Padre, from whom Jommelli was anxious to have some instruction, caused the latter considerable uneasiness. When, as was Martini's habit, he submitted a fugue-subject for his would-be pupil's treatment, and it was executed with the utmost facility, the teacher asked somewhat angrily, 'Why have you come here to ask for lessons! It seems I can learn of you.' Jommelli's reply was that he had been commissioned to write the new opera, Egio. Martini answered that the theatre was lucky to possess such a maestro, adding that it was a misfortune for a musician of his attainments to be associated with such a gang of corrupters of music.

So successful was Merope, composed for Venice, that its composer was offered the much-coveted post of professor at the Conservatorio dell' Ospedaletto there, where it was one of his duties to write sacred music for performance. It had been among Jommelli's early ambitions to figure in this branch of music, in which some of his best inspirations are recorded.

An idea may be formed of the esteem in which Jommelli was universally held from the fact that the post of Maestro della Cappella Reale at Naples being vacant, he was asked to adjudicate upon the candidates for the preferment. Out of a large number his selection fell upon one who proved to be no less a person than Durante.*

At this period there were but few new subjects submitted for operatic treatment, composers being content to have the librettos already used added to or curtailed the authors as they thought fit. 'Didone,' for the production of which Jommelli was called to Vienna in 1749, was no exception to the rule, the librettist being Cesareo, whose scenic book had been used by Sarri in 1724 at Naples, proving then anything but a success. Its reception when by Jommelli was enthusiastic, as is shown by the following letter, written by Cesareo to the Princess di Belmonte, December 13, 1749:

'On the birthday of the Emperor, "Didone" was produced with music that fairly astonished the Court. It is full of elegance of ideas, novelty of harmony, and above all deep expression. Not only every singer, but every instrument speaks to one. I have never heard anything to appeal to me so much. The composer is a Neapolitan called Jommelli, perhaps known by name to your Excellency.'

The Empress Maria Teresa was a great admirer of the composer, and lost no opportunity for showering rich gifts upon him, condescending to accompany him on the spot when he sang some of her extremely mediocre compositions and allowing him the honour of sitting on a chair instead of the stool usually used in her presence.

Called to Rome by Cardinal Albani to occupy the post of assistant to the venerable Bencini, Maestro di Cappe at St. Peter's, he remained in that capacity for four years, working assiduously.† In nearly all Jommelli's sacred compositions are to be found at the end the initials L.B.V.M. which most likely stand for 'Laudate Beata Virgo Mari'. The characters in his musical script are extremely clear and small.

At this time most of the Courts of Europe were vying with each other as to which could boast the finest Italian musician in its train, and Jommelli received numerous offers from the Duke of Wurtemberg, the King of Portugal, and the Duke of Baden. Well knowing the musical culture of the first-named, he decided to leave Rome for Stuttgart, where he remained sixteen years, with the exception of an occasional journey to his native land—enjoying the comfortable salary of four thousand florins per annum, besides his apartments and other perquisites.

It was his sojourn in Germany that caused him to change his style to that of a heavier mould. The poet Metastasio writing to him on the subject in a letter dated April 1763, says:

'It was a very great pleasure to receive the precious gift of the two grand airs you sent me, in which, according to my limited knowledge of music, I greatly admired the novel harmonies, &c. I confess this to the writer of the scene, but you have, when you choose, another style, which appeals immediately to the heart without appealing so much to the head. Ah! my dear Jommelli, don't give up such a gift as yours, in which you have no rival.'

It is not unlikely, however, that the composer's inspiration was becoming exhausted, and to cover deficiencies therein he had greater recourse to other means. In 1770 he returned to Italy on account of the ill-health of his wife, who shortly afterwards died, leaving no children. Once more the King of Portugal made him alluring offers, but being now old and tired, Jommelli refused them. The King, however, made him a handsome allowance, the condition imposed being the obligation of sending copies of all his operas, which numbered more than fifty. He retired to Aversa, and in 1770 wrote 'Armida', which was a great success. It was apropos this occasion that Mozart * Naples was at this time world-renowned for its four musical schools—I Poveri di Gesù Cristo, St. Onofrio, Sta. Maria di Loreto, and La Pietà dei Turchini. In the first-named were to be found as teachers, among others, Alessandro Scarlatti and Durante, and as pupils there were Pergolesi and Leonardo Vinci (not to be confounded with Leonardo da Vinci). From Sta. Maria came Traetta and Sacchini (students). We may note, too, that adjoining this celebrated school was that over which presided the great Porpora, who counted among innumerable pupils Farinelli, Caffarelli, and Gabrieli. From St. Onofrio came, among others, Paisiello and Piccini; and from I Turchini, Tritto, Raimondi, and Spontini.

† Niccolò Piccini, born at Bari in 1728, and died at Passy (Paris) in 1800, was a very prolific composer, who was called to Paris as a rival to Gluck. The famous dispute between Piccinists and Gluckists is too well known to need more than bare mention of the fact here.

* Francesco Durante was born at Fratta Maggiore (Naples) in 1684 and died at Naples in 1755. He composed an immense number of sacred works, but few, unfortunately, are now familiar. Those that are known are, however, full of interest.

† In the archives of the Cappella Giulia, rarely allowed to be visited, are to be found a large number of Jommelli's compositions produced at this time.

ting to his sister from Naples in a letter dated May 22, 1770, said:

'The day before yesterday we went to the rehearsal of Jommelli's opera, which is very well written and pleased me greatly. The composer chatted with us, and was charming.'

And later, on June 5, he added:

'The opera performed here is by Jommelli; it is fine, but is too serious and antiquated for the theatre.'

Another opera, 'Demofante,' had also a good reception; his last, 'Ifigenia'—on account, it is said, of its too varied style—resulted in failure, and such was the effect the composer that he was stricken with apoplexy. Living later, he wrote a Mass and an opera ('Celia') for the King of Portugal, a cantata in honour of the christening of the infant daughter of Ferdinand IV., and finally a serenade for two voices, which brought his life's work to a close. Jommelli was a follower of Leo, Scarlatti, and Vivaldi, but did not leave his art at the point at which they found it. In not a few reforms he anticipated Gluck, and even much attributed to the invention of Mozart can be traced to the influence of the Italian. In youth his appearance was attractive, though with advancing years he became corpulent and unwieldy. He died at sixty years of age, at Naples, on August 25, 1774.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

The local autumn musical season was inaugurated by the City of Birmingham Orchestra with the first of a series of twenty-eight Sunday evening concerts. These are to be given at the Grand Theatre, by permission of the Moss Empires Limited, and smoking will be permitted. Mr. Appleby Matthews is, of course, conductor of the series. The first concert took place on September 11 before a fairly large audience, the principal items submitted being Beethoven's Overture 'Coriolanus' and the same composer's Symphony No. 5 in C minor. The numerical strength of the Orchestra is limited to about thirty-six performers, but this number is likely to be increased in due course. Mr. Paul Beard has been appointed leader. The vocalists in this concert was our local tenor, Dr. Goodey.

The same orchestra will also give six Wednesday evening symphony concerts during the season, three of which will be conducted by Mr. Appleby Matthews, and one each by Mr. Albert Coates, Mr. Eugene Goossens, and Mr. Hamilton. The Orchestra will further give six children's concerts on Saturday afternoons and five Saturday evening concerts, the first of which will be entirely devoted to Wagner. The City of Birmingham Choir will take part in the concert performance of Rutland Boughton's 'Bethlehem' on December 10, and the Festival Choral Society has been invited to perform 'Elijah' on January 21, under Mr. Allen Blackall's direction. Concert performances of Mozart's 'Magic Flute' and Gounod's 'Faust' will be given on Saturday evenings February 18 and March 18, with Mr. Appleby Matthews as conductor, and the choral force will be that of the City of Birmingham Choir.

The seventy-fifth annual report of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society shows a serious deficit on the year's working. The loss on the concerts amounted to £443, which sum, by means of members' subscriptions, was reduced to £365. The Society's prospectus for the coming season stands as follows: November 16, 'Elijah'; February 15, miscellaneous, to include unaccompanied vocal works; March 22, selections from Handel; December 26, 'The Messiah.'

The Southern Syncopated Orchestra of negro players and singers paid a special visit to Birmingham and gave six evening concerts and five matinées at the Town Hall, from September 12 to 17. The entertainment proved as novel as it was interesting.

Mr. Max Mossel is again providing four subscription concerts, the first of which will be a pianoforte recital by M. Cortôt, to be given at the Town Hall on October 19. The last concert (February 22) will be orchestral, with Mr. Julius Harrison as conductor.

Mention has already been made of the 'international celebrity' subscription concerts and Mr. Hubert Brown's subscription concerts.

The Birmingham Chamber Concerts Society has once more arranged with the Catterall Quartet to give five chamber concerts this season. The first falls on October 14, and the works to be presented will be Beethoven's String Quartet, Op. 18, No. 4, in C minor, Schubert's posthumous Quartet, and Arnold Bax's Quartet in G major.

There will be pianoforte recitals by Mr. Norman Wilks and local artists during the season, also a number of concerts arranged by local singers and chamber music organizations.

The Midland Musical Society announces four concerts, the first of which is to take place at the Town Hall on October 15, when 'The Messiah' will be given. On November 12 Berlioz's 'Faust' is down for performance. On February 11 the programme will contain Stanford's 'The Revenge,' Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' and Austin's 'Hymn of Apollo.' On Good Friday, April 14, Mozart's Requiem Mass is to be given. The conductor is Mr. A. J. Cotton, and the deputy-conductor Mr. John Tyler.

BOURNEMOUTH

Preparations are well advanced for the resumption of the winter series of symphony concerts, and by the time these notes appear there will be only one week to intervene before the date of the inaugural concert.

At the moment of writing only the particulars of the first eight concerts are available, but these details confirm anticipations that the season about to commence is likely to establish a record so far as concerns variety and scope of the music to be performed. When, on October 6, Mr. Dan Godfrey steps on to the platform to inaugurate the series for the twenty-seventh consecutive year, it will doubtless be with the assurance that forthcoming events will reach the high-water-mark of Bournemouth effort.

A number of attractive novelties, some of which are sure to provoke controversy, find a place in the programmes of the opening concerts. Included in the list are the two English Idylls by George Butterworth, Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture to 'Ivan the Terrible,' three movements from Gustav Holst's 'Planets' Suite, Arnold Bax's tone-poem, 'Tintagel,' three Dances from Manuel de Falla's 'Three-Cornered Hat' music, Granville Bantock's Overture 'The Sea Reivers,' an 'Autumn Nocturne' by Alfred Cazabon, Stravinsky's 'Fire-bird' Suite, and an orchestral composition by Francesco Malpiero. These comprise the most 'advanced' selection of new works that Bournemouth has as yet been privileged to hear.

The general orchestral list embraces Bantock's 'Hebridean' Symphony, and those of Glazounov in B flat, Brahms in F, Beethoven in D, Tchaikovsky in E minor, Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, the 'Unfinished,' and Sibelius' first Symphony, Glazounov's tone-poem 'The Forest,' and Brahms' 'Academic' Overture. At the seventh concert Dr. Ethel Smyth is to conduct her Overture and Intermezzo from 'The Boatswain's Mate.' Altogether the portents are more than usually promising.

BRISTOL

Bristol Choral Society opens its season on October 22 with the 'Dettingen Te Deum' of Handel as a hymn of praise on reaching its hundredth concert, surely a magnificent record of good work accomplished. The same programme includes the Prologue and Coronation Scene from Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godounov.' So successful have been the operatic nights that for the final concert, on April 29, 'Carmen' has been chosen. Verdi's 'Requiem' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' will be given on November 19, 'The Messiah' on December 17, 'Omar Khayyam' and 'Walpurgis Night' on February 18, and 'Elijah' on March 25.

Bristol New Philharmonic Society's twenty-first season—it will drop the 'New' next year—commences with a fine programme on December 3, in which Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture, Bach's Concerto for two pianofortes (Misses Irene Scharer and Myra Hess) and orchestra, and Delius' 'On hearing the first cuckoo in spring' are promised. Holst's 'Planets' Suite will be a new item at Bristol, at the February concert, with Gerrard Williams' 'cycle of fragments' 'Pot-pourri,' the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Dvorák's 'Carneval.' Bach's 'God goeth up' will give the choir its chief opportunity at the April concert, and 'The Immortal Hour' of Rutland Boughton, with well-known Glastonbury singers, will provide an added charm. The report of last season regrets a financial loss, but claims that from a musical standpoint the Philharmonic Concerts were worth while. They were—but although all the Bristol concerts are run as cheaply as possible, there will be much uphill work before the public is taught that music, however indispensable, must be supported freely, in order to flourish and expand.

Messrs. Duck, Son, & Pinker are arranging a splendid series of Subscription Concerts to take the place of the unlucky Quinlan venture. It is a wonderful list of artists. Four concerts by the London Symphony Orchestra, two on Saturday, October 8, under Mr. Albert Coates, and two on Wednesday, March 15, under Sir Henry Wood, ought to satisfy everyone. At the first two, Brahms and Beethoven will be drawn upon for Symphonies No. 2 and No. 7, and Strauss' 'Don Juan' and Scriabin's much-discussed 'Poem of Ecstasy' will be played. Rosing will also give his miniature solo opera, and Ticcianti will play the pianoforte. Casals will be heard for the first time, probably—at least, the first time for many years—at Bristol, at the second concert on November 16; and Cortot, who charmed us so much last year, will also appear. Pouishnov will pay a return visit for the third concert on January 11. Moiseiwitsch will be the star at the fourth concert on February 15, with Madame Suggia; and Kaneóskaya at the last two events on March 15. The cost of the seats is uncommonly reasonable.

Messrs. Crichton's five 'international celebrity' concerts bring Kubelik, Leila Megane, Tetrassini, Bielina, Adela Verne, Bratza, Amy Evans, Fraser Gange, Marie Hall, and Katherine Goodson. A special Kreisler recital is booked for December 9, and should prove one of the most popular engagements of the season. Old friends in Mesdames Rosina Buckman and Edna Thornton, Messrs. Maurice d'Oisly, Peter Dawson, and William James, the Australian pianist, will make a very welcome operatic star programme in gems of opera on February 20.

We hope, too, to hear good things from the Cecilian Choral Society, under Mr. Read, this winter, and from the several local choral societies that are getting vigorously to work, as well as from that fine combination of men's voices, widely known as the Royal Orpheus Glee Society, under the wonderfully vital Mr. George Riseley, who, though well past his seventieth year, conducts this Society and the Bristol Choral with the keenness of thirty years ago.

This survey does not comprise all the music we at Bristol are looking forward to in the season so soon to be upon us.

CORNWALL

Much interest is being taken in the newly-formed Cornish Miners' Choir. The idea was inspired by the experiences of a similar effort by Welshmen during the coal strike. Cornishmen, being Celts, have music in their souls, and their response to the appeal for volunteers was inspiring. The results have been so encouraging that it is not unlikely that an extensive tour will be arranged. A novel feature which has been introduced is the appearance of miners in underground equipment. The inauguration of the choir is a commendable proceeding, but the relief funds need bigger assistance than can be given by this means.

Holsworthy Choral Society has decided to prepare Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden' for performance during the approaching session. Mr. H. P. Letcher is the conductor.

Mr. Frank Hutchings, a pianist who claims Cornwall as his native county, gave a recital at Penzance on September 12. His collaborator was Miss Gladys Harris, a Cornish vocalist who may be regarded as a protégé of Madame Clara Butt.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The month of September, as usual, has been a transit period between the musical seasons of summer and autumn. The Coventry Corporation Summer Sunday concerts at Naul's Mill Park came to a conclusion at the end of August, after a successful season.

The recent visit of Madame Anna Pavlova and members of the Russian Ballet drew a large audience to the Empire Theatre, and the famous dancer was accorded an enthusiastic welcome. She appeared a few days later at Warwick, where another large audience was recorded. A short season of Gilbert and Sullivan light opera given by the D'Oyly Carte Company in the Coventry Empire during the week commencing September 5 received liberal support. 'Yeomen of the Guard,' 'Iolanthe,' 'The Gondoliers,' 'Trial by Jury,' and 'The Pirates of Penzance' figured in the repertoire.

The programmes which local musical societies in Coventry and district have in preparation promise an interesting season. Coventry Philharmonic Society has the concert version of Gounod's 'Faust,' and Parry's 'King Saul' in rehearsal, while 'The Messiah' will be performed at Coventry Cathedral at Christmas. The orchestra of the Society is also arranging some instrumental concerts to be given in the Baths Assembly Hall. Mr. Charles Tree has been engaged by the Society to give a lecture on 'Song, grave and gay, and how to sing them.'

The Catterall Quartet will provide the programme at one of the four concerts announced by the Coventry Chamber Music Society, a pianoforte and violoncello recital, and a programme of pianoforte quartets being submitted on the remaining occasions.

DEVON

News this month is chiefly anticipatory in character. Plymouth Orpheus Choir (conductor, Mr. David Parfitt) has issued a big bill promising five concerts, not the least important of which will be its annual Boxing-Day Concert. During the 1921-22 season the Choir will give two subscription concerts in conjunction with a London Concert Direction involving visits to Plymouth of Madame Rosa Buckman, Madame Edna Thornton, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, Mr. Peter Dawson, Mr. William James, the Australian pianist, Miss Amy Evans, Mr. Fraser Gange, Mrs. Adela Verne, Kubelik, Miss Stella Power, Miss Leila Megane, and Miss Katharine Goodson.

Honiton Choral Society has put Parts 2 and 3 of 'Hiawatha' in rehearsal for autumn performance, Mr. Lancelot Holden being the conductor. The Society numbers now ninety members, an excellent total for so small a town.

Mr. Vladimir Rosing visited Torquay Pavilion on August 26, including in his programme several operatic numbers and some modern English songs. Mr. John Newton was the accompanist, and Mr. Mikel Arens played violoncello music.

The Dean and Chapter of Exeter Cathedral have given their consent to the request of the North Devon Choral Union for the holding of a Choral Eucharist in the Cathedral, when it is the turn of the North Devon choir to come to Exeter, which will occur next year.

Exeter Chamber Music Club has already received many new members for the season which will open with an annual meeting at the end of September. The first concert will take place on October 19. This Club has done wonders for music appreciation at Exeter, and has indirectly given impetus to a new private organization, known as the Exeter Philharmonic Concerts, whose aim is materially to help musical education by providing opportunities for hearing good music well performed. The first concert under these auspices will be on October 15, when the Birmingham String Quartet will pay its first visit to Exeter.

At the Theatre Royal, Timaru, on July 14, the Orpheus Choir gave an excellent selection of male-voice music, under Mr. A. W. Vine. In the programme were M. B. Foster's dramatic cantata, 'Eudora,' Elgar's 'Feasting I wait,' German's 'O Peaceful Night,' and Newton's 'The Frog.'

DUBLIN

The Sunday 'Mater' concerts at La Scala from August 21 to September 18 have attracted large and appreciative audiences. The Dublin Symphony Orchestra has played, the whole, excellent music under Mr. Vincent O'Brien, and the work of the soloists has been popular.

On Sunday, September 11, a new organ, built by Magahy, Cork, was opened in St. Patrick's Church, Ringsend. Several organ selections were played by Mr. P. Magahy, playing the resources of the instrument to good advantage. Already preparations for the winter musical campaign are in progress, and various societies have again (after a long interval) issued the programmes of their intended performances, so that with the completion of peace negotiations, there will be no lack of matter to chronicle for the forthcoming season.

Two of Dr. Larchet's songs are now included in the repertoire of John MacCormack, who has promised to come to Dublin next autumn.

EDINBURGH

The event of the month, fraught with immense possibilities for music in Great Britain, has been the first meeting of the International Musical Festivals, on Friday, September 9. Sir Henry Hadow carried all the delegates along with him in his arguments, and emphasised the true function of the International Musical Festival, i.e., perfect local freedom for the different countries, and parental advice when sought for from the International Board. Sir Hugh Allen and Mr. Plunket Greene used clarity into the important question of assessing the merits, and readers of this brief notice are recommended to look elsewhere for the wisdom of their findings. Money prizes were unanimously deprecated. A delightful concert prize-winners at the last Edinburgh Festival fittingly opened the proceedings.

On September 12, Sir Henry Hadow addressed the Education Section of the British Association on 'The Place of Music in a Liberal Education.' It was a piece of brilliant advocacy, and we trust that as a result the many and influential members present will spread far and wide his views for music. Sir Henry dealt with the matter so fully at discussion seemed neither necessary nor desirable. In fact, it was felt that Music had now been definitely placed in the curriculum. It was extremely hopeful for the future of music in schools to hear the comments in the quadrangle of the University as the meeting dispersed.

Messrs. Paterson & Sons announce their thirty-second series of orchestral concerts. The sketch-programmes are all up-to-date as regards orchestral novelties, and we welcome the announcement of a 'Young People's Holiday Concert.' Another innovation is a series of Appreciation lectures to be given every Friday afternoon preceding the Monday concert, and dealing with the programme to be omitted. It is interesting to note that the gentlemen identified with these lectures are both connected with the educational aspect of music in the city, viz., Mr. R. C. Leod, Director of Musical Studies for teachers in training at Moray House, and Mr. Herbert Wiseman, Director of Music for the Education Authority.

GLASGOW

Mr. Herbert Walton's twenty-fourth autumn series of organ recitals at the Cathedral had undiminished success. The concluding recital, on September 13, given for the benefit of the Royal Infirmary, there was an audience of over fifteen hundred persons. The O'Mara Opera Company concluded a three weeks' season at the Theatre Royal on September 17.

The following is a forecast of the arrangements, so far as announced, for the coming season: The Choral and Orchestral Union's scheme will embrace thirteen Tuesday and fourteen Saturday concerts, with Mr. Landon Ronald and Mr. Julius Harrison as conductors, and Mr. Barry Squire as principal first violin. A brilliant array of vocal and instrumental soloists has been engaged. The Choral Union, under Mr. Warren T. Clemens, will contribute 'The Messiah,' Cowen's 'The Veil,' Hamilton Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' selections from the B minor Mass, and selections from 'Parsifal,' 'The Valkyries,' and 'The Mastersingers.' Hamilton Choral Society (Mr. T. S. Drummond) will present miscellaneous programmes, with one or two short continuous works. The Orpheus Choir (Mr. H. S. Robertson), in addition to its December and March series of concerts, will fulfil engagements in several towns and cities in Scotland and over the Border. Pursuing its policy of popularising chamber music, the Choir has engaged the London String Quartet, with Miss Myra Hess as solo pianist, for a series of eight concerts—October 3 to 8. Mr. Thorpe Davies' Choir will be heard in all three parts of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' The Bach Choir (Mr. A. M. Henderson) announces two chamber and two choral concerts, one of the latter including a first performance at Glasgow of the Church Cantata, 'The Lord is a Sun and Shield.' The V.M.C.A. Choir (Mr. Hugh Hunter) will present 'Elijah.' The tremendous impulse of the Glasgow Competitive Festival has brought into being a large number of suburban choral societies, choirs connected with public, industrial, and commercial concerns, and co-operative choirs, and these will devote their energies chiefly to unaccompanied choral music. The various amateur operatic and orchestral societies have resumed rehearsals, and the coming season altogether gives promise of great activity.

LIVERPOOL

Early in October we shall plunge into the musical season proper, and bid farewell to outdoor joys—reluctantly, it may be, but not without prospective thankfulness for the opportunity for hearing some good music, which seems more and more a necessity in our daily lives. The Philharmonic Society's fixtures have already been outlined, and offer a wide range, which is exemplified in the programme of the opening concert on October 11. This includes Beethoven's A major Symphony and Scriabin's 'Poème d'Extase,' conducted by M. Koussevitzky. Two concerts will be given by the Liverpool Choral Society, which will perform 'The Messiah' on December 21, and 'The Redemption' on April 8. Two concerts are also planned by the Post Office Choral Society, a worthy combination which does credit to its supporters. These two Societies offer examples as to what might be done if the unemployed choral material hereabouts were taken in hand by the right person or persons. This more or less happy land of ours will never be a nest of singing birds until the classes as well as the masses rediscover the human solace which is to be found in choral music. All credit to the six hundred men and boys of the Church Choir Association who will sing an interesting choral programme at the fourteenth festival in St. George's Hall on October 18, when Sir Ivor Atkins, of Worcester, comes as guest-conductor.

The music, it may be divulged, is by no means easy for ordinary choirs, but all the same it offers an incentive and an ideal which is not to be reached without a struggle. Up to the present only one choir has withdrawn from the preparatory combat. Other choirs, unavoidably shut out owing to exigencies of platform space, will have precedence in next year's Festival.

Whatever lack there may be of choral promise, it is certain there will be plenty of vocal and instrumental music, and among the notable fixtures are four Max Mossel concerts, six 'international celebrity' concerts—at which Josef Hofmann, Kubelik, and Kreisler will make reappearances at Liverpool—and there will be nine of Mr. Sam Vickers' immensely popular operatic concerts on Saturday evenings in the Philharmonic Hall. For people who appreciate the subtler charm of chamber music the Rodewald Concert Society announces seven concerts commencing on October 24. The admirable Catterall String Quartet will play at four of the concerts, the other performers being the Manchester Ladies' Trio; Miss Jo Lamb, with Miss Lucy Pierce as pianist; and Mr. Frank Merrick with Miss Hope Squire at the second pianoforte, will play Reger's Passacaglia and Fugue for two pianofortes. The programmes are extremely interesting and enterprising, and we shall hear new English music in a Quartet by Arnold Bax, a Trio by John Ireland, the 'Lady Audley' Suite by Herbert Howells, a Trio by Alfred Wall, and a Quintet by Arthur Hinton.

Mr. H. J. Westhead will give two concerts in the Philharmonic Hall on October 26 and March 28, with Moiseiwitsch as soloist on each occasion.

The Music Teachers' Association meetings in Rushworth Hall will be opened on October 29 with a recital of modern pianoforte music by Mr. Edward S. Mitchell, and on November 5 lively anticipation is aroused by the British song recital to be given by Miss Ursula Greville. Lecturers who are masters of their subjects will be heard in Mr. Field Hyde, Mr. Frank Roscoe, Mr. Stewart Macpherson, and Dr. Walter Carroll. Organists are not left out in the general scheme, and after M. Joseph Bonnet's recital on September 28, we are to have a welcome return visit to St. George's Hall from M. Marcel Dupré on October 20. The local Organists and Choirmasters' Association, whose president is Mr. Lloyd Moore, announces a series of lectures by Mr. H. W. Griffiths ('The Gramophone'), Mr. G. A. Tessimond ('The influence of poetry on the development of modern music'), Mr. Walter Bridson ('Liszt'), and Mr. W. A. Roberts ('Modern French Organ Music').

Fourteen concerts will be given by the United Orchestral Society of forty players, conducted by Mr. Louis Baxter, commencing on October 5 in the Philharmonic Hall, and subsequently in Picton Hall on Saturday evenings. Commencing October 15, and in the same locale, will be held six 'Charles Armand Popular and Operatic Concerts' on Saturday evenings, commencing October 1.

As Lecturer in Music to the University of Liverpool, Dr. A. W. Pollitt will resume his addresses on music and its appreciation on alternate Thursdays during term at 5.30, when he will deal with the music to be performed at the various orchestral concerts of the coming season. The lectures, which are open to the public, have been found greatly helpful to a large and increasing circle.

The British Music Society—whose local branch owes so much to the personal interest in its welfare taken by Mr. William Rushworth, its hon. treasurer—commences its syllabus by a pianoforte recital by Mr. E. S. Mitchell on October 27, followed by Miss Ursula Greville's British song recital on November 5, and on November 28 Mr. Eugène Goossens will speak on 'Contemporary developments and tendencies in Music.' Another lecturer whose appearance is welcomed is Mr. Arthur Bliss (March 8). The widespread usefulness and success of the Society's meetings in its beautiful club-room in Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper's Islington premises, are among the gratifying features of the great awakening of local interest in music and musical matters since this enterprising firm took the Liverpool branch under its wing.

At Wallasey, that great residential region 'over the water' from Liverpool, they are to have a two days' musical Festival on October 11 and 12, in New Brighton Tower. The adjudicators will be Dr. Caradog Roberts and Mr. W. W. Starmer. Two concerts will be given on December 10 and March 29 by the Wallasey Musical Society (eighty voices), conducted by Mr. Wilfred Shaw.

It is significant of the march of events to find we have a Gramophone and Phonograph Society which will meet on two alternate Wednesdays each month, and which invites membership from all interested in the development of sound-recording and sound-reproducing instruments of any type, either from a musical, technical, or scientific standpoint. The Society is evidently going into the matter very thoroughly.

LLANDUDNO

During September a number of enjoyable programmes were provided by the orchestra in the Pier Pavilion. Under the baton of Mr. A. W. Payne, the thirty-three instrumentalists constituting this orchestra have never displayed greater ability than during the present season. Night after night they have played to audiences that have taxed the capacity of the spacious pavilion to the utmost. Although light programmes have been submitted from time to time, and the players have indulged with evident enjoyment in such humorous compositions as Vollstedt's 'Country Fair' and Lotter's 'Southern Wedding,' yet the general level at which the programmes have been maintained has been remarkably high. Beethoven's C minor Symphony, played in its entirety at a recent Sunday night concert, received a performance that was commendable in every respect, and the audience was not slow to recognize the ability of the instrumentalists. Dvorák's Symphony, 'From the New World,' Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, Saint-Saëns' 'Africa' Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra (with Mr. George Atkinson, the resident pianist, as soloist) and numerous selections from Wagnerian opera, are only a few of the works that have been heard within a brief period. Those responsible for the engagement of the vocal soloists are justly to be commended for having secured the appearance of such exponents as Madame Elsa Stralitz, Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Nora Delmarr, Mr. Robert Radford, Mr. Maurice d'Oisy, and Mr. Herbert Brown. The title 'famous' may fairly be said to attach to the Picton concerts at the queen of Welsh watering places.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

The season here will open on October 15, and run without a break to Good Friday—even the Christmas and New Year weeks being filled up. This takes no account of expected opera performances early in 1922, under the reorganized Beecham scheme, in connection with which it is interesting to record that an invitation has been conveyed to and accepted by Mr. Brand Lane to join the management committee.

The last three Saturdays in October bring us two opportunities for hearing Tetrassini, and what Sir Henry Wood describes as 'the most wonderful Wagner scheme' have ever been carried out at a single concert, this being extensive selections from the four Ring dramas. These are all in Mr. Brand Lane's series. He sets forth two distinct types of programme, one known as 'festival' at the other as 'orchestral.' Sir Henry Wood conducts the orchestral numbers, and will be responsible for several novelties. The principal one will be on November 2 when the 'Mars,' 'Saturn,' and 'Jupiter' sections of Holst's 'Planets' Suite will be presented under the composer's direction. (Later in the season the entire Suite will be played by Mr. Hamilton Harty at the Hallé concert on February 23.) Apart from the 'Nibelung' selections, two of the best orchestral concerts will be the Verdi-Puccini Wagner programme (February 18), and that devoted to Handel-Mozart-Wagner (March 18).

Ravel's 'La Valse,' Dorothy Howell's 'Koong She,' Casella's 'Covent sur l'eau,' and Sabate's 'Juventut' will all be new to Manchester this season, and, like the 'Planets' excerpts, will be heard in the Brand Lane series as well as in the Hallé. The Brand Lane choral concert are scheduled on 'what the public want' lines—'The Messiah,' 'Elijah,' 'Cavalleria,' and some miscellaneous unaccompanied items by the Manchester Philharmonic Choir, on the occasions when the orchestra is absent. The expense is ever spared by Mr. Lane when 'stars' of either the vocal or instrumental firmaments are under consideration and he is probably correct in stating that at no other concert in the country is such brilliant variety to be heard. Kubelik, Toscha-Seidel, and Moiseiwitsch, each appear twice under his auspices. The Lane-Wood programmes contain this season more solid orchestral food than any previous series within the writer's memory. Yet passing from perusal of these events to the Hallé syllabus emphasises the essential contrast between the two schemes. Not for years has such an interesting choral series been projected. Bach's B minor Mass, Beethoven's Choral Symphony, Bantock's 'Omar,' Elgar's 'The Apostles' are only heard here in the Hallé's. Why they are not brought forward under any other régime is incomprehensible. The real distinction displayed by Mr. Hamilton Harty last season in the drafting of programmes is fully maintained. There is very little repetition but surely 'Armistice Day' deserves something nobler than Sullivan's 'In Memoriam.' We don't need a 'British' composer necessarily for such an occasion—he should be a world composer. Yet with trifling possible exceptions, Mr. Harty who has been so largely responsible for stimulating interest in the post-war Hallé concerts, can fairly claim to be in the van of orchestral progress. In addition to the 'Planets' Suite and the Casella Dance comedy already named, Strauss' suite 'Berger als Edelmann' will receive its first English performance on November 3, and Gerrard Williams will be heard here for the first time in the 'Pot-Pourri' suite. Further hearings are promised of Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' Delius' 'Brigg Fair' and Pianoforte concertos, Strauss' 'Enoch Arden' and 'Don Quixote,' and several 'Valse nobles et sentimentales' and 'Mother and Child.' Mention should be made of a Mozart Bassoon concerto in which Mr. A. Camden will play. Miss Murray Lambert, Mr. Arthur Catterall, and Mr. F. Dawson fairly present English (not to say Lancashire) instrumental music, and are as sure of a resounding welcome as Liszt, Hofmann, Siloti, Seidel, Busoni, or Thibaud. The Mission Fund concert is on April 6, and the Good Friday special programme will close a highly interesting season. These concerts revert to the old-established Thursday evening tradition, but with the co-operation of the Manchester Beecham Opera Chorus the Hallé executive ventures on four Saturday evening opera concert recitals under Mr. Harty's conductorship: 'Samson and Delilah' (first time here in Hallé's latter days) on November 19; 'Carmen' on January 14, with Madame Kirkby in the title-role; 'Pagliacci' on February 11; and on March 11, selections from 'Boris Godounov,' 'Prince Igor,' and Glinka's 'Life for the Tsar.' Mr. Harty, despite his willingness to specialise as a regular opera conductor, showed in 'Carmen' last season undoubted capacity for such things, and during the present month will take charge of a series of charity performances of 'Carmen' and 'Faust' at the new Queen's Opera House. Here for the greater part of September the principal Carl Rosa Company has been performing to somewhat meagre audiences. The presentations of 'Meistersinger,' 'Rheingold,' and 'Walküre,' and the first performance under Mr. Colin Campbell of his new melo-drama-opera in one Act, 'Thais and Talmalee,' were the chief departures from the well-beaten track of visiting opera companies' work. It may be doubted if Manchester will ever again settle down to such routine fare after its Beecham-scale experiences.

A sign of the times in music appreciation is a course of six lectures under the University extra-mural auspices by Mr. T. Keighley, during November and December, at which will be dealt with music performed at the Hallé and Brandeis concerts, and with opera.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

Messrs. Wilson Peck have arranged a series of subscription concerts, at which Madame Kirkby Lunn, M. Moiseiwitsch, Miss Irene Scharrer, Prof. Bantock, and several other well-known artists will be heard. Five 'international celebrity' concerts are promised, and with such lures as Adame Tetrassini, Kubelik, Miss Adela Verne, the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra under Mr. Landon Ronald, &c., their success should be amply secured. In the way of purely local musical activity, the various musical services given by Church choirs are notable. On September 18 Brahms' Requiem was announced to be given by the Albert Hall Choir, on the occasion of the War Memorial dedication, with Miss Florence Mellors and Mr. C. Keywood as principals. On the same date the Halifax Place Mission choir gave Barnby's 'The Lord is King' for the Harvest Festival, and the Wesleyan Broad Street Choir, on September 25, performed Part 2 of 'Elijah.'

An interesting feature of Mr. Bernard Johnson's forthcoming recitals is the number of concertos he has arranged to perform in collaboration with Miss Helen Guest, Miss Avis Lunn, &c. Amongst those to be heard are the Concerto in A minor (Grieg), Max Bruch's Violin Concerto, the 'Tchaikovsky' Concerto in F, Bach's Concerto for two pianofortes and orchestra, and the 'Emperor' and C minor Concertos of Beethoven. The Albert Hall People's Concerts are six in number, embracing pianoforte and song recitals; chamber music; madrigals by the 'English Singers'; and an orchestral night with Sir Henry Wood as conductor. The Nottingham Philharmonic Society, Mr. Turner's Prize choir, and the William Woolley Choral Society will each present an annual concert, the Nottingham Gleemen will be in evidence, and the Vernon Sadler Choral Society will give various concert recitals of light opera. St. Mary's Choral Society will offer a Christmas performance of 'The Messiah,' &c., and Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion music.

Dr. F. Radcliffe will give a series of organ recitals at St. Mary's Church on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons, and Mr. L. Henniker announces organ recitals at St. Andrew's Church on the second Sunday in each month. Two concerts will take place under the auspices of the Long Eaton Choral Society, two performances by the Long Eaton Orchestral Society also being promised.

PORTSMOUTH AND DISTRICT

This month will see the local concert season again in full swing. The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society, whose prospectus followed close upon the heels of the announcement of the 'international celebrity' series, opens with full orchestra at the Town Hall on October 12 with a classical programme, in which Miss Dorothy Silk will be the vocalist, and Miss Myra Hess will play the Grieg Pianoforte Concerto in A minor. For the proposed British concert on November 17 Mr. Herbert Heyner (vocalist) has been engaged, and Miss Gwendolen Mason will play Pierné's 'Concertstück' for harp and orchestra. Two choral works, Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet' and Vaughan Williams' 'A Sea Symphony,' have been chosen for the nautical concert on December 8, in which Miss Grace Crawford, Mr. Clive Carey, and the Society's full orchestra and choir of three hundred will take part. A popular concert has also been arranged for February 9, the artists including Miss Flora Woodman (vocalist) and Mr. Charles Draper (clarinet). The series will conclude with 'Israel in Egypt'—for which the soloists have not yet been engaged—on March 23.

The North End Choral Society, which re-elected Mr. Ernest C. Birch as hon. conductor and Mr. R. P. Dommett as hon. secretary and treasurer at its annual meeting last month, has decided upon 'The Pirates of Penzance' for the autumn concert on November 25, and has chosen 'Faust' in preference to 'Iolanthe' for the spring event on April 25. Both concerts will be given this season at the Town Hall. For a young organization the Society is making excellent progress, its membership having nearly doubled. There were at the end of last season a hundred and thirty-five subscribing members and a hundred and ninety singing members. The works chosen should suit the Society admirably.

There is a prospect that the Municipal concerts at the Town Hall, which were such a popular feature on Saturday evenings in pre-war days, will be restarted. The matter was brought forward at the monthly meeting of the Borough Council on September 13, and the Town Hall Committee has again been asked to submit a report on the matter. But for the regrettable illness of Mr. Hugh Burry, who had promised to undertake their direction, the concerts would have been re-established last season, when the Council was prepared to spend up to £250 on the project. The idea is now, however, to endeavour to make them self-supporting.

The band season on the South Parade Pier, where the Royal Marine Artillery musicians and those of the Royal Marine Light Infantry have been giving much appreciated performances, has now come to a close, but the Sunday afternoon symphony concerts will be continued. Among the vocalists who have recently appeared at these concerts are Miss Dorothy Colston, Miss Marion Browne, Miss Mary Winter, Mr. Kennedy Arundel, and Mr. John Hardaker.

In connection with the Service bands, a unique event which ought not to pass unnoticed is the gazing of the three brothers O'Donnell, bandmasters (W.O.), Royal Marines, as Directors of Music, with the rank of Lieutenant. Lieut. Percival S. O'Donnell is with the R.M.L.I. at Plymouth; Lieut. Bertram W. O'Donnell and Lieut. Rudolph O'Donnell are both at Portsmouth, the former with the R.M.L.I. at Forton Barracks, Gosport, and the latter with the R.M.A. at Eastney.

An interesting development at Gosport is the formation of an orchestral class for children and young people under the age of eighteen in connection with the local Juvenile Organizations Committee. The class is for the encouragement and development of existing talent, and is in no sense designed for teaching the violin or any other instrument. There are no fees. The conductor, Mr. F. E. Gregory, gives his services voluntarily.

The Fareham Philharmonic Society, with which has been incorporated the Fareham Music Circle, appointed Mr. H. Tutte as president on September 12, Mr. E. Neville as hon. treasurer, and Messrs. B. E. Beer and E. J. Hinxman as joint hon. secretaries. Under the direction of Captain Eugene Spinney, rehearsals were started the following week for a performance of 'Judas Maccabæus,' which is to be given before Christmas.

The Havant Choral Society proposes to produce Stanford's 'The Revenge' and 'Songs of the Fleet' at Havant Town Hall on December 14. The Society's work last season was very successful, and greatly appreciated in the district.

SHEFFIELD

Though the exceptionally long list of musical events of last season is scarcely likely to be matched in that just beginning, the announcements already made are sufficient to ensure an interesting and varied succession of concerts at Sheffield during the winter months.

The most conspicuous lack is in the supply of orchestral music, and this is due to the suspension, for this season at any rate, of the Promenade Concerts. Miss Lily Foxon, however, announces a 'concerto' concert at which her two gifted pupils, Miss Helen Guest and Mr. Stanley Kaye, are to be the pianists, and Mr. Julian Clifford is to conduct. The Sheffield subscription concerts and the 'international celebrity' subscription concerts provide for visits from travelling orchestras—the Hallé Orchestra, with Mr. Hamilton Harty as conductor, and the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra under Mr. Landon Ronald respectively. Mrs. Dorothea Rodgers, who manages the Sheffield series for Messrs. Wilson Peck, has secured an attractive list of artists, including Cortôt, Rubinstein, and Irene Scharer, Bantock, Jelly d'Aranyi, Agnes Nicholls, Kirkby Lunn, Melchior, and Rosing. The announcements of the 'international celebrity' series set out an imposing array of famous names. It can only be hoped that when the time comes these sledgehammers will not be found cracking nuts, of an unnecessarily small variety.

The University is of growing importance as a centre of musical activity. Its musical Society has organized a further series of chamber concerts, at which the Philharmonic, Catterall, Sheffield, and Meredyll Quartets are to appear, and Miss Helen Guest is to give a pianoforte recital. The choral branch will continue its work, and an orchestra of strings is to be formed this session. Both will be conducted by the lecturer in music at the University, Mr. G. E. Linfoot.

The Musical Union (conducted by Dr. Coward) has put down 'Samson and Delilah,' 'The Messiah,' 'The Hymn of Praise,' and Alick Maclean's 'The Annunciation' for performance at its three concerts this season. The last-named work was recently given by this choir at the Scarborough Festival. The Amateur Musical Society is to give Elgar's 'The Kingdom' at its first concert, under the direction of its new conductor, Dr. Staton.

The Foxon 'Five o'clock' concerts are to be continued fortnightly, and the advance programmes of the first five events, which are already in the hands of the public, indicate that the high level of musical interest is to be maintained.

The Sheffield Teachers' Operatic Society is preparing 'The Rose of Persia' for production in December, and the Sheffield Grand Opera Society promises performances of 'Aida' and 'Faust.'

SOUTH WALES

Considerable activity is being manifested in the establishment of local orchestras and choirs (in addition to those already existing) in the mining towns and villages of Glamorgan and Monmouthshire, and the outlook for the forthcoming season is distinctly encouraging. At Merthyr, the Watch Committee has granted Mr. Val Stephens, the manager of the Theatre Royal, permission to hold a series of Sunday concerts in aid of the establishment of an orchestral society for the town with a library of music—a very expensive item. It was stated that there were between two hundred and three hundred players in the town who had no opportunity for orchestral experience. This condition things exists more or less in other towns throughout the district.

The committee of the Cardiff Chamber Music Concerts contemplating another successful season. This Society always imbued with the loftiest ideals, has for eighteen years pioneered the cause of chamber music in Wales. usual, three concerts will be given at the hall of the H. School for Girls. For the first of these, on October 1, the Chamber Music Players (Messrs. Sammons, Tert, Salmond, and Murdoch) have been engaged; the Spence Dyke String Quartet will be heard on November 23; and the programme of the final concert, on February 1, 1922, will be provided by the Edith Robinson String Quartet with Mr. H. Mortimer (clarinet).

Swansea is to be congratulated on having projected a series of six chamber music concerts during the coming season. These have been organized by a committee headed by Mrs. Hunter and Miss D. W. Davies as secretaries, and the programmes are interestingly fresh and varied. The concerts will consist of music for string quartet played by the Birmingham Quartet (October 14), the Spencer Dyke Quartet (November 24), and the Edith Robinson Quartet (February 2). The programmes include works of Herby Howells, Goossens, and Ernest Walker. For the other three concerts—on November 3, January 12, and March 2—well-known local vocalists and instrumentalists from Swansea and district have been engaged, and the programmes include chamber works by Frank Bridge, Benjamin Dale, and Elgar. All the concerts will be held at the Y.M.C.A. Llewelyn Hall.

Of the greatest importance to Newport, and in view of the scarcity of suitable halls to South Wales generally, is a very fine series of four high-class concerts (with a moderate subscription) to be held during the season at the Central Hall, Newport—one of the few halls which has not been annexed for cinematograph purposes. Among the eminent artists engaged M. Cortôt is the most eagerly anticipated. Prof. Granville Bantock will appear as accompanist of his own songs for half a programme. The dates are October 17, November 17, December 15, and January 12.

The Newport Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur E. Sims, is in full activity for its concert on October 24, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'A Tale of Old Japan' will be the work performed. The full arrangements for the season are not yet complete; probably 'Samson and Delilah' will be chosen for the second concert.

The proceedings of the Cardiff Music Club for the season 1921-22 have now been formulated, and the items promised are varied and interesting. For the most part local talent is called upon, but special interest attaches to the lectures on December 16, February 3, and March 31 by Mr. Edith Evans on 'Cross Currents of Contemporary Music,' Mr. Walford Davies on 'Palestrina and Polyphonic Music,' and Mr. Ernest Newman on 'Style, Manner, and Mannerism in Music.'

At Cardiff the Sunday Orchestral Concerts have been resumed—by the Angle Orchestra at the New Theatre, and by the Mortimer Orchestra at the Park Hall. At the first concerts, on September 4, Mr. Lenghi Cellini, a vocalist supported the former, and Mr. Edward Davies the latter. For the second concerts, on September 11, Miss Blodwin Eveleigh and Miss Lilian Stiles-Allen were the artists engaged.

At the concert held at Barnard Castle on September 9 in aid of the Durham County Nursing Association, quartets, duets, and solos were sung by the members of the Darling Operatic Quartet. Miss Connie Mellor (vocalist) was well received. Mr. Alfred Chenhalls accompanied, and gave pianoforte solos by Scriabin and Debussy.

Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' was creditably performed at Leyburn (Wensleydale) Wesleyan Chapel on August 28, by an augmented choir, under the direction of Mr. R. L. Adamson.

Mr. J. C. Clarke, late conductor of the Southport Choral Society and Southport Vocal Union, has been appointed conductor of the Wandsworth Male Choir.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BERLIN

Traditional stories of the first men have frequently been adapted by composers with some success. Years ago Singartner produced at the Darmstadt Court Theatre an opera, 'Kain und Abel,' whose text was steeped in symbolism, whose music, in spite of great beauty, was heavy and dramatic in style. A short time ago Rottenberg conducted Frankfurt, for the first time, Rudi Stephan's opera, 'Die Ten Menschen' (B. Schott, Mayence). It has since been produced at Baden-Baden, and accepted by several other theatres. Wagner's principles as regards vocal declamation are on the whole been retained, but the orchestral language is homophonous. The orchestral palette is overladen in original combinations of sound, and the melodic intention points towards Max Schillings and the Munich school. By an irony of fate Stephan was called to the war when he was busy with studies for an opera dealing with the life of the world. He was not destined to return to his loved art. He lies buried on the battlefields of Galicia. His third work, 'Der Sonnenstürmer,' a dramatic stage oratorio, text and music by Hans Stieber, was recently produced at Chemnitz, where it made a profound impression. Adapting the myth of Prometheus the poet sketches the story of the first men in a new light. Abel goes forth to catch the sun, but he perishes, because his gigantic Promethean deed is not understood by the others. The composer disregards the art and mannerism of d'Albert and Grieg, and returns to the principles of Gluck, which in this instance means progress. The press notices are unanimous concerning the great beauty of the drama, which looked upon as among the greatest works for years past. He calls it 'a song of longing after light and freedom.' Just Roter has dared to write new music to Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream, and his daring has achieved success. The Hamburg performance has shown that it is possible to approach the comedy from a point different from that of Mendelssohn. There is still the fairy element, but is largely mixed with the grotesque.

The thousand and one concerts in honour of Beethoven's hundred and fortieth birthday have not exhausted the love and admiration for this greatest among great musicians. The name of Beethoven is still compelling gathering large audiences. Bonn, Beethoven's birthplace, in this year not ventured upon a special Beethoven festival, but Godesberg, the fashionable health resort not far from Bonn, produced in four days Beethoven's nine symphonies under Michael Taube, and Prof. Max Pauer played the Pianoforte Concerto, Op. 58. The same programmes were submitted in the summer concerts by the logne Opera House orchestra, under Hermann Abendroth. His advocacy was found for the heresy that the Beethoven tradition might at least every second year be broken through, and other composers admitted, as had been the case a year previous, when Bruckner took equal rank with Beethoven. He who wished to hear Bruckner had to travel to Bochum, as a year ago he had to go to Krefeld. It is certain that Bruckner has begun to seize the masses, who do not study the form, but the beauty, the depth, and solemnity of the music. The positive qualities of Bruckner as the collector of the glories of heaven and earth are specially felt when we think of Brahms, whose pessimism comprises the ending of the man of this world.

As an introduction to the Bruckner-Fest at Bochum, the Munchner Streichquartett (Szanto, Saupe, Haas, and Schleiz), together with F. Geistfeld, of Bochum, played at the Morgenfeier the seldom-heard Intermezzo from a sthumous movement of a Quintet for strings, as well as a Quintet in F. The main interest of the whole festival centred round the fourth, seventh, eighth, and ninth symphonies, conducted by Schulz-Dornburg, a young, able, and enthusiastic musician, whose power of suggestion used these colossal works with a living breath. Their intricate nature had been brought home to large audiences in two lectures given by Dr. Karl Grunsky (Stuttgart), who, with Herr Gerard Bunck (Dortmund), played masterly extracts from them, arranged for two pianofortes. Each of the four chief concerts opened with an unaccompanied male chorus, conducted by Chormeister Geyr, and Herr Arno Schütze produced the great Mass in F minor, with the solo quartet (Henry Wolf, W. Wolter-Piefer, H. Kühlborn, and E. Schmidt-Carlem). The final concert was devoted to the ninth Symphony and the Te Deum. Three thousand listeners, who filled the big hall, overwhelmed conductor and performers with enthusiastic applause.

All Germany celebrated the four hundredth anniversary of Luther's nailing his celebrated theses upon the door of the castle church at Wittenberg. The churches overflowed with eager Protestants anxious to give testimony of their faith, the culminating point being generally the singing of Luther's powerful chorale, 'Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott.' Gross-Weischode, the Nestor of Westphalian organists, produced in Christchurch, Bochum, a new oratorio, 'Luther,' in four parts—Luther in the convent, at Rome, on the way to Worms, and before emperor and empire. The choral writing—partly rhythmic chorales, after the style of the old masters, partly lyrical movements cleverly constructed—has culminating points in the fugal psalm of thanksgiving and the Hallelujah chorus. In connection with the Lutherfeste, Ernst Hofmann & Co., of Berlin, have published a book by A. E. Berger, 'Luther und die deutsche Kultur,' wherein much space is given to Luther the musician. The great reformer was a passionate lover of good music, having received a sound musical education. He was well acquainted with the old Church modes, with composition, and with the style and the works of eminent composers (Josquin des Prés, Senfl, Walter). Although an admirer of the vocal music of the Roman Catholic Church, he laboured mightily in the cause of congregational singing, good results accruing after the melody was taken away from the tenor and given to the treble. It is of great interest to read how, through Luther, Church music was influenced by the Volkslied. He recommended thorough instruction in the schools, and encouraged the founding of boys' choirs, called Kantoreien, which attained in course of time a high degree of excellence. These Kantoreien have their counterpart in the choirs of St. Thomas, Leipzig, and the Kreuzschule, Dresden, the latter of which has a history of seven hundred years. During the summer the Dutch had opportunities of listening to the excellent singing of this choir, which, under Otto Richter, gave nine concerts at Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Utrecht, The Hague, Leyden, Arnheim, Amersfort, and Zeist, in aid of German children, innocent victims of the war, seeking health in Holland. The foremost critics, even of those papers hostile to Germany, are unanimous in their verdict that such singing was never before heard in Holland. The Algemeenen Handelsblad writes:

'The achievements of this choir are not only the result of many years' instruction and study. There are the echoes of a culture extending over many centuries, the culture of a nation with a longing for beauty and an inclination towards mysticism, that desires the expression of misfortune and enthusiasm, guilt and confidence, in line, colour, and tone—a nation that has preserved its music as a consolation even in times of disaster. Never has Germany collected a richer treasure of true noble Volksmusik than during the stormy period of the Thirty Years' War. And who knows what she will collect during this time of humiliation? None can foster a choir like that of the Dresden Kreuzschule but a nation that regards music as something different from an article of luxury that may be dispensed with. . . . What can we show against it? . . . If we do not come near the German culture, we may with such impressions try to atone for that which has been neglected.'

Prof. Richter, as well as Herr Bernhard Pfannstiehl, the organ virtuoso from Dresden, and the young pianist Herr Heinrich Bergzog, were everywhere honoured with bouquets of Dutch flowers, laurel wreaths, and the first-named received at Leyden a case of old Dutch silver spoons.

It is astonishing how the Mozart tradition is being handed down from generation to generation. Changes of conductor, of period, and of personnel have not changed the tradition. This is the more astonishing, as Dr. Bernhard

Paumgartner, the director of the Mozarteum at Salzburg, himself a musical historian by profession, inclines as creative artist altogether towards modern tendencies. For this year's Salzburg-Tage he constructed a programme that for contrast and purity of tone left nothing to be desired, a programme that contained many an unknown item. Seven concerts as well as a Serenade and a Requiem in the Cathedral represent an enormous amount of work. The first concert brought an almost unknown Symphony in C, from Mozart's youth, and the second concert an Adagio for cor anglais, two violins, and violoncello, discovered by Dr. Paumgartner, and hitherto never performed. Of special interest was an Adagio and Rondo for harmonika (i.e., musical glasses), flute, oboe, tenor, and violoncello, composed by Mozart shortly before his death, and dedicated to a blind lady, Marianna Kirchgässner, a virtuoso upon the instrument.* Frau Elly Ney played the Pianoforte Concerto in B flat, conducted by her husband, Herr Willy van Hoogstraaten, who also interpreted the 'Kleine Nachtmusik.' Besides the 'Requiem,' an 'Adoremus' (hitherto unknown), and the 'Ave verum' never performed with the help of eminent solo singers from Vienna. A breath of the past was wafted to the listeners by the performance of the 'Haffner Serenade' (written for the wedding of Frau Haffner, 1776), and a Notturmo (1776) for four very small orchestras in the old courtyard, in the style of Mozart's time, i.e., the place being lighted up with coloured paper lamps and candlesticks. Twice the concerts were interrupted by performances of the Internationale Sommerschule organized by the Liga für Friede und Freiheit. Miss Say Ashworth's Ancoats Girls' Choir, from Manchester, sang madrigals and other music. The choir was much admired for its purity of style and beauty of intonation.

F. ERCKMANN.

PARIS

A NEW OPÉRETTE

Concerts (indoors) are at an end till the winter season begins, their place being taken by the open-air variety, and of these there are but few. Amongst the last-named the most important are those which have drawn all Paris to the Tuileries Gardens. Some of the condensed opera performances given thereat certainly have left something to be desired, for the singers have not been of equal excellence. The orchestra, however, has distinguished itself, and the management, in its wisdom, has given prominence to compositions which, though worthy attention, are seldom heard at more pretentious orchestral concerts. La direction also has kept Stravinsky and other Russian composers in the background, arguing, very properly, that during the summer Paris heard more than enough of them. Indeed, at one time it seemed as if Russian music and Russian performers had a monopoly of the programmes.

The only novelty of the month has been Jean Rioux's 'Le Cocq' a chanté,' which has had a successful production at the Gaieté-Lyrique. The action passes during the Second Empire, the plot dealing with François de Gerny, a courtier, who has been banished for a misdemeanour. The Emperor, however, relents: François the gay is informed that, if he engages himself, within forty-eight hours, to Arlette de Vaufrèges, a lady-in-waiting, all will be well. Arlette agrees, provided François refrains, for forty-eight hours, from making love to another. The lady disguises herself, that she may test the affections of Monsieur, and after sundry adventures marries him. The music is 'popular,' but pleasing, tuneful without being obvious, and reflects the period while aptly illustrating the situations and the words.

The Opéra has benefited by the absence of some of its leading lights at the seaside and elsewhere, where they have filled engagements. Some of these people have been 'borne on the strength' for many years, and truth allied with justice forces the opinion that they are extremely fortunate. In their absence other artists, who sometimes languish, have appeared in important rôles, with advantage to all concerned. Much the same thing has happened at the Opéra-Comique, which probably has a longer list of performers at its disposal than any opera-house in the world. This establishment also retains singers whose dictation survives long after their voices have ceased to serve. The performance of 'Madame Butterfly,' for example, was remarkable for a Cio-Cio-San who was, to put it kindly, overweighted in almost every page of the part. On another occasion 'Le Roi d'Ys' had for its baritone exponent an artist whose voice, like 'The Light of Other Days,' has 'faded,' a circumstance which did not prevent his trying conclusions with the infinitely more arduous rôle of Scarpia. A favoured tenor (he has been favoured for several decades) also is a pillar of the institution. His voice is scarcely an asset, but he possesses more admirers than any half-dozen members of the company: 'Oui, mon cher, j'avoue que mon voix n'est pas grand chose. Mais quelle diction! Comme il dit bien!' Correct pronunciation and distinct enunciation are evidently, are the French singer's best friends.

At other theatres satisfactory representations have been given, the répertoire having included interesting works which are seldom heard outside France, or, for that matter, outside Paris. Monsigny's 'La Deserteur' (with a fine baritone part), and Grétry's 'Les Deux Avides,' for example, have figured in the programme, as also has Adam's 'Le Postillon de Longjumeau,' which, many years ago, was Carl Rosa success. And Maillart's 'Les Dragons Villars'—a most sprightly thing—never knows an empty seat.

'THE FLOWER OF ENGLISH MUSIC'

Several Parisians who have lately returned from holidaying in London are loud in their praise of the Queen's Hall Orchestra. They, however, confess the disappointment in not having heard more British compositions. 'We did not,' they observe, 'cross the more deceptive Channel to renew acquaintance with the works which are given often—too often—at Paris. We wished to learn something of the flower of English music; but yet Sir Wood did not give us enough of it. With so many conservatoires the output surely is far greater than we have been led to believe. . . . The pilgrims are not disposed to speak of the singers whom they heard. In the interests of the respected entente cordiale the tactful ones elect to remain silent. But amongst themselves they deplore 'singing which lacks style and charm, and voices which frequently are without colour.' Happily for London's credit, the sagacious persons are unsparing in their praise for British instrumentalists, for whose execution they have a great admiration. As to the critics, no verdict is offered, owing presumably to the visitors knowing no language but their own. Thus are the mighty exempt from criticism. The defect in the visitors' education is to be regretted, for the critic is the worse for being criticised—intelligently.

Talking of critics, the Paris variety will, so far as opera is concerned, be kept busy next season. At the Opéra and the Opéra-Comique new works and revivals are promised, all of which, it is said (by those who are most interested in the production) have much to commend them. Judging from recent activities, the reprises will prove more entertaining than the novelties. Unfortunately, the modern French composer, though an adept at musicianship, achieves singularly unmusical music. An instance, furnished by Vincent d'Indy's 'La Légende de Saint Christophe.' During the past few months it has been accorded a number of performances at the Opéra, but scarcely anyone has been proof against the pages of what the elaborate score is partly composed. The fact is, that Parisians, while jeering at the Verdi structural scheme, really prefer 'Aïda' and 'Rigoletto' to 'La Légende.'

ENGLISH HYMNS

The few English compositions which were heard at Paris last season having proved interesting, and having afforded a certain amount of pleasure, musical Paris would like to hear other examples. True, the well-informed Parisian is found in the music of the British impressionist composer, repetition of the Debussy idiom, a quality which is flattering to his self-esteem rather than otherwise. Others who * Admirers of Goldsmith will remember how, in his 'Vicar of Wakefield' (1769), he makes the town-ladies talk of nothing else but 'high life, pictures, Shakespeare, and the musical glasses.' Even scientific men were interested in this passing fancy. Benjamin Franklin improved upon the instrument, and Gluck played 'at the Little Theatre in the Haymarket, April 23, 1746, a concerto on twenty-six drinking glasses tuned with spring water, accompanied with the whole band, being a new instrument of his own invention.'

I profess to be anything but frankly ignorant of English musical progress, shudder at the mention of the subject, the horrors of 'Tipperary' and 'Keep the home fires burning,' and the manner in which these ditties were ordered during the war, are still fresh in their retentive memory. 'Do the English,' they innocently ask, 'only compose and sing hymns?'

Parisians no doubt have forgotten that 'The Bohemian Girl' once was the rage at Paris. Opera was in a bad way, and Balfe, being a very daring person, convinced the management of the period that by transferring Arline and her visionary 'marble halls,' the insouciant Thaddeus, the body Arnheim, and the farouche Devilshoof, from England to France, money would be made. A week after the production Balfe wrote to a friend: 'My old "girl" has saved the situation.'

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

The summer musical season at Rome, is as usual decidedly flat, and although this year the city has been filled overflowing for the Congress of the Catholic Young Men's societies, in which over thirty thousand youths participated, the event was not productive of any musical celebration worthy of record, excepting perhaps the concert given in the Vatican by the band of the Gendarmes for the seventh anniversary of the Pope's coronation.

The autumn opera season is at present running at the Regina Theatre, with 'La forza del destino,' 'Traviata,' 'Faust,' 'Ruy-Blas,' 'Jone,' 'Lohengrin'; and at the open-air theatre La Pariola, a successful season with 'A Bohème,' 'Madame Butterfly,' and 'Aida' has just closed.

The widow of Caruso has generously offered to found a school for 'little singers' in the children's asylum of Arcigliaro (Naples), in memory of her husband. The school will consist of a large hall for concerts, &c., with dormitories and schools for fifty children who show a musical aptitude. The cost of erection is calculated at half a million Italian lire, and the annual maintenance at a hundred thousand lire. The director of the New York Metropolitan has been invited to act as treasurer of the committee.

The long talked of monument to Palestrina is at last accomplished fact, and on October 2 a statue to the great polyphonist will be unveiled in his native town of Palestrina. The celebrations will be continued throughout the following week, and will include a performance of the Missa Papae Marcello and three concerts of Palestrinian music, besides a vocal contest presided over by Vessella. The direction of the concerts has been entrusted to Casimiri, who is undoubtedly the finest interpreter of Palestrina at the present day.

LEONARD PEYTON.

SPAIN

SAN SEBASTIAN

During the summer months the musical activities of Spain concentrate themselves in the beautiful sea-resort of San Sebastian. Owing to the unsettled outlook in Morocco—which reacts upon the vital ganglion of Spain to a greater extent perhaps than is generally imagined—musical life here is not quite assumed its wonted aspect. In addition came an exaggerated demands of the orchestral musicians, a factor which decided the Casino management to reduce the strength of the band to fifty performers. Under these conditions it was not deemed advisable to re-engage Señor Bobos, the conductor of the Madrid Symphony Orchestra. With such resources the choice of really high-class programmes would obviously have been hampered owing to the impossibility of executing the more important orchestral compositions of to-day. For these reasons the 'Concerts artistiques' have lost much of their former distinction, the scheme having had to be changed so as to allot the major part of the programme to the soloist of the moment. The entire charge of the concerts, both artistic and popular, rests with the permanent conductor of the Casino society, Señor A. Larrocha, who is discharging a not very congenial task with much credit. At all events, he makes the most of limitations unavoidably imposed, and, as a rule, succeeds in presenting thoroughly acceptable readings of the concerted numbers. It must be added that the band comprises some very good performers, and leaves nothing to be desired in the way of efficiency.

Since July 4 there has been a continual coming and going of instrumental soloists. They mostly appear at two or three concerts in succession, a system that reflects the incidence of the still prevalent passport restrictions. I can speak only of those artists who were announced during August, and must content myself with citing the names of others, along with the chief works performed. In the order of appearances these were Mlle. Lucée Caffaret (pianoforte—concertos by Saint-Saëns, Schumann, and Grieg); M. Maurice Maréchal (violoncello—concertos by Saint-Saëns, Schumann, and Lalo); Madame Wanda Landowska (concertos by Mozart and Bach). The first artist of the August group that I heard was Señor Fernandez Bordas, a violinist of Madrid, who, although not revealing an impeccable technique, atoned for some shortcomings by refined readings of works such as Mendelssohn's E minor and Mozart's D major Concertos. Next I heard M. Fernand Pollain, a violoncellist of Paris, who, curiously enough, in concertos by Haydn, Saint-Saëns, and Boccherini, presented exactly the reverse qualities. Probably the biggest hit of the season was made by the Lyonnese pianist, M. Eugène Reuschel, who wields a technique such as only very few exponents possess. Seeing that he is barely nineteen years of age, it would be unreasonable to demand maturity of taste, but its lack was severely felt in smaller works of Chopin, Debussy, and Saint-Saëns. The last-named composer's fourth Concerto seemed under M. Reuschel's hands to serve merely for a display of stupendous technique. On the other hand, he gave us a singularly fine interpretation of Liszt's Concerto No. 1. On August 22, 24, and 26, the Russian violinist, M. Serge Teneenbaum, was to have appeared as soloist. But he came no further than the Spanish frontier, where the authorities turned him back.

As many foreign artists elected to be heard in works that revealed little discrimination, I must not close without endeavouring to impress upon all who desire to be heard in Spain, the importance of not presenting pseudo-Spanish art. During my stay in the Peninsula I was happily afforded every facility for studying the real creative art of the country, both in its exemplification of folk-music and in the works of the foremost Spanish composers. Thus I have come to understand the nature of the affront to national susceptibilities that is gratuitously proffered by works that seek superficially to capture the Iberian spirit and idiom. W. HARMANS.

Miscellaneous

At Bishopsgate Institute, E.C., Mr. Francis W. Sutton has arranged to give a series of twelve luncheon-hour chamber concerts on Mondays from October 10. It is hoped to include in the programmes string quartets; pianoforte quintets, quartets, and trios; sonatas; and incidental items such as arrangements of popular works, with occasional use of the organ.

The Music Society whose secretarial address is 37, Gordon Square, W.C. 1, announces a season of six concerts at St. John's Institute, Tufton Street, Westminster, from October 11 to March 14. The programmes promise a number of modern chamber works, some for the first time.

On resigning the honorary conductorship of the Battersea, Clapham, and Wandsworth Choral Union, Mr. George Lane was presented with a gold watch in memory of eighteen years of happy work. His successor is Mr. D. Ritson Smith.

The eighteen weeks' season of Gilbert and Sullivan Opera at Princes Theatre, London, opens on October 3 with 'The Gondoliers.'

Madame Agnes Larkcom has returned from a year's tour to America, Japan, Hong Kong, and Australia.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company will be at Covent Garden from October 17 to December 10.

Answers to Correspondents

S. W. H.—We have not space to refer to all the articles on the subject. Perhaps you can get access to the past volumes of the Musical Times and hunt them up. A valuable book for lecture purposes is Curwen's 'Studies in Worship Music.' We believe it is now out of print, but there must be some copies get-at-able. Perhaps it is in your public library. The descant book to which you refer is probably either 'The Tenor Tune Book' (Faith Press) or Dr. Alan Gray's 'Collection of Descants' (Cambridge University Press). Obtain also the pamphlets issued by the Church Music Society (Henry Frowde, Amen Corner).

'PAUL.'—No doubt the appliance would help you. The rate of progress, of course, depends upon frequency and regularity of use. Read the directions carefully. Perhaps the inventor will advise you if you have any special disability.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Albéric Magnard. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ... ..	683
Some Italian Composers of To-day. VII. Vittorio Gui. By Guido M. Gatti ... ..	685
The False Masterpieces of Music. By Camille Saint-Saëns ... ..	687
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XXI. Robert Jones. By W. H. Grattan Flood ... ..	689
A Lost Handel Manuscript. By W. Barclay Squire ... ..	690
The Hereford Musical Festival. By Herbert Thompson ( with Portraits ) ... ..	692
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ... ..	694
Modesty or Arrogance? By Alfred Kalisch ... ..	696
The Place of Music in a Liberal Education. Sir Henry Hadow's Address to the British Association. By Alfred Kalisch ... ..	697
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ... ..	698
New Music ... ..	700
London Concerts ... ..	703
Chamber Music for Amateurs ... ..	704
Church and Organ Music ... ..	704
National Union of Organists' Associations. Annual Conference	704
Summer School of Church Music: The Diary of a Member ( illustrated ) ... ..	706
A Dictionary of Organs and Organists ... ..	717
Letters to the Editor ... ..	718
Obituary ... ..	722
'La Chauve-Souris' ... ..	722
Sixty Years Ago ... ..	722
The London Concert Season ... ..	722
Choral Society Programmes ... ..	723
An International Chamber Music Competition ... ..	723
The Rotterdam Carillon ... ..	723
Niccolò Jommelli. By Claude Trevor ... ..	723
Music in the Provinces ... ..	725
Musical Notes from Abroad ... ..	731
Miscellaneous ... ..	733
Answers to Correspondents ... ..	734

MUSIC:

'I would I were the Glow-worm.' Four-part Song for Mixed Voices. Arranged for S.A.T.B. by HAROLD RHODES ... .. 707

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. 'Orpheus with his lute.' Part-Song arranged for S.A.T.B. By Edward German.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—"Author of Life Divine." Anthem. (No. 1091, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

HANDEL.—"You see, my friends" and "Amaz'd to find the foe so near." Recitative and Air from "Belshazzar." 1s.

HOWELLS, H.—Three Psalm Preludes. (Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series, Nos. 82, 83, and 84.) 1s. 6d. each.

JAMES, C. E.—"None other Lamb." Hymn Tune, "Mona." 1d.

NORTH, J. W. ALLEN.—"They that sow in tears." Anthem. 4d.

PALMER, C. C.—"Thema Ostinata." (No. 85, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 1s. 6d.

RHODES, HAROLD.—"I would I were the glow-worm." Part-song for S.A.T.B., set to the London-derry Air. (No. 944, The Musical Times.) 2d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 352), contains the following music in both notations: "The Rainbow." Unison Song. By ALEC ROWLEY. "Let us o'er the waters go." Unison Song. Arranged from an Egyptian Tune by EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN. 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

THOMSON, D. C.—"The Knight of Bethlehem." Song. 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2359. "The Evening Star." Four-part Song. G. TOOTELL 3d.

No. 2360. "Tewkesbury Road." Four-part Song. E. T. SWEETING 3d.

No. 2365. "Corinna." Three-part Song for Female Voices. ETHEL BOYCE 3d.

No. 2366. "Sing we and chaunt it." Ballet for Five Voices. T. MORLEY 2d.

No. 2367. "Sweet and Low" (Songs from "The Princess," No. 1). Part-Song for Female Voices. G. T. HOLST 2d.

No. 2368. "Orpheus with his lute." Four-part Song, arranged for Mixed Voices. EDWARD GERMAN 3d.

No. 2369. "The Village Blacksmith." Part-Song for Mixed Voices. Arranged by ERNEST NEWTON. WEISS 3d.

TRUMAN, ERNEST.—Grand Pedal Solo on "O Sanctissima." For Organ. 1s. 6d.

TWENTY Short and Easy Pieces for the Organ, 1 various Composers. Set IV. 5s.

WALE, W. H.—"God is our Hope and Strength" Motet for Men's Voices, with Organ Accompaniment. 1s. 6d.

WILLIAMS, C. LEE.—Twelve Chants. 2d.

WOOD-SMITH, R. F.—Miniature Suite for String Quartet. Score, 2s. Set of Parts, 4s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK

BILBRO, M.—"I love Thee, my Saviour." Sacred Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

BONOVAN, R. F.—Te Deum laudamus in 20 cents (10d.).

FORSYTH, C.—"To America." A Choral Rhythm for Mixed Voices. 15 cents (8d.).

HALL, W. H.—"The Watchman of the Lord" Short Anthem for Advent or General Use 12 cents (6d.).

JEPSON, H. B.—Second Sonata. A Pageant for Organ. $2.50 (10s.).

LEMARE, C.—"Dream Song." Song.

MARTIN, M. PA.—Introits for Sundays and Holy Days.

FOR SALE.—Magnificent 3-Manual and Pedal REED ORGAN, by Mason & Hamlin. Gilded pipe for 32 stops, excellent condition. Would suit small church, mission, large private house. Cheap for cash. Styles, 114, Lonsdale Street, W., Hull.

FOR SALE.—PIANO PEDAL BOARD ATTACHMENT and STOOL. CCC-F. R.C.O. See Condition as new. Price, £10. For particulars, Mrs. Hint 198, Wanstead Park Road, Ilford.

MANDOLINE BANJO in case. Bargain, 35s. or exchange for violin. Write "F. H.," 5, Berthwick Road, Hendon, N.W. 9.

THE ORGANIST of the Foundling will shortly have a VACANCY for a Pupil-Assistant. Apply by letter to Dr. Davan Wetton, 19, Pembridge Mansions, Moscow Road, W. 2.

WANTED.—Full Score, Orchestral, and Score Parts of Philipp Emanuel Bach's 'CELO CONCERTO' Full particulars and price to be sent to Townsend & Thoms 79, George Street, Edinburgh.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy "SONGS OF THE NIGHT" (OAKLEY). Two sets: Nos. 1-4 and 5-8. Price, 2s. each set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

WILL anyone SHARE Musical Times? Can be posted within first week of publication. Old copies of three. "D. M. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Ward Street, W. 1.

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC and ORCHESTRAL PARTS to Oratorios, Cantatas. List on receipt of stationery. "S.," 9, Beaufort Gardens, Ilford.

ELKIN & CO.'S PIANO AND STRING SERIES.

NEW SERIES OF GOOD MODERN PIECES SPECIALLY ARRANGED FOR PIANO, TWO VIOLINS, 'CELLO, AND BASS AD LIB.

CARISSIMA ... ..	Edward Elgar	8. REVERIE ... ..	Ed. MacDowell
ROSEMARY ... ..	Edward Elgar	9. DREAM CASTLES ... ..	Brian Hope
INTERMEZZO ... ..	Cyril Scott	10. NOCTURNETTE ... ..	Brian Hope
PASSACAGLIA ... ..	Cyril Scott	11. TWO EASTERN SONGS	Agnes Mary Lang
THREE LITTLE WALTZES (No. 1)	Cyril Scott	12. CORONACH ... ..	Edgar Barratt
THREE LITTLE WALTZES (No. 2)	Cyril Scott	13. MENUET ANTIQUE ... ..	Robert Elkin
VESPERALE ... ..	Cyril Scott

Price, each, 2s. 6d. net.

"An excellent new departure. . . . Should be extremely popular in places where resources are limited; and light but not noisy music is required."—Musical Opinion.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

ESSAY. — A.R.C.O. — "THE RUDIMENTS OF CRITICISM." Four valuable models with hints. Enclose 3s. 6d.
"Essay," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ITHOGRAPHING and DUPLICATING. Send
MS. and stamp for estimate, Ibbotson & Co., 25, York Street, Wakefield.

CHAMBER ORGAN FOR SALE.

FREE-MANUAL ELECTRIC ORGAN (the property of W. H. len, Esq., Bromham House, Bedford), built by Norman & Beard in 1913, containing 19 stops and 8 couplers, detached console, electric motor and blower.

Perfect condition - - Price £1,500.

Apply to William Hill & Son and Norman & Beard, Ltd., 372, York Road, Camden Road, London, N. 7.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

PRICES SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICA-TION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION
WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

WIGMORE HALL.

CLASSICAL CONCERT

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th, at 8.15.

Under the direction of A. E. MILGROM.

KONTOROVITCH (Violin).

OTSCHARKOFF ('Cello).

KRISH (Piano).

KITTY LACKINGTON (Contralto).

Tickets ... .. 5s. 9d., 3s., 2s. 4d.,

At the Hall, and at MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION, 324, REGENT STREET, W.1 (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

WILL BE PUBLISHED THIS MONTH.

FUGUE IN C MINOR

By J. S. BACH.

TRANSCRIBED FOR FULL ORCHESTRA
By EDWARD ELGAR.

Full Score - 10s. 6d. String Parts - 3s. 4d.
Wind Parts (on hire only).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Through the night of doubt and sorrow."

New Setting for Congregational Singing with Faux Bourdon (optional) and Free Organ Accompaniment to Unison voices

By
DR. WALKER ROBSON.

PRICE THREEPENCE.

JOHN TRAPP, 9, BROADWAY PARADE, CROUCH END, N.3.

Re NICHOLSON & LORD, Ltd., Vicarage Place,
Walsall, Pipe-Organ Builders.

'Sale by Tender of the old-established BUSINESS carried on by the above, consisting of

- (1) LEASEHOLD PREMISES.
- (2) GOODWILL AND NAME.
- (3) THE VALUABLE TUNING CONTRACTS.
- (4) THE BUSINESS AS A GOING CONCERN.

The Premises are well and adequately adapted and equipped with modern machinery for the manufacturing and erection of Pipe Organs and all kinds of woodwork, and the purchaser of Lots 1 and 2 is to have the option of taking the whole or any portion of the stock, machinery, and plant at a valuation.

For further particulars and forms of Tender, with dates to view and date of opening tenders, apply to Messrs.

MELLORS, BASDEN, & MELLORS, Chartered Accountants,
1, King John's Chambers, Nottingham.

POPPLETON & APPLEBY, Chartered Accountants, Corporation Street, Birmingham.

VINCENT & GOODRICH, Incorporated Accountants, 13, Queen Street, London, E.C.4.

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES.

MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED, beg leave to announce that they have a good supply of Copies of the

HANDEL FESTIVAL SELECTIONS

FOR THE YEARS 1906 AND 1912, which they will supply in quantities to Choral Societies only at the special price of ONE SHILLING NET.

1906.

PART I. (174 pages.)

A SELECTION FROM "ISRAEL IN EGYPT."

RECIT.	...	Now there arose a new King
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	And the children of Israel sighed
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	He spake the word
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	He gave them hailstones for rain
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	He rebuked the Red Sea
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	He led them through the deep
CHORUS	...	But the waters
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	And Israel saw that great work
CHORUS	...	And believed the Lord
DUET	...	The Lord is a man of war
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	Thy right hand, O Lord
AIR	...	The enemy said
AIR	...	Thou shalt bring them in
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	The Lord shall reign
RECIT.	...	For the horse of Pharaoh
DOUBLE CHORUS	...	The Lord shall reign
RECIT.	...	And Miriam the prophetess
SOLO AND CHORUS	...	Sing ye to the Lord

PART II.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTION.

VERTURE	...	"Siroe"
R	...	Return, O God of Hosts ( Samson )
CHORUS	...	See the proud chief ( Deborah )
R	...	More sweet is that name ( Semele )
R	...	Oh! had I Jubal's lyre ( Joshua )
RECIT. AND AIR	...	I rage ( Acis and Galatea )
	...	O ruddier than the cherry ( Acis and Galatea )
CHORUS	...	Then round about the starry throne ( Samson )
R	...	Lord, to Thee ( Theodora )
ENNET	...	"Berenice"
R AND CHORUS	...	Still caressing, and caressed ( Alceste )
RECIT. AND AIR	...	{ Where shall I fly? } ( Hercules )
	...	{ See, see they come }
R AND CHORUS	...	The trumpet's loud clangor ( Ode for St. Cecilia's Day )
CHORUS	...	Gird on thy sword ( Saul )

APPENDIX.

R	...	Care Selve ( Atalanta )
RECIT.	...	Fron di tenere } ( Xerxes )
R	...	Ombra ma fù }
R	...	Si tra I ceppi ( Berenice )
R	...	Let the bright Seraphim ( Samson ) 1912.

PART I. (191 pages.)

A SELECTION FROM "SAMSON."

No.
1.	OVERTURE
3.	CHORUS...	Awake the trumpet's lofty sound
13.	RECIT.	Matchless in might
14.	AIR	Total eclipse
16.	CHORUS...	O first created beam
20.	RECIT.	The good we wish for
21.	AIR	Thy glorious deeds
31.	CHORUS...	Then round about the starry throne
35.	AIR	Return, O God of hosts
57.	AIR	Honour and arms
67.	CHORUS...	Fixed in His everlasting seat
78.	AIR	Great Dagon has subdued our foe
79.	CHORUS...	Great Dagon has subdued our foe
87.	AIR	Ye sons of Israel
88.	CHORUS...	Weep, Israel
95.	AIR	Let the bright Seraphim
96.	CHORUS...	Let their celestial concerts

PART II.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTION.

ORCHESTRA	...	Concerto Grosso for Strings (No. 1)
CHORUS	...	Wretched lovers ( Acis and Galatea )
RECIT. AND AIR	{	Rasserena, O Madre } ( Sosarme )
		Rendi 'l sereno al ciglio }
AIR	...	Lusinghe più care ( Alessandra )
RECIT. AND AIR	{	Lo, here my love } ( Acis and Galatea )
		Love in her eyes }
CHORUS	...	Ye tutelard gods ( Belshazzar )
AIR	...	Vinto è l' amor ( Ottone )
ORCHESTRA	...	Dance of Sailors ( Rodrigo )
RECIT. AND AIR	{	Tyrannic love } ( Susanna )
		Ye verdant hills }
SOLO AND CHORUS	...	As from the power ( St. Cecilia's Day )

APPENDIX.

RECIT. AND AIR	{	O worse than death } ( Theodora )
		Angels, ever bright and fair }
RECIT. AND AIR	{	Deeper and deeper still } ( Jephtha )
		Waft her, Angels }
RECIT. AND AIR	{	Fron di Tenere } ( Serse )
		Ombra mai fù }
AIR	...	Del Minacciar del vento ( Ottone )
ORCHESTRA	...	Overture ( Giustino )
AIR	...	Si tra i ceppi ( Berenice )
AIR	...	"Oh! had I Jubal's lyre" ( Joshua )
AIR	...	Where'er you walk ( Semele )
RECIT. AND AIR	{	I feel the Deity within } ( Judas )
		Arm, arm, ye brave }

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

“Serbian and Macedonian Folk-Songs.”

FOR

LECTURES AND CLASS-SINGING

COLLECTED BY

RICHARD J. C. CHANTER.

COMPLETE, FOUR SHILLINGS NET CASH.

CARY &amp; CO.,

13-15, MORTIMER STREET, LONDON, W.1.

TO CONTRALTOS.

“THE IRISH WIDOW'S LAMENT FOR HER SON.”

TONE-POEM FOR ORGAN, CONTRALTO VOICE, AND HARP (OR PIANOFORTE)

BY

A. M. GIFFORD.

WORDS BY

LILY MARCUS.

Price, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Or from the Composer, “Avondale,” Victoria Avenue, Hunstanton.

A COMMUNION SERVICE IN MODAL STYLE FOR UNISON SINGING.

BY C. E. HOVLAND.

Organ copies, 6d. People's part, 3d. Postage extra.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

BLACKBURN'S EDITION OF ORATORIOS

Edited by ARTHUR PEARSON.

HYMN OF PRAISE.
ST. PAUL.
CREATION.JUDAS.
ELIJAH.
WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

Price 1s. 6d. each, 25% discount allowed to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

To introduce, a sample will be sent for 1s., or the six assorted as above for 5s., post free to officials, stating position held, when sending.

Ask for samples of our SACRED CANTATAS. A large selection to choose from.

JOHN BLACKBURN LTD., MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS LIMITED

EVERY CHOIRMASTER, TEACHER OF SINGING AND ORGANIST SHOULD READ

Church Choir Training

A NEW BOOK BY

DR. H. W. RICHARDS.

It is a relief when such an authority as Dr. H. W. Richards comes forward with a practical handbook of Choir-Training.

It contains an immense amount of concise and helpful guidance in every aspect of the Choirmaster's art—Try a Boy's Voice—Breathing—Voice Production—Vow Sounds—Consonants—Intonation—Expression—Balance Ensemble—Men's Voices—Psalms and Hymns—Rehearsal and Church Music—Management of a Choir—Conducting and Teaching. “Choir-Training,” by H. W. Richards, worth its weight in treasury notes (gold not being available).

Demy 8vo, Paper Covers, 3s. net.

Cloth Boards, 5s.

The Organ Accompaniment

OF THE

Church Services

BY

H. W. RICHARDS,

MUS. DOC., ETC.

Professor of the Organ and Choir Training at the Royal Academy of Music; Organist and Choirmaster of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, W.

This Book is intended as a practical guide to the Organist Student in his very essential work of accompaniment.

Demy 8vo, Cloth Boards, 5s. net.

Write for special Order Form to

JOSEPH WILLIAMS LIMITED

32, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, W.1.

REDUCED PRICE.

A

WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a Special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

TEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

Stiff Paper Cover.

A few copies in the original cloth binding are still to be had at the above reduced price.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This cheery book . . . is playfully anecdotal . . . The author of these pleasantly written recollections . . . has much of interest to unfold.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the theme.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page is filled with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Frederick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

SATURDAY REVIEW.

An autobiography of a chatty, gossipy order. . . . It deals now and again with serious musical topics, more particularly, of course, those which have come within the orbit of the author's own wide professional experience; and when it does so it is not only interesting, but instructive and valuable.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

ATHENÆUM.

A pleasant and amusing record of a peaceful, busy life . . . his reminiscences are told lightly and with humour.

CITY PRESS.

A more chatty autobiography has not been published for a long while . . . is deeply interesting.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

A charming book. Readers will see that "A Westminster Pilgrim" is a very pleasant companion, whose gossip will cheer other pilgrims for many days to come.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The reader of this delightful volume has the somewhat rare experience of perusing a life-story without wondering whether he has chanced to stray into some advertisement columns.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

THE QUEEN.

Nothing could be more sprightly—genial.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE ORGAN.
(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s.	d.
60.	THREE CHORALE PRELUDES ... .. Harold E. Darke	3	0
61.	SOLEMN PRELUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1	6
62.	INTERMEZZO ... .. Hugh Blair	2	3
63.	CAPRICCIETTO ... .. Hugh Blair	2	3
64.	POSTLUDE ... .. Hugh Blair	1	6
65.	POSTLUDE (with Violins ad lib. ) ... A. C. Mackenzie	1	6
66.	FANTASIA ON THE TUNE "TWIRGWYN" ... T. J. Morgan	2	3
67.	MINUET ... .. Alfred Hollins	2	3
68.	EPITHALAMUM ... .. Alfred Hollins	2	3
69.	THREE SHORT PIECES ... .. S. Coleridge-Taylor	2	3
70.	TOCCATA ... .. A. P. F. Boely	2	3
71.	A SOUVENIR ... .. H. Douglas	2	3
72.	LAMENT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2	3
73.	ELEGIAC PRELUDE ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
74.	CRADLE SONG ... .. R. G. Hailing	1	6
75.	CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN" ... J. E. Wallace	3	0
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3	6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1	6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
80.	DÉSÉSPOIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1	6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2	3
82.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1 ... Herbert Howells	1	6
83.	" " " " No. 2 ... Herbert Howells	1	6
84.	" " " " No. 3 ... Herbert Howells	1	6
85.	TEMA OSTINATA ... .. C. Charlton Palmer	1	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN

BY
GEO. P. ALLEN,
Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

No.	s.	d.
1. Fantasia on Hymn Tune "Abide with me" ...	3	0
2. Concert Fantasia in C ... ..	2	6
3. Grand Chœur in D ... ..	2	0
4. Andantino in C ... ..	2	0
Also transposed to the Key of D for Violin or Violoncello and Pianoforte ... ..
5. Fantasia on Carol "Christians, awake" ...	2	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

"THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD."
"SUN OF MY SOUL."
"THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
"DIVINE LOVE."
"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD"
"LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
"THE NAZARENE."
"THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
"JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES).

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWO PIECES

FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

BY HAROLD RAWLINSON.

SERENADE.	s.	d.
String Parts ... ..	2	0
Wind Parts ... ..	1	8
Pianoforte Solo ... ..	2	3
AUBADE.
String Parts ... ..	2	8
Wind Parts ... ..	3	4
Pianoforte Solo ... ..	2	3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILLIAM BAINES'
FOUR SKETCHES FOR PIANO

1. THE CHIMES.
2. ONLY A FEW WOODEN SOLDIERS.
3. DREAMING.
4. LITTLE IMPS.

Price, 2s. net each.

Played by FREDERIC DAWSON, Esq.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SELECTION FROM HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Op. 30, No. 1.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

W. G. ROSS.

Pianoforte Conductor...	2
String Parts ... ..	8
Wind Parts, &c. ... ..	15

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

GUIDE TO CANDIDATES FOR THE
A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA PIANO TEACHERS'
EXAMINATION.

Price 1s. 8d. post free.

By ARTHUR FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.,
3, The Crescent, Roundhay, Leeds, Yorks.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male
Quartet, by Arthur Mangelndorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd
160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 49
Coventry Road, Birmingham.

THE "STAR" EDITION
OF THE

ORATORIOS

Old Notation and Tonic Sol-fa together.

NOW READY.

PRICE					PRICE
2/6	CREATION	-	-	-	HAYDN
	ELIJAH	-	-	-	MENDELSSOHN
	HYMN OF PRAISE	}	-	-	MENDELSSOHN
	AND LAUDA SION
	JUDAS MACCABÆUS	-	-	-	HANDEL
EACH.	MESSIAH	-	-	-	HANDEL
	ST. PAUL	-	-	-	MENDELSSOHN

2/6

Postage extra, 6d. per volume. Sample copy forwarded, post free, to choirmasters, &c., upon receipt of 2s. 6d.

SPECIAL TERMS TO CHOIRS AND CHORAL SOCIETIES.

SOME RECENT OPINIONS.

".... I am pleased to notice this issue, as I have often thought the combined notations would prove far more serviceable than separately. It will simplify the conductor's efforts referring to the position of any passage he wishes to call attention to where both notations are used. Sol-faists will also have the benefit of following the instrumentation, which itself will lead to far greater intelligence. ...."

".... I think the book is very neatly got up, the printing clear and paper good, and the two notations very convenient. ...."

".... I wish I had known of your edition of the 'Messiah' earlier. It is the best possible edition for a choir composed, as mine is, of Sol-faists and Staff readers. I have thoroughly recommended it, and next year will persuade all new members to have your edition. ...."

".... I think the edition is ideal, and the Tonic Sol-fa adds greatly to its value. ...."

W. PAXTON & CO., 95, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

R Within my heart of hearts ... A Stronghold Sure
 R Our Jesus hath for aye ... God goeth up
 R My heart ever trusting God so loved the world
 R O grant us, mighty Lord
Jesus, now will we praise Thee
 R Sighing, weeping ... My Spirit was in heaviness

ALTO.

R Thou, Whose praises never end ... Bide with us
 R The Father hath appointed Him ... God goeth up
 R My spirit Him describes ... " "
 R Into Thy hands ... God's time is best
 R Rejoice, ye souls, elect and holy
O Light Everlasting

TENOR.

AIR Lord, to us Thyself be showing ... Bide with us
 RECIT. Why hast Thou then, O God
My Spirit was in heaviness
 AIR Fast my bitter tears are flowing " "
 AIR Rejoice, O my spirit " "
 RECIT. The mighty Guardian ... Thou Guide of Israel
 AIR His face my Shepherd long is hiding " "
 AIR And why art thou, my soul, so fearful
When will God recall

BASS.

RECIT. He comes, the Lord of lords ... God goeth up
 AIR 'Tis He, Who all alone ... " "
 RECIT. It is not mine ... God so loved the world
 AIR On my behalf ... " "
 RECIT. Yea, this Thy word ... Thou Guide of Israel
 AIR Whom Jesus deigns ... " "
 AIR Yet silence ... When will God recall

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No. 5.
1.	Interlude .. .. .	Th. Dubois
2.	Chanson de Matin .. .. .	Edward Elgar
3.	Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata" .. .. .	W. Faulkes
4.	There is a green hill far away .. .. .	Ch. Gounod
5.	Marche Triomphale .. .. .	Alexandre Guilmant
6.	Ave Maria .. .. .	A. Henselt
7.	Grand Chœur No. 2 .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
8.	Andantino in D flat .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare
9.	Chanson Triste .. .. .	P. Tschaiikowsky
10.	Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I .. .. .	R. Wagner
11.	Romanza .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme
12.	Allegretto in E flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme
No. 2.
1.	Chanson de Nuit .. .. .	Edward Elgar
2.	Alla Marcia .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
3.	Minuetto .. .. .	Alexandre Guilmant
4.	Lied .. .. .	H. Hofmann
5.	Barcarolle .. .. .	H. Hofmann
6.	Spring Song .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
7.	The Curfew .. .. .	Edward J. Horsman
8.	Pastorale in E .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare
9.	Ave Maria d'Arcadelt .. .. .	Franz Liszt
10.	Cantique d'Amour .. .. .	Theo. Wendt
11.	The Seraph's Strain .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme
12.	Le Carillon .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme
No. 3.
1.	Scherzo in A flat .. .. .	Edward C. Bairstow
2.	Melody .. .. .	S. Coleridge-Taylor
3.	Serenade .. .. .	H. Hofmann
4.	Bridal March .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
5.	Berceuse .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare
6.	Melodie in E .. .. .	S. Rachmaninoff
7.	Aubade .. .. .	A. Strelzky
8.	Nocturne in C sharp minor .. .. .	P. Tschaiikowsky
9.	Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin") .. .. .	R. Wagner
10.	Passacaglia .. .. .	John E. West
11.	Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cenam Agni" .. .. .	Healey Willan
12.	Allegretto in A flat .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme
No. 4.
1.	Arietta .. .. .	S. Coleridge-Taylor
2.	Souvenir de Printemps .. .. .	Joseph Holbrooke
3.	Andante in D .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
4.	Pavane in A .. .. .	Bernard Johnson
5.	Harmonies du Soir .. .. .	Sigfrid Karg-Elert
6.	Grand Cortège .. .. .	Edwin H. Lemare
7.	Allegro alla Marcia .. .. .	A. L. Peace
8.	Visione .. .. .	J. Rheinberger
9.	Chant sans Paroles .. .. .	P. Tschaiikowsky
10.	Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger") .. .. .	R. Wagner
11.	Allegro Pomposo .. .. .	John E. West
12.	Canzona .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme
No. 6.
1.	Nocturne .. .. .	Thomas F. Dunh
2.	Postludium .. .. .	William Faulk
3.	Andante Tranquillo .. .. .	H. M. Hig
4.	In Springtime .. .. .	Alfred Holli
5.	Madrigal .. .. .	Edwin H. Lema
6.	Triumphal March .. .. .	J. Lemme
7.	Allegro in B flat .. .. .	F. Mendelssohn-Barthold
8.	Choral Prelude on "Rockingham" .. .. .	C. Hubert H. Par
9.	Præludium Pastorale .. .. .	J. Stain
10.	Romance in F minor .. .. .	Tschaiikowsk
11.	Romance in A flat .. .. .	H. Sandiford Turn
12.	Festal Commemoration .. .. .	John E. We
No. 7 (Funeral Music).
1.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) .. .. .	Beethovi
2.	Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) .. .. .	Brahm
3.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) .. .. .	Chop
4.	Funeral March .. .. .	William Faulk
5.	Funeral March ("Saul") .. .. .	Hand
6.	I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hand
7.	Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") .. .. .	Mendelsso
8.	O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") .. .. .	Mendelsso
9.	Marche Solonnelle .. .. .	Schube
10.	Marche Funèbre .. .. .	Tschaiikowsk
11.	Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" .. .. .	Tschaiikowsk
12.	Lament .. .. .	John E. We
No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1.	Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" .. .. .	J. S. Ba
2.	Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") .. .. .	J. S. Ba
3.	Quem Vidistis, Pastores .. .. .	W. T. Be
4.	Venite in Bethlehem .. .. .	W. T. Be
5.	December—Christmas Morn .. .. .	Frederic H. Cow
6.	Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols .. .. .	William Faulk
7.	For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") .. .. .	Hanc
8.	Pastorale .. .. .	Theodore Kull
9.	Chorus of Shepherds .. .. .	J. Lemme
10.	Christmas Pastoral .. .. .	Gustav Merl
11.	A Christmas Pastoral .. .. .	B. Luard-Sel
12.	Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") .. .. .	John E. We

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.	No.	Book IV.
1.	Andante Grazioso .. .. .	1.	"Elevation"—Andante e Legato .. .. .
2.	Andante .. .. .	2.	Andante Religioso .. .. .
3.	Largamente .. .. .	3.	"Simplicity"—Andante .. .. .
4.	Andante Religioso .. .. .	4.	Largamente .. .. .
5.	Andantino .. .. .	5.	"Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso .. .. .
6.	Adagio Cantabile .. .. .	6.	Andantino .. .. .
7.	Larghetto .. .. .	7.	Con Moto Moderato .. .. .
8.	Andante con Moto .. .. .	8.	Andante Amabile .. .. .
9.	Andantino quasi Allegretto .. .. .	9.	Andante .. .. .
10.	Andante .. .. .	10.	Andante Sostenuto .. .. .
	Book II.		Book V.
1.	Andante con Moto .. .. .	1.	"Invocation"—Andante Grazioso .. .. .
2.	Con Moto .. .. .	2.	Andante con Moto .. .. .
3.	Moderato .. .. .	3.	Poco Adagio .. .. .
4.	Marziale, poco Lento .. .. .	4.	Andante Espressivo .. .. .
5.	Moderato .. .. .	5.	Adagio .. .. .
6.	Andantino .. .. .	6.	Poco Lento .. .. .
7.	Adagio .. .. .	7.	Andante Dolente .. .. .
8.	"Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto .. .. .	8.	Andantino con Tenerezza .. .. .
9.	Andante Serioso .. .. .	9.	Andante con Moto .. .. .
10.	Adagio .. .. .	10.	Adagio Molto .. .. .
	Book III.		Book VI.
1.	Moderato e Legato .. .. .	1.	Dolente .. .. .
2.	Moderato .. .. .	2.	Andante Sostenuto .. .. .
3.	Andante con Moto .. .. .	3.	Andantino .. .. .
4.	Andante .. .. .	4.	Con Moto .. .. .
5.	Grazioso molto Espressivo .. .. .	5.	"Communion"—Cantabile .. .. .
6.	"Song without Words"—Con Moto .. .. .	6.	Andante Religioso .. .. .
7.	Andante .. .. .	7.	Lento .. .. .
8.	Andante Dolente .. .. .	8.	Larghetto .. .. .
9.	Andante Pastorale .. .. .	9.	Adagio e Mesto .. .. .
10.	Adagio .. .. .	10.	Andante Affettuoso .. .. .

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

SET I.

Andante ... ..	Alfred H. Allen
Spring Song ... ..	... W. H. Bell
Andante con Moto ... ..	... G. J. Bennett
Song of Thanksgiving ... ..	... Josiah Booth
Church Preludes No. 5 ... ..	... R. E. Bryson
Postlude ... ..	H. Elliot Button
Postlude ... ..	... G. Calkin
Prelude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
Andante ... ..	... J. W. Gritton
Allegro Moderato ... ..	... Kate Loder
Allegro. Op. 21... ..	Gustav Merkel
Andante. Op. 162 ... ..	Gustav Merkel
Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn... ..	... J. T. Pye
Prelude No. 2 ... ..	... A. Redhead
Larghetto and Allegro ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	... C. Steggall
Contemplation ... ..	... John E. West
Postlude ... ..	... John E. West
Moderato Maestoso ... ..	... Kate Westrop
Andante Pastorale ... ..	... W. G. Wood

SET II.

Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	George J. Bennett
Church Prelude ... ..	R. Ernest Bryson
Andante Tranquillo ... ..	George Calkin
For Holy Communion ... ..	J. Baptiste Calkin
Postlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
Largo ... ..	Handel
Berceuse ... ..	Oliver King
Adagio, from Sonatina No. 2 ... ..	Kuhlau
Allegretto... ..	Kate Loder
Andante in G ... ..	... G. F. Wesley Martin
Andanti Quasi Allegretto ... ..	Gustav Merkel
Cavatina in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
Epilogue ... ..	Joseph Rheinberger
Andante in A ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
Andante in G ... ..	Charles Steggall
March in G ... ..	... Henry Smart
Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funebre") ... ..	... John E. West
Pastoral Melody ... ..	... John E. West
Andante ... ..	... Kate Westrop
Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	... W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.
1.	Melody ... ..	A. Herbert Brewer
2.	Maestoso ... ..	George Calkin
3.	Ave Maria ... ..	Edward T. Chipp
4.	Interlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
5.	Intermezzo ... ..	... Alan Gray
6.	Postlude ... ..	Alex. Guilmant
7.	Sursum Corda ... ..	... John Ireland
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
9.	Andante ... ..	Gustav Merkel
10.	Duetto in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
11.	Cavatina ... ..	... Joachim Raff
12.	Monologue No. 5 ... ..	J. Rheinberger
13.	Melody in F ... ..	Anton Rubinstein
14.	Dreaming ... ..	... Schumann
15.	The Poet Speaks... ..	... Schumann
16.	Soft Voluntary ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
17.	Menuetto ... ..	Berthold Tours
18.	Aspiration ... ..	... John E. West
19.	Sketch in C minor ... ..	... John E. West
20.	Andante con Moto ... ..	... W. G. Wood

SET IV.—JUST PUBLISHED.

No.
1.	Romance ... ..	... W. H. Bell
2.	Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor) ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
3.	Canzonetta ... ..	... César Cui
4.	Interlude ... ..	... Th. Dubois
5.	Elegy ... ..	... Edward Elgar
6.	Allegretto ... ..	Niels W. Gade
7.	Judex ("Mors et Vita")... ..	... Ch. Gounod
8.	Intermezzo No. 3... ..	... Alan Gray
9.	Chanson de Joie ... ..	R. G. Hailing
10.	Hymnus ... ..	A. C. Mackenzie
11.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
12.	Trio ... ..	J. Rheinberger
13.	Short Postlude ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
14.	Andante Maestoso ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
15.	Prelude ... ..	... Henry Smart
16.	Fughetta ... ..	... Henry Smart
17.	Choral Song ... ..	... S. S. Wesley
18.	Lamentation ... ..	... John E. West
19.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	... John E. West
20.	Andante ... ..	... W. G. Wood

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

CLOTH, EIGHT SHILLINGS EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

VOICE TRAINING EXERCISES

BY

EMIL BEHNKE

Teacher of Voice Culture and Lecturer on Vocal Physiology,

AND

CHARLES W. PEARCE

M.A., Mus. D., F.T.C.L., F.R.C.O., Director of Studies, Trinity College of Music.

In separate Books for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

Price ... .. Two Shillings and Sixpence net.

TESTIMONIALS.

“Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility.”

“Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen.”

“I like the exercises very much; they are scientific, systematic, and ingenious.”

“A personal experience enables me to speak in the highest terms of Mr. Behnke's method, which is absolutely invaluable for increasing the power, resonance, and flexibility of the voice; and I am glad to be able to recommend the exercises as being thoroughly practical and most useful.”

“May be safely and cordially recommended to vocal students, and even to practised singers.”

“The exercises are, with great skill, arranged so as to give a maximum of benefit with a minimum of fatigue. They are melodious and natural, and are consequently pleasant of performance.”

“Besides the high commendation which we can give them as voice-training exercises per se, they possess the additional merit of being very melodious throughout.”

“The combined simplicity and utility of the plan upon which these exercises have been written will commend them to the notice of professors and students alike.”

“It may be said with confidence that no better exercises for the purposes of voice cultivation are to be met with.”

CHAPPELL &amp; CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

NEW YORK.

SYDNEY.

MELBOURNE.

And may be had of all Music Sellers.

EUGÈNE GOOSSENS.

THREE SONGS

(FOR MEDIUM VOICE)

WITH STRING QUARTET ACCOMPANIMENT.

Op. 26.

Price - - - 5s. net cash.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

No. 1. THE APPEAL. No. 2. MELANCHOLY.

(SIR THOMAS WYATT).

(JOHN FLETCHER).

Price each - - - 2s. net cash.

No. 3. PHILOMEL.

(RICHARD BARNEFIELD).

Price - - - 2s. 6d. net cash.

J. &amp; W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 945.—Vol. 62

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

NOVEMBER 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.

Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

FIFTY-FIRST SEASON, 1921-22.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE MUSIC-MAKERS - - - ELGAR

THE GOLDEN LEGEND - - - SULLIVAN

MISS DORIS VANE.
MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. WALTER HYDE.
MR. WALTER SAULL.
MR. CHARLES TREE.

FULL CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

CAROLS

MISS LAURA EVANS-WILLIAMS.
MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. JOHN COATES.
MR. HARRY DEARTH.

Organist: MR. H. L. BALFOUR, Mus. Bac.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: SIR A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted. LECTURES on Beethoven will be given by the PRINCIPAL on Wednesdays, November 2 and 9, at 3.15.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, November 5 and 19, at 3. CHAMBER CONCERT, Wednesday, November 16, at 3.

The Broughton Packer Bath Scholarship for Violin Playing will be competed for on or about December 5. Last day for entry, November 17.

L.R.A.M. Exam. Entries will be accepted up to November 15 on payment of a late fee of 5s.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1833.)

Telegrams:

"Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone:

"1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Intending Students who wish to enter the College are asked to send their forms of application as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 8th, 1922.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 1st, 1922.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed Centres in March-April, 1922, and in all subsequent periods. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

An official edition of Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte, and of Music for Violin, and also of Written Papers, is published by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. J. S. Bach. (Novello & Co., Book 10, p. 214; Augener & Co., p. 382; Peters, Vol. I.)

Choral Prelude on "Darwell's 148th," No. 2 of Three Choral Preludes. H. E. Darke. (Novello & Co.)

Prelude and Angel's Farewell (Gerontius), E. Elgar. Arranged by A. H. Brevier (this arrangement only). (Novello & Co.)

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the January, 1922, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for July, 1921.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their Names for FELLOWSHIP by DECEMBER 8th, for ASSOCIATESHIP by DECEMBER 15th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS proposal forms duly filled up must be sent in before December 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only. Vol. I., 1881-96, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1897-1906, price 8s. 3d. (including postage).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... .. LANDON RONALD.

Fees for Curriculum, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Single Subjects, from £2 2s. 6d.

THE SCHOOL BEING NOW FULL

It is necessary for Students intending to join for next term (January 9th) to make immediate application.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical Instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Thirtieth Year began on October 10.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and opera.

School Performances: Musical Afternoons, November 12, December 10; Musical Evening, December 19. Chamber Concert, November 23, Orchestral Concert, December 22.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor .. Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND
STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. Bac. Cantab.; F.R.A.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HO MES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Viol Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held London, and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom DECEMBER. Last day of entry, November 8.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary. Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A.M.L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L.Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary
Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 38

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS

6 and 7, BLUMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone, Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C. 1.

APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses have been drawn up by an experienced teacher of this subject. These are non-technical, and are enjoyable all interested in Music.

Further particulars from Secretary.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. FITCH, Mus. Bac., &c.
FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Hands with a small stretch can be developed to play any passage, strength and flexibility are greatly increased, and five to ten minutes per day at the Techniquer will save much valuable time and hours useless practising. To those having little time for instrument practice it is of enormous value, besides saving the wear and tear on an instrument. Many valuable testimonials from most eminent sources. Copies and full particulars may be obtained from

The Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O., 21, Boundary Road, N.W. 8.

"Hand Development" - - 7d.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System) covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly not only interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Full Particulars, address: Mr. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

The New Idea v. The Old Idea of "Piano Practice."

THE OLD IDEA of practice is just to hammer repeatedly away for hours, in the hope of the muscles adjusting themselves to act automatically. Nothing more heartbreaking to an ambitious pianist than this terrible drudgery.

THE NEW IDEA—the "FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD" System—is a fascinating short cut which entirely eliminates the nerve-racking, eternal practising." It was evolved after years of study and experience by a practical musician, and is essentially the only common-sense method of acquiring a complete mastery of the piano.

'From Brain to Keyboard'

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

Read my Illustrated Book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing." This explains fully how I teach the System by a Series of Postal Lessons, and gives particulars of the very reasonable fee for tuition. Sir Frederick Bridge and other eminent musicians use the system. No apparatus or special music necessary—just an easily acquired method with much quicker and BETTER results. Apply for book to-day, but DO NOT OMIT to state whether average or advanced player, or, if a beginner, whether you can or cannot play at sight a simple hymn-tune. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

Oxford Preliminary Arts and Durham Matriculation.
Also B.A. and B.Sc.

EXPERT PREPARATION BY CORRESPONDENCE.

For Terms, Testimonials, &c., address

Mr. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Honours Oxon. and London),
14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W.14.

COMPOSERS' PROBLEMS SOLVED.

PAXTON'S COMPOSERS' DEPARTMENT, Staffed by Experts, is at the service of all Composers, and undertakes the following work:

CRITICISM OF COMPOSITION.	COPYING (SAME KEY).
LIGHT REVISION OF COMPOSITION.	TRANSCRIPTION FROM ONE KEY TO ANOTHER (OLD NOTATION).
WRITING AND IMPROVING.	TRANSCRIPTION (OLD NOTATION TO TONIC SOL-FA).
WRITING LYRICS.
SETTING MUSIC TO LYRICS.
RECORDING ACCOMPANIMENT.

ALSO

ENGRAVING AND PRINTING MANUSCRIPTS.
LOWEST TERMS. EFFICIENT SERVICE.

Send your Manuscripts for Production to
W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., COMPOSERS' DEPARTMENT,
22, High Street, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.2.
Stamps for return should accompany all MSS.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, finished me.

I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

LECTURE-RECITALS on

HOW TO SING with ease FOR FORTY YEARS or more.

Col. Somerville, Commandant Royal Military School of Music, writes, October 8, 1921: "Your lecture was of enormous interest. To the students who are to become bandmasters it will prove to have been of the greatest value. The vocal side of their art should play a far larger part in their activities than it has heretofore. For myself, I can only say that I was most deeply interested, and in complete agreement with what you said."

Mr. Harold Lees, Conductor Todmorden Male-Voice Choir, writes October 12, 1921: "I consider your Lecture-Recital of great educational value to all who sing or speak publicly, and hope for much benefit from it as affecting our Choir, the members being unanimous in their appreciation of your views on Tone-placing. As an entertainment it is most enjoyable, and affords an evening of combined education and pleasure which is bound to benefit all who take an interest in vocal matters. I should recommend all choirs to hear it."

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s. 2d.). (If difficult to obtain this work, write direct to author.)

Mr. CASE, Tenor and Choirmaster, Manchester, writes October 2, 1921: "I have followed your book with great advantage, and value it so much that I have given away seven, believing that I could not reward my friends with anything more useful and helpful."

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION

BACUP CENTRE.

President: ALDERMAN J. H. LORD, J.P., H.S.B.

Treasurer: FRED COOPER, Esq.

Secretary:

WILLIAM BROWN, H.S.B., 184, Todmorden Road, Bacup.

MUSICAL FESTIVAL

TOWN HALL, BACUP,

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28th, 1922.

Competitions for Male-Voice and Mixed-Voice Choirs, Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Bass, Violin, and Pianoforte
Solos (all open classes).

OFFICIAL SYLLABUS, Price 3d., post free, 4d.

May be obtained from the Hon. Assistant-Secretary, Miss SHEPHERD, The Holmes, Bacup.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

A COURSE OF FIVE LECTURES on "Sir W. Leighton's Great Collection of Early 17th Century Motets by eminent English Composers," will be delivered by Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., Mus.Doc., King Edward Professor of Music, at the University of London, South Kensington, S.W.7, at 5 p.m., on Wednesdays, November 2 and December 7, 1921, February 1, March 1, and April 5, 1922. ADMISSION FREE, by Ticket, to be obtained from the Academic Registrar, University of London, S.W.7.

EDWIN DELLER, Academic Registrar.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

METROPOLITAN EXAMINATION, SEPTEMBER, 1921.

The following CANDIDATES were successful:

SINGING.—As TEACHERS: William Alexander Craig, Dorothy Hudson, Hubert Wilfrid-Jones, Elsie Duniam-Jones, David Taylor Yacamini.

As PERFORMERS: Mabel Austin, Edith Mary Bale, Gladys Mary Basker, Florence Annie Bates, Jessie Bibby, Mildred Birkby, Kathrine Barker Brown, Emilie Bunting, Elizabeth Carlton-Jones, Annie Chisholm-Davies, Lily Clatworthy, Abigail Lyttleton Dodds, Louise Grace Grainger, W. Cloy Hart, James Lang, Josephine Rose Macpherson, Gwendolen Maddox, Elsie Neave, Edith Winifred Ransom, Annie Scholes, Dora Jean Sinclair, Sarah Hornabrook Smith, Winifred Stoakes, Kathleen Ethel Thurston, Kathleen Naomi Trean.

Examiners: Edward Iles, Frederick Keel, Frederic King, Thomas Meux.

PIANOFORTE.—As TEACHERS: Florence Mary Ainsworth, Frances Marion Allen, Edna Mary Ambler, Elizabeth Anderton, Margery Annie Louise Andrew, Kathleen Mary Arnold, May Bailey, Kathleen May Barr, Helen Bateman, Caroline Louise Bates, Frances May Beken, Eleanor Mary Bennett, Hortense F. Bennett, Sidney George Bett, Florence Biltcliffe, Marjorie Florence Booth, Irene Llewelyn Bowen, Gladys Marie Braddock, Lilian Vera Bramwell, Grace Brenda Brodhurst, Winifred Howard Buck, Julia Helena Byass, Doris Emily Callaway, Georgina F. Campamy, Sarah Elizabeth Capper, Agnes Cardew, Harold Carruthers, Harriet Elizabeth Caswell, Gwendolen Audrey Chaffin, Annie B. Chalmers, Barbara Doris Clark, Mary Charlotte Clarke, Nora A. Cook, Nora Corjeag, Annie Dorothy Hilda Creelman, Elizabeth Coupé, Alfred Williams Crawford, Eileen M. Dawson, May B. Derrick, Ida Marie Derry, Catherine Campbell Dickson, Margaret Irene McEndoo Dickson, Jill Drinkwater, Audrey Mary Carola Duthoit, Gladys Hilda Eagan, Lilian Esp, Joan Friend, Mildred A. Frost, Dorothy Kathleen Fryer, Amy Hilda Gammon, Mary Agnes Garriock, Hilda Ethel George, Doris Adelaide Gillatt, Kathleen Gorman, Elsie Green, May Griffiths, Kathleen Maude Gruchy, Ada Hacking, Catherine Margaret Gabrielle Haddingham, Edith Mary Hadland, Sylvia Claire Harmer, Henrietta Harpur, Elsie Haworth, Dorothy Heap, Frederick Austin Herbert, Ida Elizabeth Hill, Gladys Mary Hills, Grace Dorothy Holdich, Lillias Davidson Honeymay, Phyllis Kathleen Hopkins, Alice M. Hopper, Stella Phyllis Langran Houston, Harold Gwyn Howells, Dorothy Mabel Hutchinson, Agnes Ivermee, George Arthur James, Elizabeth May Jones, Gilbert Kaye, Dorothy Edna Keirle, Freda Kitton, Violet Edith Knight, Frances Goddard Knowles, Edith Mary Lacy, Jeannette Lamb, Jessie Lash, Jean Lawson, Dorothy Le Couilliard, Mabel Lee, Elsie Lees, Ruth G. E. Lezemore, Karl Livock, Hilda Ingeborg Lokander, John Martin, Christine Marion Tillstone Mellon, Alice May Miller, Kathleen Margaret Molony, Helen Mary Mortimer, Grace Morton, Nora Nicol, Ethel Page, Doris Wever Parish, Doris Parker, Isa Parker, Amy Pask, Richard W. Peers, Sybil Winifred Pellow, Olive Procter, Louie Christine Peters, Madeline Esther Punt, Edna Frances Randall, Margaret C. Reid, Winifred Bowyer Rice-Oxley, Arthur Wesley Roberts, Clare Rootham, Norah Jessie Rowles, Elizabeth Mary Russell, Irene Mary Sarginson, Hilda May Sarson, Susan Niel Scobbie, Vera Kathleen Scrivener, Elizabeth Daisy Smith, Dorothy Spaven, Jessie Marion Stone, Ella Taylor, Joan M. Taylor, Phyllis Helen Thatcher, Arthur Richard Thomsett, Victoria Thomson, Mary Luisa Tibbits, Kathleen Mary Town, Jessie Kathleen Turner, Mabel Turner, Muriel Ladd Turvey, Albert Ernest Ulett, Miriam Vine, John W. Walker, Rosetta Walker, Olive Maude Whittaker, Hilda Marion Wicks, Gwendolen P. H. Williams (Christmas, 1920), Marjorie C. Wilson, Coralie Beryl Winter.

As PERFORMERS: Lina Simlie Collins, Olive Bertha Drower, Leon Forrester, Harold Alfred Venting Gibbs, Doris Hadlow, Una Marguerite Harding, Dorothy Gertrude Lilian Justice, John Islwyn Lewis.

Examiners: Carlo Albanesi, Oscar Beringer, Victor Booth, Harold Craxton, W. J. Kipps, Frederick Moore, Claude Pollard, Chas. F. Reddie, Percy Waller, Septimus Webbe, Cuthbert Whitmore.

ORGAN.—John Hammond Fearon.

Examiners: Stanley Marchant, Mus. D., Oxon., H. W. Richards, Mus. D., Dunelm., Reginald Steggall.

VIOLIN.—As TEACHERS: Smith Anderson Duce, Alice Rosetta Garrett.

Examiners: F. Arnold, F. Corder, Spencer Dyke, James T. Lockyer.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.—Donald Ford.

Examiners: Victor Booth, F. Corder, Welton Hickin, Cuthbert Whitmore.

AURAL TRAINING and CLASS SINGING.—Lilian E. Bucke, Eileen Cecil Caldecott, Louise Zillah Dugdale, James Easson, Joseph Ernest Green, Ethel Frances Mercer, Nan Rees.

Examiners: Ernest Read, H. W. Richards, Mus. D., Dunelm., Frederick Shinn, Mus. D., Dunelm.

ELOCUTION.—As TEACHERS: Hilda Mary Blake, Aileen Elizabeth Matthews, Joseph Edward Parry, Beatrice Parks Howard Armytage Preston, Irene Flora Stollery, Johanna Helena Van Thal, Harold Ernest Wigglesworth.

Examiners: A. Acton Bond, Wilton Cole, F. Corder, Katie Thomas.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED:

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPosed AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION

FOR

MUS. B. AND MUS. D.

DR. B. BURROWS

(MUS. D. LONDON.)

Terms, Testimonials and Successes:

30, HIGHFIELD STREET, LEICESTER.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kind permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

"THE SINGER'S ART."

A. J. LARKCOM, F.R.A.M.

MANUAL FOR SINGERS AND TEACHERS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHORAL
ORCHESTRATION

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

Author of "A History of Music," "Orchestration,"

"Music and Nationalism," &amp;c.

Octavo Size. Cloth.

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

NEW CHRISTMAS CAROL

No.
394.	CAROL OF THE THREE KINGS...	...	...	...	2d.
	SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.
395.	GREEN GROWS THE HOLLY TREE ...	...	...	...	1d.
	SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.
396.	THE COMING CHRISTMAS	...	...	...	1d.
	SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.
397.	I SING THE BIRTH	...	...	...	1d.
	THOMAS ADAMS.
398.	O LOVELY VOICES OF THE SKY	...	...	...	2d.
	W. G. ALCOCK.
399.	THIS DAY ...	...	...	...	1d.
	GERRARD WILLIAMS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

MUS. DOC. (LONDON).

(Tutor in Music to U.C.C., Burlington House, Cambridge.)

INDIVIDUAL COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

- (1) L.R.A.M. Paper Work - For Xmas Examination.
- (2) A.R.C.M. Paper Work - For April Examination.
- (3) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. For January Examination.

Complete Preparation also for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., and all Diplomas of Trinity College, London.

MATRICULATION FOR MUS. BAC. DEGREE.

*Special Courses are provided by University Correspondence College.
Particulars from Secretary, Burlington House, Cambridge.*

Successes: 831 U.C.C. Students passed Matriculation, January, 1920 to June, 1921, inclusive.

Address:

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

ROMAN JACOWLEW

Violinist to the Royal Court of Spain. 1st Prize Paris Conservatoire, 1st Diploma Leipzig Conservatoire, Pupil of Alfred Brun, Henry Metherell, and Hans Sitt, has vacancy for a few pupils. Preparation and recommendation to Paris and Leipzig Conservatoire. 6, Angellark Gardens, S.W.9.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE MAIRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method.

Lessons in advanced Piano Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

BLACKBURN'S EDITION OF ORATORIOS

Edited by ARTHUR PEARSON.

HYMN OF PRAISE.
ST. PAUL.
CREATION.

JUDAS.
ELIJAH.
WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

Price 1s. 6d. each, 25% discount allowed to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

To introduce, a sample will be sent for 1s., or the six assorted as above for 5s., post free to officials, stating position held, when sending.

Ask for samples of our SACRED CANTATAS. A large selection to choose from.

JOHN BLACKBURN LTD., MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
185, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give an Organ Recital (1681st) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, on November 1st, at 1 p.m., and during this month will play, by request, all the R.C.O. Test-Pieces for the January Examinations, 1922.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

MISS DORIS CLOSE

SOPRANO. SOLOIST FOR CHURCH, CONCERTS, &c.
81, Dartmouth Road, N.W. 2.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

EDWARD BENNETT

(TENOR).

c/o Messrs. Cramer's Studios, 128, Kensington High Street, W. 8.

FRANK CARLETON

TENOR.

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.

Address:

13, GROSVENOR ROAD, HYDE, CHESHIRE.

RALPH WILLIAMS

L.R.A.M. TENOR.

Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

EDGAR DYSON

BASS-BARITONE.

Lay-Vicar, Salisbury Cathedral.

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.

Address: 25, Wyndham Road, Salisbury.

VERNON HARRISS

BASSO CANTANTE.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.

ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.

The Precincts, Canterbury.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN

(Bass-Baritone). Specialist in Singing (Italian Method) and Breathing.
Audition and Advice free.

For appointment, write to, c/o "Studios," 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

(CAPTAIN)

LEWIS STANTON

(BASS).

ORATORIOS, ETC.

The Cloisters,

Windsor Castle.

Telegrams:

Stanton, Cloisters, Windsor.

MR. CHARLES THORNTON

(BASS BARITONE).

Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

"Possesses a magnificent baritone voice."—Recent press notice.

Address: Rook's Nest, Whytecliffe Road, Purley, Surrey.

HERBERT TRACEY

BASS (of Westminster Abbey).

8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E. 5. London Wall 4033.

MR. R. J. PITCHER

Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,

A.R.C.M. (Double Diploma Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M. (Class A).
Professor Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915.

Special Lecturer on Mus. Appreciation to the L.C.C.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES in "Singing for Teachers,"
Form and Teaching, "Touch," "Accompaniment," and a special course on "Musical Appreciation."

Over 500 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

'Recitative and its rendering,' 1/6; 'Vade Mecum for Singers,' 6d.

Send for Prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W. 8.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),

c/o "The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C. 2.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidate
who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.I.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities.
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., A.Mus.L.C.M. (1921), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O.
(1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarship
Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music)
the number of eight hundred and eighty-seven. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examination
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theor-
Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course with Models. 44 Successes in One Year.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDEN, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:-

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.

(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.

(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 180 Correspondence Pupils successful
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 45 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:-

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.

(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work

(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.

(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice

Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator, c/o Rushworth Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), gives

Lessons, by post, in Harmony and other Theoretical Subject and prepares for Examinations. Terms very moderate. 18, Chante Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 392 Successes in Mus D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O.
A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS HAS MOVED TO 58, AVONDALE ROAD, GORLESTON-ON-SEA.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c.
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
Victoria Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (4 single lessons) on the four-manual pneumatic organ at St. Nicholas
Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes
5, Streatham Place, S.W. 2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Recent successes, 1921, after preliminary course in Composition
Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. "Exercises" (7), all at first attempt.

Durham, September, 1921: Final Mus. Doc., Final Mus. Bac. (4).

1st Mus. Bac. (3).

Over 100 Successes at Durham.

The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.

Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examination Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920)

specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working,
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing.
R.A.M. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 32, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, Form and Teaching, &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence) Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Instruction and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F."
W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), Glebe, Goldswong Terrace, Nottingham.

R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. PAPER WORK.—My GRADUATED "GUARANTEE" CORRESPONDENCE
COURSE assures success. WRITE TO-DAY. "C.S." Holmfild, Buxton.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) A.R.C.O. Preparation.
(3) F.R.C.O. Preparation.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

RECENT SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher).
Registered Teacher (T.R.C.)—Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, History, Interpretation. Successes at A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical
Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

MEMORY.—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W.3.

DIANISTE (A.R.C.M.) wishes to acquire a Teaching Connection in Croydon or South London, or a few pupils to form nucleus of same. "F.A." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.,
10, Wardour Street, W.1.

ACCOMPANIST. Good Sight-Reader. Miss Player, 79, Brecknock Road, Camden Road, N.W.1.

ARMAGH CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, ALTO and TENOR. Applications, with copies of testimonials as to musical ability and character, to be sent to Rev. Charles Faris, Chapter Clerk, Armagh Cathedral.

ST. BARNABAS, NORTH EALING.
TENOR and BASS (BARITONE) WANTED. £20. Good singers, with knowledge of Plain-song. Communicants. Apply by letter to A. W. Dunstall, 31, Hillcrest Road, Acton, W.3.

ORGANIST at liberty to DEPUTIZE in or near London. Church of England. "M." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.,
10, Wardour Street, W.1.

GENTLEMAN with slight knowledge of the ORGAN willing to give services. Any denomination. Write
S. H. W., 478, Hornsey Road, N.19.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed.
Edwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two
Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built.
Up to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGAN FOR SALE, 2-Manual. Harrison & Sons. Offers accepted and particulars given by Parkinson, Auctioneers, Barnard Castle.

FOR SALE.—One-Manual PIPE ORGAN. Open Diapason, 8-ft.; Stop Bass, 8-ft.; Dulciana, 8-ft.; Flute, 4th in Swell box. Full compass detachable pedal board. Solid mahogany case. Hand and foot blower. Delivered and erected, £125. Rebuilds, Cleanings, and Tunings efficiently carried out at equitable prices. E. J. Symonds, Organ Builder, 161, Waverley Road, Reading.

WANTED, second-hand two-manual ORGAN, with Pedals. Size about 6-ft. deep, 8-ft. wide. Specification and price to H. B. Lovell, 19, Glen Park, St. George, Bristol.

FOR SALE.—American ORGAN, by Estey. Very superior tone; solid walnut case; in good condition. 17 Stops, knee swells, super octave-coupler. Suitable small Church or mission hall. £50. Can be seen any time by appointment. Apply, "S.C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSTEL ORGAN, Concert Model, No. 4. Ten sets Reeds, Percussion Action, Couplers, Double Expression, Tremolos, &c. Rosewood case. Chair to match. In perfect condition. Price £400 cash. Geo. Claydon, 230, Vicarage Road, Leyton, E.10.

REED ORGAN, three-manuals and pedals, stops
"through." Perfect order. £150. Seen London. Write
"J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BECHSTEIN CONCERT GRAND, overstrung,
Ivory keys, mahogany case. Perfect mellow tone. Pre-war model as new. What offers? Owner leaving England. Flaxman, Sandgate.

FOR SALE.—Magnificent Bechstein SHORT
GRAND. Overstrung. In absolutely new condition. £150 or near offer. Fraser, 30, High View Avenue, Grays.

FOR SALE.—Old VIOLA, £8. Dr. Brooksbank,
The Cottage, Hadham Road, Bishop's Stortford.

TIMPANI. Pair by well-known maker for SALE.
Perfect condition. Owner moving. £20, or offer. Apply, Dow & Lester, Foresters' Hall Place, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.1.

WANTED, about twenty Copies of Joule's Chant
Book, full score or single parts. Send particulars to Joseph Hutt, A.R.C.O., Bastwell, Blackburn.

£1,000 INSURANCE of FINGERS against injury for only £2 11s. per ann. Send card for particulars to E. C. Parker & Co., Ltd., Insurance Brokers (Estd.
1865), 39, Lombard Street, London, E.C.3. Instruments also insured against "All Risks."

BARITONES and BASSES should buy Song,
"THE SILENT LAND" (Oakley). Compass A to D. Price
2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

QUANTITY of ORGAN MUSIC, cheap. List and price from Rees, Whitehall, Bristol.

£10 IS OFFERED for an ORIGINAL HYMN
TUNE. Send stamped addressed envelope for particulars to H. Ward, 3, Ebenezer Place, Connaught Road, Clacton-on-Sea.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O.—"THE RUDIMENTS OF
CRITICISM." Four valuable models with hints. Enclose 3s. 6d.
to "Essay," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A COMMUNION SERVICE in MODAL STYLE
FOR UNISON SINGING.

By C. E. HOYLAND.

Organ copies, 6d. People's part, 3d. Postage extra.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA
THE ANCIENT MARINER
30th 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.
Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MR. EDWARD OXENFORD

Author of "I FEAR NO FOE," and thousands of other Songs, &c.
SUBMITS UP-TO-DATE AND PROFITABLE LYRICS.

Speciality: New Words written to Songs.

Haddenham, Bucks.

Postage refunded.

DEATH.

DARLINGTON. Kathleen Mary (née KATHLEEN BRUCKSHAW) wife of Seymour Darlington, on October 10. 6, Artillery Mansions, Victoria Street, Westminster.

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

Owing to the success of the Courses for Matric., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.O., and F.R.C.O., the following Courses have been organized:

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

Singing. The Courses cover

1. Breathing. Registers.
2. Studies best adapted to ensure power, flexibility, attack.
3. Tone-Colour—cause and effect.
4. How to acquire beauty of vocal tone.
5. Pronunciation and Diction.
6. Phrasing.
7. Vocal works, illustrating Florid and Dramatic Styles.

Pianoforte. (Teaching.)

Special Papers.

1. Laws of Touch.
2. Fingering.
3. Form.
4. Training of Pupils.
5. Studies and Pieces most suitable for particular grades of students.

Musical Training & Sight-Singing.

(S. VIII.), L.R.A.M.

1. Class Management.
2. Principles of Educational Method.
3. Writing of Exercises to illustrate any detail of such Teaching.

A.R.C.M.

April, 1921

Entries 2

Successes 2

L.R.A.M.

Sept., 1921

„ 2

„ 2

The only Correspondence College that gained 100 per cent. of Passes at these Examinations.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL :

ARTHUR MCALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

MATRICULATION

SUCSESSES - 64

— 1921 —

January	-	-	-	-	-	3
July	-	-	-	-	-	5
October	-	-	-	-	-	4

1922 - Courses for January, July, October now ready.

FREE

Guide to Matric.,
Mus. Bac., &c.

Your Motto for 1922 - - - " Labor omnia vincit."

MILGROM'S

CONCERT DIRECTION,

RECITALS AND CONCERTS ARRANGED.

324, REGENT STREET, W.

(NEAR QUEEN'S HALL). 'PHONE: LANGHAM 2714.

FIRST-CLASS OPERATIC AND ORATORIO VOCALISTS,
... INSTRUMENTALISTS, CONCERT PARTIES, ETC. ...
ON MY BOOKS.

PLEASE STATE YOUR REQUIREMENTS TO ABOVE ADDRESS.

NUMBER TWO NOW READY.

"THE ORGAN"

QUARTERLY REVIEW FOR ITS MAKERS, ITS PLAYERS, AND ITS LOVERS

Price Two Shillings (post free, 2s. 3d.). Annual Subscription, Nine Shillings (post free).

The proprietors of Musical Opinion announce the issue of the second number of The Organ. The first number was warmly welcomed by organists and organ lovers that two reprints were called for.

The type used is fairly large and easily readable, the size of the page 10 by 7½-ins., and the margin and pagination arranged that the separate issues can be bound to make a comfortable volume.

CONTENTS: No. 2.

ONTISPIECE: JOSEPH BONNET.

SEPH BONNET: I. The Man.
A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc.

YS AND STOPS: a Study in the Development of the Console.
The Rev. ANDREW FREEMAN.

IE EXTENSION ORGAN. JOHN COMPTON.

VO UNPUBLISHED RECORDS OF FATHER SMITH.
SIDNEY W. HARVEY.

VELOPMENTS IN THE USE OF THE PEDAL ORGAN.
HARVEY GRACE.

SHORT HISTORY OF THE ORGANS OF THE CHURCH OF ST. LAWRENCE AT READING.
The Rev. ANDREW FREEMAN.

ARCHIDIACONUS ADVERSARIUS.

The Rev. GEORGE GARDNER (Archdeacon of Cheltenham).

THE ORGAN AT GERONA CATHEDRAL.

ARTHUR G. COLBORN.

SPECIFICATION.

Church of the Holy Cross, Crediton.

ECHOES FROM THE PAST.

The Mounted Cornet. Canon W. E. DICKSON.

The Iconoclast Abroad. S. TAYLOR.

The Transmission System. NATHANIEL J. HOLMES.

FOUR PLATES: TEN ILLUSTRATIONS IN THE TEXT.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"If the first number is a test of the work the new publication intends to undertake, its success ought to be assured."—Daily Telegraph.
"Our new quarterly contemporary, The Organ, has started so well that there will be no doubt as to its success."—Musical Times.
"A cordial welcome must be given to a new quarterly, The Organ, which aims at interesting and edifying makers, players, and lovers of that instrument. The newcomer makes its début very effectively with its well-written and informative articles."—Church Times.

Office of "MUSICAL OPINION," 13, Chichester Rents, Chancery Lane, W.C.2.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The Opera for performance at a London Theatre in the Summer Term is "Iolanthe." Conductor: Mr. CAIRNS JAMES. There are a few vacancies. The OPERA CLASS meets on Tuesdays, at 5.30 p.m.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

TO ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES

MESSRS. ELKIN & Co., LTD., desire to draw attention to the following fine work:

POLONIA

(SYMPHONIC PRELUDE BASED ON POLISH THEMES)

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

				s.	d.
Full Score	...	...	...	net	15 0
Orchestral Parts	...	...	...	"	25 0

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS - 9d.

- |                    |                          |
|--------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Ring out.       | 4. Christmas Day.        |
| 2. A Babe is born. | 5. When Christ was born. |
| 3. Welcome Yule.   | 6. Yonder in Bethlehem.  |

Separately, 3d. each.

THOMAS ADAMS.

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS - 9d.

- |                       |                             |
|-----------------------|-----------------------------|
| 1. 'Tis at Christmas. | 4. Born is the Babe.        |
| 2. No more sadness.   | 5. Christmas Bells.         |
| 3. Into this world.   | 6. How bright was the glori |

Separately, 3d. each.

THE BOSWORTH CAROL ALBUM.

Is. 3d. net.

"Many Old and New Friends."

A wonderful Collection. 25 Carols. 48 pages.

JUDE.

SIX ORIGINAL CAROLS - 9d.

THREE ANTHEMS.

- |  |     |
|--|-----|
| E. J. HOPKINS. Let us now go even unto Bethlehem | 3   |
| W. GRIFFITH. Blessed be the King                 | ... |
| JACOB HANDL. Behold thou shalt conceive          | ... |

BRIDGE.

BIRTHDAY BOOK - 5s.

(Shakespeare and Music.)

Now again in print. A very suitable Christmas present.

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

WILL BE PUBLISHED THIS MONTH

FUGUE IN C MINOR

By J. S. BACH.

TRANSCRIBED FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

By EDWARD ELGAR.

FULL SCORE

Price - 10s. 6d.

Orchestral Parts (on hire only).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REDUCED PRICE.

A

WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

(See page 814.)

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

NOVEMBER 1 1921

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY :

THE RESIGNATION OF SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

BY HERMAN KLEIN

The parting between friends, no matter when it comes, is always fraught with sadness, and long expectation of a melancholy moment does little, as a rule, to alleviate its poignancy. Otherwise one might say that Sir Frederick Bridge displayed his customary thoughtfulness for the feelings of his good friends, the members of the Albert Hall choir, when he made known to them at rehearsal recently his intention of vacating, at the end of the present season, the post which he will then have held for twenty-five years, of conductor of the Royal Choral Society. The event might not in the natural course of things have been unanticipated; but it was peculiarly fitting that the announcement of—the official intimation, as it were—should come from the lips of the personage most concerned. It was done, too, with that fine simplicity of phrase and unaffected dignity and earnestness of manner that best enable an Englishman to conceal his emotions, but which nevertheless caused the inevitable lump to rise in the throat of many a singer then facing him.

For, truth to tell, they have been on remarkably good terms with each other, these eight hundred and fifty choristers and their genial conductor, ever since the latter succeeded Sir Joseph Barnby in 1896. Barnby was not exactly an easy man to follow, being popular in the widest sense, facile princeps in his line, something of a martinet, like Costa, but easier to placate, and therefore liable to be personally adored. Yet, delicate and difficult though his task at the outset, the organist of Westminster Abbey quickly showed that he had the right fibre to conquer with—the warm good-nature and witty tongue; the sufficiency of experience as a choral conductor; the mind of a sympathetic and capable musician; above all, the resolute will to do his best in everything.

And so, conquer he did. The old choristers who would have gone through fire and water for 'Sir Joseph' soon found that confidence in the new leader would not be misplaced, and from that time forward they unhesitatingly transferred their affections and their ready obedience to him who in due course became 'Sir Frederick.' Their successors and fresh companions during the course of five and twenty seasons have taken the cue from them, and it may be asserted without fear of contradiction that their esprit de corps has never been stronger than it will be when Sir Frederick Bridge lays down his baton for the last time at the Good Friday performance of 'The Messiah' in April next. To quote the words written by the secretary of the Society in the programme of the Jubilee Concert :

They are proud of their choir—proud of its fame and traditions . . . to them it is a potent civilising and elevating force destined to bring much gladness and content.

Paying tribute to the conductor, the same writer declared him to be

. . . a veteran in years, but in kindheartedness and vigour the youngest of his generation. This is not the place to sing his praises, nor is it necessary, for his is easily the best-known name among English musicians of the day. As organist of Westminster Abbey for forty-four years (and now retired with the honourable title of Emeritus-Organist), conductor, lecturer, essayist, and by no means least, as humorist, his fame is assured.

A solid and lasting record of his valuable labours at the Royal Albert Hall is to be found in the catalogue of new works performed there under his direction during the second half of the Jubilee period. These comprise mostly compositions from the pens of native composers then or now living. Among them may be noted Elgar's 'King Olaf,' 'Dream of Gerontius,' 'The Apostles,' 'The Kingdom,' 'The Music-Makers,' and 'The Spirit of England'; Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' 'The Blind Girl of Castel Cuillé,' 'The Atonement,' and 'A Tale of Old Japan'; Parry's 'War and Peace,' 'Invocation to Music,' 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' and 'The Chivalry of the Sea'; Saint-Saëns' 'The Promised Land'; Mackenzie's 'The Witch's Daughter'; Cowen's 'The Veil'; Stanford's 'Stabat Mater,' 'Songs of the Sea,' 'Songs of the Fleet,' and 'At the Abbey Gate'; Ethel Smyth's 'Mass'; Hamilton Harty's 'Mystic Trumpeter'; Vaughan Williams' 'Sea Symphony'; Charles Wood's 'Dirge for Two Veterans'; Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whydah'; and last, but not least, Sir Frederick's own 'Flag of England,' 'The Ballad of the Clampherdown,' 'The Forging of the Anchor,' 'A Song of the English,' and 'The Inchcape Rock,' not to mention the earlier (and perhaps best of them all) 'Callirhoë' and the setting of 'Rock of Ages.'

Here, assuredly, is a list of which any conductor may be proud. However, the whole career of this remarkable man has been a synonym for hard work. His interesting and amusing autobiography, 'A Westminster Pilgrim,' affords eloquent proof of this. (Truly, he reminds us more than any other man of Sir Charles Hallé, who, if he neither lectured nor wrote essays, was capable of musical strain for longer stretches of time than any of his contemporaries, and did not, moreover, indulge in a long annual holiday with plenty of salmon-fishing during the summer months.) An appendix to the book gives a complete list of the works performed by the Royal Choral Society under the author's direction from 1896 to 1918. Referring to this, Sir Frederick also says, 'My relations with both choir and orchestra have always been very happy; now and then I have been betrayed into a satirical word, but seldom into an angry one.' He probably regards as his most creditable achievement at the Albert Hall the revival of 'The Messiah,' without Mozart's additional accompaniments. 'I had always looked askance at these embellishments,' he says, and 'to my mind the gain in dispensing with these accompaniments is immense.' On the whole, the public verdict has endorsed his opinion.

When the time comes for complete retirement Sir Frederick Bridge will, in the fullest degree, have earned his otium cum dignitate. Nevertheless, as all the world knows, he is still marvellously young for the seventy-seven years he will have lived by the fifth of next December. Writing about him in a prominent daily paper at the time of our present King's Coronation, I made allusion to this characteristic juvenility, which has not been affected by what I ventured to describe then as 'one of the liveliest, most excitable temperaments to be found in a profession of notoriously excitable beings.' I added,

He is by nature eminently practical. He is an artist, but not a dreamer; a level-headed business man, ever ready to soar to music's sublimest heights in search of inspiration for an anthem or a cantata; just as content to delve amid forgotten scores and dusty volumes for material for a Gresham lecture.

Those words are just as true of him to-day, and there is no reason why, in spite (or rather because) of the cessation of his work as conductor of the Royal Choral Society, they should not be equally applicable to him ten years hence.

---

A further resignation to be recorded is that of Mr. Augustus Littleton, chairman of Novello & Co., Ltd., from the Committee of Management of the Royal Choral Society. His resignation brings to an end a close and, it may surely be said, a mutually beneficial association between the Royal Choral Society and the house of Novello which has continued without a break for the last thirty-two years. The real commencement of this friendly association may be traced as far back as 1873, and in 1889 it was placed on a firm and substantial basis by an agreement which was entered into between the Society and the late Alfred Henry Littleton, senior partner in Messrs. Novello & Co., and Mr. Littleton was invited to join the Committee of Management. It was in a sense a veritable union de corps et de biens, and as a natural consequence of the scheme Messrs. Novello abandoned the successful series of Oratorio Concerts which for some time they had been carrying on at St. James's Hall. It was agreed that Mr. Littleton should be empowered to nominate from time to time works selected from the Novello catalogue to be presented by the Society; and amongst other valuable considerations a substantial sum was to be granted by the publishing firm towards the cost of presenting these works at the Society's concerts. It resulted from the exercise of this power that in March, 1900, Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Song of Hiawatha' was produced by the Society on payment of a hundred pounds by the publishers.

This agreement lapsed theoretically in 1899, but in practice it was continued for some years afterwards. In the meanwhile, Alfred Henry Littleton never ceased to serve—faithfully and assiduously, as was his wont—on the Committee of Management until his death in 1914. After a short interval, Mr. Augustus Littleton was invited to take his brother's place on the Committee, and also on the sub-committee (appointed annually) whose duties were—and are—to arrange the programme, engage the soloists, and attend to all details connected with the Society's concerts. The suggestions and recommendations of this sub-committee for each season are naturally submitted to the Committee of Management for approval and confirmation, and it need scarcely be said that the services of Mr. Augustus Littleton were rendered throughout with the same zeal and regard for the mutual interests at stake as had marked his late brother's tenure of office.

The signing of the contract between the Society and Messrs. Novello excited the highest expectations regarding the advantages that would accrue therefrom, and it will be of interest to quote in this connection some lines which appeared in the Musical Times of October, 1889, over the then familiar initials 'J.B.' (Joseph Bennett). The article headed an article dealing with the four seasons' splendid work (1885-89) accomplished under Sir (then Dr.) Alexander Mackenzie at 'Novello' Oratorio Concerts, and ran as follows:

After working through four seasons, these Concerts have ceased to exist. Yet, after all, that is scarcely the way to put it. We shall know them no more as a separate entity, so much is indubitable; but they will still live, in their spirit and in the influence of their director, as part and parcel of the kindred enterprise at the Albert Hall. The bare facts are these: Mr. Alfred Littleton, head of the firm of Novello, Ewer & Co., has joined the Committee of the Royal Choral Society; discontinuing the Concerts hitherto given in St. James's Hall by his firm, and transferring his interest to the older body, which will produce a certain number of new works that would otherwise have been brought out by the Novello Choir. This is not extinction; it is a marriage, and a marriage may be prolific.

Unquestionably it was prolific—alike in achievement and in healthy influence on the advancement of the choral art of our epoch.

CHARLES KŒCHLIN

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

I.

The reason why certain composers get their music performed, published, and noticed forthwith, whereas others work for many years without recognition of any kind, is unfathomable. It appears to depend little on whether the music is complicated or simple, startling or sober in its tendencies, primitive or scholarly in workmanship; it is apparently a mere matter of luck. In France, each during the last quarter of a century or so has been on the whole an easy-going country for native composers so far as publication and production of works are concerned, the case of an Albéric Magnard (described in last month's Musical Times) is exceptional; and in that instance there were special reasons, quite apart from any question of Magnard's musical idiosyncrasies. As regards Charles Kœchlin, however, we can only wonder that he should prove another exception to a rule which has benefited not only composers of questionable merit, such as Ravel, de Séverac, Roussel, Florent Schmitt, Louis Aubert, and others, but a number of second-rate men and even of nonentities.

The readers of the Musical Times have long since realised, through the summaries and excerpts of articles by Kœchlin,* that he is a composer of an earnest, judicial, and fervid outlook upon his art. A perusal of the list of his works will suffice to show that he is extremely industrious, exercising his activities in many directions; and a study of his few published works will convince us that he has plenty of his own to say, and that what he says is worthy of most earnest notice.

That list, as published by Emile Vuillermoz in what is, I believe, the first comprehensive article devoted to Kœchlin's output (Le Temps, January 14, 1921), comprises three books of Rondels to poems of Théodore de Banville, four books of songs, a number of choral works of ample proportions, of symphonic poems, of orchestral suites (among which the chief are 'Les Saisons,' 'Études antiques,' and 'La Forêt'), choreographic poems, a Biblical Pastoral in one Act, 'Jacob chez Laban,' a ballad for pianoforte and orchestra, three chorals for organ and orchestra, three String quartets, half-a-dozen Sonatas for various instruments, and a quantity of pianoforte music.

Of all that wealth, only the 'Rondels,' the first three books of songs, five Sonatinas, and the set of twelve 'Paysages et Marines' for pianoforte are at present published. Part of the chamber music, the fourth book of songs, and one big orchestral and choral work, 'L'Abbaye,' are to appear shortly. Only an infinitesimal proportion of those various works has ever been performed.

Even with nothing but that little before us, we cannot help being struck with the versatility of his outlook and technique, of his moods and ways. Not for one moment could we entertain the hope of finding a convenient label for him. His 'Paysages et Marines' reveal his belief in nature's spectacles as a source of inspiration; yet nobody, after a cursory glance at those pages, would dream of describing him as an impressionist. In some of them he will be found yielding to a purely contemplative mood ('Matin Calme,' 'Dans les Grands Champs'); others are written in a strong, unmixed emotional vein ('Soir d'Angoisse,' 'Paysage d'Octobre'), or are frankly dramatic ('Ceux qui s'en vont pêcher au large dans la nuit'); some show him indulging in the delight of mere song for song's sake; some are in parts unmistakably descriptive; and here and there (as, for instance, in 'Soir d'Été'), an undercurrent of philosophical meditation is felt to mingle with the æsthetic emotion—a feature noticeable in several of the songs. We cannot say that he is essentially romantic, or dramatic, or lyric, or abstract, or descriptive. Should we, for instance, single out the romantic quality of 'Soir d'Été' or 'Paysage d'Octobre,' or of the wonderful 'Chant du Chevrier' (of which more hereafter), we should find it hard to make good the contention with regard to so purely classical a thing as the 'Poème Virgilien.' Should we fail to notice how completely the 'Paysages et Marines' fulfil the conditions of 'pure' music, the 'Sonatines' would be there to show how independent the composer can be from the support not only of poetic or dramatic suggestion, but of resources acquired through the practice of descriptive or dramatic music.

His technique affords us equally little help in respect of classification. At one time we see him content with the simplest and most traditional resources; at another, straining the possibilities of the ten fingers to the utmost, indulging in the most recondite harmonies and the most complex superimpositions of patterns. He is no more a revolutionist than he is an academist, or an eclectic after the fashion of a Saint-Saëns. His methods may be contrapuntal or homophonic, strictly tonal or polytonal, restrained or exuberant; but his resoluteness, directness, and singleness of purpose remain invariable.

In his fondness for the direct, topical, and terse in poetic or dramatic suggestion, for concinnity and perspicuity in 'pure' music, he is unquestionably Latin, but a Latin upon whom German influences have worked strongly—a point the full discussion of which may be left for the time when his orchestral and chamber music works will be available. But whereas some of those influences may have developed in him a tendency towards discursiveness (the very reverse of what we find in the instrumental works so far published), the preponderant influence has been the most wholesome—that of Bach.

It is to his diligent study and sound comprehension of Bach's music that Kœchlin owes his capacity to produce melody in a free, long-sustained flow, as well as his polyphonic style, easy even when complex, and his methods of thematic working-out. The fact, obvious enough in the 'Sonatines,' is hardly less obvious in the 'Paysages et Marines.' Spiritual kinship with Bach—a kinship founded on interpreting his teachings, not on copying his models—is clearly evinced in things such as, for instance, the beautiful, unremitting arabesques of the melody in 'Poème Virgilien':

* See Musical Times, April, 1921, p. 263, and October, 1921, p. 694.

in the polyphony of 'Matin Calme' (the whole piece should be considered: a quotation would prove little), or 'Soir d'Été,' the whole material of which is derived in simplest and most effective wise from the following motive:

Another decisive influence upon Kœchlin was that of his master, Gabriel Fauré. But it is characteristic of Fauré's teaching and influence that no definite hall-mark, in the shape of certain mannerisms or even a certain manner, has ever accrued from it. We might be tempted to pounce upon some detail of treatment in certain of the songs, and trace it back to Fauré—exactly as other things in them will invite comparison with Henri Duparc—for reasons, on the whole, either too minute, or too general and vague to be of importance from the point of view of criticism. It is in the spirit of harmonic treatment, and in the technique of part-writing, that Fauré's influence asserts itself most directly. Apart from this, it is entirely spiritual, and founded upon the example which his unparagoned and inimitable musicianship affords.

Nothing could differ more from Fauré's restraint and reticence, from the quiet range of colours with which he is content, than Kœchlin's predilection for vehement, forcible modes of utterance. Truly, Kœchlin's touch can be light enough in point of fact; and most of the finest things in the 'Paysages et Marines' are as free from complications as are the 'Sonatines.' But even at his simplest he remains a musician whose object is to state all things in their fullness rather than merely to suggest. He resorts to concentration often, but to elimination hardly ever.

His setting of Verlaine's 'Mon Rêve Familier' is a case in point. Nothing could be simpler than the quiet recitative of the voice, the no less quiet accompaniment in chords, mostly pianissimo, with two bars forte towards the middle, one mezzo-forte a little further. Yet it is impossible I think, not to realise that Kœchlin—intentional or not—has disengaged and greatly intensified whatever elements of pessimism and gloom lurk behind Verlaine's homely utterances. Without introducing any incongruous element, he tells us good deal more than we might have found in the poem. And the musical atmosphere which he provides is far different, not only as regards tone, but as regards quality, from what we might have expected, for instance, from Fauré or Debussy.

Again, in his setting of Samain's 'Accompagnement,' he is not interested by the ripple and play on the surface, nor by the elusive fluidity of the imagery and of the emotions which it directly excites, but solely by the undercurrents which he finds far beneath and reveals to us in quiet but impressive language. The same thing occurs in 'Soir d'Été' ('Paysages et Marines'), where he makes straight for the unspoken and indelible drama underlying the emotions immediately perceived.

He is no less attracted by the tranquil charm of classical bucolics, idylls, and elegies than by the topics that are richest in dramatic or picturesque possibilities. No homage greater than that embodied in his 'Poème Virgilien' could be paid in music to the Muse of Virgil. Among his songs, countless numbers, from the charming 'Ancienne' and 'Le Repas Préparé' (that latter almost as extraordinary a tour de force as Ravel's 'Surgi de la croupe et du bond') to the less interesting 'La Jeune Tarentine,' illustrate the tendency of his, which has also given rise to the unpublished 'Études Antiques' for orchestra.

II.

Of Kœchlin's technique—which affords us a better means of classifying him than do the other features of his music—practically the same can be said as of his art generally considered.

The 'Sonatines,' written for young musicians, uniformly reveal in him the artist capable of expressing himself fully and in original wise through the medium of the plainest idiom and a minimum of technical resources. In 'Paysages et Marines' he ranges from the greatest simplicity to the utmost complication.

The writing of those twelve pieces is at times unlike anything known before, and the composer's innovations are in their way as striking and as useful as Ravel's in theirs; but with the difference that they are in no wise an extension of the essentially 'pianistic' style of writing which we owe chiefly to Chopin and to Liszt.

There is no dearth of music for piano-forte written in ignorance of the Chopin and Liszt tradition: but as often as not, that music sounds thin and hollow, unless written on safe, conservative lines. Kœchlin's labours under no such disadvantage.

He makes no call on virtuosity as generally understood. He has no use for runs, for complicated figuration, for ornamentation of a ind. If his pianoforte music is difficult to play, is because it requires, besides a great variety of such, a perfect knowledge of phrasing, and great presence of mind—especially with regard to the distribution of the notes between the two hands.

Most of the 'Paysages et Marines' are written in three staves, and this is the kind of thing with which the performer has to contend:

('Soir d'Été.')

('Paysage d'Octobre.')

Of course, such passages are quite easy to play almost right: but it is very difficult to progress beyond the 'almost.'

At times, having tasked the two hands to the utmost of their resources, he feels that he would like 'just a little more to make it enough': artistically indicating, for instance, the desirability of duplication in a higher octave:

('Sur la Falaise.')

The use of three staves ensures greater clarity; and therefore, even in places where two might have been made to suffice, is all to the performer's advantage. One passage of 'Matin Calme' is written on four staves, the bottom one carrying nothing but a holding-note, and the top very few notes; but should we try to rewrite it on three, it would become difficult to read.

There is another point, however, which performers will consider as the very reverse of helpful. Kœchlin, in his pianoforte music, uses few bar-divisions, and gives no time-signature. In this matter he is quite uncompromising. Even when his metres are perfectly symmetrical, he writes them exactly as he does the ample, measureless melodies and arabesques that abound in the 'Sonatines' as well as in the 'Paysages et Marines.'

This, with him, is certainly no pose: to think of a pose in connection with Kœchlin is difficult. Obviously, there is a purpose behind the practice: and the purpose, in all likelihood, is on one hand to do away with the nuisance of ever-changing time-signatures, and eventually, of a different time-signature to each staff; on the other hand, to eliminate all possibility of mechanical playing, to compel the performer not to rely upon the assistance, at times misleading, of bar-divisions, but to realise the actual structure and phrasing—which in the long run is as helpful as the incorrect adjustment of a phrase, regular or irregular, within the compartments of bar-divisions, may prove inexpedient.

For that reason, but chiefly because they are full of imagination, vigour, and grace, I would put the 'Sonatines' in the very front rank of the contemporary works to be included in the young student's curriculum. No less than Bartók's 'Pieces for Children,' though in a far different direction, they will develop the taste as well as the senses of rhythm and hearing. In those respects I consider them invaluable. The set comprises perfect gems of music (such as the Finale of the fifth Sonatine, a rare instance of humour, poetry, and whimsical fantasy), and should be as welcome on the concert-platform as in the class room.

(To be continued.)

PIANOLA MUSIC*

By EDWIN EVANS

In the development of every modern invention there occurs, at the beginning, an awkward phase during which the majority of people, including those immediately interested, interpret it to themselves in terms of something else. We need go back no further than the early days of motor-cars. The idea that an automobile was a horseless carriage took so firm a hold upon what those concerned would have called their imagination, that we were treated to the ludicrous spectacle of a chauffeur sitting upright upon a box-seat, apparently driving non-existent horses. Further back we had railway carriages which retained a preposterous resemblance to mail-coaches. One could multiply such instances.

Musicians, generally speaking, have proved immune from this ambiguous attitude. They either accept or reject, and if they accept they do not assuage their conscience by pretending to take one thing for another. They reject, for instance, any attempt to provide them with a new notation, although the short-comings of the present one are realised. They reject all improvements upon the present keyboard, whether made by Janko or by Emmanuel Moor. But composers, on the contrary, have usually thrown themselves with great avidity upon the new resources offered by invention, not only using them, but, at least in the early stages, employing them to excess. It was so when the brass was reinforced in the classic orchestra, and it was so again, not so many years back, when the celesta made its appearance. For some time composers seemed to have the illusion that no four pages of scoring could be complete without a tinkle from the celesta.

* The basis of a lecture delivered at Æolian Hall, London, on October 13.

From past experience one would have imagined that the invention of the pianola would have had considerable consequences, that is to say, that the younger contingent of composers would have seized upon it as the very latest thing, and that, after a period of the usual abuse, we should have settled down by now to a reasonable employment of its attributes and proclivities. If nothing of the kind has happened the reason lies in the fact that not only composers, but musicians generally, have for once dropped into the attitude of mind described above. Just as the motor-car was regarded as a horseless carriage, the pianola, or rather the player-piano, has been regarded as a pianistless pianoforte, with a kind of chauffeur endeavouring to suggest the presence of another performer who is non-existent. The pianola is nothing of the kind. It is a piece of mechanism interpolated between the performer and his medium. Like all other mechanisms, its primary purpose is to lighten the mechanical side of human labour, the ultimate prospect being that the performer, relieved of the purely digital part of his labour, should be better able to concentrate upon the mental. It is no substitute for musical skill. Perhaps it demands even greater skill than playing the pianoforte. At all events such has been my impression sometimes on attending pianoforte recitals. Such are the functions of the pianola considered historically, with an eye on the future. It is, of course, obvious that they do not appear thus in the light of ephemeral opportunism, which fastens itself, as usual, upon the idea that it is a substitute. But the interpolation of mechanism has the effect of fashioning a new instrument. To my mind the player-piano has the same relation to the pianoforte as the harpsichord to the harp. The process has been carried one step further; that is all.

Even the keyboard is a mere survival, governed by some tenacious practical considerations, chief among which is the circumstance that many people, in their homes, like to have a keyboard available as occasion demands, as well as the use of the player-piano. For that reason the keyboard will probably be retained in all instruments intended for domestic use, but I am quite confident that, in course of time, instruments will be made for public performance, and especially for orchestral purposes, from which the keyboard will have disappeared. The mechanism of the pianola will then operate directly upon a piano-action, modified to suit the new requirements. It is also possible that an instrument thus simplified will permit of many mechanical improvements which are not practicable in its present cumbersome form.

To a musician the most interesting speculation as to the future is the effect of the new device upon composition. So far as can be seen at present, it is chiefly what may be termed the ornamental side of composition that will be affected. We do not look to the pianola for new musical forms, new harmonies, or for tone-colour not to be obtained from the present pianoforte, or for rhythmic combinations unknown to present orchestras. But we do look to it for new patterns and new methods of figuration. However detached their musical thought may be, composers have hitherto obviously been influenced by the shape and limitations of the human hand, whatever the instrument for which they happened to be writing. The entire art of modern pianistic writing, reared upon the foundations laid by Chopin and Liszt, bears the imprint of the human hand. To mention only one feature, the arpeggio in all its manifold forms has sprung, not from abstract musical inventiveness, but from the possibilities which are open to a hand upon a keyboard. Freed from this limitation, the imagination of musicians is enabled to give us a wealth of decorative devices totally different from those with which the pianoforte has made us familiar. The pianola, with its eighty-eight fingers, can execute arabesques at any speed, regardless of the number of notes employed, and, what is more important, of their relative position — factors hitherto governed by the possible extension of the hand. It can also give us a profusion of rhythmic patterns, and especially of combined rhythms, such as no pianist could execute. Combined rhythms are always a difficulty to pianists, even the best of whom generally give us an impression, rather than an accurate presentation of them. With the removal of this difficulty, ingenuity is at once set free. And, whatever its detractors may say, ingenuity has always been a liberal contributor to the development of musical ideas.

What the influence of this new device is likely to be none can say at present, but the history of the pianoforte affords some clues. Though I have been unable to find historical confirmation of the fact, I have always held that there was an æsthetic basis for the early use, in contrast, of the term sonata and toccata, the former implying more the effect of inflection, and the latter a dynamic effect. The distinction I have in mind is not absolute. We cannot separate entirely one kind of music from the other. But of the existence of the two types there can be no question, and, so far as the pianoforte is concerned, the distinction is related to the dual nature of the instrument itself, which is a member at the same time of the great string family, and of another group, which for want of a better name might be called the dulcimer family. I well remember a conductor of other days, who, disliking the instrument intensely, used to give vent to his feelings by referring to it as chromatic percussion. The two styles are perpetuated in the broad distinction between legato and staccato touch.

It was the romantic movement that gave the occasion for the preponderating development of the inflective type as compared with the other. I often wonder whether the invention of the modern pianoforte was not even a contributory cause to that movement. However much may be written at the desk, there is no doubt that the pianoforte has been a favourite instrument with composers, and when its tone was enriched, and its mechanism improved, to a point where a sustained cantabile became possible, it is not unreasonable to suspect that their ideas may have been unconsciously influenced by it. But, whatever the reason, in the 18th century what I have called the toccata type held its full share of service to music, as, for instance, in Scarlatti; in the 19th century it elapsed to an ancillary position, and the sonata type became prominent. In the 20th century this has produced the inevitable reaction. The pendulum is swinging the other way, and composers have arisen who seek to express their ideas by the dynamic juxtaposition of notes rather than by their inflection. When endeavouring to elucidate the aims and intentions of composers, I have so often been misinterpreted in the sense of being made to espouse all the opinions, however divergent, of my subjects, that I must here digress to explain that I hold no brief for one type of music as against another. The more that different styles find free play, the richer music will be. There should be equal opportunity for all, and any attempt in the 20th century to show that one method supersedes another would be just as harmful as the opposite process was in the 19th. The fact remains, however, that the ideas of certain composers of to-day require precision in execution, but not the sentimental inflection of the individual performer. Obviously, composers imbued with these ideas, the pianola must prove very attractive. It has inflectional possibilities, which are being steadily improved and may attain perfection; but to-day these are not its strong point, and their use is at the discretion of the performer. If the composer indicates that he desires a passionless, mathematically accurate presentation of his music, there is no other instrument that will fulfil his wishes as completely as the pianola. Even in the music of the past, works corresponding to the toccata type display the instrument to the best advantage.

When therefore I addressed myself to a number of composers to ascertain whether they felt inclined to experiment, I was not in the least surprised to find, relatively speaking, reluctance among those in whom the inheritance of the Romantic movement was still a strong influence, and alacrity among those whose reaction from that movement was most marked. I wrote in all to about twenty composers, British, French, Italian, and Russian. One of them, Igor Stravinsky, had already given attention to the same subject, and in reply to my application, confronted me with his attitude as a fait accompli. The others acquiesced more or less promptly, but many who readily gave promises have found that the problem has more aspects than they suspected at the time, and there are still several compositions to come in.

Apart from its great and manifold possibilities, the problem presents many pitfalls. The composers have told me very frankly of the temptations with which they were beset. One of these was that of indulging in a quite unnecessary profusion of notes. Another was that of being led astray in pursuit of mere stunts. A third, perhaps more insidious, was that of permitting the natural exhilaration of handling such extravagant possibilities to give their ideas too easily a humorous tinge. The device is capable of producing comic effects, but these are only one of a multitude of potentialities, and, precisely because they come easily, they are best avoided until the latent serious resources of the instrument have been more fully developed.

Another point that requires discussion is the adaptation of orchestral works for the pianola. Opinion here has passed through several successive phases. At first it was deemed sufficient to cut the roll from an ordinary pianoforte arrangement. Then the preference was given to arrangements for four hands, and even two pianofortes. Then musicians intervened and insisted that the rolls should be cut from the full score. They in turn were not completely in the right. Orchestral works need a special adaptation for the pianola. Just as an expert arranger for the pianoforte will interpret pianistically the figuration that is characteristic of the strings, frequently modifying its pattern completely, a new interpretation is required of such characteristic passages in order to obtain a really significant rendering on the pianola. Mere transliteration is not enough; the terms do not retain their meaning. A kind of translation is required. But this does not apply to all orchestral music. Contemporary composers who take the view described above, and express themselves dynamically, appear to need no editing. This again throws light upon their methods. I discussed the question with Stravinsky, who said that, while some of his earlier works would require, here and there, a slight adaptation to make them effective on the pianola, 'Le Sacre du Printemps' could be taken note for note as arranged for the pianoforte. This has been done, and the result justifies his view. It is of course impossible to reproduce orchestral colour, but I regard the reproduction of this work on the pianola as perhaps the most satisfying result hitherto obtained, the explanation lying in the music itself rather than in any perfection of method.

Some commentators have been at pains to inform me that the above suggestions are not new. Mr. Ernest Newman, for instance, describes me as having taken up an idea that had been in general circulation for some time, and instances the now defunct Piano-Player Review, whose circulation was, however, never sufficiently general for a copy to reach me. I discussed them at the conclusion of my lectures on 'The Foundations of 20th Century Music,' a synopsis of which appeared in the Musical Times of August, 1917. Even then the only novelty was the claim that the pianola might come to be regarded as one of those foundations, as the pianoforte was a century earlier. Obviously, one cannot pretend to the discovery of an idea which should have occurred to every musician, even if it did not, the moment the pianola had been invented. I take this opportunity for disclaiming any such presumption. My only claim is that, whilst others talked or wrote, I have been doing.

Phantasy Minuet	...	...	...	Howells
Tre Improvisi	...	...	...	Malipiero
Rhythmic Dance	...	...	...	Goossens
Etude for Pianola	...	...	...	Stravinsky
Trois Pieces	...	...	...	Casella

Prelude—Valse—Rag-time.

An excerpt from 'Le Sacre du Printemps'

Stravinsky

THE MUSICAL PRESS

There is so much liveliness in the world of musical journalism just now that a few words on the subject may be allowed. New journals come, and occasionally go, or are swallowed by others. On the whole, however, musicians may congratulate themselves on the fact that public interest in the art is now sufficient to justify the issue of over a dozen journals where fifty years ago only two existed—the Musical Times and the Monthly Musical Record. It seems to be too readily taken for granted that the established journals look on newcomers as opponents. There could be no greater mistake. That there is room for all is proved by the fact that each is more or less identified with some special aspect of musical activity. This is true even of journals which aim at being as general and comprehensive as possible. We ourselves have the best of evidence that the success of a new journal is not as a rule obtained at the expense of those already in existence. Musicians either read no such journals at all or they read several. A new one is tried, and if it is satisfactory, or if it deals with a department so far neglected by the musical press, it is added to the list. It supplements, but rarely supersedes. It may even help the existing organs. Owing to the publicity that attends its birth it invariably taps a circle of readers new to musical journalism, and a proportion of these new readers sooner or later find their way to other periodicals of the kind. A good example of a new journal helping old ones is supplied by the Musical Mirror, a copy of which has been sent to us for review. The Musical Mirror has just completed its first year, and we wish it many happy returns. It fills a place in the scheme of things because it is avowedly a kind of link between the ordinary press and the out-and-out musical paper. It has one feature for which the older journals should return thanks. A page of each issue is devoted to extracts from the chief articles in the current music press, under the heading 'You Should Read . . .' Can there be any doubt that this page has sent a good many readers to the journals quoted? It is the best of advertisements, costing the quoted journals nothing and providing the Mirror with a page of plums, free.

The position of the musical press in regard to news is becoming difficult. When these journals first appeared, the daily press gave little or no space to musical matters, and the handful of people who wanted news of that kind were content to take it in monthly allowances from the few magazines devoted to the art. To-day not only the daily press of London and the great provincial centres give a good deal of space to music; many smaller weekly journals in country districts contain a column written, not by one of the ordinary reporting staff (as would have been the case a few years ago), but by a local musician, or a journalist competent to deal with the subject. As a result the news columns of the musical monthlies are liable to contain a proportion of matter that is far from fresh, and it seems likely that such journals will eventually reduce their news department to a bare record of important events at home and abroad for purposes of reference. With the space thus saved, they will be able to develop a section devoted to articles, reviews of new books and music, pianola rolls, and gramophone records, so doing valuable work that for obvious reasons can rarely be done with anything like completeness in the ordinary press.

In an article in the Birmingham Post recently 'A. J. S.' passed the musical journals in rapid review. He was, on the whole, blandly encouraging to all of us, giving a kindly pat with one hand and (lest any should be unduly puffed up) a gentle dig with the other. In regard to the Musical Times, however, he said one or two things that were inaccurate, or that showed an imperfect realisation of the journal's aims. He considers that 'the attitude of the Musical Times towards [modern?] music is dignified; with a foot firmly based on the classics, the other does little mild adventuring into regions not too far removed to disturb its balance.' We are sorry anything in our columns should strike 'A. J. S.' as 'dignified,' because dignity seems to us to be a quality in which the musical press can well afford to be abstemious. Had it been less dignified (and perhaps a little more impudent) in the past, it would be in a far more flourishing condition than it is. As Mr. Edwin Evans pointed out in an article on this subject in the Musical News and Herald of October 8, the comparatively small circulation of the entire musical press . . . is in some measure due to the sins of the past. People fell, or were led, into the habit of regarding musical journalism as a dull affair, which in most cases it was, and the harassed editors of to-day, one and all, have to live down the memory of that dullness as best they can. In a certain sense we are engaged in the same struggle as, until recently, the British composer.

This by the way. We plead guilty to having the foot in contact with the classics, though it may remind 'A. J. S.' that that foot has not always been 'firmly based.' Occasionally it has given the prostrate great ones a gentle kick by way of protest against the average musician's slavish and critical attitude towards classical music. As to that 'mild adventuring,' here is a pinch of cold salt: the Musical Times was the first journal to give anything like a comprehensive survey of the work of living native composers. From January, 1919, till the midsummer of 1920, Mr. Edwin Evans contrived a series of articles dealing with Frank Bridge, Arnold Bax, Benjamin Dale, Eugène Goossens, John Ireland, Gustav Holst, Lord Berners, Herbert Howells, and Vaughan Williams. These are not brief sketches, but exhaustive—even exhausting—studies, in some cases running to as many as twenty columns, with copious music-type examples. Our columns have contained since 18 lengthy articles on Déodat de Séverac (Leigh Henry), Malipiero (G. Jean-Aubry), Stravinsky (Leigh Henry), modern Spanish music (Leigh Henry), César Franck (Sydney Grew), d'Indy and Fauré (M.-D. Calvocoressi), Parry (H. C. Miles), &c. Just drawing to a close is a series of articles on young Italian composers by Guido M.atti—Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Davico, Casella, Guiard—some of whose names were hardly known in this country a year ago. In addition there have appeared articles and reviews of new music galore. We are sorry to take up an attitude that savours of stuffiness, but a glance at the indexes of our past few volumes justifies some pride so far as consideration of modern music is concerned. If 'A. J. S.' can name any other journal that has given more space to this department, he should do so. If he cannot, his patronising reference to our 'mild adventuring' is simply mild nonsense. No less off the spot is his remark that the Musical Times 'provides far more news than any serious musical student ought to have time to assimilate.' Our news columns are not provided for the use of students, and we should be very much surprised—even sorry—if readers of the kind tempted to 'assimilate' them. We include them because the publication of musical news still remains a function of the musical press, though, as was said above, it tends to become less so in view of the increased space given to the subject in the daily and weekly papers. Musical journals as a whole will never be able to discontinue their news pages, however much they may wish to do so. Not only public libraries, but many readers bind their copies annually, and a good deal of the subsequent value of the volumes depends on their completeness as works of reference. In our own editorial office hardly a day passes without our past volumes being overhauled, either on our own account or on behalf of a correspondent, and in nearly every case the inquiry concerns the news columns. A reference of this kind is far more easily traced in a musical journal than in the files of the daily press—a fact that no doubt occurred to the foreign Ambassador who recently sent a messenger to this office asking for particulars of the first English appearance about twenty years ago of a certain Continental singer.

Of course, a journal that attempts to provide a kind of birds-eye view of the musical activities of the whole country runs a risk of including a proportion of small beer chronicles. In this connection, however, readers must not hastily decide that the report of a choral or orchestral concert in a small country town is necessarily less important than the account of the doings of the so-called 'international celebrities' who tour the country with a limited supply of hackneyed works. The musical life of the community depends far more upon the number of people who make music themselves than upon the crowds who manage to subscribe imposing totals in guineas in order to hear a self-styled 'queen of song' deliver a string of platitudes that would never get a hearing if written for pianoforte or orchestra. None the less, we are prepared to admit that local correspondents do occasionally send us news that is unimportant, and that a proportion of this news is liable to escape the blue pencil.

On this point, however, 'A. J. S.' does us less than justice. Speaking of our news columns, he says:

The student is not thrilled, for instance, to hear that the choir of Backwater-cum-Poges Parish Church have just done somebody's 'Penitence, Pardon, and Peace.'

With some apprehension we hastily searched the local news of our past few volumes, and to our relief had quite a long way to go before finding one reference to a work of that type. Evidently 'A. J. S.' based his remark on what he thought the Musical Times might be expected to contain—a very easy-going method of criticism.

The musical press so rarely discusses itself that we hope readers will allow us to take this opportunity for dealing with another point that is always more or less in the air, and which appears to be in need of clearing up. The present is a good moment, because the matter has lately been touched on by several writers, our Birmingham Post friend among them.

What is an 'independent' musical journal?

The usual and hasty answer is: 'One that is not issued by a firm of music publishers.' Such appears to be the opinion of 'A. J. S.,' who evidently holds that our only independent journal is that excellent monthly contemporary whose advertisement pages are almost equal to those of the whole of the rest of the musical press put together. But a moment's thought will show that a journal which has behind it a powerful publishing house, and is therefore in a position to set little store by revenue from advertisements, is really far more independent. It owes its existence to one publisher: the other journal depends upon the support of dozens.

Speaking of the periodical in question—Musical Opinion—‘A. J. S.’ says:

I suppose its complete independence involves a considerable widening of its standards, and it is anyhow to the credit of the paper that its editorial columns make no concession to its advertisement pages.

If ‘A. J. S.’ wishes to test this latter point we advise him to send to the editor a denunciatory review of a work advertised in the pages referred to. Of course his denunciations would be declined, or would be watered down. And why not? The advertisers in a journal are its customers. Every business man, from the coster on the kerb to Mr. Selfridge in his Bargain Basement, lives by favour of his clients, and would think twice before offending them. Why should we expect the publisher of a musical journal with space to sell by the inch to be more foolhardy than any other business man? Works for review sent by an advertiser can be judged with frankness only if they are first-rate. The feeble ones must be passed over or dealt with discreetly. There must be some ‘concession,’ however slight, just as there must be give and take in all business relations. The journal ‘A. J. S.’ so highly praises has every virtue he claims but one—‘complete independence.’ As this virtue is possessed by no other musical journal in this country (or in any other, so far as we can discover), we are sure its proprietors will not mind the fact being pointed out.

In this connection we note that Mr. Percy Scholes, in the current issue of the Music Student, speaks of that paper as being ‘financially independent.’ But as the Music Student is owned by a firm of educational and musical publishers, and as thirty of its sixty pages are devoted to advertisements, we fail to see where ‘independence’ of any kind comes in. Again we do not imply that the magazine is any the worse for that; we merely want to blow away the foggy views that hang around this question. The plain, brutal fact is, that under present conditions a musical journal cannot exist without the backing of a powerful publishing firm, or of an institution or group of institutions.

How little this fact need interfere with its breadth of outlook is easily proved. The Musical Times, the Musical News and Herald, the Sackbut, the Musical Standard, the Monthly Musical Record, the Choir, and Fanfare are all owned by music publishers. Yet, to quote Mr. Edwin Evans’ article again, ‘there is scarcely one that can be regarded, in the narrow sense, as a house organ.’ A reader may as a rule go through their pages without being aware of the fact that they are owned by music publishers. As to our own policy in this respect, we hope we may be forgiven for quoting once more the testimony of Mr. Ernest Newman, especially as it applies also to some of our contemporaries. In the Observer of May 18, 1919, he said:

Except that they have naturally wished to make their papers as sound business propositions as possible . . . the owners of the present musical journals do not come any more than the owners of any literary or political journal do under the reproach of betraying a trust for money. When has the fact that the Musical Times, for example, belongs to Messrs. Novello & Co. stood in the way of free discussion in its columns of most subjects under the sun? I say most subjects, because one is naturally barred. No man in his senses would expect Messrs. Novello & Co. to allow the Musical Times to be used for disparaging their own publications, any more than we should expect the Daily News to print articles against cocoa, or the Tablet articles against religion. Messrs. Novello have used their journal singularly little to push their own publications, while the paper has afforded a free platform for every musician who has had anything to say that was worth saying. The wares of other publishers have had much more space allotted to them in the editorial columns of the Musical Times than the wares of Messrs. Novello have.

If ‘A. J. S.’ wants a more generous measure of independence than that credited to us by his predecessor on the Birmingham Post, we fear he will have to wait a long, long while for it.

One other point. Mr. Scholes thinks there are too many musical journals. He says that ‘the proper policy at present is not to bring into existence new musical papers, but to combine, consolidate, and improve those that already exist. We do not agree. In this, as in most other things what is wanted is not combination, but competition, fierce but friendly. Only in that way can improvement come. ‘Combine’ sounds good—a variant of ‘Union is strength.’ But how it is liable to work out in practice is well shown by the recent combination of the Music Student and the Musician. The latter has had an experience similar to that of the young lady who went for a ride on a tiger:

They returned from the ride
With the lady inside . . .

At all events, we see no trace of the Musician since it went for a ride with the Music Student.

THE JUBILEE OF THE ‘MAGIC FLUTE’

SEPTEMBER 30, 1921

A hundred and thirty years have elapsed since the first performance of ‘Die Zauberflöte,’ and still Mozart’s masterwork stands in ‘splendid isolation,’ solitary and misunderstood. Its glorious melodies raise the enthusiasm of listeners; its golden humour rejoices the hearts of men. But who can say ‘I have grasped the hidden meaning of the work? While acknowledging the great value of the music, we have ever declared the text a piece of nonsense, and this opinion has become tradition. Is it possible that the great Mozart could have written such divine music to a silly fairy-tale?

Let us briefly examine the history of the libretto. The full meaning of the masterworks of the German classics—of Lessing, Wieland, Herder, Goethe—cannot be grasped without the admission of the influence of Freemasonry, with its purely human character, embracing the civilised world during the second half of the 18th century. Yet nowhere are the masonic ideas expressed more powerfully and more artistically than in the 'Magic Flute.' Mozart is a member of the oldest Lodge, 'Zur gekrönten Öffnung,' at Vienna. No egotism had caused him to become a Freemason, but real humanity, the wish to help others. He composed masonic songs, choruses, and cantatas, which are, as it were, preparatory studies to the 'Magic Flute.' When Schikaneder (1751-1812), an actor, theatrical manager, and a friend of Mozart, first broached the subject of the 'Magic Flute,' he did not mean to suggest a masonic opera. The subject was taken from Wieland's 'Dschinnistan,' a collection of fairy-tales (vol. iii.), and the first Act was written when he heard that two other operas on the same subject, with music by Wenzel Müller, were about to be produced. This caused him to alter the character of the story altogether. It has been suggested that Karl Ludwig Gieseke, a member of Schikaneder's theatrical company, who had written several successful plays, was the author of the 'Magic Flute.' Gieseke was a member of Mozart's Masonic Lodge, and he had actually worked at the plot of the 'Magic Flute' from a Mason's point of view; but it has been definitely proved by Komorzynski* that he did not possess the poetic gift to write the text to Mozart's opera. Doubtless he had a share in the work, since it can now be shown that Schikaneder himself was a Freemason and a member of the Lodge 'Die Wachsende zu den drei Schlüsseln' at Regensburg.† Up till 1790 Freemasonry was in a flourishing condition. All the leading men in literature, art, and politics, including the Emperor Joseph II., were Freemasons. After the year 1790 the Roman Catholic Church began seriously to attack the Order. Under Leopold II. (1790-92) the patronage of the nobility was withdrawn, and Freemasonry seemed to require an apology. It will never be ascertained whether Schikaneder himself evolved the happy thought of placing his subject under the waning star of the Masonic Order, or whether other factors were instrumental in this respect. Doubtless Mozart, himself an enthusiastic Freemason, caused Schikaneder to give the fairy-tale of Wieland a deeper significance. He watched over the plot and its symbolism, giving masonic ideas a pronounced expression, and leaving the technical part to the experienced Schikaneder. Thus the text to the 'Zauberflöte' is a mottled work. Schikaneder did not take the trouble of revising the first Act according to the suggestions of Mozart and Gieseke. Hence there is a break in the characterisation of the persons, who in the second part are developed in quite a different manner from what had been planned in the fairy-tale-like first Act. Yet there is no cause to criticise too severely. The knowledge of the damage is its own correction, for Mozart has with his sublimely uniform artistic music supplied what which is wanted. The music becomes a means of inspiring the highest ideals of man; it lays bare the deeper meaning of the somewhat superficial ones; it takes away the commonplace character and reveals the harmony of truth and love.

'Die Zauberflöte' was first performed on September 30, 1791, in the theatre 'Auf der Wieden,' with great success, and the authors were much disappointed. The audience did not understand the significance of the work. A Berlin report of October 9 says:

The new machine comedy, 'Die Zauberflöte,' with music by our Kapellmeister Mozart, which was given at great cost and much scenic splendour, did not achieve the desired success because the plot and language of the piece are too bad.

Nevertheless Schikaneder gave the opera again and again. Within twelve months he could book the hundredth performance, after a lapse of four years the two hundredth, and the 'Magic Flute' pursued its triumphant course.

Schikaneder has been accused of having treated Mozart shamefully by printing and selling abroad the score of the 'Magic Flute.' When Mozart died (1791) the opera was hardly known in Germany. He could not, therefore, have called Schikaneder a rascal, nor accused him of reaping great profit out of the joint work. Probably Schikaneder thought that with Mozart's death he had no obligations towards the family. Frau Mozart, and Nissen, her second husband, naturally made a great hubbub, and the many enemies of Schikaneder are responsible for this fable of his knavery.

Although the success of the 'Magic Flute' was assured, the opera could not save Freemasonry in Austria. The Emperor Francis II., himself an enemy of the Order, closed in 1795 all Austrian Lodges. Mozart did not live to see the effect of these drastic measures. He had died not knowing that his masterwork was destined to bestow the laurel wreath of the martyr upon Freemasonry.

F. ERCKMANN.

SOME ITALIAN COMPOSERS OF TO-DAY

By GUIDO M. GATTI

VIII.—VINCENZO TOMMASINI

During the first ten years of this century there were to be found at Rome some composers—all from the Santa Cecilia school of composition—who may be triumphantly produced as arguments against the faded legend of the ignorance of Italian musicians—ignorance that is, of those things not strictly belonging to their art. This accusation is now, we repeat, absolutely unfounded; not so was it, alas! in the 19th century, when composers hardly realised the distance in poetical, human, and literary values that lies between a drama of, say, Shakespeare and a play by Scribe, Legouv  , or Sardou. And of this ignorance there is no lack of examples in Italy and perhaps also in other countries.

The Roman composers of whom I speak were intimately acquainted with the secrets of art, considered as the expression of beauty, and had a good knowledge of general literature, the plastic arts, and philosophy—or at least so much philosophy as is strictly necessary for the right understanding of artistic matters.

Three of their number have interested us particularly, viz., Domenico Alaleona, Vittorio Gui, and Vincenzo Tommasini. They are about the same age, and, although possessing different temperaments and aims, have spent some years in the same surroundings. I will speak of the first in a future article; to the second, reference has already been made in a hasty sketch in the October number of the Musical Times; the present chapter is devoted to Vincenzo Tommasini, whose name should not be quite unknown in England—at least not to those who have followed the performances of the Russian Ballet.

* Emanuel Schikaneder. 'Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des deutschen Theaters.' (Berlin, 1901.)

† Beyer. 'Schikaneder und seine Beziehungen zum Freimaurer-Orden.' (Bielefeld, 1912.)

A few words will suffice for Tommasini's biography. He was born at Rome in 1880, and studied the violin under Pinelli and composition with Stanislao Falchi. Taking a classical degree, he for one year frequented Max Bruch's school in Germany. But of this there is practically no trace in his work, so far removed is it not only from that of the composer of the famous 'Kol-Nidrei,' but also from modern German romanticism in general. It may be said that at first sight Tommasini, by reason of certain characteristics which are perhaps more technical than spiritual, seems to have sprung from the fount of musical inspiration that centred at Paris towards the end of the last century. It is certain that from his early youth there has been a warm bond of sympathy between the Roman musician and the musicians and artists in general who had rallied round the standard of Claude Debussy. This sympathy was partly instinctive—a fraternity of temperament—and partly intellectual, due to the fact that Tommasini, being highly-cultured and sensitive to refinements of style and expression, was interested in making clear to himself the exquisitely logical art of Debussy. Thus it can easily be understood that the Frenchman found a fervent listener in the young composer whose discriminating taste made him feel out of place—dépaycé—in the Italian musical world of that time, which was either frankly uncultured and crude, or ostentatiously infatuated with Teutonism—Wagnerism especially—the insincerity and superficiality of which could be detected from afar. And thus the first works of Tommasini—or, rather, the first that are worthy of criticism, and that serve to delineate the personality of the composer—are undoubtedly influenced by his love for Debussy. Especially is this the case with the 'Poema erotico' for orchestra and the String Quartet in F. Of Tommasini's preceding works, those written between 1899 and 1908, I know only three Melodies for mezzo-soprano in a rapid, romantic style, and the Overture 'La vita é un sogno,' which is little more than a composition written for an examination by a pupil of good temperament and technical training. It is not possible, therefore, to speak of his early theatrical attempts—the 'Medea,' given at Trieste in 1906, and the 'Amore di Terra lontana,' which has probably never been performed. The libretti of both operas are by the composer himself, Tommasini being in this respect one of the first Italian musicians to follow Wagner's example.

The 'Poema erotico' was performed at the Augusteo at Rome, and was not too well received by the public—the same public, be it observed, which in 1911 hissed 'L'Après-midi d'un faune.' Tommasini's work followed the lines of Debussy's art, and moreover it was a case of a young composer who stood aloof from the Mascagni and Puccini tradition, and so might prove a rare and dangerous beast. But no one could conscientiously deny the value of the 'Poema erotico' in so far as it revealed powerful constructive skill and a fine, vibrant sensibility. The term 'constructive skill' that is here used may well be emphasised, as it is, in the writer's opinion, characteristic of all Tommasini's music, which, however much its charm may lie in the beauty of harmonic tints and in the atmosphere enfolding it, is always solid thematically and strongly wrought. The melody circulates freely—not cabined and confined, but full of expression and emotion. Even in the most evanescent passages—and Tommasini has given us several of these poetical impressions, in which the musical sensation is awakened by a lyric vision, of nature—it is always apparent that the composer felt the necessity for a model that would not unduly fetter his creation, but which was necessary in order to focus, so to speak, the emotion of the listener on the central point of the picture. Those who reproached the 'Poema erotico' for its Debussyan tendencies forgot that it was firmly grounded and developed solely on one theme—which was then found to be too short, i.e., not corresponding to the traditional Italian hall-mark—and that the composer has succeeded in elaborating it in every conceivable manner in order to express the different moments of his vision.

This manner of Tommasini's is still more strongly marked in the Quartet in F, and moreover a point reached when assimilated peculiarities and ripe studies are happily blended with qualities that are instinctive, thus forming the style of the artist, a style at once individual and independent of any outside source. To call this Quartet—which must still be classed among the best work of the Roman composer—Debussyan is to emphasise certain features which are wholly external and contingent, and to ignore other deep and unchangeable, which are characteristic of melodious and lineal and which stamp the composition as unmistakably Italian. This affirmation is not based on the treatment of the composition from a technical point of view—the method of development or instrumental details—but essentially on the quality of its thematic material. The themes of the first movement are really beautiful, and, however much sheer technique may be revealed in a varied and interesting play of counterpoint, yet they always retain their ego: the emotion is always alive and vivid; it is never sacrificed for redundant elaboration. This first emotion, half sentient, half mystic, which pervades Tommasini's themes, can be discerned in all his compositions, and the more closely we study the musician's work, the more clear and luminous does it become. His score may be arduously wrought to the last stage of nobility and refinement, but his fundamental thought, the root of his emotion, remains simple and glowing with life.

This fervour, this passion, this robust vein of lyricism which combine to impart warmth to the work of Tommasini even when it seems veiled under the patina of coldness—which I believe is nothing but the artist's fear of giving too free vent to his feelings—are found again in the two 'Chiari di Luna' for orchestra which, conducted by Arturo Toscanini, have had a great success. These two sensazioni notturne, one sad and contemplative ('Chiese rovinate'—'Churches and ruins'), redolent of dead and gone things, the other lively and gay, though the gaiety is slightly languid ('Serenate'—'Serenades') have won the admiration of connoisseurs by the skill of their orchestration. But let us meditate awhile on the poetic charm of the two pictures—for this is why we love them—and on the revelation of that imaginative vitality which alone renders a work of art worthy the name. We must remember that Vincenzo Tommasini is a Roman, and therefore susceptible, as only a Roman can be, to the fascination imparted to ruins as seen by moonlight, when the spiritual vision can conjure up the teeming life of receding century-waves, whose pathos to-day inspires mingled feelings of veneration and regret. The musician who, from the summit of the Coliseum, has looked out over the expanse of the Forum by moonlight, knows well that pressions that are created by broken columns, rouetted walls, cavernous and mysterious shadows, and marbles, and dark cypresses, all in a scale of musical values springing from the minor key of the night, borrowed light. The first of Tommasini's Nocturnes is full of this music, at once so tenuous and so capable of imparting unforgettable emotions. It is, by little, as we listen, we live again those moments that seem almost a dream, and which transport us to another world. No higher praise can be given this composition, which is in itself among the most beautiful things in modern Italian symphonic literature.

The second of the Nocturnes transports us to other surroundings. We are still in a world of dreams, but now smiles rule the day, and we recall, maybe with a slight feeling of nostalgia, the quiet evenings of our youth, romantic walks and adventures which spring to mind, sometimes in ideal shape. It is a gaiety that is never noisy, and at bottom is even sad, that Tommasini has evoked, delicately, and in the slightly mannered and languid style of the 18th century.

The same 18th century sensibility made possible the musical comedy 'Ugnale Fortuna,' which won a prize and was performed at Rome in 1913. The plot is slight, the characters have a touch of Goldoni, and though the work is not wholly excellent, yet it has moments of adequate expression and an unusually flowing style. It is a sensibility too that assured the perfect collaboration of Scarlatti and Tommasini in the charming ballet 'Le donne di buon umore,' which is a model of orchestration of the sonatas for harpsichord where the sonority and every spirit of the instrument and the period are created symphonically in a way that leaves nothing to be desired.

It is not hazardous to affirm that the Debussyan tendency in some of Tommasini's works—re-affirmed lately, although with the reserve mentioned above, in the 'Cinq mélodies (de Franz Toussaint)'—is nothing but the other side of this love for the century in which it is possible to trace more than one of the roots of modern French art, whether it be that of Debussy (in a prevalent spiritual sense) or that of the ultra-modern anti-impressionists (in a specially technical sense). In both cases it is as a bridge spanning the 19th century and connecting the 18th with the 20th.

The reader will already have observed that all Tommasini's work is lyrical rather than dramatic, and that from the Quartet in F up to the present day it all tends to express the contemplative and static features of his inner life rather than those which are active and dynamic. And it is under this aspect that it should be considered. As in the case of other contemporary composers, we must not look for what the musician has not desired to place there: that is to say, dramatic pictures of life or tempestuous vicissitudes of conflicting passions. We must seek purely and simply the lyrical effusion of an artist whose eyes and ears and mind are open to receive the varied aspects of the world and of nature, and who has succeeded in selecting the most delicate means in order to express them. Fortune has gifted Tommasini with the possibility of being composer-creator only—a rare enough case among young Italian musicians, who, besides being composers, are either concertists or teachers, and must therefore divide their activity, dedicating only a part of it, and not always the greater part either, to creation. Tommasini is at leisure to create only when his intuition is fully matured, and to return as often as he will to those pages which do not satisfy his self-criticism. Hence we see that his output preserves fairly wide intervals, and there are lengthy periods in their chronology without the appearance of any important creative work. Between 'Chiari di Luna' (1915) and 'Il Beato Regno' (1920-21) we find few original works: two 'Liriche' of Carducci for tenor and orchestra, which we do not feel able to judge from the arrangement for pianoforte, the 'Cinq Melodies' (of Franz Toussaint), in which we are reminded more than once of Debussy's 'Chansons de Bilitis,' and the Sonata in A for violin and pianoforte. In this work also—which, to speak frankly, does not seem among the best of Tommasini's compositions—the lyrical character prevails. A first movement, constructed entirely on undefined and dreamy themes, sinuously unfolding, is followed by a Molto sostenuto and a Finale in the form of a Scherzo, which latter is the most successful bit of the Sonata and is reminiscent of the principal efforts of Tommasini in this direction (for example in 'Humour,' the second part of a suite for orchestra). The whole Sonata, in which the pianoforte has often an undue predominance—and in this, probably, lies its principal defect—has a vague, spiritual resemblance to Brahms' Violin Sonatas, especially the Sonata in G, which it owes to the melancholy tenderness and grace of the first two movements. (Reference is made, of course, to a Brahms who had lived at the present day and had known the work of Debussy and Ravel.)

Brief is the step from the spirit of the Sonata to that inspiring the composer's recent symphonic poem. Carried away by the beauty of the Gregorian chant and by the fragrance of mysticism and purity attaching to certain themes of the liturgy, so intimately bound up with the poetry of the great cathedrals and the solemnity of the Roman Catholic worship, Tommasini produced 'Il Beato Regno.' To his artist's spirit, which has drunk at the fountain of beauty of every nation, the unsullied chalice of the Gregorian chant appeared as a new inspiration and initiation. Hence he has not sought those modal technical possibilities which might be extracted from it (the reader will have noticed that I specially emphasise the spiritual and human value of Tommasini's music, taking for granted the technical, which is very great). He has borrowed only its expressive essence, and with but few themes evolved a poem to which he has given the Dantesque name of 'Il Beato Regno.' The themes are those of the Requiem, the Veni Creator, and the Salve Regina. These form the groundwork of a vast composition, solidly constructed on ample and simple lines that serenely unfold and become gradually more and more spiritual as, progressively, they lose their material weight, so to speak. This poem has not yet been performed. It will be given in the next symphonic season at the Augusteo at Rome. So far as can be gathered from a rapid glance at the score, it may be said that the composer has, symphonically, advanced yet another step. All through the unfolding of the composition there appears to be never a moment in which sonorous expression overpowers a pathos that, calm in its liturgical inspiration, is still passionate; Tommasini seems to have given to the themes he has chosen their appropriate atmosphere which enfolds them as does the cloud of incense in the sanctuary.

And probably it is safe to add that the musician has intimately and humanly felt the emotion of the religious chant—that is to say, that he has drawn from it his inspiration not merely decoratively and externally but as signifying a deeply rooted and tenacious faith which does not abandon the spirit of a man however unprejudiced he may be. Tommasini, the man of the world, the refined artist, roaming almost continually from one capital of Europe to another, from Madrid to London, from Paris to Vienna, has found once more in his inner soul this sheltered nook, where maybe he has rested and perchance discovered that perfect equilibrium which is alike the ideal of man and of artist.

WORKS OF VINCENZO TOMMASINI

1899. Three Melodies for mezzo-soprano and pianoforte.
 1900. String (Quartet in A minor. (Unpublished.)
 1901. 'La vida es sueño.' Overture for orchestra. (Schott, Mainz.)
 1902-04. 'Medea.' Opera in three Acts. (Unpublished.)
 1907-08. 'Amore di terra lontana.' Opera in 3 Acts. (Ditto.)
 1909. 'Poema erotico.' For orchestra. (Ditto.)
 1910. String Quartet in F major. (Hamelle, Paris.)
 1911. 'Ugnale Fortuna' ('The same luck'). Comic opera, in one Act. (Sonzogno, Milan.)
 Prelude à 'L'Hymne à la Beauté.' For orchestra. (Unpublished.)
 1912. Suite. For orchestra. (Ditto.)
 1915. 'Le Donne di Buon Umore' ('The Good-Humoured Ladies'). Arranged from Scarlatti. (Chester, London.)
 Three pianoforte pieces (Câlina, Berceuse, Gaminerie). (Hamelle, Paris.)
 'Chiari di Luna' (Moonlights). For orchestra. (Ricordi, Milan.)
 1. 'Chiese e Rovine' ('Churches and Ruins').
 2. 'Serenate' (Serenades).
 1916. Sonata in A. For violin and pianoforte. (Hamelle, Paris.)
 1918. Four a cappella choruses for four voices. (Unpublished.)
 Two Melodies (G. Carducci). For tenor and orchestra. (Ricordi, Milan.)
 1919. 'Cinq Mélodies' (F. Toussaint). Voice and pianoforte. (Sénart, Paris.)
 1920-21. 'Il Beato Regno' (The Blessed Reign). For orchestra. (Unpublished.)

WHY USE WORDS?

A not uncommon observation made of songs is, 'What a pity the words are so stupid!' Indeed, with a good many English songs the comment is almost inevitable, and one begins to tire of its constant reiteration. But if the remark happened to be 'A nice song but the music is silly,' one would want an introduction to the speaker, since one would realise that here at last was an ideal listener. Unfortunately language being intelligible, though possibly without meaning, makes the primary attack upon the perceptions of the audience. The music being unintelligible (in the sense that it cannot be related to experience), though possibly full of meaning, has to be content with a subordinate position. The mind of the average listener is incapable of doing thoroughly with one sense more than one thing at the one time, and no matter whether the music be good or bad, an audience expects to hear the words. The will to appreciate the musical element of a performance of song is shaken and enfeebled by the effort to elucidate the verbal element. The dramatic art need not be cited in opposition to this suggestion, since, consisting as it does of simultaneous speech and action, it is not an analogy. It implies on the part of the audience the use of two senses, hearing and sight. But opera, which doubles the work of the ear, is the climax of the impossible, and it may be reasonably doubted whether the people who say the enjoy opera, or appreciate opera, are musicians at all.

The average being when he acts as audience to performance of song is, to state it crudely, either musician listening to music or else he is a literary man listening to literature. It is sometimes urged that neither of these statements is a true or complete presentation of the facts, but that what is listened to is the specific æsthetic form—entitled 'song.' This is a parallel to the statement that in the perfect orchestra there is only one instrument—namely, the orchestra. These are theories, and they do not satisfy, even at that.

As well might one say of painting that both picture and frame must be regarded together. It is true that I see the frame, but it is the picture that I look at. True also, the frame often makes or mars the picture, but again, it is the latter that counts—and we can always change the frame. We do not say 'Here is a frame, let us paint a picture for it.' But what the song-writer says is 'Here is a poem, I set it to music.' The musician comes second. Suppose that he wants to compose a song, that the impulse to do so is wholly spontaneous and is not the result of extraneous influence in the form of literature. Before his work can be performed, he has laboriously to search for suitable words or, brilliantly and quite fortuitously, to find them. He then has to 'set' them to his music. This sequence may or may not be the rule in composing, but when performance ensues the words take precedence and may make or mar the song, whether the music be good or bad. It is they which obtain first place in the consciousness of the listener, and the music (that is to say, song) is relegated to the position of being merely a more or less effective means of making the words tell.

To push the argument further, the foreign-born art song or lied, the words of which are without significance to one ignorant of the language, would seem to provide additional, if negative, proof of the contention that words, as words, are confusion at—though through no inherent fault of their own—fulfil, in music, the function of the red herring. In this case they make the song only because they cannot possibly mar it. The latter they cannot do for they have no meaning; the former they must do simply because they are there. In ceasing to be understood intelligibly as words, any meaning they may have being thus refused an entrance into consciousness, they yet enable the song to be sung as music. The song thus stands or falls by its music alone. The words make the song, but only in the sense that the canvas makes the picture. I do not need to know German in order to enjoy a Brahms lied. The pleasure which I experience in listening to 'Erinnerung' is complete. The fact that the singer is enunciating (to me) meaningless syllables does not detract from this enjoyment, and I am not called upon to dilute my concentration on the music with an attempt to grasp the words. In fact, it is quite possible that if I did know German and could understand the words, the song might be completely ruined for me. These words make the song I enjoy but only because they happen to be words, and the become, instead of as in the English song the primary influence, a less than secondary one. They indeed as they ought to be, the menial assistants of the music. They serve only to body it forth, and thus put in the proper relative position.

Articulate syllables are certainly essential to enable voice to render music satisfactorily, but, language being handy, words have been assigned a perennial wholly undeserved status in the practice of song-writing. The result is that there has been imported into music a burden of ideas and concepts which are repugnant to it, and which lead to dilution even to adulteration of what ought to be the sullied stream of human song. The fact that a German song can be fully appreciated by one who does not know German suggests indeed that words are anything more than mere combinations of letters not required at all. 'Erinnerung' might be in German as much as 'I care'.

The remedy is obvious: 'Let song-composers abandon language—good and bad.' They might have the latter, in any case, to the critics. Let them choose words and their train of inappropriate ideas. Let them compose vocal music as they would violin music. Let them write for the voice without being hampered by poets (and others). Let them give birth to a new fantasy and disport themselves in a hitherto unexplored and immeasurable realm of freedom, bringing thus a fresh delight to vocal music. We shall then have natural and unconfined song, freed from references to material phenomena (e.g., tears, mountains, roses) and untrammelled by the clumsinesses of mere speech. We shall have our 'Sonata for tenor and pianoforte' and our 'Nocturne for alto and string quartet.'

The means to do all these things are within the reach of every composer. A baby can string together 'vocalises' sufficiently varied to suit any mood. Surely a composer can do the same. I picture him yearning to write song. Seized with a singing idea he sets it down, caresses it in his mind, and gradually moulds it to his will. It becomes an accomplished fact and is ready for performance. He finds it is playable, and he likes it. But he cannot find it for song. He has no words. What is he to do?

His anticipated search for suitable words (reversing the normal procedure) need not be groaned over. In a few moments he constructs the necessary vocalises, plosive, dental, or labial in character; guttural, sibilant, and so on, in accordance with the need of his music. His song is now capable of performance as he intended. If his music is right, everybody will be pleased and the composition will not be damaged by the intrusion of language. The human voice is set at liberty for use in free music, unhampered by useless words and untainted by alien ideas. And if the publisher looks askance, it can always be called a folk-song from the Ainu or a Patagonian love-lyric.

G. M. C.

Mr. W. R. Anderson is giving a series of ten University Extension Lectures and Classes at Kingsway Hall, on 'British Music and Musicians,' the dates being Monday evenings from October 3 to December 5. The lectures begin at 6.15 p.m., and the price of admission is one shilling.

The Carnegie United Kingdom Trust issues a reminder to composers that works submitted under the scheme for the publication of musical compositions should be received by the secretary of the Trust (East Port, Dunfermline) by December 21.

A NOTE ON RAMEAU

BY CAMILLE SAINT-SAËNS

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell)

Rameau, the greatest French composer of the 18th century, whose works held so important a place on the stage, had become almost forgotten in the 20th. A few pieces for the clavichord and the delightful chorus, 'En ces doux asiles,' were almost all that anyone knew of him, for practically the whole of his work had remained unpublished.

This injustice has now come to an end, thanks to Durand, who undertook the gigantic task of publishing the complete works of this marvellous genius, the contemporary and rival of Sebastian Bach. Not that he possesses Bach's supreme elegance and wonderful fecundity of production, for his style is uneven and gauche, and occasionally disconcerting; nevertheless, the gaucherie and inaccuracy are not the work of an unskilful artist. As a matter of fact, they are something quite different; it might be said that in the progress of the various parts he works in obedience to special laws that are independent of the requirements of the ear. His superiority is along other lines, e.g., in his genius for dramatic effect, and in a profundity of knowledge which has enabled him to work out a musical system and to make surprising discoveries in the realm of harmony. He holds supreme sway in the theatre just as Bach does in the church. The reason they are both mentioned in the same breath is because they are so totally different each from the other.

Some years ago an attempt was made to restore his works to the stage; the result has not been what was anticipated. It must, however, be acknowledged at once that this was not the fault of the composer, the interpreter, or the public. This does not prove that the resurrection is impossible, failure being due to difficulties that had not been suspected.

These are of several kinds. The first we encounter is owing to the fact that the pitch in the 17th and 18th centuries was a tone lower than it is at the present time. The old organs, even as they were in my own youth, left no doubt whatever on this point. The strange thing is that this low pitch existed in France alone; the works of Handel, Bach, Mozart, and the Italian scores of Gluck, in their mode of dealing with the human voice, show nothing which would lead us to suppose that the pitch was very different from our own; and yet no sooner do we examine a French score than we find ourselves confronted with music that it is impossible to sing.

Whereas everywhere else the four usual parts of the chorus were divided, half and half, for male and female voices—soprano, contralto, tenor, bass—in the French scores all the female voices are united in the treble, sometimes divided into firsts and seconds; the other three parts, haute-contre, taille, and bass are male voices. The hautes-contre are first tenors; the tailles are second tenors and baritones. These first tenor parts, however, soar to inaccessible heights; it has even been thought that the hautes-contre were special voices which are no longer to be heard. If this part is entrusted to tenors, we have, as the result, intolerable screams and cries. Sung by contraltos, all its dash and brilliancy depart and it loses whatever value it possessed.

As a matter of fact, in interpreting this music as it is written we find that it has been transposed a note higher. The voices, when not transposed out of their bounds, find themselves badly placed; the singers, in a state of perpetual inconvenience and constraint, are unable to give their parts the true accent or to pronounce the words distinctly—a matter absolutely indispensable in works where declamation is of such importance.

Consequently, we must resign ourselves to transposition. Now, this is not so easy as might be imagined; it is really very delicate work. Moreover, even in the case of transposition, the hautes-contre are still occasionally too sharp; this is due to the fact that in those days they sang en voix blanche, an emission of sound which greatly facilitates the attack of high notes, though the voice thereby acquires a timbre similar to that of street cries, one which our modern ears would not tolerate for a moment. In certain cases, then, recourse must be had to the use of female voices. This I have effected in two admirable Psalms of Rameau, which are thus made suitable for concert performance.

This, however, is nothing compared with the work of interpretation, strictly so called. In these days music is written almost exactly as it should be performed. In the past such was not the case, use being made of conventional signs which had to be translated. When executing ancient music as it is written, we are like a man spelling out the words of a foreign language which he is unable to pronounce.

Apparently the greatest difficulty is connected with the appoggiatura, which is not used nowadays. Each one interprets it as he pleases, after his own taste. Now, this is not a matter of taste, but rather of erudition; the question before us is not to know what we prefer but what the author intended to write. The key of the mystery lies in the violin method of Mozart père. In the library of the Conservatoire there are three editions; the oldest is the correct one. We are greatly amazed when we note the difference between the written sign and its true interpretation. At one of the Conservatoire concerts, having to play the D minor Concerto of Mozart, I was considerably puzzled over the bar:

and was not a little surprised to discover that it had to be translated thus:

On other occasions, the appoggiatura should resolve into a rest, which is then replaced by a note.

It will be seen, in the example quoted, that the final quaver, when played, becomes a semiquaver. The reason of this is that, in former times, the 'arithmetical' value of the notes was not taken into account as it is nowadays; a breve was a breve, devoid of any precise value. Moreover, whenever in Handel or in Rameau we find this rhythm:

it should be translated thus:

This rhythm is met with very frequently, especially in Handel.

Finally, there are innumerable signs the interpretation of which is occasionally impossible; contemporary methods indicating that they can be described, and that to perform them one must have heard them sung by a professor. Fortunately in all probability these embellishments were not indispensable; they appeared in such profusion owing to the prevalent bad taste of the times, and we need not regret their disappearance.

One thing more, however. A close study of the works has convinced me that the values of the vocal parts are approximate, and that we must take in consideration, declamation, not notation, if we are to interpret the melody part, and not merely the recitative in accordance with the real intention of the composer.

The composer himself seems to have delighted in piling up difficulties by continually changing the tempo; two-, three-, and four-time incessantly follow one another, and the two-time measure has to be twice as rapid as the four-time.

It is impossible for players to find their way credibly out of this labyrinth; preliminary study is needed if any practical result is to be attained.

Shall I speak of the instruments? These do not offer any considerable variety. The habit of accompanying the recitative on the clavier, which might be tolerable in a small hall, has become impossible in a large one for audiences accustomed to the powerful sonorities of the present day. The orchestra of old was made up quite differently from the present orchestra: several flutes, oboes, and bassoons, occasional horn and trumpet. This could not have been very harmonious. Modern orchestration effected with the requisite taste and discretion, similar to that with which Mozart enriched 'The Messiah' and 'Alexander's Feast,' would assuredly make these works more attractive, if not more valuable. All the same, a very respectful and a very light pen would be essential to the task.

The difficulties are great, though not insurmountable, and we may hope that the day will come when the music of Rameau, regarded in its true light, will no longer be confined to the erudite, but will be acclaimed by the masses.

The Musician's Bookshelf

BY 'FESTE'

The Preface to the new edition of Henry Davey's 'History of English Music' (Curwen, 25s.) tells us that its publication was delayed for several years by the war and other causes. This delay may well prove a blessing in disguise, for there can be no doubt that the book comes at a time when we are far more interested in our musical past than we were in 1911. When Mr. Davey's History appeared in 1895 there were few who did not think that his enthusiasm for speaking of our past glories did more credit to his heart than to his head. Looking back over the quarter of a century we may well feel astounded at the ignorance of musicians concerning the fine periods of our native music. That we know so much more to-day is largely due to this very book, and it is fitting that a new edition should appear at a time when this knowledge is not merely antiquarian or theoretical, but to a considerable extent based on actual acquaintance with the works brought to our hearing by Dr. Terry, Mr. Kennedy Scott, Mr. Roy Shore, and others. In the main the book stands with few alterations or modifications, so there is for further review of a volume that, easily giving some carping criticisms on its appearance, has long been recognised as a standard work. Its justifiable pride Mr. Davey brings forward the best of evidence as to the practical value of his book. He says that Dr. Terry, 'when asked where he covers all the old English music, replies, "In Davey's History."' The author adds, 'Perhaps the most satisfactory result of my labours is that Dr. Terry was impelled to examine, score, and bring to practical use many unknown works that I had mentioned.' When the resurrection of our Tudor music is completed by the Carnegie Trust, let us not get that the first step was taken in 1892 when Mr. Davey began this book.

The new edition is brought up to date by an appendix entitled 'Recent Musical History.' Here there is a falling off, mainly because the author has given himself too little room. Thirty pages is a skimpy allowance of space in which to treat of a period so crowded with musical activity as the past twenty-five years. But even apart from the drawbacks of limited space there are signs that Mr. Davey seems to have entered on his part of his work with something less than his usual care. The treatment of living composers is necessarily brief, but it need not have been haphazard. Only by such a term can we describe the rationing of space and capital letters. Several composers whose importance is by no means in proportion to the size of their output are honoured by paragraphs, while Alfred Davies, Vaughan Williams, Gustav Holst, Alford Gardiner, Frank Bridge, Edgar Bainton, Herbert Howells, John Ireland, George Butterworth, and others, are lumped together in a few lines. Frank Bridge is described as a 'violinist of the first rank.' He may be, but his fame as an executant rests on his viola playing. Will Lord Berners glow with pride on hearing that he 'well represents the talented amateur'? Hardly. And the average talented amateur will be surprised to hear of his lordship as an honour bearer. We are accustomed to various kinds of mis-spelling in dealing with foreign composers, especially of the Muscovite breed, but authors usually stick to one form throughout a book. This chapter gives us Tschaiikovski and the even less usual and very frisky looking Tchaikoffsky. A page worthily devoted to the Promenade concerts, but oddly no mention is made of the two men to whom we owe them—Sir Henry Wood and Mr. Robert Newman. Sir Henry receives his only mention a few pages later, when, in an eight-line paragraph dealing with conducting, we are told that he, 'and afterwards Gordon Ronald and Adrian C. Boult, have long been successful.' The success of the last-named none of us will dispute, but it is too recent to be described as 'long been.' And there are others of our younger men who should have had a place in this paragraph. There are Hamilton Harty, Julius Harrison, Frank Bridge, Eugène Goossens, Albert Coates, to name only five that at once come to mind? The fact is that in no department of musical activity have we made greater progress than in this matter of conducting. And a reference to Sir Thomas Beecham, which merely tells us that he 'took charge of opera' is inadequate; as a purely orchestral conductor Sir Thomas has long been in the front rank—not only in England, but in Europe.

Speaking of hymnody, Mr. Davey makes no mention of such new collections as the 'Oxford Hymnal' and the 'English Hymnal'; and of the 1904 edition of 'A. & M.' he finds nothing better to say than that it 'is scarcely an improvement on the original, either on the poetical or musical side.' Probably the opinion of most people who have carefully studied the new edition would be that it failed of popular success just because it is a marked improvement on the original. No matter how fine its new tunes, or how much better and purer its versions of old ones, all have the double disability of being unfamiliar, and of having to make their way against the strongly-entrenched old favourites. Moreover, the edition appeared about twenty years too soon. For every ten people ready in 1904 for a stronger type of hymn there are a thousand to-day.

Mr. Davey laments the passing of the old Monday and Saturday 'Pops,' and thinks their place is poorly filled by the 'many straggling chamber concerts still given in London.' The latter may be less 'imposing, representative, and complete' than the old 'Pops,' but there are other qualities more suited to our needs to-day. London gets an enormous quantity of good chamber concerts during the season, with a great variety of players and composers represented. Not many of us would change this fine, confused feeding for the somewhat prim meals that ceased about 1900. Mr. Davey admits that 'the sluggish policy which year after year put forward the same familiar works rendered by the same artists' may have contributed to the decline of the 'Pops.' The same danger attends any long-continued enterprise of the kind, and on the whole we are better served by our present system, or want of system, in which a great many chamber music combinations, native and foreign, have to compete for favour.

However, it would be a mistake to dwell overmuch on this Appendix, partly because the appendix itself is perhaps a mistake. The manifold activities of the past quarter of a century call for nothing less than a volume; an attempt to glance at them in a few pages is foredoomed to failure. We can afford to ignore the thirty pages involved in this case, because of the indispensable four hundred and fifty-nine which precede them. The main body of Mr. Davey's History stands as it has stood since its first appearance—the one volume which nobody interested in the musical past of this country can do without.

From this book which matters very much indeed we descend with a thud to one that matters far less than is right in such a portly and expensive volume—'My Life of Song,' by Madame Tetrassini (Cassell, 21s.). No public performer makes more astute use of the daily press than Madame, by means of interviews, photographs (the last we saw showed her nursing a young crocodile!), and paragraphs. This book is exactly what the interviews and paragraphs would lead us to expect, only a good deal more so. The skill with which the author has managed to write a book of over three hundred pages without devoting more than an occasional line or two to music is perhaps the most impressive point about the work. Of the far, far too numerous records of trivial incidents take the following as a sample:

While playing on the cobbles with which the streets of Florence were paved, I often had an unfortunate tumble, though never a serious accident. Sometimes I would go home to my mother crying over a bruised limb, or a cut knee, or a lost plaything which had been forcefully taken from me by an older and stronger child with whom I had unwisely played.

Pooh! that's nothing. The clinkers and brickbats with which the alleys of my native Pudsey were paved when I disported my young self there seventy years ago indented and bruised my more prominent and fleshy parts fearfully, and as for cut knees, there was surprise if I didn't bring home two per day. But when I write 'My Life of Scribbling' I shall say nowt about it. Nor shall I hold forth on the amount I managed to earn and spend, partly for reasons that may occur to you, but even more because the matter concerns nobody but myself and the income tax assessor. But Madame makes no bones about telling us of her fees, and of the haggling over them. Why is it that no artists but singers and prizefighters ever do this sort of thing?

In the final chapter, which contains a handful of practical advice to young singers (though nothing that their commonsense should not have told them already), Madame discusses the future of coloratura music:

This music is no longer being written, singers no longer study it, and yet people crowd to hear it. The critics and the people that go to the opera talk of the modern music of France, Germany, and Italy. But I do not believe this older style of music will die. No, it cannot die. For is it not natural music, the music of the birds?

You will note that, according to Madame, the critics do not discuss the modern music of England. How little she thinks of our English school is shown elsewhere, when, speaking of interviewers, she says, 'sometimes they wanted me to say some very foolish things, such as . . . that England could produce as great composers as Italy.' And lest you should imagine that she is concerned with the group of Italian composers who are struggling hard to lift their native music out of the operatic rut, she says:

. . . do the admirers of the very modern music really know how great is this old Italian music? . . . The day will come, however, when there will be born another Donizetti. Then coloratura music will take a new lease of life. It may be that one or two great coloratura singers may first arise so as to inspire the new Donizetti. Yet he will come, and the world will assuredly welcome his advent.

Well, those who live the longest will see the most, but at present nothing in the musical world seems more certain than that the day of operatic stars, whether in skirts or trousers, is drawing to a close. A great singer will always hold us, but a diminishing number of us will go to hear him—or even her—singing this natural music of the birds as compiled by Donizetti & Co. Tetrizzini may very likely be the last of the female line, as Caruso was almost certainly the last on the male side. But she will keep the coloratura flag flying a long time yet:

I have no present intention to bring my career to an early close. Far from it. My voice to-day has only just attained to complete maturity. I hope to use it for the enjoyment of my fellow-creatures for many years to come.

Of the many naive passages in the book the following is perhaps the best:

Florence, like most other Italian towns, has never shown quite the same measure of appreciation of my singing as London, New York, Petrograd, Sacramento, San Francisco, and Buenos Ayres have done. The last four have bestowed on me the freedom of the city and other honours. Perhaps it is because Florence has been so intimately associated with such great names as Dante, Michel, Angelo, Machiavelli, and others famous in the arts that it considers a prima donna to be comparatively unimportant.

Perhaps! There could be no better quotation with which to lay aside this amusing and depressing chronicle.

Acoustics, like political economy, is a disscience, so far as the musician is concerned. It may be of enthralling interest to clever folk who have made all sorts of delicate scientific appliances, but the musician is apt to be impatient of its elaborate explanations of tonal beauties that lose rather than gain by being explained. But since we must have books on acoustics, need they be unintelligible to a plain man? Apparently John L. Dunk thinks this should be. At all events his 'Hyperacoustics' (Dent, 5s.) may be counted on to leave all but a stray reader or two in a state of mental collapse. Before we can get on with the book we have to wrestle with a glossary of six pages. The constituents of this glossary seem to be for the most part inventions of the author. Let us try to hunt out the meaning of one reference. 'Yoke (Jugato). The Tone Ray, which yokes the concomitant species in the Hemicyclic Matrix, being Bi-tensorial both.' Turning back to 'concomitant' I find it means 'The duality of species peculiar to the tones of the Hemicyclic Matrix.' Obviously, a Hemicycle is a half-cycle, but being still less clear than I was to be, I turn it up, to read 'Half a cycle, particularly referring to the Pythagorean dextral, which contains the seven "white" notes.' Perhaps Matrix will help us: 'A conditionally limited group of tones selected from a Domain.' This kind of Domain being unfamiliar, must be pursued: 'The region over which a Matrix can be translated, i.e., the possible modular of a key.' I have just consulted a recently published standard work on acoustics for the musician, and find it free from such cloudy verbiage. The body of this book of Mr. Dunk is even worse than the glossary. The farther it goes the more it bristles with umbrals, contradeterminators, orthogonal concomitances, permuted educts, extramurs, appments, centrons, contra-suboscillants, dyads, impellants, parasyntony, &c. Technical terms are necessary in any science, and we may easily understand that acoustics must have a bigger share than most, but surely their prime use is to supply the deficiencies of the ordinary language. If a fact can be stated without their aid it should be so stated. But apart from the over-use of such terms, Mr. Dunk seems to be anxious to avoid anything like plain English. For example:

Out of these acoustic conditions the practical requirements of performance—claviature of instruments and convention of notation—tend to crystallise a limited system. . . . Most young students find notation and claviature quite complicated enough, and the average performer soon finds his limitations. Hence the general desideratum is the smallest range of sounds as domain, and as nominated system, that is capable of doing what is required. Thus such an economic generality obtains predominance over the many possible, proposed (and freak) systems of notation and claviature, which tend to quietly die out in spite of some excellent sponsors.

Now, if Mr. Dunk means what I feel sure he means by the above, could he not have said so about twenty words—mostly short 'uns?

From the Faith Press comes 'Plainchant' by the late Dom Gatard, O.S.B., No. 4 of the admirable Church Music Monographs (4s. 6d.). Part 1: 'Description of Gregorian Chant'—deals with tonality, rhythm, nature, and structure of the melodies and notation. Part 2 is a historic etch of Plainchant, treating of its origins, and periods of its preservation, decadence, and restoration. No one is likely to speak with greater authority on this subject than the late Precentor of Farnborough Abbey. A disciple of Dom Mocquereau at Solesmes, he made the study and propaganda of plainsong his main object in life. He has left his findings in this book of seventy pages, pressed with a lucidity that surprises us until we remember that before he went to Solesmes he was a teacher of English at Nantes, making himself proficient by annual visits to this country. Clergy and choirmasters in need of a simple and persuasive manual on plainsong, either for their own study or passing round among unconverted laymen, will find just what they want in this monograph. In W. Edmund Quarry's 'Dictionary of Musical Compositions and Composers' (Routledge, 5s.) we have a courageous attempt at a well-nigh impossible task. The compiler's object is

... to furnish the British and American musical public with a quick and convenient means of reference to any musical composition that can claim some degree of musical value, fame, or permanent notoriety, or to any work that may be of interest to the music student or antiquary.

Obviously the carrying out of such a scheme with thoroughness would demand a small library, treated in a modest scale, as in this volume, is necessarily so far from being comprehensive that reference to its pages would always be somewhat of a gamble. Moreover, the compiler faced with a problem. His scheme of course compels him to include many works which are so little known that nobody is likely to want information about them, e.g., 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and a host of other Handelian airs and choruses, besides the stock oratorio and operatic numbers by other old composers. Mr. Quarry would have done well to have claimed a discretionary power of omission, so that his pages could have been made more complete in regard to less familiar things. As it is, there are some curious omissions. Two settings 'Who is Sylvia?' are mentioned—those of Bishop and Edward German, but no mention is made of Schubert's—at all events, under its English title. A few slips are inevitable. I note that a cantata by Parry's is given as 'Beyond these voices there is peace.' Let us hope there is! A valuable feature is a classified Bibliography. The book is a first step towards what might become one of the most useful of reference books.

'A Handbook on the Technique of Conducting,' by Adrian C. Boult (Hall, Oxford; Goodwin & Tabb; Arnold Reeves, 3s.) is a set of first principles put together for the members of the conducting class at the Royal College of Music. Nothing could be more practical or concise. Mr. Boult points out in his preface that the class was founded not for the purpose of bringing into being a school of virtuoso conductors, but rather to enable the general practitioner, the organist, or the schoolmaster, to make the best use of any conducting chances that may come their way. There are few towns that have not their choral society or orchestra, or both, usually directed by men who have had no opportunity for experience or instruction in a difficult art. This pamphlet will be the best of substitutes for attending class. The various sections deal with Technique, Position, the Stick, Grasp of the Stick, Movement, Practice, Preparing a score, Rehearsal, Performance, Accompaniments, and a Few General Points. There are no musical examples, but (far more important) there are twenty-four diagrams giving the movements of the stick for various kinds of tempi, and for awkward starts. The book is interleaved with blank pages for notes. As Mr. Boult says, 'the language is telegraphic,' and he hints at the possibility of a larger work 'when these notes have been well tested.' Meanwhile, here is practically all the average conductor need know in order to feel safe and confident in regard to the main technical points of his job.

Something new in the way of a glossary is Francesco Berger's 'Musical Expressions, Phrases, and Sentences, with their corresponding equivalents in French, German, and Italian.' (William Reeves 2s.) The references are not confined to terms of technique and expression. Mr. Berger includes such useful phrases as 'It will not do so,' 'It should be thus,' 'He is a pupil of Mr. X.,' 'She pleases the public,' &c. One almost looks to see if the gardener's niece is doing anything musical with that pencil of hers. Altogether twelve hundred and fifty references are given. A good deal might be said as to the admirable arrangement, &c., of this handy little book, but (to quote page 24) it takes too long—Ça dure trop longtemps. Es dauert zu lange. Dura troppo.

MUSIC AND LETTERS

The October issue is even more than usually full of good things. There is a further instalment of song-translations, with articles on the subject by the Editor and M.-D. Calvocoressi. Of the remaining articles we have enjoyed specially that giving notes of a violoncello lesson with Casals, Francis Toye's 'The Plain Man and his Music,' and A. Brent Smith's set of little essays, 'Written at Random.' An editorial note announces that 'a scheme for widening the scope and appeal of Music and Letters is under consideration.' Both scope and appeal seem to us to be in no need of widening. If the readers of such a fine publication are fewer than should be the case, the remedy seems to be not a widening of the policy but a lowering of the price.

Music in the Foreign Press

AN EDUCATIONAL FUNCTION OF TO-DAY'S MUSIC

In the July issue of La Douce France, Georges Migot wrote:

In artistic education, the ordinary method is to start with the oldest works, and gradually lead up to the works of the present time. However logical it may be to consider the course of science as one in which progress is continuous, there is no such thing in art: the appearance of the greatest works is altogether unconnected with chronology. Why not study our own period first, with its idiom whose gradual constitution we are witnessing, and thence proceed towards the styles and idiom of the past? After having learned to play Debussy's pianoforte pieces, for instance, we shall find it easier—quite apart from questions of technique—to interpret Mozart's or Haydn's. The labour devoted to comprehending the meaning of contemporary utterances, to following the creative mind in operation, will assist us in understanding the utterances of the past in their now set form.

A. Mangeot having expressed in the Monde Musical (August) his doubts as to the practical consequences of Migot's suggestion, that writer contributed further remarks in order to make his views clearer (Monde Musical, September):

Ancient works are no less complex than modern works. No work is simple, for every work is the product of an infinite variety of ideas, impressions, and intentions. A work is described as simple only when all the elements or means to which it owes its constitution have been defined and codified—that is, at the time when it becomes a fair prize for the pedagogue. Is it indeed necessary to await the time of codification in order to acknowledge the worthiness and educational value of a work? A sense of hearing trained on Mozart alone may prove inadequate when one first confronts Debussy. But the converse is not true. At the time when a vocabulary is forming, the roots of words are perceptible. But who can foresee the changes which those words will undergo in the course of evolution? For that reason, it is easier to disengage the simplicity underlying the complexities of a period than to infer complexity from simplicity. Experience shows that the study of the classics often fails to give interpreters a true insight into the general principles of musical architecture. Interpreters trained on modern works, the intelligent comprehension of which will be made easier by the promptings of their instinct or sensitiveness, will be better prepared to understand the classics in the spirit, not in the letter only.

FRENCH COMPOSERS AT WORK

Le Monde Musical (September) begins an interesting survey of the doings of French composers during the summer months:

Louis Aubert is finishing a Poem for orchestra; Pierre de Bréville is at work on a Suite for organ and a Pianoforte Quartet; Alfred Bruneau is 'hard at work,' but keeps his own counsel; Charles Kœchlin is writing 'Heures Persanes' for orchestra, a Pianoforte Quintet, and finishing the scoring of various works; Georges Migot, who is a painter as well as a composer, has been busy preparing a private exhibition (his fourth) and writing three orchestral pieces and a Ballet; Darius Milhaud has written a Psalm for male choir a cappella, worked at the second Act of his 'Euménides,' and completed the first section of a Symphony for ten string instruments; Léon Moreau has written a Ballet to a scenario by the late Robert d'Humières; Saint-Saëns has set to music poems by Ronsard and other authors of the same period, and written Sonatas for oboe, clarinet, and bassoon.

A GERMAN CORRESPONDENT ON THE BRITISH PUBLIC

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (October 1), S. K. Kordy writes:

The recent changes in the British public's attitude towards music are stupendous. Greater maturity of judgment, greater spontaneity in the appreciation of new works, soundness and refinement of taste co-operate with the Britisher's inborn sense of beauty and proverbial phlegm in determining that attitude. No music which the London public has once rejected stands a further chance, but if a new work proves acceptable then British audiences can be as enthusiastic as any southern. Many modern and ultra-modern composers from France and from Russia, by acclimatising in music the bizarre and the ugly, have contributed to check the progress of taste. But the public has taken the musical sins of Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, and of Schönberg the Viennese calmly, manifesting distaste only when actually experiencing discomfort. It is all to the honour of the typical British temperament, so restrained, and seemingly so shy, that it leads audiences to reject works which teem with cacophonous absurdities. It is absolutely certain that modern musical ugliness will never find its way into the hearts of the London public. For that public German music in general, and Wagner's in particular, is the supreme idol, the object of wonderful devotion, and enjoys a popularity of the loftiest kind.

PHILIDOR

In the Revue Musicale (October) Georges Edgès Bonnet devotes an essay to the works of the composer, now practically forgotten.

Philidor's music is remarkable for its grace and wit and for the excellence of its workmanship. 'Le Maréchal,' 'Sancho Pança,' 'Le Bûcheron,' and 'Le Sorcier' are full of interest and vitality. His masterpiece is 'Tom Jones,' composed soon after the appearance of Fielding's novel in a French translation. That work is one of the finest in the repertory of opéra-comique. In concert music his best achievements are a Te Deum and the 'English Ode,' written for the festivities in honour of George III.'s convalescence.

Philidor is essentially a French musician, akin in spirit to Rameau, a master of technique. He displays more vigour and versatility than Dun Montigny, or Grétry. Grimm and Framery, his contemporaries, rightly called attention to the affinities between his style and that of the Mannheim symphonists. At times, he foreshadows Mozart, and even Weber and Beethoven.

POLYTONALITY

In the same issue Jean Deroux gives a useful conspectus of contributions by various French authors to the theoretical justification of polytonality. His conclusion is:

Two different things are lumped together under that one label: on one hand the practice, current in Debussy's works, of using non-tonal notes in view of colour effects; on the other hand, the association of two tonalities, each unequivocally determined, not only for the eye and mind, but for the ear. At present, however, it is practically impossible for the ear to perceive two tonalities simultaneously; the actual impression remains one of non-tonality. Perhaps things will be different when composers who resort to such methods will have mastered the new technique which their employment calls for. Let us postpone judgment meanwhile.

HONEGGER'S 'KING DAVID'

In the same issue, Robert Godet speaks highly of the music written by Arthur Honegger for the play by René Morax produced at the Théâtre du Jura, Switzerland.

THE REASON WHY MUSICAL CONDITIONS ARE IMPROVING IN THE UNITED STATES

In the Signale (September 28) Dr. Heinrich Möll writes:

Everywhere in the United States signs of an increasing fondness for music are forthcoming. People sing and play in the barracks, in school-colonies, in students clubs and holiday-camps, on the railroads. . . . Only those people will be astonished to notice the progress who still think of the United States as an Anglo-Saxon country. The facts are that, while the Anglo-Saxon element is increasing but slowly, the musically-gifted Slavonic nations of Eastern Europe contribute the main contingent of immigrants. With them come representatives of other countries—Italians, Germans, French, Hungarians, Jews, Scandinavians, Irishmen, Greeks, whose musical gifts exercise a beneficial influence. If headway is not more speedy, it is solely because, in the matter of education, Anglo-Saxon tradition, with the puritanic and anti-artistic pall in its wake, still prevails. The sooner it vanishes, the better the prospects of musical culture in the country.

SERGHEI TANÉÏEV'S CHORAL MUSIC

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (September 1) Gerhard Streike praises Tanéïev's a cappella music, especially the Quartets, Op. 24, and the Cp. 2 for mixed choir. M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

CHRISTMAS CAROL ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES, UNACCOMPANIED.

Words by FELICIA D. HEMANS.

Composed by CUTHBERT HARRIS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO. SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante con moto.

PRANO.
O love - ly voi - ces of the sky, That hymn'd the Sa - viour's

ALTO.
O love - ly voi - ces of the sky, That hymn'd the Sa - viour's

TENOR.
O love - ly voi - ces of the sky, That hymn'd the Sa - viour's

BASS.
O love - ly voi - ces of the sky, That hymn'd the Sa - viour's

Andante con moto.

(For practice only.)

mp

birth! Are ye not sing - ing still . . on high, . . Ye that sang

mp

birth! Are ye not sing - ing still . . on high, . . Ye that sang

mp

birth! Are ye . . not sing - ing still . . on high, Ye that sang

mp

birth! Are ye not sing - ing still on high, Ye that sang

mp

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Originally published as a Carol for Unison with Accompaniment in Novello's School Songs, No. 680.

dim. mf

"peace," sang "peace on earth?" . . . To us yet speak the strains . . . Where -

dim. mf

"peace, peace on earth?" . . . To us yet speak the strains Where -

dim. mf

"peace," sang "peace on earth?" . . . To us yet speak the strains Where -

dim. mf

"peace, peace on earth?" . . . To us yet speak the strains . . . Where -

cres. f

with, in days . . . gone by, Ye bless'd the Sy-rian swains, O

cres. f

with, in days gone by, Ye bless'd the Sy-rian swains, O voi - ces.

cres. f

with, in days gone by, . . . Ye bless'd the Sy-rian swains, O voi - ces,

cres. f

with, in days gone by, . . . Ye bless'd the Sy-rian swains, O voi - ces,

mf dim. mp rall. e dim. p

voi - ces of the sky, O voi - ces of the sky!

mf dim. mp rall. e dim. p

voi - ces of the sky, . . . O voi - ces of the sky!

mf dim. mp rall. e dim. p

voi - ces of the sky, . . . O voi - ces of the sky!

mf dim. mp rall. e dim. p

voi - ces of the sky, . . . O voi - ces of the sky!

mf dim. mp rall. e dim. p

voi - ces of the sky, . . . O voi - ces of the sky!

mp a tempo.mp a tempo.mp a tempo.mp a tempo.mp a tempo.cres.cres.cres.cres.cres.dim.mfdim.mfdim.mfdim.mf

cres. rays earth may not dim— Send them to guide us

cres. rays earth may not dim— Send them to guide us

cres. rays earth may not dim— Send them to guide us

cres. rays earth may not dim— Send them to guide us cres. yet, O star . . . which led to Him! Send mf dim. yet, O star, O star which led to Him! Send them, send mf dim. yet, O star, O star which led to Him! Send them, send mf dim. yet, O star, O star which led to Him! Send them, send mf dim. them to guide us yet— O star which led to Him.

f dim. p rall. e dim. pp them to guide us yet— O star which led to Him.

f dim. p rall. e dim. pp them to guide us yet— O star which led to Him.

f dim. p rall. e dim. pp them to guide us yet— O star which led to Him.

f dim. p rall. e dim. pp them to guide us yet— O star which led to Him.

f dim. p rall. e dim. pp them to guide us yet— O star which led to Him.

New Music

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

So far I have heard of no public performance of Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji's Sonata No. 1 (London & Continental Music Publishing Co.), nor have I seen any pronouncements thereon by my brother reviewers. No doubt they have been waiting for an opportunity for hearing the work before passing judgment. Anyhow, that is my case. Not often is one so baffled by the printed page. Sir Henry Hadow, Mr. Ernest Newman, and others who are fond of hearing music mentally in a comfortable armchair, undistracted by the noise of performance, may (or may not) have a delightful half-hour with this work. I seem to remember receiving a prospectus in which we were told that the Sonata is so difficult that it cannot be memorised. Certainly Mr. Sorabji is entitled to such credit as is due to the composer of what is probably the most difficult pianoforte work in existence. But music of this type should be written for an automatic instrument, not one calling for the agency of human fingers. Mr. Sorabji would have done better to publish it straight away as a player-piano roll. I hear that a Sonata No. 2 is on the way, so perhaps we will consider the suggestion. Some worrying adventures at the keyboard with No. 1 leave me with few impressions, which I set down with diffidence. Properly played—which it is not likely to be until it is made available for the player-piano—the Sonata should prove wildly exciting. Like too much modern music, however, it appears to suffer from a want of contrast. It is in one continuous movement, and we look in vain for an occasional bit of simplicity. Three staves are employed, practically throughout, and as a rule the topmost of the three is to be played in octave higher than written, this being indicated by the sign viii placed at the beginning of the stave. The resources of the keyboard, like those of the player (and hearer) are strained to the utmost. It is difficult to see how some of the effects can be made clearly. But of course one never knows how far clarity is the aim of the modern composer. Some of the passages wherein both hands play a series of unrelated chords over a pedal point, e.g., a long string of minor triads on this plan :

over a C natural—can never be otherwise than confused in effect. No doubt the composer wants just that effect, but he must not complain if very few of us share his liking for it. (By the by, this kind of writing, for all its desperately original appearance, is as purely mechanical as any series of common chords by the despised old composers.) The febrile character of the Sonata is indicated by the liberal use of such directions as irrigineux, Tourbillonnant, Pulpitant, Sauvage :

très rude et dur, Avec langueur et épuisement, En délire, Éclatant radieux, and other stimulating flowers of speech, which seem to owe something to the later Scriabin, as does also a good deal of the music itself. What a long way we have travelled from the old days when music was a recreation and a solace! Once the heavenly maid was young: now she seems to be degenerating into a neurotic old harriidan. All the same, I look eagerly for a chance of hearing this extraordinary work. I note that Mr. Sorabji has thoughtfully—perhaps ironically—reserved the right of performance.

The 'Three Mood Pictures' of W. G. Whittaker (Winthrop Rogers) are further exasperating essays in dissonance. 'Satyrs' has the right tang about it, and we tolerate the ugliness as a whole because of the title. 'A Trill' gives us a prolonged shake for five pages—sometimes high on the keyboard, sometimes low—while all sorts of conglomerations of notes are piled up. There are plenty of consecutive bare sevenths. I suppose there is some point in them, but I must confess that to my old-fashioned ears these particular ones sound like octaves which have met with an accident. The third piece, 'A Lament,' has a poignant and impressive middle section, but much of the remainder wrings my feelings in the wrong way. On the whole, I like Mr. Whittaker far, far better as a choral writer.

Ivor Gurney's Five Preludes (Winthrop Rogers) are as a box where sweets compacted lie after the roughnesses of Sorabji and Whittaker. Mr. Gurney is so bold as to write music which can be read with fair ease, both mentally and at the keyboard. His Preludes are very pleasant essays of two or three pages apiece, moderately difficult, and with a decided flavour of Chopin.

Two effective and well-contrasted pieces published under one cover are Edward Mitchell's 'Rêverie' and 'Dance Scherzo' (Elkin). The 'Rêverie,' with its extensive lay-out, calls for good management of pedal, and the Dance gives scope for any amount of vigour and brilliance.

Leff Pouishnov as a player we know. Here he is as a composer, with an attractive piece called 'Quand il pleut . . .' (Enoch). We all know what happens quand il pleut on the pianoforte, and Mr. Pouishnov doesn't disappoint us. He makes no tremendous demands technically, and he writes music all the time.

Shall we ever again meet the Sibelius of 'Finlandia,' 'En Saga,' and 'Valse Triste'? His recent orchestral works made us ask the question, and his growing list of new pianoforte music seems to answer it in the negative. In his Twelve Selected Pieces in two books (Chester), we could easily overlook the lack of poetic or emotional impulse if there were invention or originality of any kind, but regretfully we have to say there is none. Stay! there are some surprises in 'The Aspen,' but unfortunately the composer is not responsible for them. They are due to the fact that the signature throughout is wrong—four sharps instead of five.

A very attractive work is Ernest Austin's second Sonata (Chester). Thoroughly pianistic and warmly expressive, it calls for a good player, and gives him a due result for his effort, which is what all too little modern music does. It is none the worse for reminding us of Chopin in his more virile moments.

In two pieces by John Ireland, 'For Remembrance' and 'Amberley Wild Brooks,' published separately (Augener), extremes meet. The first is in the somewhat harsh vein characteristic of a good deal of the composer's work. We wonder if he is expressing all that he wants to. He is tremendously in earnest, but it seems as if a touch of cynicism pulls him just as he is about to let himself go. This is infinitely better than stopping over, of course, especially as his music has invariably an intellectual quality that makes it improve on acquaintance. Still, I wish he would thaw more frequently. 'Amberley Wild Brooks' is a first-rate piece of water-music. It glitters and burbles, and does all that the old time-honoured pianoforte brooklets have ever done, but it leaves that discredited family far behind in that it is full of originality. It is a brilliant piece of writing—one for tip-top players only, be it added.

A good set of transcriptions is A. M. Henderson's book of a dozen pieces drawn from Handel, Rameau, Purcell, Haydn, Bach, Clerambault, Lully, &c. (Bayley & Ferguson). They make available some delightful old music, and are very valuable as studies. Mr. Henderson does not overdo things, and his amplifications are practicable and pianistic.

H. G.

PIANOFORTE DUETS

A very brilliant affair is the four-handed version of Lord Berners' 'Fantaisie Espagnole' (Chester). It bears the ordeal of transference from the orchestra remarkably well, chiefly because so much of its effect depends upon incisive rhythms rather than on instrumental colour. It is rather difficult, of course, and, above all, it calls for players who are ready to let themselves go. A pair of such pianists could make these three movements irresistible.

Difficult in a different way is Benjamin Dale's duet arrangement of Delius' Orchestral Ballad, 'Eventyr' ('Once upon a time'), which has just been issued by Augener. Renewing acquaintance with it in its new dress, one wonders why it is not more often heard in its original form. Has it been played in London since its first performance some years ago? It is a very picturesque work, full of variety and colour, and with some real tunes. It differs from the Berners duet in that we cannot forget its orchestral form, even if the indications of the scoring were not present to remind us, whereas the 'Fantaisie Espagnole' might well pass for pianoforte music, so clear-cut is it in texture. Both works will be prized by duettists who want music which calls for real study. The increasing number of orchestral and chamber works of large scale issued as pianoforte duets is a welcome sign that this delightful form of ensemble playing is getting back some of its lost prestige. Its value as a means for obtaining a thorough knowledge of abstruse modern works can hardly be overestimated, especially in the case of musicians who live away from the larger centres of population, and so have few opportunities for hearing such works in their original form.

SONATAS FOR PIANOFORTE AND VIOLIN

Mr. Adam Carse's Sonata in C minor for violin and pianoforte (Augener) is a very pleasant little work. It follows the usual lines, being just lively enough to avoid commonplaces and easy enough to be within reach of players of moderate ability. It contains not a single chord or figure that could not be quoted in a work on academic theory. But it has the defects of its qualities. It is not very stimulating; it does not stir the imagination.

For stimulus, depth of thought, and originality we must turn to Mr. Arnold Bax, whose first Sonata in E has just been published (Murdoch). It is inevitable that those who like the Sonata of Mr. Carse should find the Bax work a nut too hard to crack.

That is all that need be said on this head for, of course, the words beauty and ugliness have been used so often that they have lost a definite meaning of their own. In artistic matters they have become utterly meaningless. The important thing is the sincerity of the presentation. Mr. Muirhead Bone does not draw country houses or sunsets in the way of the old etchers, yet no one has ever said that was choosing ugliness. Mr. Nevinson paints New York, yet his paintings delight all who see them. Mr. Arnold Bennett writes about the Five Towns but no critic has ever suggested that his books were unpleasant because that district is unlovely. For the onlooker, for the reader, for the music lover, all that really matters is that the painting, the page, the score should express a sincere thought or deeply felt emotion.

For our part, we prefer the sincerity of Mr. Bax to the accomplishment of Mr. Daniel Gregory Mason whose Sonata for pianoforte and violin has just been issued (Society for the Publication of American Music). That this work is technically excellent must be taken for granted by all who know Mr. Mason's record. He never falls a victim to the attraction of the high register of the fiddle, as Mr. Bax does occasionally. Pianoforte and violin are well balanced; everywhere are evident signs of good workmanship and good taste. And yet the general atmosphere is close, academic—and rather formal. In England there are a score of composers who have the same aims as Mr. Mason. But here there are also others who want to break through the barriers that limit that horizon. The attempt may not always be successful; masterpieces are not and never have been written as newspapers at a fixed hour, daily. But the aim is perfectly legitimate and perfectly sincere.

F. B.

SONGS

Not long ago the solos in Bach's oratorios and cantatas were held to be unvocal. Singers who have been brought up on Handel, with his comfortable vocal line and simple accompaniments that supported and never distracted, found themselves in the toils when attempting any but the easiest of Bach's air. They at once decided that Bach did not know how to write for the voice, not observing that the unexpected difficulties arose from the fact that Bach and Handel approached the song from a totally different point of view. Handel wrote a vocal solo, Bach a piece of chamber music in which the voice was merely one of the instruments. Obvious the latter type calls for a singer who is a musician also. Indeed, so severe is the demand on the ensemble side as a rule, that we might almost lay down as an axiom that to sing Bach well one must have a voice, but must have musicianship. The only complaint as to the 'unvocal' character of Bach's writing has been exploded with the similar charge against Wagner. The issue by Novello of four sets of solos from the cantatas is the best evidence as to the change of view on this point. The soprano set contains five songs, including the familiar 'My heart ever trusting'; the alto, four; the tenor, five (among them 'Fast my bitter tears are flowing,' in which Gervase Elwes was so often heard); and the bass,

r. In this last set, by the way, is one of Bach's st beautiful songs, 'Whom Jesus deigns,' from the 'Hou Guide of Israel.' The accompaniments to the os are as a whole rather difficult, being polyphonic texture, and of a type not easily reduced to key-ard idiom. But they are full of beauty and interest, and well repay the study called for. Now t Bach's name has begun to appear in the vocal o classes of competition festivals, these four ums, being handy in size and low in price, should very useful.

Coming to modern songs, our chief need just now for a liberal supply of examples that shall bridge gap between the banal royalty ballad and the it-rate original work. The latter makes as a rule too heavy demands on singer and accompanist—pecially the accompanist. The singer who is not sure of the musicianship of either himself or his mist may dislike the feeble order of song, but he is ore or less driven to it. Of course what is said ove must not be taken to imply that such oderately difficult songs need necessarily be a grade ow the first quality. On the contrary, we know at many of the great things in the song repertory e comparatively simple. But there is an unfortunate idency among our song writers to put far too uch into the accompaniment. Often this fault goes th a starving of the voice part. The plan seems to o allot to the singer any old casual series of tes, and then show what extraordinary harmony e poor bald apology for a tune can be made to rry. The result is like oil and water—you may put em together but they won't mix. And why do mposers who have the trick of turning out an ractive popular song think that in order to write at is called an 'art song' they must become struse and diffuse? A good (or bad) example is a t of five songs by Easthope Martin in the Enoch t Song Library (Enoch). Mr. Martin is well able catch the popular ear; must he lose it when he comes 'artistic'? The songs are settings of poems e Maselfield, and include such direct things as 'An d song resung,' 'St. Mary's Bells,' and 'Cargoes.' Mr. Martin had not had the terrible word 'art' ore his eyes, he would have given us the straight-ward music called for, and which he is so well able supply. Instead, he has sprinkled his pages with e latest fashionable harmonic pungencies. The onsie seamen 'cannot 'down the lusty ale' but to a rain more suitable to a love song, and the 'Dirty ritish coaster' butts through the Channel to a ries of chords that suited the 'haven in sunny alestine' and 'the tropics by the palm green shores' e preceding verses—for no better reason pparently than the mistaken notion that an 'art ng' must not be simple and straightforward.

Such elaborations as there are in the pianoforte art of Julius Harrison's 'Three Sonnets from occaccio' in the same series are in keeping, because e the romantic atmosphere of the text. These three ngs are for high voice. 'Fiammetta Singing' is ll of fine opportunities for good singers and layers.

Edward C. Bairstow's setting of Whitman's well-known lines 'When I heard the learned astronomer,' or low or medium voice, is another number in this Art ng Library. It is a capital example of a song that oes straight to the point and scores. Musicians will ppreciate the touch of humour in the accompaniment, e pedantry of the learned astronomer being flected by a familiar imitative and sequential cliché. There is real poetry in the close, short and unpretentious though it be.

A baffling example of modern song writing is Alfredo Casella's 'L'Adieu à la Vie,' a set of four lyrics from the 'Gitanjali,' of Rabindranath Tagore, done into French by Andre Gidé (Chester). The pianoforte part must surely be the last word in complexity. The composer frequently calls for an extra stave, sometimes two extra staves—indeed, at the close of the second song he spreads himself over no less than five! Both hands play a loud chord low on the keyboard, then one ppp up aloft, after which the right hand puts in the middle a chord without sounding the notes, and sustains it after the other chords have been released, in order to produce harmonics. How far off would these be heard? There are some fine moments in 'L'Adieu à la Vie,' e.g., the remorseless tread of the bass at 'Jour après jour j'ai veillé pour t'attendre. . . . ' the lontano on pages 7. and 8, and the strident opening of 'A cette heure du départ,' &c. But as a whole we can make little of them from a mere trying over; we must wait for a performance.

Eugène Goossens' three songs, 'Philomel' (Richard Barnefield), 'Melancholy' (John Fletcher), and 'The Appeal' (Sir Thomas Wyatt), published separately (Chester), show the composer at his best. The simple passages are original—note, for example, page 3 of 'Melancholy,' with its bell effect, and the greater part of 'The Appeal'—and the unusual harmony is always convincing. It does not give us an impression of being experimental, or of being dragged in because the composer thinks such things are expected of him, as is the case, for example, with a good deal of Casella. The three songs are published also in one book with accompaniment for string quartet, in which form they should be even more successful than with pianoforte.

Roger Quilter has written accompaniments to some old English popular songs (Winthrop Rogers). Of the three so far received—'We be three poor Mariners,' 'Drink to me only with thine eyes,' and 'Over the Mountains'—the last is perhaps the best. 'Drink to me' is a trifle over-sweet, and (for this writer at all events) the 'Three poor Mariners' is spoilt by a dreadful lapse in the first bar of page 5, where a chord of the augmented sixth is dragged in, emphasised, and tenutoed, with what seems to be sheer cussedness. 'Over the Mountains' is delightful, the pianoforte part being a model of what such arrangements should be.

John Ireland's 'The journey' (Enoch) is bold and straightforward in its voice part, with an accompaniment that does a lot with little fuss or difficulty. As was said above, we need lots more of this type of work in order to show that a song need not be banal in order to make a ready appeal.

Even more simple is George Butterworth's setting of Wilde's 'Requiescat' (Augener). It looks like a mere sketch, but a good singer could make a poignant thing of it. The other type of singer will think there is nothing in it. There isn't—for him.

Paul Edmonds' 'The Pegasus' (An Imitation Nautical Song) is a setting of one of J. C. Squire's parodies, the victim being Sir Henry Newbolt. It is a genuinely funny affair. (Enoch.) It will be specially enjoyed by singers and audiences who have 'The Old Superb,' 'Drake's Drum,' 'The Little Admiral,' &c., at their fingers' ends.

A. Herbert Brewer's 'Jillian of Berry' (Chappell) is a cycle of three songs sung with much success at the Hereford Festival by Mr. John Coates. They show a light touch and deftness that suggest Edward German.

Finally, here is Arthur Bliss' 'Madame Noy,' a grim piece of humour very brilliantly carried out. (Chester.) The original accompaniment for six instruments has been reduced to an effective and not over-difficult pianoforte part. The cover is a black and white picture over which all beholders will rave—some because it is so art-y, the rest because it is so ugly. The gentleman playing the flute with two right hands (or is it left? one gets quite giddy trying to decide) is a joy for ever, though far from being a thing of beauty.

H. G.

CHORAL MUSIC

Two important works by Arnold Bax have just been issued by Murdoch. 'Of a rose I sing a song' is a Christmas carol for a small choir, harp, one violoncello, and one double-bass. The words are of the 15th century. The form is practically a set of variations on a theme in the style of an old carol. There is a strong modal flavour about it, contrast being supplied later by some modern pungencies. The setting of a passage relating to hell is daring, the basses being directed to sing with 'snarling tone,' the sopranos à 3 wailing 'ah,' and the violoncello and bass sustaining a gruesome pedal. In the closing pages the chorus is in eight parts. Nevertheless, the force employed must not be large, or the three solo instruments will be outweighed. The work belongs to the chamber music family, both in texture and intimate character. With a few really good voices to each part it could be made a delightful thing.

Large and powerful choirs will find as much as they can tackle—perhaps a trifle more—in Mr. Bax's 'Mater ora filium,' which is for double choir (unaccompanied). The composer has again gone to ancient sources for his text (another Christmas carol), this time drawing on a manuscript at Baliol College. The main theme is on plainsong lines, and the music ranges from the extremely simple to the exactly complex. There are frequent subdivisions, so that the choir is called on to sing in twelve parts—even fourteen for a brief space. Variety is provided by liberal use of semi-chorus effects and passages for a few solo voices. One of these, for three sopranos, calls for a singer able to sustain a high B pp, the choir ceasing and leaving her and her two companions in the air, so to speak—a delightful effect if it comes off. Not the least exacting point in the work is the rhythmical independence called for. It is good to see one of our most brilliant young composers turning his attention to a type of music in which this country can still hold pride of place. 'Mater ora filium' is dedicated to Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, who, it is to be hoped, will give us an early chance of hearing it.

H. G.

The musical season at South Place Institute (Finsbury Pavement, London, E.C.) opened last month, chamber concerts being arranged for October 2, 9, and 23. The programmes include Frank Bridge's Pianoforte Quintet, Ernest Walker's C minor Pianoforte Quartet, Walthew's Serenade Sonata for viola and pianoforte, and Herbert Howells' 'Lady Audrey's Suite.' The orchestra, under Mr. R. H. Walthew, gives a concert on December 4.

Dr. Vaughan Williams' 'London' Symphony received its first Australian performance on August 11 at the Conservatory Hall, Sydney, Mr. Henry Verbruggen conducting.

KNELLER HALL

It has to be seen to be believed: a steady stream of people trecking down a winding lane, and apparently going to a Cup Tie. When you know better you have to think of the bad, old Bayreuth days. Bayreuth—Festspielhaus; Twickenham—Kneller Hall: different surroundings, same expression of holy ardour on pilgrim faces. Well, thank heaven some folk know how to appreciate a first-rate band performance, because many of you who read this certainly don't. To you a military band probably represents a conglomeration of soldiers who play 'The Policeman's Wedding' down at the seaside. But all this is going to be changed soon, and Kneller Hall, the seat of the Royal Military Band School, has become, thanks to its untiring commandant, Col. Somerville, the refining through which the entire Army will be ultimately

Photo by

[Sydney J. Loeb.]

COL. J. C. SOMERVILLE.

supplied with players who are not only technically efficient, but who are imbued with a taste for good music and a desire to propagate it.

During the season from May to September concerts are given each week by the Students' Band of about hundred and sixty performers, which is conducted in strict rotation by aspiring bandmasters. On the first and third Wednesdays of the month the concerts are held in the afternoon, and devoted to what are (for military bands at any rate) truly creditable and ambitious programmes. The other concerts are held on Wednesday evenings, and some of these are 'grand,' the grandeur apparently consisting of a hymn and Last Post tacked on to the end. Otherwise the evening concerts are of a more or less popular kind; nevertheless jaded palates will find performance of, say, 'Finlandia' by a band of hundred and sixty players well worth tasting.

There is no band-stand in the accepted sense of the word, only a sloping platform on which the yers settle like living bees; and there are no musical helps, so that the actual volume of sound is not stupendous—in fact perhaps not greater than that provided by twenty-five players in a very compact band-stand. But the body and the richness of tone are extraordinarily impressive—a marble face as against a stucco one of similar dimensions. The behaviour of the audience is beyond praise: there is very little talking and, I imagine, the minimum spooning, as the auditorium is planned on somewhat artan lines, and designed strictly for music-lovers and not for ordinary ones.

No conductor is allowed to direct more than one person at a concert, and as a result they put every person into the business. I was rather sorry for the concert recently, when they had to sustain a pretty heavy assault of baton charges from a set of enthusiasts who will ultimately have to tone down their methods considerably, as tongues can't go on wagging as fast and furiously as fingers—at any rate when they have to wag on instruments. But it's all very fresh, conventional, and entertaining, and an afternoon evening spent at Kneller Hall is a thing to be remembered.

Of particular interest was the concert given on September 29, when some of the new works sent in as a result of Col. Somerville's appeal (still valid, by the way) for compositions written directly for military bands were repeated. Fortunately Mr. Holst's fine though unequal Suite in B flat was included in the programme, though it does not belong to the class of work referred to. Without it, however, I am afraid the concert would not have possessed much distinction, as the majority of the new works performed gave more evidence of the contempt which composers and public generally seem to harbour for military band as a medium of expression than of any particular understanding for the opportunities it presents. Dr. Cuthbert Harris's 'Egyptian Scenes' reached bottom in this respect. It started with a creditable reference to the opening bars of 'Chun Chow,' and displayed throughout the composer's perfect familiarity with the masterpieces of Luigini and the lesser efforts of Grieg, Tchaikovsky, and Saint-Saëns. (Small wonder that Sir Charles Stanford, who was present, was seen to advance slowly but deliberately towards an adjacent duck pond.) The next item, again, by Mr. R. Iliffe, was actually entitled 'Hungarian Rhapsody.' Does Mr. Iliffe seriously consider that anyone in this country has the faintest interest any longer in a kind of clap-trap of which even the most distinguished specimens are third-rate? Fortunately Dr. C. B. Rootham's 'Processional' did not again turn the scale in favour of music. If it were work bore the magic name of Elgar or even if it were stock it would already be a stock item in the concert repertoire. Being however by a lesser known composer, it may well have to wait a few decades for recognition, especially if all audiences like that at Kneller Hall make its advent coincide with a sudden desire for material nourishment. This was a pure coincidence, but an unfortunate one, especially as the audience in question included a number of people whose duty it is to draw attention to such ill comparatively few good works that have been produced by British composers.

In conclusion, I must not omit to mention the efforts of the Male-Voice Choir, which gave some very creditable performances of a few part-songs. The idea of providing relief to instrumental studies by developing an interest in good vocal music is an admirable one, and both Col. Somerville, its author, and Mr. C. T. Lofthouse, who is in charge of this branch, are to be congratulated on the results achieved. Secretaries of large London choirs who search despairingly for hefty and at the same time accurate male voices might do worse than drop a line to Kneller Hall.

R. L.

THE ART OF CHALIAPIN

BY HERMAN KLEIN

It is only fair to bestow a certain amount of sympathy upon a great singer compelled by circumstances to limit his art to the vast, uninspiring milieu of the Albert Hall. Sometimes we are asked to make allowances for famous artists who have never appeared either there or anywhere else in England before. That ordeal makes the case harder still. Unforgettable examples of it were provided in bygone days by Materna and Niemann, the original Brünnhilde and Siegfried, at the Wagner Festival in 1877, and by the splendid quartet (including the tenor Masini) who sang the solos in the first performance here of Verdi's 'Requiem,' under the baton of the composer. Such artists as these, like others of similar calibre who came later, could always acquit themselves well enough to satisfy. But it would be absurd to suppose that, under Albert Hall conditions, they approached within measurable distance of the exalted heights to which they attained upon the lyric stage, amid their own peculiar environment.

So it came about with the gifted Chaliapin on the night of October 4. No one knew better than he that in this huge amphitheatre he was out of his element: for he is essentially a shining light—or whatever may be the masculine for diva—of the operatic stage; nor can he with all his talent sing in the concert-room save at a serious disadvantage. Still, there was no other course open to him if he was to appear in London at the present juncture, and he successfully fulfilled his self-imposed task of making money on behalf of his starving countrymen. That he should have achieved it with such brilliant results was remarkable in many ways. An audience of ten thousand would never, to begin with, have been drawn to the Albert Hall to hear a solitary singer, a stranger here for years and a celebrity in practically a different line of his art, unless the 'stunt' had been worked with unusual skill. Neither, again, would that audience have listened, silent and enraptured, to group after group of 'selected arias'—all sung in the unfamiliar Russian language, not one of them advertised or announced by name beforehand—had not the singer possessed an extraordinary personality as well as the requisite genius to conquer on the initial attack all the drawbacks and obstacles of the situation. It is this last point which is really the crux of the matter: not the question how the mere name of Chaliapin—the obscured reflex of an interrupted glory, the half-forgotten creator of a memorable experience—sufficed to draw the crowd, or the secret of the spell with which he held them enthralled during every instant that he stood before them.

His voice is by no means absolutely beautiful—in the sense, that is to say, that the voices of Edouard de Reszke and Pol Plançon were beautiful; and both beloved, like Chaliapin, to the category of the basso cantante. His quality resembles rather that of the Dutchman Van Rooy, who was a concert-singer some time before Bayreuth discovered in him a new Wotan and there granted him his stage début. It has much the same timbre in the medium; it betrays the same tendency to tremble slightly in moments of tenderness; it has in a still more remarkable degree the capacity for a mezza voce of infinite delicacy, a lovely fil de voix that can be attenuated and prolonged to a gossamer film of sound without losing either continuity or charm. No other bass or deep baritone now before the public possesses this exquisite mezza voce in the measure that Chaliapin does. He uses it with discretion, that is to say, only when occasion demands; and with all the greater effect because his amazing control of breath-pressure enables him to either swell or diminish tone from or to this 'thread of voice,' so that it runs through the whole gamut of strength and volume of which his elastic organ is capable. The power of the voice, like its compass, is not really extraordinary. All the three singers above named could produce louder, broader outbursts of open vowel-tone and more resonant deep notes than Chaliapin, who has none of the heavy reverberating timbre of the typical Russian bass. But to make up for it he can mount to the loftier regions of a genuine baritone with the smoothness inseparable from a faultless scale, while his attack in that part of the voice is equally clean and true. His 'effects,' consequently, are always safe and interesting to listen to. Whether spontaneous or studied, they obviously belong to the equipment of the clever vocalist no less than of the accomplished actor.

So much for the attributes that proved of most immediate use to the artist in his first essay at the Albert Hall. With all his ability, however, he could afford no more than an occasional fleeting glimpse of the superb delineator of 'Boris Godounov' and 'Ivan the Terrible' whom we saw during the early Beecham seasons at Drury Lane. He seemed to have been aware of this, since operatic excerpts formed no part of his programme. It is one thing, however, to avoid, as every artistic singer should, the objectionable habit of attempting dramatic action on the concert-platform, and quite another to bring to the interpretation of a song every expressive nuance of utterance and tone-colour that words and music should call forth. But whereas Chaliapin is a great actor, a great histrionic interpreter of human tragedy and passionate emotions, he is not, in anything near the same transcendent degree, what we still call a great 'Lieder-singer.' The two vocations present him, so to speak, upon different planes, and it is the magnetic quality of the man, the individuality of his style, his astonishing variety and instant command of colour and feeling, rather than nobility and grandeur of delivery or perfection of vocal method, that enable him to triumph. One might even be able to pick holes in his singing of the Russian ditties that he loves so dearly. But nobody would think of denying that he lives every moment of the drama he unfolds, or with what vivid and graphic touches he compels his listeners to live those moments with him.

As might have been expected, the closer proximity between artist and audience possible at Queen's Hall tended to enhance both interest and enjoyment at the afternoon recital on October 17. The ever-changing shades of colouring and expression were the more convincing for being studied at close quarters. The true quality of the voice could be clearly discerned, free from echoes and the distortions due to acoustical vagaries. On the whole, too, one felt that Chaliapin was singing well within his physical means, and more like the singer whom the writer heard in his magnificent delineation of Boito's 'Mefistofele' at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, some fourteen years ago. It was really satisfying now in every way to hear him in Schubert and Schumann. The intonation in 'Ich groÙe Nicht' may have gone astray at a critical moment, but it may be doubted whether a finer rendering, 'Der Doppelgänger,' or even of 'Aufenthalt,' has ever been heard. And all in Russian, too! Truly Chaliapin is a unique artist.

SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL

Mr. Alfred Moss, a Walsall business man who is primarily an amateur musician and a poet, began to work more than twenty years ago for a musical festival in his district. He got matters well forward at one time, but the musician on whom the organization would have depended died; this was Swinnerton Heap, conductor of Societies at Walsall and Birmingham. But Mr. Moss did not let his desire languish; the idea has never been far from his mind yet until Mr. Appleby Matthews became connected with Walsall music, he could find no one at once sufficiently capable and courageous to bring it into effect. The Festival was projected last March, and carried through satisfactorily from October 8 to 15.

Apart from a day at Lichfield, when a special service was held in the Cathedral, all the concerts were given at Walsall. Walsall is not altogether typical of South Staffordshire, nor is it the largest of the South Staffordshire towns. But it is the one with a Town Hall, or, indeed, any other building suitable for concerts. At Wolverhampton, for example, concerts are given either in the swimming-baths, the water being drawn off and the bath floor covered over, or in the drill hall, a place designed for the convenience of two or three battalions of soldiers. Walsall impinges upon the Black Country, and among the towns of the district are Willenhall, Wednesbury, Great Bridge, Hednesford, Tipton, Cannock, Pelsall, Bilston, West Bromwich, Telford, Bloxwich, Darlaston, Tettenhall, Blackheath &c., also the two great suburbs of Birmingham, Handsworth and Smethwick. But all this district is practically one enormous town; and the fundamental idea of the Festival is to bring about something of an amalgamation of its music. Walsall Town Hall is a fine room, with a good organ, and is part of a massive group of architecture that always astonishes visitors. Until neighbouring towns build suitable halls, the Festival must continue to be held at Walsall.

The present Festival was rather hurriedly arranged, and there is little need to discuss its defects, since these will be modified next year. The principal weakness was the appearance at concerts of performers who had no artistic abilities pronounced enough to justify their temerity, and per contra the non-appearance of other musicians who were unable to push their artistic claims. As the Festival is entirely democratic, this particular defect is contrary to its nature. A second weakness was one which eventually will be a cause of strength, and lay in the over-ambition of the various choral societies. For societies severally provided the concerts, and each determined that its programme should be the most striking of all. Therefore, difficult works were selected—works which few societies, other than those of the highest rank, could perform. The worst re prepared with the meticulous care a little male-choir devotes to the study of its competition-pieces; rehearsals, indeed, were almost continuous through the summer and autumn, and the society arrived at a remarkable technical efficiency and an exact knowledge of the notes of compositions. But beyond this, little was saved in the Festival performances; the soul of music was lacking. A third defect which I will mention was the inclusion by one or two solo singers of music which it was an impertinence to offer. These singers were severely trounced in the local press, and they will probably not pander again to their own vanity and to the weaknesses of their audiences. Victories are sometimes won by the rank and file, and the nation behind them, against the confused hesitations and pessimism of the generals. This truism is reflected in connection with the South Staffordshire Festival. The choral societies never despaired of success; but as late as the end of September the Festival organizers determined to abandon the undertaking, until their move was crushed by the greater determination of Mr. Matthews to continue it. The main outline of the Festival was as follows:

Monday, October 10. — Wolverhampton Musical Society (Mr. Joseph Lewis): Choral Fantasia, 'Miriabilia' (Clifford Roberts); 'Vanity of Vanities' (Bantock); 'Go, song of mine' (Elgar). At this concert Mr. Frank Mullings, a native of Walsall, sang some Bantock and Strauss songs, and Mr. Claude de Ville played some Chopin.

Tuesday. — Walsall Philharmonic Society (Mr. Appleby Matthews): 'Gerontius.' The solo singers were Mr. Mullings, Miss Mary Foster, and Mr. Charles Harrison.

Wednesday. — Cannock Choral Society and Walsall Madrigal Society (Mr. Joseph Yates): 'News from Whydah' (Balfour Gardiner); 'Death on the Hills' (Elgar); 'God's time is the best' (Bach); and Madrigals. The Arthur Hytch String Quartet played several pieces, and joined with Mr. Arthur Jordan in a performance of the song-cycle, 'On Wenlock Edge,' of Vaughan Williams.

Thursday. — Wolverhampton New Choral Society (Dr. Darby): 'Hymn of Jesus' (Holst) and 'The Music-Makers' (Elgar). Miss Foster sang some Bantock songs, and Miss Margaret Harrison the 'Air de Lia' from Debussy's 'L'Enfant Prodigue.' There were several orchestral items, among them William J. Fenney's romance, 'Early Spring.'

Friday. — Walsall Philharmonic Society: 'The Hound of Heaven' (William H. Harris); 'Requiem of Archangels for the World' (Julius Harrison); and the first part of 'Hiawatha.' Mr. Mullings sang Bantock's 'Now,' the accompaniment having been orchestrated for the occasion; and Mr. Mullings and Madame Parkes Darby sang the duet from 'Lohengrin.'

The two Saturdays of the octave were filled with competitions for solo singers and choirs. All the performers were South Staffordshire folk, and the composers of new works (Harris, Harrison, and Roberts) are closely connected with the district. The City of Birmingham Orchestra played at four of the concerts. The audiences were large, except on Wednesday. The income of the Festival exceeded the expenditure, but only because the conductors and the choral society worked without pay. A similar generous appreciation of the significance of the Festival on the part of all connected with it would have resulted in the creation of a good fund which could have been used next year in some process of educating the inhabitants of the district to the true appreciation of music. The audiences were magnificently enthusiastic, but rather in the way of sport than of art.

Except for the performances of the Walsall Philharmonic Society (which had unwisely saddled itself with more than it could carry), the choral works were given with remarkable power, precision, and safety. Bantock's choral symphony is as a series of seven enormous part-songs; but the choir ended as fresh as it began. 'The Music-Makers' was a heavy work to listen to, lacking the charm of its fancy and the beauty of its 'pure' music. Holst's novel composition marched boldly through its course; but metrically—not rhythmically. One of the best pieces of work during the week was the finely dramatised performance of 'News from Whydah.'

Harris' 'Hound of Heaven' will not do for Francis Thompson's poem. I say this with regret, for Dr. Harris is a very fine musician, and a genuine composer who will do good work in the future. His piece has many charming touches, and a considerable amount of beauty. But it is entirely away from the poem, as he himself, perhaps, now perceives. I am astonished the Carnegie adjudicators recommended the setting; either they had not read the poem, or, reading it, had not understood it. Harrison's 'Requiem' is a piece of vigorous and straightforward music, well in keeping with Trench's poem, and a successful attempt to avoid conventional musical expression on the one hand, and modernism on the other. 'Miriabilia' is based on some passages from Psalm 119. It is an example of the good style of present-day choral writing. If Roberts had not been seduced into pictorial writing in the middle section, one could have said it was a work of homogeneity.

S. G.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

The most striking musical event in London since last I wrote has been the reappearance of Chaliapin. He has given two recitals—one at the Albert Hall and one at Queen's Hall—both of which were crowded. He may still be described as 'the great singer among actors and the great actor among singers.' It would be difficult to say to which of his two sets of qualities his extreme hold over an audience is chiefly due. His voice seems in itself to be fresher and rounder than it was when last he sang here in opera; but he has developed a skill in singing high notes pianissimo which is astonishing in a bass. He is a real interpreter, and makes each song a complete little drama, which is intelligible to most of us, although naturally the subtleties escape those who do not understand Russian. He publishes a booklet containing the English words of some songs, and announces which one he is going to sing, which of course is of some help to the audience.

In one or two of his songs, notably Rubinstein's 'Could it remain thus for ever' and Lishin's 'She Laughed' (a song of no great value in itself), his mastery of drama and pure singing were extraordinarily fine. Still it is in the more dramatic songs that he will be chiefly remembered—as, for instance, in Rimsky-Korsakov's song describing a Prophet's Vision, or Glinka's song narrating the Ghostly Midnight Review held by Napoleon's spirit, and above all in 'The Two Grenadiers.' He plays havoc with Schumann's rhythms (which may be partly due to the Russian translation), and takes liberties even with the time of the 'Marseillaise'; but no one who heard it will forget its dramatic strength, or the pitch of excitement to which he roused the audiences—but let us pray that no student will try to copy it. His declaiming of Moussorgsky's 'Song of the Flea' was a masterpiece of sardonic vocal humour. His singing of Schubert at the Albert Hall showed his limitations, but at Queen's Hall his singing of Schumann and Schubert was much more satisfying. His two concerts must have produced a goodly sum for his famine stricken country.

KUBELIK AND OTHERS

The concert of Kubelik at the Albert Hall was a distinct disappointment. His second Violin Concerto, with which he began, was not a good choice for an audience which presumably came to hear him play his familiar repertoire, and was not in the least disposed to criticise a new work. It is a Concerto with a programme analogous to that of 'Tannhäuser,' but somehow the conflict between the good and the evil was not made very convincing. The best movement is the melodious slow movement. It requires a player who plays with dramatic force and much variety of tone-colour, and it is just in these respects that Kubelik was always least impressive, and he did not seem comfortable with the Albert Hall Orchestra, which was conducted by Mr. Nedbal. When he played some of his old favourites he was in much better trim. Although it was generally felt that his tone had lost somewhat of its power, his old familiar skill and ease roused the audience to wonted enthusiasm.

At the Albert Hall, too, there have been concerts by Madame Tetrassini, Madame d'Alvarez, and Miss Felice Lyne, all of whom satisfied their old admirers by their singing of the kind of songs with which their names are chiefly associated. Madame d'Alvarez has, if anything, gained in artistry. The skill with which she made a song of subtle and intimate sentiment like Debussy's 'Chevelure' effective in the Albert Hall was nothing less than masterly. The general public, however, was, not unnaturally, more impressed by her singing of Bizet's 'Ave Maria,' which was also in its own way an achievement.

NEW ENGLISH SONGS

An interesting concert was given by Mr. Steuart Wilson at Æolian Hall. He is one of our most thoughtful singers, and is always interesting. He would be more interesting if he paid greater attention to vocal charm. His concert was noteworthy for the number of modern English songs which he introduced, among which John Ireland's new song-cycle, 'The Land of Lost Content,' taken from the 'Shropshire Lad,' was perhaps the most important. It is distinctive music, but the interest is too largely confined to the pianoforte part. Dr. Vaughan Williams' 'Merciles Beautee,' a setting of lines of Chaucer with string trio accompaniment, reflects the atmosphere of the three poems very ably, and the cheerful last section was irresistibly encored. There were other new songs by R. O. Morris and Rebecca Clark, which were worth hearing. The total impression made by the concert was, however, that most of the composers worked with their brains rather than with their hearts, and did not compose in response to any particular inner impulse.

The singing of Miss Tilly Koenen is always artistic and satisfying, and another artist of unusual excellence as an interpreter is Miss Marcia van Dresser. The other most notable vocal concert has been the joint recital of Madame Donalda and

Mr. Mischa Leon, who showed their versatility singing songs by over twenty composers.

M. Moiseiwitsch has given a pianoforte recital Queen's Hall, at which he introduced the new set 'Nature Poems' by Eugène Goossens, which a particularly ingenious and attractive, and should be heard often. M. Moritz Rosenthal gave the first of his series of historical afternoons on October 1, and it was extremely interesting. He has very much changed from the Rosenthal of old, who used to twist the classics to his own ideas, sometimes with good deal of unnecessary violence. Now he generally subordinates himself, and only very rarely over-emphasises his own personality; and also he very rarely relapses into the hardness of tone which used to spoil his playing of old music. In this respect his playing of some Preludes and Fugues of Bach and the familiar 'Harmonious Blacksmith' Variations is admirable, and his treatment of the rhythms was a supremely artistic; they flow on without the tiresome pauses at the beginning of bars which some people seem to think the first essential to the playing of the classics.

The return of Mr. Solomon, after a long period of study under M. Cortôt, created a good deal of interest because of the successes he achieved as a prodigy. He is now eighteen, which is called the most trying time for any artist. At that age it is not long possible to claim indulgence on the ground of youth, while complete maturity is humanly speaking impossible. Technically Solomon has developed to an extraordinary extent, and he has a fine, full tone which always remains musical. His interpretations are marked by genuine and spontaneous feeling, and express a highly sympathetic musical personality. When, in process of time, they gain in intellectual depth, he should take a very high place among contemporary players. Mr. Jack Karshinsky, who gave his first recital at the end of September, is a young player of considerable natural gifts, which still require careful cultivation. How far his occasional rhythmic weaknesses were due to lack of complete technical control is uncertain. Mr. Braïlovsky has also given a recital, and fully confirmed the judgment that he is one of the artists of the future, and M. Pouissin goes from strength to strength. Last, not least, Miss Katherine Goodson has returned after a long absence abroad with her fine gifts still further developed.

There have been a good many novelties at Promenade Concerts during the last four weeks. The first was the Orchestral Overture, 'Love and Light,' from the 'Birth of Arthur,' by Rutland Boughton. It is instinct with the romantic feeling which marks most of Mr. Boughton's work, and the climaxes are of great emotional intensity. The Prelude and Call from 'Mary Rose,' by Norman O'Neill, proved as effective in the concert-room as it did in the theatre, where it added greatly to the emotional effect of the drama. Eugène Goossens' 'Tam o' Shanter,' conducted by the composer, is not exactly a novelty, but very unfamiliar, and the growing excitement it depicted made a great effect on the audience. It was very pleasant again to hear Mr. John Gerrard Williams' 'Pot-pourri' for orchestra. Mr. O'Connor Morris' Violin Concerto, which was played on October 6 by Mr. Godfrey Ludlow, is a pleasant work, effective for a soloist, written in a vein of sincere and simple feeling, but somewhat eclectic in style. The composer has not yet quite found himself. On the same ing Santoliquido's orchestral piece, entitled 'The Perfume of the Oasis in the Sahara,' was also heard for the first time. If we must have pseudo-orientalism written in careful compliance with worn-formulae, we may as well encourage home industry.

Malcolm Sargent's 'Impressions of a Windy Day' is a vigorous piece of mood painting with a genuine open-air feeling, and deserves to be heard again. On October 13 Mr. Arthur Bliss conducted his 'Mélée Fantastique' for orchestra, which has all the characteristics of exuberant high spirits and is in making the best of unusual orchestral combinations.

The characteristics of the season have been as a rule the continued popularity of the classical nights, and the enthusiasm with which the public has greeted larger excerpts from the Wagner operas.

The principal feature of the first of the Queen's Hall Symphony concerts on October 8 was M. Cortôt's playing of Saint-Saëns' fifth Concerto. He managed to throw quite a new light on the work, but not to convince us that it is equal to Saint-Saëns' best music. It was interesting to hear Scriabin's early second Symphony, written at a time when he had not entirely thrown off the Chopin influence. Holst's 'Planets' again deeply impressed the audience.

NOTES FOR NOVEMBER

The first Philharmonic concert, on November 3, has no novelties. The programme consists of the 'Orchestral Variations of Elgar' and 'Ma Mère l'Oye,' and 'Petrushka,' and all musicians will be interested to hear M. Cortôt play Brahms' first Piano Concerto. The second programme, on November 17, contains one or two novelties—Arnold Bax's Concerto for viola, played by Mr. Lionel Tertis, and Holbrooke's Symphony, 'Les Homages,' which is practically a novelty. The Symphony by Brahms' No. 3. M. Casals is the soloist at the third concert, on December 1, at which de Sabato's 'Jeu de Venet' will have its first performance. Signor de Sabato is a young Italian composer, son of the well-known conductor of the chorus of the Monte Carlo Opera. Another novelty is the Ballet Music from the Opera 'The Perfect Fool,' by Holst.

The programme of the second London Symphony Orchestra concert, on November 7, includes 'Ein Leben' and Holst's 'The Planets.' On November 21 M. Moiseiwitsch will play D'Erlanger's Piano Concerto for the first time. On November 28 M. Pouishnov plays the solo part of Holbrooke's 'Wynnyap-Nudd,' and the programme includes Elgar's 'Falstaff' and Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' with Mr. Albert Coates as conductor of all.

Two of Mr. Goossens' series of four Orchestral Concerts take place during November. On the 9th the novelties are J. R. Heath's Symphonic Poem 'The Builders of Joy,' Ravel's 'Alborada del Gracioso,' Schönberg's Five Orchestral Pieces, and Strauss' 'Thus spake Zarathustra'; on the 23rd the novelties are Holbrooke's 'Bronwen,' de Falla's Suite from the Gitaneria 'El Amor Brujo,' Cyril Scott's 'Aubade,' Debussy's 'Rondes du Printemps,' and Béla Bartók's 'The Wooden Prince.' At the third concert, on November 12, Stravinsky's much condemned Symphony in memory of Claude Debussy and the 'Sacre du Printemps' are in the programme for general request.

We are glad to make the announcement that the Musical Times has been adopted by Trinity College as its official organ of publicity.

Opera in London

By FRANCIS E. BARRETT

OPERATIC BEGINNINGS: THE CARL ROSA SEASON: GILBERT AND SULLIVAN: OLD VIC. ACTIVITIES

There is only just time this month to place on record that the sounds of opera have once more been heard in the Metropolis. At the moment of writing we are just at the beginning of things represented by the opening of the Carl Rosa season at Covent Garden and the initial stages of the Gilbert and Sullivan series. Of the one I can at least say from the list of subscribers and the cordiality with which the opening performance of 'Samson and Delilah' was received that the story of opera in English enters upon a new chapter. As to the Gilbert and Sullivan there is the incontestable fact that on the first night of all Mr. Rupert D'Oyly Carte made the significant announcement that the season would be extended from January to April. These facts make clear an obvious demand for opera, both grand and light. How the demand has been met I can better say next month. It must suffice that 'Samson' went well, always bearing in mind that the company had made no special changes in the cast for the occasion.

Then at the Old Vic., where opera has never ceased to be, the winter season has opened under the happiest conditions. I note that the orchestra has been raised, so that everything is brought into line and the way made clear for that large orchestra of which I have spoken. The season opened with 'Carmen' and 'La Traviata,' and 'Faust' followed. I notice with satisfaction that music is penetrating into the Shakespearean performances which are so prominent a feature of the educational scheme. At the production of 'As you like it' at the end of the month, incidental music specially written by Mr. Roger Quilter was used. Details of this and other matters I must defer until the December issue.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

There are still vacancies for a few tenors. Application should be made to the secretary, Mr. H. A. Griffith, the Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.1. The Choir makes its first appearance of the season on November 5, at St. Martin-in-the-Fields, at 3.30 p.m., when the programme will include Bach's 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure.' Mr. Thomas Fussell will play violin solos by Bach, Handel, &c.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

A Saturday afternoon Chamber Music Club is being formed in connection with the Bedford Institute Orchestra. The club will be coached and directed by Mr. Henry F. W. Horwood (late of Queen's Hall and Philharmonic Orchestras). Amateurs wishing to join should apply at the Institute (adjoining Bishopsgate Goods Station, G.E.R.), on Wednesdays, at 6.30 p.m., or write to E. J. COATES, 86, Highbury Hill, N.5. 'Cellist would like to join trio or quartet. Practice classes, &c. Two or three evenings weekly.—Apply 18, Chesney Grove, Hunslet, Leeds, Yorks.

Tenor and bass wanted to balance a musical party with own orchestra and L. R. A. M. pianist. Rehearsals Thursdays, 7-9 p.m. Central London.—W. T., 12, Sandmere Road, S.W. 4.

Advanced pianist wishes to meet with a capable violinist. Classical and modern music. Would also collaborate in trio (pianoforte, violin, 'cello).—BENNIE SOPHER, 388, Victoria Road, Crosshill, Glasgow.

'Cellist wishes to meet capable chamber musicians, Wallasey district.—RAWCLIFFE, 12, Westminster Road, Wallasey.

There are vacancies for instrumentalists and vocalists (ladies and gentlemen) in the Bowes Park Choral and Orchestral Society, in connection with the Carter Memorial Club, St. Michael's-at-Bowes. Weekly rehearsals commenced in September.—All communications to Mr. ALBERT HAZELL (conductor), 54, Belsize Avenue, Palmers Green, N.

The Croydon Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Mr. W. H. Reed, F. R. A. M.) invites applications from amateurs for all instruments. Rehearsals commenced end of September, on Fridays, at 8.15 p.m., at South Croydon. Full particulars from hon. secretary, C. J. E. CABLE, 118, Fairholme Road, Croydon.

The Fulham Cecilian Orchestral Society has vacancies for good amateur brass and wood-wind, 'cellos, &c. Double-bass provided. Rehearsals Mondays. For membership apply hon. secretary, 209, Munster Road, Fulham, S.W. 6.

Wanted for special musical services to be given at an Islington Church in October, November, and December next, the help of a small orchestra which would provide illustrative music to addresses on Rossini, Haydn, and Beethoven.—Mr. WILL F. SALMON, 58, Berwick Street, W. 1.

Pianist and 'cellist (young men) would like to meet violinist for regular practice. (Nottingham.) Large library of classical and modern music.—'LENTON,' c/o Musical Times.

Good 'cellist, capable of playing classical and modern chamber music, is invited to join pianist and violinist for the study and practice of trios, quartets, &c. Large library available. Herne Hill, Norwood, or Clapham districts.—W. H. C., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist (trained) wishes to play in trio or quartet, also wishes to meet good pianist with whom to play pianoforte duets. (London).—E. L., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist desires to form or join chamber music party Tuesday or Wednesday afternoons or evenings. Could arrange for rehearsal room. Brighton and district.—M. I., c/o Musical Times.

Lady viola player seeks practice with orchestra or chamber music party. London, S.W. district preferred.—'OMEGA,' c/o Musical Times.

Young tenor vocalist-violinist would be glad to meet capable pianist (lady or gentleman) for mutual practice. Wakefield district.—S. M., c/o Musical Times.

Young violinist desires to join trio or quartet for practice and study of classical and modern chamber music. Hampstead or Brondesbury district.—Write F. C. W., c/o Musical Times.

The Balsall Heath Amateur Orchestra requires good instrumentalists of all kinds (pianoforte excepted).—ALBERT BASTICK, 122, Edward Road, Balsall Heath, Birmingham.

Accompanist (lady) would like to practise with singer or violinist. London, S.W. district preferred.—M. G. H., c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman pianist wishes to meet three or four stringed instrumentalists with view to mutual practice of advanced chamber music.—L. R. A. M., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist and viola players are invited to join a musical party (voices and strings). Rehearsal, Thursdays, 7-9, Central London.—Apply, 'ENTRE NOUS,' 43, Great Russell Street, W.C. 1.

Soprano and tenor required for small party on quartet basis, with own orchestra. Practice room, New Oxford Street. Thursday evenings.—Write secretary, 12, Sandmere Road, S.W. 4.

Lady pianist would like to meet 'cellist and violinist for practice.—L. B. B., 24, Acol Road, West Hampstead, N.W. 6.

Amateur Orchestral Society in North London (Stol Newington and Clapton) has vacancies for good instrumentalists. Second season commenced Monday, October 24.—Write for particulars to A. W. ROBINSON, 11 Brooke Road, N. 16.

Small amateur orchestra just forming requires services male or female musicians—violinists, 'cellists, wood-wind and reed players. Preferably resident in South West London.—Write or call, V. B., 34, Frances Street, Battersea, S.W. 11.

Experienced and enthusiastic string quartet losing a leader requires a first-class amateur violinist to act that capacity. Practices weekly in North London.—'BEAUMARIS,' c/o Musical Times.

There are vacancies for good amateur instrumentalists both sexes in the Wandsworth Technical Institute Orchestra, High Street, Wandsworth, S.W. 1. (Conductor, Mr. Claude Landi.) Rehearsals, Tuesday 8-9.30 p.m. No fees. Music provided.

Orchestra (Brixton Brotherhood). There are vacancies for all stringed instruments, and cornet, flute, clarinet, and oboe. Rehearsals on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock St. Matthew's Church Schools, Church Road, Brixton commenced October 27.—Apply, E. G. MEDLEY, Free Press Office, Brixton Road, S.W.

Amateur solo violinists and amateur orchestras required co-operate in musical recitals at St. John's, Clapham Rise on the second Sunday evening in each month and on the last Monday evening of each winter month.—WALLACE B. BREACH, organist and choirmaster, 42, Honeybrook Road, S.W. 12.

[Will 'LENTON' kindly send us his address?—ED.]

Church and Organ Music

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL

A crowded congregation attended the eleventh Festival of the Cathedral choirs of Salisbury, Winchester, and Chichester, held on September 26, this being the revival of the Festival after the break caused by the war. Evensong was sung at 3, the music including Walmisley's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D minor, S. S. Wesley's 'O Lord n God,' Greene's 'O clap your hands,' and Alcock's 'And heard a great voice,' the fine anthem composed for the seven hundredth Anniversary of the founding of Salisbury Cathedral. Dr. F. J. Read played the introductory voluntary—Merkel's Andante in F—and the assistant organists of the three Cathedrals also shared in the organ playing, Mr. Cuthbert Osmond (Salisbury) accompanying Miss Hilda Bird (Winchester) playing Parry's 'Prelude on the Old 104th,' and Mr. P. G. Dore (Chichester) Lyon's Postlude in C sharp minor. Dr. W. G. Alcock conducted.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

As usual, a striking programme of Special Music Services has been arranged for the present season: December 10, Brahms' 'Requiem'; December 31, Carol; February 5, Elgar's 'For the Fallen' and Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater'; February 11, Bach's 'God's time is the best'; Mozart's G minor Symphony and the 'Creation' (Part 1); April 1, the 'St. Matthew' Passion; April 29, Motet. All these services (at which the London Symphony Orchestra will assist) are on Saturday afternoons at 4, and no tickets are required.

At the annual meeting of Exeter and District Organist Association, of which Dr. Ernest Bullock is president, on October 8, the Association found itself in a satisfactory financial condition. Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe, hon. secretary, reported that forty-eight members were on the books. A useful lending library of two hundred works had been formed, under the care of Mr. Denis Read. It was decided to hold meetings from October to May at intervals of two months instead of monthly as previously. The first meeting for the season will take place on November 10 at Crediton, where at the invitation of the vicar, the Rev. F. Smith-Dorrien, and organist, Mr. C. G. Church, the members will inspect and hear the new Harrison organ which has been built there as a War Memorial at a cost of nearly £5,000.

The arrangements of the Bristol branch of the Church Music Society for 1921-22 are as follows: A lecture on 'The Music of the Church Services,' by Martin Shaw, on November 21; on January 5, a lecture on 'Some Mid-Victorian Writers of Church Music,' by Sir John McClure; a congregational practice on January 28; and a Hymn Festival on February 25, conducted by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw.

A series of recitals will be given at St. Clement Danes Church, on the Wednesdays in November, at 1.10 p.m., by the following blind organists, in the order named: Mr. H. V. Spanner, Mr. Sydney Jones, Mr. Sinclair Logan, the Rev. H. E. C. Lewis, and Mr. H. C. Warrilow. All hold the F.R.C.O. diploma, one is a Mus. Bac., two are L.R.A.M., and one A.R.C.M. Nothing could be more eloquent of disabilities overcome.

Congregational hymn practices have been started at Newcastle Cathedral, conducted by Mr. William Ellis. They have aroused much interest, and as a result some fine unison singing is anticipated. At the opening practice the Vicar of Newcastle, Canon Newsom, and the Bishop of Carlisle were present, and about two hundred people took part after Evensong in rehearsing some fine hymn-tunes.

Mr. Alex. McConachie gave a Bach recital at Christ Church, St. Kilda, Melbourne. The works performed were Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Andante from Violin Concerto in A minor (played by Mrs. Frederick Newton), Prelude in B minor, Aria 'My heart ever faithful' (Miss Violet Heath), Adagio (Toccata and Fugue in C), and Toccata in F.

At the Annual Convention of the Canadian College of Organists a special service was held, at which the anthems were Boyce's 'O where shall wisdom be found?' and Wesley's 'The Wilderness.' After the service an organ recital was given by Mr. H. A. Fricker, his programme including Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Jongen's Chant de Mai, and Healey Willan's Epilogue.

A new organ was opened at Low Fell Presbyterian Church on September 22, recitals being given by Mr. James M. Preston and Mr. A. Ernest Belmont. Mr. Preston's programme included Smart's Overture in D, Remigio Renzi's Toccata in E, Harvey Grace's Caprice, and Liszt's 'From Crag to Sea' March. Mr. Belmont played Bach's Toccata and Fugue in C, and Guilman's Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs.

Marcel Dupré gave a recital on the famous Schultze organ at St. Mary's, Tyne Dock, on October 10, playing Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Gibbons' Voluntary in A minor, Franck's Pastorale, the Scherzo from Viërne's second Symphony, and his own Prelude and Fugue in G minor, besides improvising. Mr. Arthur Laycock, cornet soloist of St. Hilda's Brass Band, played trumpet and cornet solos.

The opening recital at the dedication of a new organ, built by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, at Mold Parish Church, was given by Dr. H. C. L. Stocks. Karg-Elert's Prelude on 'How brightly gleams,' Bach's Fugue in G minor, and Guilman's Prayer and Cradle Song were included in the programme.

Mr. Royle Shaw gave a lecture on 'Old English Church Music' at Sidmouth Parish Church on October 13, and on the preceding evening a congregational practice was held there, conducted by Major Trevilian.

Mr. Herbert Hodge will, according to his usual custom, play the test-pieces set by the Royal College of Organists for the January examinations at his organ recitals during November at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey.

The following obituary notice appeared in The Times on September 27. GOSS.—At 23, Dorchester Road, Weymouth, Julia, third daughter of the late Sir John Goss, in her ninety-fourth year.

A lecture on 'Carols for all Seasons' by the Rev. G. R. Woodward, illustrated by a small choir under the direction of Mr. Alan May, will be given on November 12, at 3 p.m., at St. Mary Aldermary, Queen Victoria Street.

On October 8 the City Temple Choral Society sang 'Elijah' at the City Temple. Mr. Allan Brown conducted, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ.

Mr. James M. Preston gave the opening recital on the new organ built by Messrs. Blackett & Howden, at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Blackhill. Among the items on the programme were a Fugue by Reubke, Pierné's Serenade, and Guilman's Fantasia on two English Melodies.

The series of eight recitals just given at Glasgow Cathedral by Mr. Herbert Walton were attended by 13,618 people, hundreds being turned away on some occasions. The largest attendance was 3,088, and the average 1,702—a very remarkable record.

Mr. Herbert C. Morris, for over twenty years organist at St. David's Cathedral, South Wales, has been appointed to a similar position at Queen Street Congregational Church. A very successful Hymn Festival was conducted by Mr. Martin Shaw at St. Werburgh's, Derby, on October 4, in which a large and enthusiastic congregation took part.

THE ORGAN

The second number of this new quarterly strikes us as being better than the first (good as that was), because the actual musical interest is greater. We hope the publishers will realise that, numerous as are the readers interested in the antiquarian and constructional side of the organ, there are even more interested in its repertory and technique. We regret that pressure on our space prevents us from detailed review of the October issue. We must be content with cordially commending it to our readers.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. J. A. Bellamy, Parish Church, Sidmouth (three recitals)—Capriccio alla Sonata, Fumagalli; 'Sursum Corda,' Elgar; Choral Prelude and Fugue on 'A stronghold sure,' Luther; Toccata in G, Dubois; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn.

Miss Christina Chalmer, St. Clement Danes, Strand—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Choral Preludes: 'Christe, Redemptor Omnium,' Parry; 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Central Hall, Westminster (six recitals)—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Concerto No. 2, Handel; Theme with Variations, Faulkes; Fugue on a trumpet theme, Krebs; Final (Symphony No. 1), Viërne; Marche Triomphale, Karg-Elert.

Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta (four recitals)—Chorale Study in D minor, Karg-Elert; Choral Prelude 'Come now, Saviour' and Fugue in the Dorian Mode, Bach; Entrée Pontificale, Bossi; Scherzoso, Rheinberger; Cradle Song, Viërne.

Mr. E. E. Vinnicombe, St. Peter's, Sudbury (two recitals)—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Toccata in A, Bonnet; Largo ('New World' Symphony).

Mr. H. A. Fricker, Metropolitan Church, Toronto (three recitals)—Sonata in D minor, Rheinberger; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; 'Finlandia'; Chorale No. 1, Franck.

Mr. R. W. Pringle, Hawarden Parish Church—Sonata No. 1 (two movements), Mendelssohn; March on a theme of Handel, Guilman; 'Question,' Wolstenholme.

Mr. Hugh W. Wood, St. Paul's, Southport—Overture 'Ruy Blas'; Barcarolle, Bennett.

Mr. G. Virgil Dawson, Mount Zion Congregational Church, Sheffield—Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilman; Capriccio, Faulkes.

Mr. Fred Gostelow, Luton Parish Church—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Méditation-Elégie, Borowski; Toccata in F, Bach; Pastorale and Finale (Sonata No. 1), Guilman.

Mr. J. A. Tatam, St. John's, Lowestoft—Fugue in F, Bach; 'Chant de Mai,' Jongen; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Fantaisie Pastorale, de Severac; Bridal March and Finale, Parry.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral (two recitals)—Toccata and Fugue, Parry; Rhapsodic Variations, Walton; Sonatina, Karg-Elert; Gavotte, John Pulein; Air with Variations, Handel; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. Leitch Owen, Edge Hill Parish Church, Liverpool—'Answer,' Wolstenholme; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (eight recitals)—Toccata in E minor, Tombelle; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant; Fantasia in E minor, Silas; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Prelude and Fugue in B minor, and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; 'Legend,' Harvey Grace.

Mr. A. M. Gifford, St. Mary's, Old Hunstanton—Postlude, Berceuse, and March in E flat, Guilmant; Offertoire in E flat and Légende, Salomé.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—Festive March, Smart; Prayer and Cradle Song, Guilmant; Concert Rondo, Hollins.

Mr. Thomas Grosch, Kentish Town Congregational Church—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; 'Visione,' Rheinberger; 'Pomp and Circumstance' No. 1.

Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Chorale Preludes on 'Rockingham' and 'St. Ann's,' Parry; 'La Nuit,' Karg-Elert; Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Air and Variations, Hesse; Fantasy-Prelude, Macpherson; Chorale Prelude, 'Jerusalem on High,' Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (two recitals)—Fugue (Pastoral Sonata), Rheinberger; Passacaglia, Cyril Scott; Allegretto in B minor, Lemare.

Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church—Finale from Sonata, Reubke; Larghetto with Variations, S. S. Wesley; Elegiac Romance, Ireland; Kieff Processional, Moussorgsky.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, Bedford Wesleyan Church, Leigh—Idyll, Alan Gray; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Fugue in D, Bach; Légende, Dawber; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. J. Gray, Adam Smith Hall, Kirkcaldy—Pièce Héroïque, Frank; Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns; 'Sœur Monique,' Couperin; Epilogue, Healey Willan.

Mr. Wallace G. Breach, St. John the Evangelist, Clapham Rise—Madrigal, Lemare; Andantino in G minor, Frank; Triumphant March, Aleck.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (five recitals)—Introduction and Fugue (Sonata in B flat), Rheinberger; Légende, Vierne; Prelude in B minor, Bach; Maestoso, MacDowell; and a Beethoven programme. St. Lawrence Jewry—Introduction and Passacaglia, Reger; Carillon, Vierne; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Frank.

Mr. Stanley E. Lucas, Harecourt Congregational Church, Highbury—Prelude and Fugue in G, Mendelssohn; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Prelude and 'Angel's Farewell' ('Gerontius'); Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Allan Brown, Crystal Palace (eight recitals)—Sonata Britannica (last movement), Stanford; Sonata in B flat, Faulkes; Toccata in G, Dubois; Fugue, Reubke; Suite No. 1, Borowski; Prelude and Fugue in C minor and Prelude in E flat, Bach; Imperial March, Elgar.

Mr. Ezra Edson, Primitive Methodist Church, Westgate, Barnsley—Sonata da Camera, Peace; Intermezzo, Hollins; Réverie, O. Mansfield.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Air with Variations, Smart; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme; Sonata in E flat, Bach; Toccata in F, Widor.

Mr. Julian Farmer, Andover Parish Church (two recitals)—Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Variations on an original Theme, Stuart Archer; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Dithyramb, Harwood; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, Macfadyen Memorial Church, Chorlton-cum-Hardy—Allegro Maestoso (Sonata No. 2), Claussmann; Madrigal, Lemare; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.

Mr. G. Bernard Gilbert, Town Hall, Stratford—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Sketches in D flat and F minor, Schumann; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Solemn Processional March, C. J. B. Meacham. (Songs by Miss Edith Barnett and Mr. Arthur Frith.)

Mr. G. McNaughton Harvey, Holy Trinity, Tulsa Hill—Preludes in C, Bairdston; Réverie, Edward Watson; Epilogue, Wolstenholme; Chorale Prelude, 'By the Waters of Babylon,' Bach; Pæan, Harwood.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, National Institute for the Blind—Con spirito in D, Smart; Andantino in G minor, Frank; Fugue in D, Bach; Andantino in G minor, Wolstenholme; Overture in C minor, Hollins.

Mr. Fred W. Gerrett, Southgate Parish Church—Overture in C, Fricker; Caprice, Guilmant; Chorale No. Frank; Finale from Op. 52, Schumann.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Claude Hughes, organist and choirmaster, Pro-Cathedral, Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

Mr. Stanley E. Lucas, organist, Harecourt Congregational Church, Highbury.

Mr. Frank H. Mather, organist and choirmaster, St. George's Passaic, New Jersey, U.S.A.

Mr. Ivor Richards, organist and choirmaster, Finchley Parish Church.

Mr. Arthur W. Robinson, organist and choirmaster, St. Cyprian's, Regent's Park.

Mr. John Rodgers, organist and choirmaster, St. Saviour's Denmark Park.

Letters to the Editor

THE STUDY OF CHURCH MUSIC

SIR,—Your review of my article on the above in the new edition of the 'Dictionary of Organists' needs reply.

(1) In the quoted paragraph 'Plainsong was the outcome of a primitive era'—as expressed—'before the sense of key or tonality had developed,' my intention was to draw attention especially to the primitive sense of key. Or does not dispute the presence of beautiful melody, not that there are beautiful melodies also to the Sequence Intros, &c. My own experience of these dates from the Plainsong Festival held in St. Paul's Cathedral in 1888, thirty-seven years ago, so that I am no novice in the matter.

(2) As to the accompaniment of the Responses in the Church of England services, your reviewer says, 'Mr. Westerby thinks the Responses should always be accompanied lest the choir form the habit of losing pitch.' My point is not that of the choir, but of the congregation. The Responses are the property of the congregation, and pointed out in the article the 'inevitable result' of the 'lack of support for the congregation,' and as, I say, 'surely the first thing should be the encouragement and support of the congregation to sing their own responses promptly, up to pitch, and in time.' As to the singing in tune of unaccompanied choirs, my thirty-five years' experience as a choirmaster goes to prove that it is a rare feature of even the very best choirs. Your reviewer says 'should not it [the choir] develop the habit of singing in tune.' Certainly, if the material will permit the ideal should be aimed at, but all the same it is one rarely attained, as any series of tests would show. A single choir boy, who has a slight cold, or who has got unlate, is sufficient to pull down a whole choir. Unaccompanied singing in tune I look on not as a 'habit' but as an idea dependent on physical conditions. And if a trained choir singing unaccompanied may easily lose pitch, what about the mixed, untrained congregation. As one who has frequently sat in the congregation I have felt the want of organ support. Most organists seem to think only of the choir, and the support given by the choir to the congregation from an east end position is very slight.

(3) I regret I did not verify the quotation as to the 'enormous amount of Welsh secular folk-song' present in the English Hymnal. I was on holiday when I wrote the article, away from books of reference. If the word Welsh is omitted the opinion quoted is not far out. Personally, I do not think that folk-song is in place in a hymn-book, as I put it, 'It is not always easy to get away from the secularity of folk-song.'

(4) It is not correct to speak of my 'obvious antagonism' to such revivals as those of plainsong and descant, which I am said to 'scorn as mediævalism.' My standpoint is as stated, 'We should test and try and eschew the rest.' Personally, I object to the idea of the High Church Party all that is mediæval in Church music (as in ritual) is correct thing. You mention that I say 'handsomely,' there are 'fine melodies in plainsong'—on the other hand, there is of course, a good deal of the era of plainsong which is only fit for the waste-paper basket—as of the Church music of to-day. The revival of descant is much to be regretted for men communities, but it is impractical, and, as I have said, for mixed congregations it is 'a vain attempt to put the clock.' It is frequently difficult to get congregations to take their own part, and refrain from listening to the choir. The introduction of descant makes it still more difficult to prevent them from listening. We ought to transfer the interest from the choir to the congregation, not the other way round.

I still think that the chief point against the use of the phella or Palestrina school of compositions, is its non-representative, non-emotional nature. Music that does not touch the emotions is valueless. I have already written elsewhere welcoming the unearthing of the treasures of the old for Church compositions, but that does not mean we should use intelligent discrimination. Make the ideal a lofty one, as well as practical, test and try, and there will be less disappointment.—Yours, &c., HERBERT WESTERBY.
Exley Road, Erith.

October 7, 1921.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC

SIR,—I notice one omission in the report of the proceedings, and that is the reference to any discussion on the singing of hymn tunes. It is not an exaggeration to say that in not one church out of twenty is any serious attempt made to sing the hymns with reasonable intelligence and intelligent expression. As a rule, there is an entire lack of feeling, and the words are often burlesqued. In fact, the singing of hymns is despised by the ordinary choir and its master.

A few months ago I was present at the evening service in a large parish church in Worcestershire. Capital organ, and choir, impressive anthem, and good sermon—and, and, kindly light, sung like a march, in double quick time, and with each and every chord accented. I am not a professional musician, but I have the honour of being able to describe myself as—Yours, &c.,

MUS. BAC.

We understand that hymn-singing was thoroughly dealt with at the Summer School by the conductors of the numerous churches—a method that, of course, made reporting impracticable.—ED., M. T.

WALTER DAMROSCH AND 'GROVELLING IN UGLINESS'

SIR,—The New York Herald of October 1 prints a long and interesting interview with Mr. Arthur Bliss regarding what purports to be an interview with me in musical America, in which I am made to express very severe criticisms on the modern English trend in composition. It cannot be of any great importance to England what I say, but any other American musician may think of English composers; but as I have many dear and valued friends among them, it is of great importance to me not to be misrepresented or misunderstood. I permit me to state, therefore, that in my interview I referred to a certain musical current which is now common in all Europe, and which manifests itself in France, Italy, Germany, just as much as it does in England. American composers do not largely figure in this, as we cannot as yet lay claim to a national music, even though we already have a small number of highly-talented American composers.

At the banquet given by the British Music Society last summer, I expressed myself very freely on this subject, but at the same time endeavoured to pay proper tribute to the excellent results which Great Britain has achieved in music. I mentioned especially not only your great friend Edward Elgar and Vaughan Williams, but several of the younger men whose work we are watching over here with much interest, and I laid special stress on the fact that thirty years ago not only the conductors, but a great part of the orchestras of London were foreigners, and that since the death of Sir Henry Wood, English conductors rank with the best in the musical world, and English orchestras, thanks to such schools of music as the Royal College of Music, are composed almost entirely of native-born composers.

Mr. Arthur Bliss wonders why I still place Beethoven and Brahms on my symphony programmes. I have not yet lost my admiration for these masters, and to judge from the acclaim which your public still gives them, I fancy that there must be many in England who feel as I do.

I have never heard any of the compositions of Mr. Bliss, and therefore do not know whether I should class him as a disciple of that 'ugliness in music' which some of the younger school seem to worship.—Yours, &c.,

October 4, 1921.

WALTER DAMROSCH.

THE OPERAS OF BALFE

SIR,—Your Paris correspondent, Mr. George Cecil, reminds our Parisian friends that 'The Bohemian Girl' was once all the rage at Paris. He might also account it unto Balfe for righteousness that he wrote two operas for the Opéra-Comique, namely, 'Le Pinto d'Amour,' in 1843, and 'Les Quatre Fils Aymon' in the following year. Both these works contain some charming music, and both were eminently successful. And in 1845 his 'L'Etoile de Seville' was given for twenty successive nights at the Grand Opéra at Paris.

Apocryphal of Balfe, it is unfortunate that this genial composer should survive to-day by only one opera—and that not by any means his best work. I am not one of those superior persons who cannot understand the popularity of 'The Bohemian Girl,' nor am I by any means insensible to its charms, but I have sufficient appreciation of Balfe's genius to realise that he wrote many better operas, and it is by these that he should be known to-day.

Perhaps when the long looked for 'national opera' is established its musical directors will remember that the hand which wrote 'The Bohemian Girl' also created 'The Siege of Rochelle,' 'The Bondman,' 'The Painter of Antwerp,' 'The Puritan's Daughter,' and 'The Talisman'—all works of rare charm and high merit. I would venture to say that these works, old-fashioned though they be, contain far more real music and are capable of giving far greater pleasure than all the 'Chouls' and 'Routs' in existence.—Yours, &c.,

W. BARLOW.

Sandwich.

October 4, 1921.

'THE IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT PLACING OF THE VOICE'

SIR,—I am obliged to Mr. Charles Tree for the information he has volunteered to give me concerning himself.

Although that 'young gentleman what has been singing' to the British public for the past thirty years' appears desirous of overlooking the fact, my two letters which you have been good enough to publish have dealt with the 'Importance of the correct placing of the voice.' I have no controversy with Mr. Charles Tree the singer; it is when he poses as a teacher of voice training that I disagree with him. In his replies to my letters, instead of treating the question at issue seriously, he goes off at a tangent and tries to save his face by indulging in more or less flippant banter, which leaves the subject discussed exactly where it was. That method of controversy is insufficient to annihilate the classical method which I favour.

It is my settled opinion that although people may talk, and even write profusely, about vocal methods and their application, no serious practical results can be obtained from that method of instruction. It is all nothing more than camouflage—interesting, it may be, theoretically, but the real work is done by the teacher with the individual pupil. The brain is capable of grasping any method intelligently described, but it cannot always communicate the knowledge acquired to the voice. Grave harm can be done in the process of making that attempt, because one may imagine a tone to be correctly produced when such is not the case. Holding that view I do not propose to accept Mr. Tree's invitation to lecture in public, and I shall only sing when it suits me to do so. Let me assure Mr. Tree that I in no sense resemble a bolt from the blue, and if he has an ardent desire to know who and what I am, there is another simple way of finding out. Since he is such a busy man, in order to save him the trouble of searching for me, I shall date this letter from my private address.

The publication by you, Sir, of my letters has brought me much encouraging correspondence from various parts of this country, and even beyond its shores. Many vocalists have asked me to hear them with a view to appraising their voice and method. My inquiries have elicited information, proving beyond the possibility of doubt that great numbers of promising young voices are being trained, both in the metropolis and the provinces, by people who have not the remotest conception of what voice training means and involves. It no more follows that a mere instrumentalist can train the voice properly, than that a famous boat-builder can build battleships equally well. This appalling state of affairs ought to be dealt with energetically by those who are concerned for the future of our vocal art. Personally, I can see no effective remedy other than making voice training a closed profession.—Yours, &c., A. KEAY.

2, Gledstanes Road, W. 14.

October 3, 1921.

[This correspondence must now cease.—ED., M. T.]

GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

SIR,—With reference to the letter in the October number from your correspondent Mr. N. Schuster, on the subject of what he calls 'potted' versions of recorded music, this is a grievance I am glad to see ventilated, especially in your columns.

Mr. Schuster mentions the Overture to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' as an example of this, but there are other glaring instances of such condensation, which, although not perhaps so prevalent at the present day, is still practised in some quarters. For instance, take the Overture to 'Oberon,' the second Hungarian Rhapsody, Elgar's 'Cockaigne,' and, above all, the Overture to 'Egmont' (this latter, by the way, commences somewhere about the middle of the actual composition in the record I have in view, which perhaps your correspondent is familiar with). Recordings do exist of the above subjects given in a fuller manner, but the tendency to 'cut' and compress is nevertheless present all the time, and there does not appear to me to be any necessity for obsolete versions that in many cases are absolute travesties, to be still on the market.

I have not ventured so far as to discuss the vocal or instrumental branches, where the evil is not quite so apparent, although many of the operatic excerpts are often very curiously arranged if they are not mutilated, but here no doubt the voice is the thing, the vehicle being of secondary importance. Instrumental items may be made comparatively satisfying, but to a large extent only by selection, and not always judicious at that, and many of the longer works have until recently been left untouched, perhaps we may say mercifully so, in that they have so far escaped the fate of orchestral works. In the field of chamber music proper the case is no better. The recording of works of this nature in a serious manner dates from a somewhat later period, and in spite of the excellence of a good deal of music rendered in this form, what might be termed the experimental stage does not seem to have been entirely left behind.

It is true that several of Beethoven's Quartets are available, but in what a shortened form! Other composers of course, suffer in like manner, as Mr. Schuster suggests of Mozart, not only in their instrumental, but in their orchestral works, such as we have had under review, and this will be their fate for some time to come, unless the recording of their music is considered a duty, and not left to individual taste or idiosyncrasy, nor the advertising of a particular make of record. Instead, it is not uncommon to find only isolated movements, giving the impression, however unintentional, that the complete work was not worth hearing; but if, in many cases, time-hallowed compositions are to be attempted at all, it is futile to make the interpreters, however well known, responsible for snippets.

Your correspondent has something to say on the subject of larger discs.

The time when discs of an increased area may be expected, may not be far distant—we have already had 20-in. Pathé's—but to make them a commercial proposition the existing methods of manufacture would have to be totally revolutionised, and this would include not only recording processes, but machines, and the method of playing them. Until that day dawns, the present small and narrow way can only be made more pleasant and profitable for intelligent gramophone users, by their own efforts, and a little more imagination and musicianship on the part of recording companies.

It is only fair here to note the vast strides the art has made, but, to sum up, surely we need not at this time have day be condemned to half-hour works on three mile records?—Yours, &c.,

L. F. D. HOWARTH

22, South Island Place, Brixton, S.W. 9.

October 9, 1921.

'WOULD YOU LIKE THE POST?'

SIR,—In an issue of the Daily Graphic last month, there appeared (under the heading of 'Would you like a position?') a would-be sarcastic comment on an advertisement inserted in the public press by the Medical Superintendent of the Worcestershire Mental Hospital, Bromsgrove.

The advertisement was for 'Organist and Pianist (male or female), the successful candidate being required to undertake the duties of nurse.' The Daily Graphic wit addressed the following comment, 'I hope it is not suggested that a lunatic should act as organ-blower.' I have held a similar position (combining also the duties of choir-trainer with those of organist) for many years, and am therefore competent to speak.

As to the organist's work, at my present post there is much to do at the daily services, full choral service on Sundays at Festivals, sacred concerts, &c., and, though the choir is not from perfect, it is considered to be one of the best in the neighbourhood. The organ is now blown mechanically, as formerly it was not so, and then the blower was a patient (the wag's 'lunatic'). He was the best of blowers, and organists employing manual labour would appreciate him as an one.

Music is considered beneficial for the mentally afflicted, and the pianists' duties are manifold, comprising concert work, dance music, &c., with and without orchestra. Overtime, in duty hours, can be filled up with nursing work, and the Physiological Certificate may thus be gained, and consequent pecuniary benefit to the recipient.

The advantages of the three-fold post are numerous, and the remuneration (a not unimportant matter in these difficult days) is over and above what many R.C.O. Fellows and Associates are able to obtain. I strongly advise organists to take such a post when it offers.—Yours, &c.,

A MEMBER OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS
Holloway Sanatorium, Virginia Water.

October 12, 1921.

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC IN EAST LONDON

Of all the recent efforts that have been made to 'decentralize' the music of London the boldest is the series of East End Symphony concerts of the British Symphony Orchestra with programmes of 'Queen's Hall' standard. These concerts are held at the People's Palace on Sunday afternoons (at 3.30), with Mr. Adrian C. Boult as conductor. Each programme contains a Symphony and a British work. The dates are October 16 and 30, November 13 and 27, December 11 and 18. The success of the opening concert was very encouraging. The hall was well filled—about 1000 in room for more—and the audience appeared to take great delight in the following programme:

'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 3, in G (for strings)	Bach
'A Shropshire lad' ... ..	Butterworth
Symphony No. 2, in D ... ..	Brahms
'Francesca da Rimini' ... ..	Tchaikovsky

Each number was preceded by a short and unacademical explanation by Mr. Boult—a feature that appeared to be much appreciated. Probably the news that the concert proved so acceptable (without a song from beginning to end) will have spread and provided a full hall for the second concert. Future programmes include Armstrong Gilchrist's Ballet music, 'The Betrothal,' Elgar's Violin Concerto, Holst's 'Beni-Mora' Suite, Strauss' 'Don Quixote,' Beethoven's 'Mêlée Fantastique,' and Elgar's second Symphony.

Sharps and Flats

Charlie Chaplin . . . is an accomplished musician.—Sir Herbert Parker.

Contrary to what some people think, I have no desire to encourage the young composer from composing. On the contrary, I have always encouraged him to compose busily, feeling sure that he will be better when he gets it out of his system.—Ernest Newman.

. . . Almost every musical paper is so devilish dull.—nest Bryson.

To read Mr. Percy Scholes' leading article in the Music for October . . . one is left with the general impression that the Music Student thanks God it is not as one of our musical journals, which are either ephemeral, or as propaganda for publishing firms.—Ursula Greville.

Alone, among the chaos of English music, the ballad-singer is efficiently, even aggressively, organized . . . What chance, when it comes to a battle for popular favour, have ragged levies of English composers against the trained army of Chappell and Boosey?—Francis Toye.

I am very interested in your venture, and shall be delighted to let you have things.—Horace Shipp, in a letter to the Editor of Fanfare.

You should have no difficulty in eclipsing the current musical periodicals. I should consider myself most happy to be numbered among your contributors.—T. S. Eliot, another.

It is a convention, and a more than usually blind one, to regard opera as a barometer of the love of music in a nation. Philosophically considered, opera is the first step from absolute music in the direction of the 'movies'.—Edwin Evans. When Philip Hale, of the Boston Herald, praises a pianist, you expect something good, but either the day after he praised Madeleine du Carpi was one of his off days, or last Wednesday was one of hers.—Percy A. Scholes.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

ENGELBERT HUMPERDINCK, well known in England as the composer of 'Hänsel and Gretel' and the music to 'The Miracle.' Born in 1854, at Siegburg, he died at first architecture, which later he relinquished for music, obtaining in a short time three scholarships, i.e., Mozart, Mendelssohn, and Meyerbeer prizes. Playfully he expressed his surprise that such a prize-crowned composer succeeded in becoming a tolerably respectable musician. He was intimately acquainted with Wagner, being for many years as his copyist, and supervising the musical studies of Siegfried Wagner. His sister, Frau Elheid Wette, wrote for a Christmas performance in her only version of the Märchen 'Hänsel and Gretel,' to which uncle Engelbert furnished some music. Without making of a public performance he welded these fragments into an opera. Richard Strauss recognised in this work a reaction against the bloodthirsty realism of the Italians, and had it performed on December 23, 1893, at Weimar, to great success. The new opera gained at once all German and soon all foreign stages. Humperdinck's music is described by the term 'amiable.' He avoided harshness of any kind. A master of orchestration, he wrote the best-sounding score of all modern composers, and he was a pianist to his finger-tips. As in music, so he was in life honest, straightforward. He had no enemies.

F. ERCKMANN.

KATHLEEN BRUCKSHAW (Mrs. Seymour Darlington), on October 10, well-known as a pianist of exceptional gifts, studied at Weimar under Stavenhagen (a pupil of Liszt), and afterwards under Busoni. Her first appearances in London were immediately successful, and she was soon at all important orchestral concerts in London and the provinces. Miss Bruckshaw also had talents as a composer. In September, 1914, she played a Pianoforte Concerto of Queen's Hall, under Sir Henry Wood.

H. A. J. CAMPBELL, for some years organist of St. Andrew's Church, Caversham, and formerly at Barnet Church. A musician of varied talents, he had been musical director in London theatres, acted as conductor of the Marquess of Anglesey's private orchestra, and obtained considerable vogue as a composer of choral music, dance music, and songs for children.

WILLIAM JOSIAH BISHOP, on September 27. Not a musician by profession, he took a leading part in the activities of the Sacred Harmonic Society at Exeter Hall, the Royal Choral Society, and—for more than forty years—the Handel Festival Choir.

'CREATIVE TECHNIQUE'

'Creative Technique—for Artists in general and Pianists in particular,' by George Woodhouse (Kegan Paul) is a volume of but slender bulk, but within its narrow limits of fifty-four pages will be found much that is helpful and stimulating and not a little that is provocative of discussion.

Mr. Woodhouse writes well, and expresses his views in no half-hearted fashion. In a Foreword he tells us that he has chosen the title 'Creative Technique'

' . . . to define that quality of performance in which music is temperamentally interpreted, and to distinguish it from that more familiar form in which the creative faculties are dormant or lacking.' For obvious reasons [he continues], 'factors which create diversity of style find no place in systems which reduce technique to a method. In thus prescribing for the many, such systems in reality prescribe for none, at least they can never wholly fulfil the needs of the artist. . . . While this work is not intended as an indictment of the trend of modern teaching (for whatever the authority of our training, we are bound ultimately to accept the scientific principle), it is entirely another matter to accept as final a formula of touch, however derived, which excludes the vital factors of temperament and individuality.'

And again:

'The question of touch is not merely one of facility. Temperament imposes other factors. The human mechanism when directed by a creative impulse cannot finally be considered merely as a machine.'

In an interesting chapter tracing the evolution of pianoforte technique up to the present day we find some pungent remarks on 'the wave of rationalism' which has swept over the minds of theorists and created a revolution in pianoforte teaching: 'Old traditions were contemptuously denounced, and (in the light of pseudo-science) the romance with which the subject was formerly imbued vanished like mist before the morning sun.' In the author's opinion, 'Temperament, which was once kept aflame and developed in the musical atmosphere which permeated the older schools, now starves on a diet of theories and facts.' In addition to this a wholesale demand for these same theories and facts has now been created by certain examination authorities, and 'our young aspirants now talk and discuss their art in the terms of a new technology, which would be as wholly incomprehensible to a Paderewski or Busoni as it is to the lay mind.'

These few extracts sufficiently indicate Mr. Woodhouse's attitude towards the present-day 'rationalistic' methods. Although in subsequent chapters there is frequent tilting at the alleged inconsistencies of the 'rationalists,' it should be made clear that the author does not confine himself to mere criticism. In particular, in the chapters on Real Duration, Creative Imagination, Temperament, and Interpretation will be found much that may be read with interest and profit, even by those who may violently disagree with some of the writer's opinions. G. G.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A course of three lectures given by Mr. J. B. McEwen, upon 'Sound-Waves,' were couched in such a manner as to avoid any disquisition on the mathematical side. The lecturer pointed out that every sound or combination of sounds is associated with a wave-motion which has a special form or character peculiar to this particular sound or combination. This wave-motion makes itself felt as a fluctuation of pressure transmitted from the sounding body to the ear by means of the air. By appropriate devices this wave-motion can be made to trace a curve, the form of which shows a strict correspondence to the sequence of pressure changes in the wave, and also the manner and rate at which these develop. This pressure curve, again, by appropriate mechanical contrivance, can be made to reproduce the sound or combination of sounds of which it is the graphic record.

Practical illustration of the principles involved were afforded by the simple and compound pendulums suspended from the roof of the Duke's Hall; the polyphonic and wave syrens; and the 'ripple tank,' which exemplified the propagation and reflection of wave motion. A large number of micro-photographs of gramophone curves were shown on the screen; also some interesting figures drawn by Mr. F. Corder's Harmonigraph, exemplifying the combinations of various motions. A number of special records reproducing the characteristic tone-colours of the wind instruments of the orchestra were played on the Æolian-Vocalion.

A course of four lectures upon the 'History of Music' are being given on Wednesday afternoons. The first took place on October 19, when Dr. Shinn lectured upon Haydn and Mozart. After giving a brief sketch of the condition of instrumental music previous to the time of Haydn, and also some description of the social and political conditions of Germany and Austria in the 18th century, the lecturer passed in review the chief advances which had been made by these two composers in the domain of pure instrumental music and in the development of the orchestra. A selection of movements from quartets by Haydn and Mozart were played as illustrations. In the three following lectures the Principal will deal with the work of Beethoven.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC, LONDON

October was a very busy and successful month at the College, for although the interior of the College buildings is being remodelled so as to provide among other things a new entrance hall, a grand staircase, and increased concert-room accommodation, the number of students again showed an increase. The fortnightly concerts which have been such an appreciated feature of the College life were resumed, and are still being given temporarily in the very fine board-room.

In the first week of the term the inaugural address was delivered by Mr. E. Stanley Roper, who dealt with the progress in the teaching of music since 1872—the date of the institution of the College. The address was followed by the distribution of diplomas, certificates, and prizes, and the presentation of the newly-elected eighteen scholars, including one who had been awarded a University degree Scholarship, at the end of which ceremony Sir Wilfred Collet, Governor of British Guiana, and a student of the College more than forty years ago, thanked the students for the musical programme by which they had contributed to the enjoyment of the company present.

The value of the scheme of lecture-classes instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council—a scheme moreover approved by that Council—was again exemplified by its popularity.

The operatic class under the experienced conductorship of Mr. Cairns James has, in view of the return of the male students in sufficient numbers, once more been able to begin rehearsals of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, and particularly of 'Iolanthe,' of which it is proposed to give a performance at a London theatre in the Summer Term.

In the other sphere of the College work, the activity of the month was equally promising. In such important towns as Manchester, Dundee, and Newcastle successful distributions of certificates gained under the College scheme of local examinations in music were attended by Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. J. C. Bridge, Dr. C. W. Pearce, and other distinguished musicians whose interesting addresses on these occasions have been fully reported in the provincial press.

At the Carnegie Public Library, Seven Kings, the Ilford Urban District Council has arranged a series of lectures and chamber concerts. The Philharmonic String Quartet was announced for the opening ceremony on October 17; Miss Elsie Horne plays on November 14, and the Meredyll Pianoforte Quartet on December 12.

The prize of a thousand dollars offered by Mrs. Coolidge, an American lady, for the best Pianoforte Trio, has been won by Mr. H. Waldo Warner, out of sixty competitors.

CHORAL SOCIETY PROGRAMMES

In addition to the information given in our last issue a in our columns of provincial news this month, we have the following selected items to announce:

LONDON AND DISTRICT

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society which opened its season at the Northern Polytechnic on October 15, with an excellent performance of 'The Gold Legend,' under Mr. Allen Gill, has Parry's 'Judith' in preparation for November 26. Later arrangements include 'The Dream of Gerontius' and the Mass in B minor besides 'Elijah,' 'The Messiah,' and 'Hiawatha.'

The Bach Choir announces a Bach concert at Central Hall on December 14, when the programme will include the Cantatas 'Abide with us,' 'Jesus took to Him the Twelve,' and 'The Sages of Sheba.' At a second concert the works to be performed include Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' Holst's 'Hymns from the Rig Veda,' and Motets by Byrd and Child. Dr. Vaughan Williams is the conductor.

The programme of the London Choral Society (Mr. Arthur Fagge) includes 'King Olaf,' a new setting of 'Tam o' Shanter,' by J. St. A. Johnson, R. T. Woodman's 'Falmouth' (in a programme of unaccompanied works), and 'The Apostles.'

People's Palace Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Francis Idle, opens with 'The Redemption' on November 14. 'The Dream of Gerontius' follows on January 21.

South London Choral Association (Mr. Leonard Venables) will select a programme from the following: Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty,' Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' Fletcher's 'The Deacon's Masterpiece,' Coward's 'Garth and Linet,' Dunhill's 'Tubal Cain,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.'

Dulwich Philharmonic Society (Mr. Martin Kingsland) gives 'The Dream of Gerontius' on December 17; and later in the season 'The Martyr of Antioch' and 'The Redemption.'

The Croydon Philharmonic Society under Mr. Alan Kirby, and the Croydon Symphony Orchestra under Mr. H. Reed, announce four attractive subscription concerts. The choral works included are 'King Olaf,' 'The Piper of Hamelin,' 'From the Bavarian Highlands,' and Brahms' 'Alto Rhapsody.'

Central Croydon Choral Society has chosen 'The Gold Legend,' 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' and the 'Bon-bon Suite.'

There will be performances of 'King Olaf' and Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' by Bromley Choral Society (Mr. Frederick Fertil); 'Athalia' and Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden' by Finchley Musical Society (Mr. Ivor Richards); 'Acis and Galatea,' 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and a selection from 'The Mastersingers' by Harrow and Greenhill Choral Society (Mr. F. W. Belchamber); 'King Olaf' by Hither Green Choral and Orchestral Society; Bridge's 'Cradle of Christ' by Loughton Choral Society and Orchestra (Mr. Herbert Riding); Gluck's 'Orpheus' and Stanford's 'Phaulconbridge' by Mansfield House Choral Society (Mr. C. Coward); Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' by Seven Kings Choral Society (Mr. E. E. Wilson); 'The Dream of Gerontius' and the 'St. Matthew Passion' by Teddington Philharmonic Society (Mr. W. Ratcliffe); Cowen's 'John Gilpin' by West London Choral Union (Mr. W. T. Oke); Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden' by Wimbledon Choral Society (Mr. Kenneth A. Brown); and Purcell's 'Fairy Queen' by Woodside Choral Society.

PROVINCIAL

The Avonmouth and Shirehampton Choral Society has an interesting programme for November 23. Dr. Vaughan Williams is to conduct his 'Toward the Unknown Region,' 'Five Mystical Songs,' and 'Five Folk-songs.' For the Society's second concert Mr. P. Napier Miles promises Madrigals from the Fellowes edition.

Maclean's 'The Annunciation' is to be performed at Bolton Choral Union, under Mr. Thomas Booth, on February 1.

Richmond (Yorks) Choral Society, of which Mr. Arthur Fountain is conductor, has chosen Elgar's 'The Music Makers' and Brahms' 'Song of Destiny' for performance this season.

Chesterfield and District Musical Union will give 'The Dream of Gerontius' under Dr. J. Frederic Staton. Hamilton Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter' is to be given December 8 by the Kidderminster Choral Society, under J. Irving Glover.

The programme of Lochgelly Choral Union for the season includes Hamish MacCunn's 'Bonny Kilmeny,' Long Eaton Choral Society has chosen Elgar's 'The Song of England' and Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' for its second concert.

The choral works to be given by North Staffs District Choral Society, under Mr. John James, include 'King Olaf' and the Mass in B minor.

Norwich Philharmonic Society offers symphony concerts and a chamber music recital, as well as choral works. The latter (to be conducted by Dr. Frank Bates) include 'King Olaf,' the Mass in B minor, and Christmas Carols.

Mr. Gustav Holst's Choral Society and Orchestra at University College, Reading, has in hand the Missa Brevis of Bach, Vaughan Williams' 'Mannin Veen,' and several Folk-song settings by W. G. Whittaker.

'The Dream of Gerontius' and 'Acis and Galatea' will be given by the Stockport Vocal Union under Dr. T. H. Hingley.

Wolverhampton Musical Society, under Mr. Joseph W. Wainwright, promises the first performance of 'The Forsaken Woman,' an unaccompanied twelve-part work by Graham Smith.

Windsor and Eton Choral Society, conducted by Mr. B. C. S. Everitt, has chosen Brahms' 'Requiem' and 'The Dream of Gerontius.'

The Grulle-Allès Choral and Orchestral Association, Jersey, conducted by Mr. John David, is performing 'The Revenge' and 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean.'

Two existing choral societies in Jersey have amalgamated to form the Jersey Philharmonic Society, under the conductship of Mr. John Hubert.

benches. But when next he came to the Town Hall the place was packed.

Chaliapin paid a special visit to this city, and gave a concert in the Town Hall on October 3, in aid of the Russian Famine Relief Fund. He was supported by Pouishnov, Bratza, and M. Rabinovitch (accompanist). To hear the distinguished Russian singer of operatic fame was in itself a pure musical treat, for in him it was at once felt that a noble artist stood before us. Russia is the land of remarkable bass singers. The older music-lovers at Birmingham will never forget when the Russian Opera Company visited us in 1886, for the wonderful chorus in Glinka's 'Life for the Czar' was then a revelation.

The City of Birmingham Choir has now become an established musical organization. At a meeting of the choir, Prof. Granville Bantock was unanimously elected first president. Congratulating the Society upon the happy auguries attendant upon the opening season, he said he had heard part of the rehearsal, and was struck with the fine body of fresh young voices. He prophesied great things for their future. This Society is intimately associated with its sister body, the City of Birmingham Orchestra, Mr. Appleby Matthews being the general director of both organizations. Mr. Joseph Lewis was unanimously elected chorus master.

Mr. David Finney, a talented violinist, gave a violin recital at the Midland Institute on October 6, assisted by Miss Mary Wilkins (pianoforte). The vocalist was Miss May Burke.

The first of the Wednesday evening symphony concerts arranged for this season was given at the Town Hall on October 5, by the City of Birmingham Orchestra, under Mr. Appleby Matthews. There was a fairly large audience present, but these concerts need larger support if they are to pay their way. The programme was made up of César Franck's Symphony in D minor, Liszt's symphonic poem 'Les Préludes,' Smetana's 'Bartered Bride' Overture, and Chabrier's Rhapsodie 'Espanña,' all well-known pieces. The performance on the whole spoke well for the future, and Mr. Appleby Matthews certainly showed uncommon skill and musicianship in directing his seventy instrumentalists. Effective interpretations were given of both the symphony and the symphonic poem. The orchestra is evidently anxious to make a name, and with adequate rehearsals we expect by the end of the season to hear really first-class performances. The vocalist was Miss Hilda Blake, who sang well in Liszt's 'Loreley' and a Mozart Aria.

Mr. Appleby Matthews' Sunday concerts at the Grand Theatre, where smoking is permitted, gradually improve in attendance, and artistically the orchestra shows progress at each hearing; but, as already stated, the strings need strengthening in order to make a proper balance. These concerts are certainly an educational factor of which the fullest advantage should be taken by citizens of this great city.

BOURNEMOUTH

On October 6 the inaugural symphony concert of the twenty-seventh series was given at the Winter Gardens, Mr. Dan Godfrey conducting.

A very fine beginning of the season was made with a programme that held much of interest to meet the varied tastes of the town's music-lovers. Granville Bantock's 'Hebridean' Symphony had been heard here once previously, as it was played last season with the composer conducting. Mr. Godfrey's reading did not differ materially from that of the composer, although the former was inclined slightly to moderate the almost excessive violence of the battle section. It is a formidable work from the executive standpoint, but both Mr. Godfrey and the orchestra came through the ordeal with immense credit. There are inequalities in the music, the opening section leaving the strongest impression upon a second hearing. A first performance here of George Butterworth's two English Idylls emphasised the opinion, formed upon an earlier acquaintance with the composer's beautiful 'Shropshire Lad' Rhapsody, that British art lost a poetical exponent when this musician was struck down in the war. Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture to 'Ivan the Terrible'—another novelty—was an appropriate prelude to the proceedings, albeit its orchestral brilliance is used as a cloak for some

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

Judging by the number of concerts that have been announced, the autumn musical season, which began in October, is likely to break all records. Now that so many foreign artists visit these shores we shall of course hear all the great violinists, pianists, and vocalists of big repute. Unfortunately we at Birmingham cannot rely on a moving population like those of Manchester and Liverpool, and concerts are therefore restricted to the patronage of more or less the same clientèle. Thus the speculative risk is perhaps greater than in other cities.

On October 1 the Midland Musical Society inaugurated the Town Hall its series of choral concerts with a popular performance of 'The Messiah,' conducted by Mr. John Wainwright in the absence of Mr. Cotton. The principal vocalists were Madame Laura Taylor, Miss Alice Vaughan, Mr. Charles Hill, and Mr. James Howell.

Mr. Sidney Stoddard has again arranged for a season of Sunday concerts in aid of the National Institute for the Blind, the first of which was held at the Town Hall on Sunday evening, October 2. The programme was again aimed on the popular lines of a ballad concert, interspersed with violin and pianoforte solos. The vocalists were Miss Winifred Lawson, Miss Gladys Bytheway, and Mr. Arthur Jordan, with Mr. Arthur Ralph (pianoforte), Miss Marjorie Sturby (violin), and Mr. Michael Mullinar (accompanist).

Madame Tetrassini was naturally the great attraction at the first 'international celebrity' concert of the season, given at the Town Hall on September 28. With her were associated the tenor Bielina, the baritone Dinh Gilly, and the clever young Serbian violinist, Bratza. The accompanist was Mr. Ivor Newton.

Mr. Norman Wilks, a pianist new to Birmingham, gave a pianoforte recital at the Midland Institute on September 28. The performer of undoubted ability and interpretative gifts, Mr. Wilks did not draw such an audience as he deserved. To say, when Paderewski first gave a pianoforte recital here at the Masonic Hall, he had to play to empty rather superficial ideas. In place of Mr. Anderson Tyrer, who was prevented from playing the Schumann Concerto owing to a sprained wrist, Miss Dorothea Vincent was the soloist of the occasion, her choice being Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor. Her playing proved exceedingly neat and expressive, and although her tone was a trifle thin, she managed to present this fine work with a considerable amount of insight into its requirements.

BRISTOL

'The Beggar's Opera' at the Prince's Theatre pleased many hearers. It was staged and performed very cleverly. M. Kubelik appeared on October 3 at the opening concert of an 'international celebrity' series. Varied opinions were expressed on his playing, which some musicians found wanting in expression and tone in Tchaikovsky's Concerto in D (given with pianoforte accompaniment). Some smaller pieces were played with better grace and more feeling, although throughout the evening the tone of his violin seemed to lack richness. Mr. Percy Kahn drew warm praise from those who understand the art there is in accompanying at the pianoforte. Miss Leila Megane, with her dramatic singing, was the real success of the evening.

The Carl Rosa opera fortnight at the Prince's Theatre has been well attended. Miss Eva Turner, a Bristolian, was very successful as Elizabeth, Butterfly, and Musetta. The Company opened with a splendid presentation of 'Tannhäuser.' There were special casts for several of the operas, including Miss Nina Dale as Santuzza, Miss Dora Gibson as Aida, and Miss Hope Laurin as Sieglinde.

The great day of the month was Saturday, October 8, when Mr. Albert Coates, the London Symphony Orchestra, with M. Rosing and Signor Ticcianti, opened the season's subscription series. There was a fine attendance in the evening, but it might have been better in the afternoon. Scriabin's 'Poem of Ecstasy' in the evening was the event of the hour, and discussion raged hot and strong over it. Wisely, Mr. Coates' programme gave examples to please both camps. Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 and third Pianoforte Concerto (with Signor Ticcianti as soloist), and Brahms' second Symphony, adequately balanced Scriabin and Strauss' 'Don Juan.' As to the 'Poem of Ecstasy,' some damned it eternally as horrible, others would like to hear it again for better comprehension. M. Rosing was out of voice through indisposition, but showed no failing in dramatic power.

CHATHAM

The first concert of the winter season was held at Chatham Town Hall on October 12. It inaugurated a series of six which are to bring Cortôt, Siloti, Thibaud, Anne Thurstfield, John Coates, Granville Bantock, and other well-known artists to the district. Of the four concert-givers on October 12—Rosina Buckman, Angelo Rosselli, Adila Fachiri, and Jascha Spivakovsky—the last-named was especially successful.

Rochester Choral Society has started its rehearsals, the two chief items in its first programme being 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and Beethoven's ninth Symphony, given in conjunction with the London Symphony Orchestra. The Society performed the 'Hiawatha' music when Coleridge-Taylor was its conductor, about fifteen years ago. Rochester Symphony Orchestra has an increase in membership this season. The members have begun weekly practices of Dvorák's Symphony, 'From the New World.' The only outstanding performance of the month is the Festival arranged by the local Free Church Choirs' Association for October 26.

CORNWALL

Mr. H. S. Middleton, the young organist of Truro Cathedral, full of enthusiasm, has appealed to young men to take part in the musical life of the district by joining the Musical Association. This choir has 'The Messiah' and Brahms' 'Requiem' in rehearsal. Mr. W. J. Bayeley, of Penzance, is energetically advocating the founding of a school of music in this town, and we hope his scheme will have practical support. A choir of fishermen assembled at Penzance for an occasional purpose last December has now been formed into a permanent body of over a hundred voices.

On September 27 a contest for brass bands of the section was held at Crowlas, Mr. Edwin Williams (Camborne) adjudicating. The test-piece was a Fantasia, 'The Maid of Orleans' (Laurent), and first place was won by Fraddon. As the result of the event a new band has been formed at Ludgvan, under the direction of Mr. R. Williams.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

Apart from two chamber concerts given by local instrumentalists at the Coventry and Warwickshire Society of Artists' annual exhibition in the Corn Exchange, the Rover Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Clark, may be said to have inaugurated the serious music of the season. At Albany Road Hall, on September 23, this organization, the strings in which have been considerably augmented, presented with distinction a programme which included movements from Beethoven's C minor Symphony. The interpretation of every item reflected credit on the performers, all of whom are amateurs and most of whom are local.

A short season of opera in English by the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company attracted large audiences to the Empire Theatre, Coventry, during the week commencing October 3. 'La Bohème,' a work little heard locally, figured in a repertoire which was otherwise of a conventional order.

Leamington Orchestral Society at its recent annual meeting announced its intention of giving two concerts during the present winter, one in November, the other in the New Year.

DEVON

Mr. Moiseiwitsch at Torquay, on September 15, introduced several pieces of modern pianoforte music not before heard in Devon. An Etude (in F sharp) by Stravinsky was followed by the 'Awakening' nature poem of Eugène Goossens, one of three dedicated to the pianist, and at the close of the programme came Palmgren's beautiful 'The Swan.' A Chopin group was followed by the seldom-heard 'Mephisto' waltzes of Liszt.

The Plymouth Corporation concerts opened on October 1, when Miss Gladys Harris (a Cornish contralto), Mr. Seymour Dosser (tenor), and Miss Irene Buckingham (violin) provided the programme, with the borough organist at the organ.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company gave a week's repertoire performances at Torquay during the week beginning September 26, and during the next week at Plymouth. Taking advantage of this, Mr. Glover opened a new series of Sunday concerts at Plymouth on October 1, engaging several of the operatic artists—Miss Kate Campi, Miss Constance Willis, Mr. Gerald O'Brien, and Mr. Appleton Morris, with Madame Turato as violinist and Madame Culp at the pianoforte.

Yet another Choral Society has been formed at Plymouth, where already there would seem to be sufficient choral organizations. It is a pity that these cannot amalgamate to form a picked choir, and lead the way in the West of England for choral music. The latest Society is organized by Mr. Peter E. Butchers, who has for some years trained a choir of female voices to a good standard. His intention is to secure two hundred voices for performances of 'The Redemption.' Mr. Butchers is organist and choirmaster of Mutley Baptist Church. Most of the choral societies are now getting into working order again. Exmouth (Mr. Raymond Wilmot), which closed last season with a deficit, has decided to perform 'The Creation' in the autumn, with a view to recuperating. Exeter Oratorio Society is undergoing reorganization, and has not yet fixed its programme. Mr. Denis Read, recently appointed organist of St. Edmund Church, Exeter, one of the ancient churches still standing 'on the wall,' is organizing a series of sacred concerts, which, as yet, the choir has not participated, though it is desirable that it should do so.

Barnstaple Musical Society (Dr. H. J. Edwards, conductor), with another unfortunate but not rare experience of an adverse balance, will confine its attention before mas to part-songs and choruses, which will be performed early in December.

The Chamber Music Club (initiated by Dr. Ernest Sk) starts the new season very vigorously with a large number of new members, the total being now well over three hundred. At its annual meeting on September 28 its financial position was found to be excellent. The effect of the existence is shown in the increased support given to chamber music ventures in the district. For instance, two audiences which on October 11 attended the first of a new series of Philharmonic Concerts organized by Mabel Bleby and Mr. W. F. Crabb, were the largest seen at Exeter at concerts of this kind. Theingham String Quartet (Messrs. Percival Hodgson and Venton, and the Misses Grace Burrows and Joan) by its artistic interpretations and perfect ensemble very fine performances of Borowski's Quartet No. 2, Herbert Howells' 'Lady Audrey's Suite' (new to the), Mozart's in G, Dohnányi's in D flat, and Beethoven's 4. Howells' Suite aroused great enthusiasm, as well, by its fascinating beauty and humour. Miss Mary in, a youthful vocalist, showed good gifts and the pianist's instinct.

DUBLIN

Rosing, the eminent Russian tenor, gave two operatic performances at the Theatre Royal on September 24 and 28, and by Mile. Alexeeva, Mr. Mostyn Thomas, and a French tenor (a Russian violoncellist), with Miss Gertrude Hanan at the pianoforte. Miss Winifred O'Connor, Mile. Alexeeva, and Mr. Ellis Raymond also contributed to the operatic scenes from 'Faust' and 'Pagliacci.'

Theater a goodly crowd attended the eighth Mater Concert on September 25, one of the features of which was the performance on a Dublin-made quartet of strings—the manufacture of the famous Perry, about the year 1810—conducted lovingly by a distinguished Dublin violinist, Patrick Delaney. An Irish flavour was given by the orchestra in the performance of 'Patricius,' conducted by the composer, Mr. P. Delaney. At the ninth concert, on September 2, the orchestra, under Mr. Vincent O'Brien, played Stanford's too-little-heard Overture to 'Shamus Ennis.'

The monster choral Festival took place in Kildare Cathedral on October 5, when sixteen choirs assembled and gave a spirited performance of some hymns and anthems, including an old Irish melody harmonized. The Rev. W. E. Drury, who presided at the organ, acted as conductor.

The evidence that the cinema is attracting the attention of musicians, it is worth placing on record that Mr. J. Darley and Mr. John Moody have both accepted the musical direction of two well-known Dublin picture-theatres.

At last, the magnificent carillon of thirty-nine bells from the foundry of Messrs. Taylor, of Loughborough, for the High Cathedral, to the order of his Eminence Cardinal Vaughan, has been put up and tested. It is one of the finest ever in Ireland, and will be formally dedicated at an early date. The magnificent clock just erected, in connection with the carillon, was constructed by Messrs. J. & W. of Leeds.

The satisfaction was felt in Dublin musical circles at the appointment of Mr. R. H. P. Coleman, of Dublin, as the first of Peterborough Cathedral, in succession to the late Mr. Haydn Keeton.

A series of classical orchestral recitals has been arranged by the Irish Musical League, and the first performance is planned to take place in the Abbey Theatre on Sunday, November 30, under the direction of Dr. John F. Larchet.

GLASGOW

The list of prospective events given last month should include a series of concerts by the Scottish Orchestra, under the auspices of the Glasgow Corporation, the Glasgow Sailors' Union's ballad concerts, the 'international' variety, Mossel, and other concerts by outside agencies.

On September 30 Mr. Thorpe Davie and Miss Mary gave a very successful vocal recital, the programme, which covered a wide range of more or less familiar songs, being well received by a large audience. Miss Margaret Edwards accompanied.

In connection with the Glasgow Presbytery of the United Free Church, conferences on church music were arranged on October 8, 15, 22, and 29, when the following were the subjects dealt with: 'The Interpretation of Hymns' (Mr. T. C. L. Pritchard); 'Prose Chanting' (Mr. J. K. Findlay); 'The Organ Voluntary' (Mr. H. Walton, of Glasgow Cathedral); and 'Congregational Singing' (Mr. H. S. Robertson, of the Orpheus Choir). It is expected that these conferences will stimulate interest and make for improvement in the service of praise in the churches.

To secure support for the British National Opera Company a public meeting was held at Glasgow on October 5. The aims and objects of the scheme were explained by Mr. Robert Radford, Mr. Percy Pitt, and Mr. Walter Hyde, and an advisory local committee was appointed. It will be surprising if Glasgow does not afford support to a project which offers great possibilities.

The chief event of the month was the Orpheus week of chamber concerts (October 3 to 8) by the London String Quartet, with Miss Myra Hess as solo pianist. Chamber music has not in the past been very well supported here, but the persistent efforts of the Orpheus Choir seem likely at last to bear fruit. The Choir with its very large following can afford to face some financial risk—the deficit was over £100 last year—but signs are not wanting that point to the concerts becoming self-supporting. The audiences were large, enthusiastic, and appreciative in a degree seldom seen at similar events. The programmes were irreproachable, ranging as they did from compositions by Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, to those of the most 'modern' of present-day writers, and including a first performance in Scotland of Kreisler's Quartet in A minor. The interpretations by the London Quartet were on the highest level, and Miss Myra Hess, who played contrasted groups of pianoforte solos as well as taking part in Quintets by César Franck, Brahms, and Elgar, greatly enhanced the high reputation she has with Glasgow audiences.

Madame Tetrassini and a strong company provided the programme at the 'international celebrity' concert on October 5.

HASTINGS

To the great satisfaction of concert-goers hereabouts, Hastings is not, after all, to be bereft of its orchestra this winter. Under pressure brought to bear by most of the musical folk in the borough, the Corporation saw the wisdom of engaging Mr. Julian Clifford and his players for the third successive season, with the result that the series was inaugurated with fitting éclat on October 29, when the winter season was formally opened by the Borough member, Lord Eustace Percy.

It was thought expedient to revert to the Pavilion on St. Leonards Pier—the building which saw the initiation of these concerts. By arrangement with Mr. J. H. Gardner, the Orchestra will be housed there during the winter months. The Corporation is now actively engaged with plans for the new music pavilion. Should it be completed within a couple of years, Hastings may have perhaps the most up-to-date orchestral venue in the provinces.

Certainly, for its size, there is no better provincial organization than the Hastings Orchestra. Its constitution is almost the same as before, and Mr. Clifford promises his supporters a comprehensive series of programmes. There is a symphony concert each Wednesday afternoon, at which notable concerto players will appear, and which may be heard for the modest sum of eightpence. Already there is published an attractive list of celebrities for special matinees, and a festival of modern British music will occupy the week beginning January 10, when most of our representative composers will conduct works of their own.

LIVERPOOL

The Philharmonic Society's season opened brilliantly on October 11 in a programme judiciously blended of old and new. M. Koussevitzky put new life into the 'Oberon' Overture and Beethoven's seventh Symphony, to which he imparted a suggestion of Russian glow and glitter. It was an exhilarating performance, and the memory of it will remain with us for a long time. It was when Koussevitzky came to his friend Scriabin's 'Poème de l'Extase' that his genius found full scope. In a vivid presentment of this extraordinary music he made it pulse with human emotion, ecstasy, and delirium, the meaning of which each individual hearer had to find for himself. The short introduction to 'Khovanstchina' by Moussorgsky is interesting in its placid mood and comparative simplicity. The vocalist of the occasion was Miss Ethel Frank, who sang, among other things, two remarkable pieces with vocal obbligato—one can hardly term them songs—viz., Ravel's 'Asie' and 'La Flûte Enchantée.' Their orchestral atmosphere is typically French in its suggestion and manner. A really brilliant concert was completed by the responsive singing of the choir under Dr. Pollitt in Bantock's highly individual eight-part chorus 'Spirit of Night.' This is an orchestral vocal setting of words by Shelley of a type which specially appeals to the composer, who has evolved some gorgeous harmonies. The choir made a good start at this concert, and the sopranos especially deserve commendation for their excellent top notes.

Conducted by Mr. Louis Baxter, the United Orchestral Society had an appreciative, if not numerous, audience, at its concert in the Philharmonic Hall on October 5. The new 'Guild of Singers' Choir of forty ladies, under Mr. R. T. Edwards, sang Fletcher's 'The Witches' Carnival' and German's 'Beauteous Morn,' and songs were given by Mr. Mostyn Thomas, accompanied by Mr. John Tobin. The paramount interest was found, however, in three orchestral compositions by Dr. James Lyon, who conducted his 'Variations on a Sarabande by Handel,' a symphonic episode, 'The Miracle of the Roses,' founded on lines by Southey, and a tone-poem, 'The Legend Beautiful.' These works present outstanding evidences of musicianship, clearly and logically directed. There is imagination, as well as a definite plan, and a welcome absence of any straining after effect in the harmonic-texture. It is delightfully natural and melodious music which is apparently the sincere expression of a strong personality.

Dr. Annie W. Patterson, of Cork, the well-known Irish lady who has taken high rank as a literary musician, gave a lecture to the Liverpool Welsh National Society, at its opening meeting in the Royal Institute on October 7. Her subject was 'The Story of Irish Folk-Song,' a big theme which she handled concisely as well as exhaustively. Dr. Patterson spoke as an authority, and imparted her native enthusiasm to her Celtic hearers. One of the originators of the Feis Ceoil, which is similar to the Welsh Eisteddfod, she referred hopefully to the future prospects of native Irish composers, and especially to the great work done by Sir Charles Stanford. The musical illustrations, played on the pianoforte by the lecturer, included the 'Battle of Arghnamore,' one of the earliest known examples of native music, which Dr. Patterson traced back to B.C. 1000, or even earlier if the tradition be true about 'Noah's niece' coming to Ireland and lending a helping hand. Dr. Patterson repeated her lecture on October 11 to the members of the City and University Irish Society.

M. Joseph Bonnet played some effective pieces on St. George's Hall organ on September 28. Two of the greater items, the G minor Fantasia and Fugue and Franck's Choral in A minor, No. 3, remain in memory as masterly performances.

At his recital in Crane Hall on October 11, Mr. Norman Wilks proved himself to be an executant of high order and also an artist of sensitive temperament.

The popular musical Wednesday afternoon in Crane Hall commenced on October 5, when an overflowing audience was attracted by two finely equipped artists, Mr. Joseph Greene as solo pianist, and Miss Ethel Penhall, mezzo-soprano. A new-comer, Mr. J. C. Heaton, is a bass who sang with acceptance, and Mr. Walter Wright accompanied.

With regret is recorded the death after a lingering illness of Mr. E. Stanley Redfern, the eminent flautist, for so many years prominently identified with the musical life not only hereabouts but in the country generally. Principal flautist of the Hallé and Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestras and the Carl Rosa Opera, Mr. Redfern was widely esteemed. A concert was organized in his benefit and held in the Shakespeare Theatre on Sunday evening, October 9, a few hours before his decease. A fine orchestra of seventy led by Mr. Catterall and conducted by Mr. E. Goossens, jun., was evidence of the regard in which Mr. Redfern was held by his colleagues, with whom he associated the singers, Miss Dorothy Ledsham, Messrs. I. W. James, W. Anderson, and Norman Allin, with Mr. J. Greene as solo pianist.

Liverpool is to be asked to subscribe at least £10,000 the £50,000 which is required to provide a firm financial basis for the British National Opera Company. In Liverpool—so long the chief home of the Carl Rosa Company—is promised a season of grand opera the like of which has not been seen in the city before. Mr. W. Anderson, of English Opera fame, is acting as secretary of the movement.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

Normally one is able to record in the November month the commencement and prospects of the winter season, but at the time of writing none of our major societies has gone into action, and the record of the month's activities is necessarily of a miscellaneous order.

On October 8 the opening of the extension to the Exchange was the occasion for musical effects of a very unusual order. The floor space of the Exchange covers nearly two acres, and this area was densely thronged between fifteen and twenty thousand people, predominantly men. As their Majesties entered, great waves of cheer resounded through the vast building, and when Mr. Victor Nesbitt (who had been conducting his Orpheus Male-Voice Choir in a series of glees, &c., during the long hours of waiting) raised his baton for the National Anthem, the sheer volume of stentorian tone was frankly overwhelming. The sense of singing in such a huge crowd and space was remarkable, but to stop and listen for a moment was still more so. Nothing sounded quite so well as Webbe's 'Stricken Lyre'; the cross-rhythms of Beale's 'Come, let us join the roundelay' simply became so many currents in space; Hollingworth's 'Here's life and health to England's King' was easily first in the crowd's affections. The gorgeous tone in the National Anthem made one long to have heard a unison chorale like 'Land of Hope and Glory' or a big-scale harmony of the 'St. Anne' or 'Old Hundredth' order. The orchestra assembled from several cinemas played two symphonies under Mr. Walter H. Mudie, finishing with the 'Tannhäuser' 'Hall of Song' march just before the party arrived. Strange it was to hear such music 'on boards' where thousands assemble daily for transactions valued at hundreds of millions!

Interesting developments are afoot at New Mills, one of the railway strategic centres of North Derbyshire. So late in recent years have music and drama suffered by the invasion of the cinema that it is worthy of record that in this upland town the cinema has been freely placed at the disposal of Mr. J. Baguley Waters for the orchestral series of concerts to be conducted there this winter. This is a rare signal instance of the value of an organization like the Hallé Orchestra in carrying music of symphonic scale to parts of the Manchester sphere of influence which are practically cut off from active participation in the musical and artistic life. Under Mr. Hamilton Harty's influence the leavening process is likely to be extended.

Blackburn now rejoices in new municipal buildings containing a fine concert hall of about three thousand seating capacity and an orchestra capable of accommodating three hundred performers. Thus are the choral and orchestral possibilities of Dr. Herman Brearley's society definitely extended. Dr. Brearley also conducts the Blackburn Choral Society, which is concentrating on a Leipsig performance of the Bach 'St. Matthew' Passion.

The first concert of the season in the Free Trade Hall was given by the choirs conducted by Mr. Alfred Higgins of the Co-operative Wholesale Male-Voice and the Sale District Musical Society. Under his direction each of these bodies gained chief distinction at Morecambe Festival last May, and I believe that never before had the Free Trade Musical Society sung in the Free Trade Hall.

The Male-Voice Choir was twice as strong numerically as at which represents the Society at Festivals, and my ed impression is that increased numbers have brought reased beauty of tone. The less experienced singers ulged in tone-forcing to a degree which would ruin their ances in competitive work. Conspicuous examples were sent in the closing pages of Cornelius' 'Riders' Song' and the Max Bruch 'Media Vita.' The Sale Choir gave rks sung at the last Festivals at Morecambe and Blackpool, but those who heard them in the Free Trade all and had also heard them at Morecambe and Blackpool had have no hesitation in saying which occasion produced e best singing. Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Hamilton arty in association (like the late Mrs. Henry Wood and Henry) afforded that somewhat rare experience where e artistic intimacy born of a lifelong fellowship adds an definable something to the total impression which marks occasion as memorable—'Traum durch die Dämmerung,' ars ago, is for me one such—and 'Kishmull's Galley' and n. Harty's settings of Moira O'Neill were on the present ason instances of that fusion of verse, music, and erpretative powers long to be treasured.

The Tuesday 'Mid-Day' series have provided a steady cession of attractive and stimulating programmes. On ptember 6 the venue was changed from the customary ouldsworth Hall to St. Ann's Church, hard by, where the ar 'Serious Songs' by Brahms had superb justice done em by Mr. Ernest Jones. Dr. Thomas Keighley played e organ accompaniment, and also Bach's D minor cccata and Fugue and a series of shorter items by Dupré, who makes a second appearance here after this chronicle has me to press). At the two concerts of chamber music in is mid-day series we have witnessed the almost startling elligence of Mrs. Rawdon Briggs' beautiful viola playing. er exceptional ability on this instrument served her lleagues (Messrs. Arthur Catterall and R. J. Forbes) ndsomely in a new Trio for violin, viola, and pianoforte by r. Alfred M. Wall. This is a thoroughly remarkable ork that won instant appreciation from a big crowd of usiness men. Halvorsen's 'Passacaglia' for violin and ola showed that the artist's capacity for the more animated yle of execution was as strong as her grasp of the intensely notional.

In a new Pizzetti Quartet played by the MacCullagh group n October 7, Mrs. Briggs again had a distinguished part, ably in the slow movement, as was the case also in the all Trio. Compared with the Sonata for pianoforte and olin which was done here recently, this Quartet of izzetti's reveals him as an assured master-writer in this here of composition, however we may regard or disregard is orchestral work.

The Catterall Quartet is this winter to be closely sociated with the Tuesday 'Mid-Days,' and made the first its nine appearances on October 4, in the third Rasoumovsky.' It has been often played here with much ore distinction—perhaps an unusually dispiriting sample muggy Manchester atmosphere contributed its quota o this impression.

A very notable pianoforte programme was played on October 3 by Mr. Norman Ballet. Those who are well acquainted with the Russian Ballet's version (may it be so illed?) of the Schumann 'Carnaval,' felt that there was nsiderable affinity of style observable in Mr. Wilks' laying of some of the numbers. In this, as in all else he layed, were ample evidences of marked individuality allied o powerful technical equipment. One capable judge ngled out his staccato playing as something amazing.

Mr. Charles Neville and Mr. Webster Millar, both roducts of the Royal Manchester College of Music, have ach given vocal recitals that had as much delight for the onnoisseur as for the man in the street, and each found an dditional vent for his artistic nature in using translations of is own.

Manchester orchestral playing has suffered seriously of ate in deaths of some of her most gifted wind-instrument layers. Paersch and Reynolds, greatest of horn and oboe layers (Richter's judgment, not the writer's), have gone; nd in recent months De Jong, Needham, and Redfern—that a trinity of flautists were these!

Mr. James Richardson has for twenty-one years given his annual recital of violoncello music rarely or never heard apart from his performances, and on October 10 continued his sequence of programmes.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

On Sunday, September 25, the Musicians' Union held its annual concert, the orchestra consisting of members of the various theatre bands, conducted by Mr. J. Mark. The programme included Berlioz's 'Hungarian March,' 'The Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture, a selection from Puccini's 'La Bohème,' Eric Coates' 'Miniature Suite,' and Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat (with Mr. V. de L. Caygill as soloist). Allowing for the fact that the orchestra was more or less got together for the occasion, the performance was very creditable to all concerned. At the same time a certain lack of plasticity conveyed a suggestion that the players were afraid to let themselves go, and a want of breadth seemed to show that, as it were, they read in phrases instead of whole sentences. Of Mr. Caygill as a pianist, more should be heard in the future. Madame A. Richardson has somewhat too small a voice for 'Let the Bright Seraphim,' but was quite charming in Sullivan's 'Orpheus with his Lute.' The high level of the programme was not fully sustained in the selections of Mr. E. Williams, who drew upon songs of Clay and Tosti.

On October 1, Mr. Eugène Goossens lectured to the local branch of the British Music Society on 'Some Aspects of British Music.' He dealt with a number of the younger composers, giving what, in his opinion, were the particular characteristics each was contributing to modern music as a whole, and concluded by playing on the pianoforte examples from Heath, Scott, Ireland, and his own works.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

The Nottingham musical season was very appropriately inaugurated on September 15, with a recital given by a local singer, Miss Lucy Goodwin, who has recently distinguished herself as a student of the Royal Academy. Miss Goodwin sustained a programme comprising twenty-two numbers, that fully displayed her versatility. Amongst the more modern numbers was a group of four songs by Mr. Bernard Johnson. The most exacting item was the celebrated Aria 'Ernani involami' of Verdi, but the singer's happiest choice was perhaps Landon Ronald's 'Sylvan' and the Schubert 'Ave Maria.' Miss Elsie Johnson was an excellent accompanist.

At the Nottingham Repertory Theatre a light opera entitled 'Robin Hood,' by Mr. Bernard Page, was announced for the week October 8 to 15. Mr. Page has recently taken over the musical directorship of the theatre.

The Derby Municipal concert dates are October 3, November 4, and December 9. On the initial date, concerts were given in the afternoon and evening by Mr. Albert Sammons, Mr. Lionel Tertis, Mr. Felix Salmond, and Mr. William Murdoch. In December the City of Birmingham Orchestra, under Mr. Appleby Matthews, will visit Derby. Derby Choral Union, conducted by Dr. Coward, opens with 'The Dream of Gerontius' on November 18.

PORTSMOUTH AND DISTRICT

Concert-goers are being offered a very wide choice at Portsmouth this season. Apart from the Philharmonic and 'international celebrity' series, the success of which is already assured, there is a stirring among the lesser local societies, and the next few months are full of promise for the development of choral work. The idea of the Saturday evening concerts has also not fallen upon barren ground. Even if the Municipality fails to move in the matter—and it is apparent that the civic body still requires some leading in this direction—there are others ready to make the experiment. The Portsmouth Temperance Choral Union now proposes, for instance, to put the response of the public to the test, and if its first two Saturday concerts give satisfactory results the series will no doubt be extended. Under the auspices of the Choral Union, Miss Noel Eadie will make her first appearance at Portsmouth on December 3, with Mr. Joseph Farrington also taking part in the programme.

There is no doubt as to the growing appreciation of music in the borough. An example of this was furnished by the sustained attendances at the course of University extension lectures given at the Municipal College last season on 'A Listener's Guide to Music.' So successful was the scheme that a further series was arranged, to be given by Mr. P. M. S. Latham, on 'The Meaning of Music,' the course commencing on September 23. Once again the interest which has been aroused, and the eagerness to learn, has exceeded all expectations.

At the South Parade Pier, which has engaged many well-known artists of late, Mr. Mark Hambourg found a cordial welcome awaiting him on September 30. He gave an afternoon and an evening recital, and his brilliant technique gained a ready appreciation. He was not stinting in his programmes, which were representative of the great composers in a wide variety of themes. Miss Gladys Verona, the leading coloratura soprano of Australia, was the vocalist. Among those who have recently appeared at the Sunday afternoon symphony concerts given at the Pier by the Marine bands, have been Misses Mary Winter, Betty Saville, Eva Hunsdon-Brown, and Winifred Allan, and Messrs. Lawrence Emery and L. Whittenbury-Kaye.

The Quartet Players have resumed their free chamber music concerts, which were inaugurated last season to stimulate interest in this class of music. An average attendance of something like a thousand showed that the enterprise was one that appealed, and the organizers decided to continue the venture this season. The Players comprise Miss Edith Bunny (violin), Major R. Bullin (viola), Mr. Frank Cranmore (violinello), and Mrs. Grace B. Bullin (pianoforte). They were assisted at the Albert Hall on October 6 by the Alzando Glee Singers, a party of vocalists from Chichester Cathedral.

Three civilian bands—the Portsmouth Battalion, the Tramways, and the Workers' Union—gave their promised festival at the Town Hall on October 8. About seventy selected instrumentalists made a very well-balanced orchestra, and the three bandmasters conducted in turn—Mr. W. J. Swatton (Workers' Union) directing in the 'Maid of the Mountains,' Mr. J. F. Knights (Portsmouth Battalion) the 'William Tell' Overture, and Mr. F. Jewell (Tramways) Edward German's 'Henry VIII.' dances. Mr. E. W. Seager played several organ pieces, and there were also vocal items.

The Choral Societies at Emsworth and Havant have both been able to report small credit balances as the result of last season's concerts. At the annual meeting of the former Mr. N. E. W. Kinnell was re-elected president and Mr. Alfred Agate vice-president and hon. conductor, while a presentation of a silver Queen Anne teapot was made to Mr. T. A. Chignell, who has been hon. secretary of the Society for fifteen years. 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' is to be given at the first concert. Lady Fitzwygram is the president of the Havant Society, which has been able to retain the services of Mr. and Mrs. Canaway as hon. conductor and accompanist respectively. Mr. R. Y. Fisher has been again appointed hon. secretary. The Society is practising Stanford's 'The Revenge' and 'Songs of the Fleet' for its opening concert on December 14.

The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society's first concert of the season at the Town Hall, on October 13, was specially noteworthy. In the first place it marked Mr. Hugh A. Burry's return to the leadership of the Society after a season's absence through ill-health, but his effective control of the performers on this occasion revealed no lack of those qualities which have brought the Philharmonic into the forefront of local musical societies, and placed it, practically, in a place by itself. The programme was entirely classical, and on one occasion Mr. Burry made a departure from custom by drawing the attention of the audience to the work of the horns, bidding the players to stand in order that there should be no doubt as to whom he referred to. Also he took them separately through a phrase or two of their score, to familiarise the audience with the sound. This was prior to playing the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Die Meistersinger,' which he remarked was one of the loveliest things in the realm of music. The well-balanced orchestra was wonderfully responsive to all demands made upon it, and those present enjoyed a really fine musical evening. Miss Myra Hess gave a brilliant performance on the pianoforte, and Miss Dorothy Silk charmed every ear with her singing. During the interval the Deputy-Mayor, Sir Harold R. Pink, on behalf of the Society, presented a cheque to Mr. T. Archard in recognition of his services as chorus-secretary over a period of thirty years.

SOUTH WALES

The visit of the Carl Rosa Opera Company to New Theatre, September 19 to October 1, afforded music-lovers of Cardiff and district a fortnight of opera and the inclusion in the programme of the two Wagner operas—'The Mastersingers' and 'Valkyrie,' works never before given in Wales—aroused interest over a wide area. The performances created the greatest enthusiasm, and should do much to influence the adoption of music of this class by our musical societies, especially when it is recalled that many such works may be performed in the manner of cantatas. It may be recalled that the performance of 'Ring' at the Bristol Festival of 1912 was followed up by a musical society's performance of 'Parsifal'—an example which should be more widely adopted.

At the first concert of the 'celebrity' series, held at the Empire, Cardiff, on October 1, Kubelik opened his tour with a first appearance in this country after an absence of eight years. He played with wonderful technique in a programme that included Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto in D. His associate was Miss Leila Megane (mezzo-soprano), and his accompanist Mr. Percy Kahn.

The Cardiff Musical Society, under the veteran conductor Mr. T. E. Aylward, has issued its prospectus for the ensuing season. At the first concert at Park Hall, on December 1, Elgar's 'The Music-Makers,' the 'Bon-bon Suite,' by Coleridge-Taylor, and 'Sir Patrick Spens,' by Brewer, will be the works performed; a selection of unaccompanied part-songs will form the programme of the second concert on February 15, at Cory Hall; and on Good Friday, April 14, at Park Hall, Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and a Bach cantata are the selected works.

At Newport, a series of three chamber music lecture-concerts inaugurated last year in conjunction with the National Council of Music (University of Wales), are to be continued this season in the hall of the High School for Girls. The dates selected are November 21, January 2, and March 20.

The Birmingham String Quartet took part in the annual concert given by St. Teilo's Church Choir, Cardiff, on October 12, in aid of the choir funds. The programme included Bach, Mozart, Dvorák; and the moderns, Howells, Frank Bridge, and Grainger.

At Cardiff the Sunday orchestral concerts at the New Theatre and at Park Hall are proceeding merrier attendances being good and the music acceptable. On October 9, at the New Theatre, Angle's Orchestra performed the Beethoven Symphony in C minor, and on September 18 the Australian baritone, Mr. Harold William appeared at Park Hall in support of the Mortimer Orchestra.

The centenary of the Rev. E. Stephen, better known as Tanymanian, is at hand. He was the composer of the fine Welsh oratorio, 'Storm Tiberias.' The Welsh Congregational Union decided that the event should be celebrated through the denomination (of which the old composer was minister). The suggested programme is to include tunes by the Rev. J. Roberts (Ieuan Gwyllt), whose centenary coincides with that of Tanymanian, and three J. Ambrose Lloyd, another veteran of Gwalia. These meetings with J. Mills of Llanidloes and a few others, may be regarded as pioneers of music in Wales, and more especially of the music of the sanctuary.

The fine ensemble playing of the Birmingham String Quartet (Mr. Percy Hodgson, leader) in the Lecture-hall at the Cardiff V.M.C.A. on October 13, gave the audience the highest satisfaction. The programme consisted of Quartets by Beethoven, Haydn, and Dohnányi. This was the opening concert of a series of three to be held during the season.

In December Mr. Cyril Scott is to conduct his two Passacaglias at the Furtwängler-Concerts, Vienna, and to play his own Pianoforte Concerto.

YORKSHIRE

So far there has not been much to record in the musical activities of Yorkshire. The Harrogate Symphony Concerts, which keep good music alive in the West Riding during the summer, came to an end on October 12, and now musical outings are being transferred to the larger towns. The Bradford Subscription Concerts, which are among the most notable in the county, resumed as early as October 7, when Mr. Hamilton Harty and the Hallé Orchestra introduced three movements of Holst's 'Planets' to the North of England. Though the diction is novel, there is nothing revolutionary about 'Mars,' 'Saturn,' or 'Jupiter,' and the energy and freshness of the music made a strong impression. At Hull Mr. Janssen's Subscription Concerts were resumed on October 8. The pianist, Spivakovsky, had failed the promoter, but an appropriate substitute was found in Pavlovsky, whose sane and sensitive playing of the Waldstein's Sonata gave real pleasure. Some excellent chamber concerts were among the best happenings of the month. At Bradford the first of the chamber concerts organized as a side-show to the subscription concerts took place on October 14, when Pianoforte Trios were played by Messrs. Sammons, Salmond, and Murdoch—a very strong combination. On October 15 and 17 the London String Quartet paid a 'return visit' to Leeds, and was heard in quartets by Beethoven, Schubert, Dvorák, and Debussy, Mr. Waldo Warner's 'Folk-Song Phantasy' being also included in the programme.

LEEDS

As regards arrangements for the future, the Leeds Philharmonic Society is to give the first part of 'St. Paul' and Parry's 'Pied Piper,' at its first concert; 'The Messiah' at its second; Elgar's 'Music-Makers,' Bach's 'Sing ye,' a Pianoforte Concerto (Mr. Frederick Dawson) at its third, and 'Lohengrin' at its fourth. The Leeds Choral Union has chosen Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' 'The Messiah,' and Elgar's 'The Apostles,' and an element of novelty is introduced in the shape of an organ recital by J. Dupré, the choir being heard in unaccompanied music on the same occasion. The Bradford Festival Choral Society is giving, among other things, Brahms' Alto Chapsody, 'Acis and Galatea,' and Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus.' The Bradford Old Choral Society is this season celebrating its centenary, and is to mark the occasion by two special concerts in which the Hallé Orchestra will take part. At the first Delius' 'Sea Drift' and a 'Meistersinger' selection will be heard; at the second Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' is promised, and a new work by Cyril Jenkins, 'The Song of the Silent Land,' dedicated to the Society, will be conducted by its composer. 'The Hymn of Praise' forming a suitable finish. For the rest, Parry's 'Pied Piper,' Debussy's 'Blessed Damsel,' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' will, at the last event of the season, afford a stimulating mixture. 'The Messiah' is of course understood as a feature of all prospectuses.

The Leeds Saturday Orchestral concerts will again be light in number, and Mr. Goossens will this time be the sole conductor. The programmes are on familiar lines, but with a greater savour of novelty than heretofore, several pieces being described as for the first time at Leeds, or at least at these concerts. Among them are Balakirev's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, Sibelius' 'En Saga,' Bliss' 'L'Esprit,' 'Rout,' Stravinsky's 'Oiseau de Feu,' Mazounov's fourth Symphony, and Goossens' 'Four Sonnets'—quite a respectable list, which suggests that these concerts are turning over a new leaf, and not, as heretofore, relying exclusively on familiar things.

SHEFFIELD

The orchestral concert promoted by Miss Lily Foxon was notable chiefly by reason of the successful appearance of three Sheffield performers. Two of these young artists, pupils of Miss Foxon, played pianoforte concertos, and the third, Miss Ida Bloor—a soprano with a voice of rare attractiveness—sang in finished style. Miss Helen Guest attracted from Moszkowski's Concerto in E all that the music contained, and the brilliance of her performance aroused much enthusiasm. Mr. Stanley Kaye had a task of greater musical importance in introducing to Sheffield Stanford's Concerto in C minor, and in accomplishing it as he did added a good deal to his reputation. Mr. Julian Clifford conducted.

Miss Marie Foxon has undertaken the musical direction of an interesting experimental series of mid-day concerts in connection with the Y.M.C.A. At the first of these Miss Ena Roberts sang a group of Brahms' songs very happily, and Miss Ethel Cook, Miss Zoë Addy, and Mr. Alan Morton gave a pleasing performance of two movements of Arensky's Pianoforte Trio. At the second, Miss Helen Guest played the 'Waldstein' Sonata, and Miss Etty Ferguson sang interesting groups of modern songs. Bantock's 'A Feast of Lanterns' was singled out for special praise.

Dr. A. W. Wilson, of Manchester Cathedral, gave a short organ recital to the Sheffield Organists' and Choirmasters' Association in which Parry's preludes on 'St. Anne' and 'Rockingham,' and the first movement of Bach's first Trio Sonata were outstanding features.

The visit of 'The Beggar's Opera' to the Sheffield Lyceum Theatre aroused a good deal of interest during the week beginning September 19.

Sir Henry Hadow, on October 6, lectured on 'The Music of Shakespeare's Time,' and in connection with the Adult Education Scheme of the Sheffield Education Committee, addressed a large audience on October 8 on the subject of 'Melody.' He is to give two continuing lectures on 'Harmony' and 'Musical Structure' respectively.

A Sheffield branch of the English Folk-Dance Society has been formed. At its inaugural meeting Mr. Cecil Sharp gave an interesting account of the origin and history of Folk-Dances, and illustrative dances given by members of the branch were much admired.

The Chaliapin concert in aid of the Russian Famine Fund, on October 7, was a memorable event. A large audience responded whole-heartedly to the fascination of Chaliapin's art and personality, and he enjoyed a reception of extraordinary cordiality. M. Bratza and M. Pouishnov were his able associates.

OTHER TOWNS

The Halifax Society, now in its hundred and fourth season, is giving 'The Spectre's Bride,' and an interesting miscellaneous programme, and the Huddersfield Choral Society, adhering to whole-programme works, is to give 'Samson and Delilah,' and Parry's 'Judith.' The Hull Harmonic Society's programme includes 'Aïda' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' Hull Vocal Society, conducted by Dr. Coward, will give 'Samson and Delilah' and Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus.'

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

The former director of the Nederlandsche Opera, M. G. H. Koopman, is striving hard to raise a huge capital for a new theatrical building, including a concert hall, both of which are sorely needed at Amsterdam. As the aims of this energetic entrepreneur are known to be running in the direction of once more establishing a permanent Opera for Amsterdam, it is hardly necessary to point out that his idea has evoked undivided sympathy. But, what amounts to a vast deal more, the rate at which the funds are coming forward promises success for the venture. The second enterprise consists in the founding of a model 'Music Lyceum,' the fabric of which is already in a fair way to completion.

The concert season with us cannot properly be said to have begun until the first orchestral event which came off on Thursday, September 29. The occasion had a special significance, inasmuch as the programme, with the exception of Wagner's 'Faust' Overture, was devoted to works of Gustav Mahler, viz., his fifth Symphony and the 'Kindertotenlieder.' There is probably no place in the musical world, not excepting even Vienna, where Mahler's works are cultivated to anything like the extent as at Amsterdam, which has been styled, not inappropriately the Bayreuth of Mahler. Critics, oftener than not, are pleased to liken Mahler to Schubert and Bruckner, but the similarities in the works of these three composers do not really extend beyond a certain kind of melodic form which can be easily accounted for. Indeed, it seems an almost insurmountable difficulty for any composer living at Vienna to escape the influence of the peculiarly tinted musical atmosphere of the Austrian capital, and Mahler's works show traces of this influence to a far greater extent than those of either of his predecessors. The reason lies in the fact that, unlike the latter two, Mahler did not sift the material but embodied in his works every phase of Vienna's musical life from the highest type, derived from national strains, down to the songs in the street and the music dispensed by barrel-organs. Hand and brain of a genius were wanted to blend these heterogeneous nuclei into an artistic matrix. Thus in Mahler we find combined the sensuous and intellectual elements of all human strata, and this in turn tends to overthrow the barriers which separate different classes of listeners. Small wonder that his art is all-embracing, and there is nothing astonishing in the fact that it is continually gaining in public favour.

Like the rest of Mahler's purely orchestral symphonies (he afterwards suppressed the programme of his first), the fifth is not absolute music in the older acceptance of the term, nor is it programme music, notwithstanding an easily distinguishable leading idea. The Symphony commences with a magnificent Marcia Funebre, and ends in a boisterous outbreak of gaiety, the three intervening movements passing through other reflective stages. The performance was beyond praise. Seeing that Mengelberg was Mahler's intimate friend, we need not wonder that the latter's works receive the most finished execution at Amsterdam. In the 'Kindertotenlieder' we heard this time M. Thom. Denys. However splendidly he acquitted himself of his difficult task, it cannot be gainsaid that the sentiments contained in these songs are more aptly delivered by a lyrical baritone than by a bass. If the choice of Wagner's 'Faust' Overture be considered somewhat strange, it is accounted for by the fact that our excellent tubaist, M. Heymans, entered on that day upon his twenty-sixth year of service as a member of the orchestra, and that accordingly he was given a chance of shining as soloist, for which this Overture provides ample occasion. In the second concert Mahler's fifth Symphony was repeated, the remainder of the programme consisting of Mendelssohn's ever fresh and charming 'Fingal's Cave' and Robert Volkmann's Violoncello Concerto in A minor, with Madame Judith Bokor as soloist. Her playing this time showed a remarkable advance in technique, ripeness of feeling, and general musicianship. Considering her attainments at her present age—which one is permitted to hint at if a lady has hardly passed twenty—it may safely be predicted that she will have a splendid career. The choice of Robert Volkmann's Concerto, music of the noblest kind, once more reminded us of a composer whose works have fallen into undeserved oblivion, solely because he had the misfortune to be eclipsed by a mightier contemporary, Johannes Brahms. The twenty-fifth anniversary of Bruckner's death was commemorated by a performance of his eighth Symphony. I cannot share the opinion of orthodox Brucknerians as to the value of his symphonies. One need not be so sweeping in his judgment as Felix Weingartner, who, by embodying in one of his books another musician's destructive criticism, puts forward the same view, namely, that 'as soon as Bruckner has finished enunciating his themes he commences to ramble.' Still, there is some truth therein. I cannot help comparing Bruckner's mode of composing to the walk of an aged person who sits down at every turn of the road. I believe it was Corder who so appropriately defined composition as 'the art of avoiding full stops.' It is in this particular that Bruckner's works fall short. True there are splendid climaxes, but they lead nowhere, whereas this should be felt as an ultimate necessity. The only indication of a movement approaching its termination is when Bruckner settles down on the tonic chord for a greater number of bars. The majesty and convincing power of Beethoven's No. 5, which succeeded Bruckner's work at the concert under notice, only tended to place the latter's shortcomings in a stronger light. Great enthusiasm greeted the appearance of Herr Carl Friedberg, who, at the concert of October 9, splendidly sustained the solo part in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto. Like Mr. Albert Spalding, the American violinist, he is an Amsterdam favourite of pre-war times. Spalding gave a recital of his own, when he proved to be in splendid form, gratifying his audience above all with a highly-finished execution of Georges Enesco's Violin Sonata. There is every likelihood that both artists will regain the popularity with us. In the first of the series of chamber music concerts to be given by the Hollandse String Quartet, we were confronted with two works new to us, viz., a Sonatine, an otherwise full-fledged three-movement string quartet, by Pierre Menu, and Franco Alfano's String Quartet in D major. Both works met with a very cool reception, and to all appearance the feeble success had to be laid at the door of the performers. So far as I can make out after a first hearing (a second is hardly to be hoped for), these compositions will not prove a lasting addition to chamber music literature. Unfortunately it proved impossible to procure the scores and so verify my impression; still I am confident that I am not mistaken in my belief. I am not at once staggered by a succession of dissonant harmony, but when it comes that the hearer gets bewildered at consonant chords there is surely something wrong. Moreover, if anything resembling a real musical strain showed its head for a moment above the general turmoil, one was almost tempted to wonder for what earthly reason the composer did not continue in snatches. The above applies equally to both new works. Beethoven's Op. 59, No. 2, came as comparative balm thereafter, although, very likely owing to the exertions the performer had sustained, the performance was found to be lacking in more than one respect. I have still one more novelty to record. This was Franz Schreker's Chamber Symphony, this being the first time a work of this composer has been heard in Holland. As I shall shortly be afforded the occasion for a second hearing, I deem it advisable to reserve my opinion till my next month's letter. Mahler's 'Lie von der Erde' completed the programme (October 13). In this work, which once more was felt to tighten its grip on the audience, we heard for the first time Madame Bauer von Pilecka (of the Vienna Staatsoper) as exponent of the significant contralto part. She created a favourable impression, but could not make us forget Madame Cahil or Madame Durigo of previous performances. On the other hand, our master-tenor Jacques Urlus was at his best, and I doubt whether his performance can possibly be rivalled. Both works, which appeal so strongly to Mengelberg's individuality, were heard in the most finished way. The orchestra has once more lived up to its fame.

W. HARMANS.

BERLIN

It has become customary in many German towns to invite the public to a lecture previous to the performance of an important work, be it a symphony, an opera, or a drama. The advantages are obvious. The threads of modern works are so intricate, the meaning so often obscure, that without a guide it is impossible to follow the author. Dr. Elvensfolk, of Mayence, addresses every Sunday forenoon after church—large audiences, dealing not only with old and new works but also with everything pertaining to the theatre. Altogether the desire and thirst for theoretic knowledge have during the present and past year been satisfied with the publication of many very important books on music. Lying before me is a brilliant work, 'Karl Storck, Geschichte der Musik' (Stuttgart, Metzler), in two volumes. This, the fourth edition, is more than ever an indispensable book of reference for every musician, for it treats of every composer of modern times whose work is worth knowing. Without agreeing with all the author's statements, he cannot but be congratulated on discussing the problems of modern creative art with praiseworthy thoroughness and intimate knowledge. Hans Joachim Moser has published a 'Geschichte der deutschen Musik' (Stuttgart, Cotta), the first volume of which treats of German music from its very beginnings up to the Thirteenth Years' War. It is the companion volume to Scheiter's 'Geschichte der deutschen Literatur,' Schafer's 'Deutsche Geschichte' and Dehio's 'Geschichte deutschen Kunst' ad in method and manner has no compeer. It is in the first place a text-book for students. Yet it is much more. Moser, like Paul Bekker, of Frankfurt a/M., maintains that music is not an international art. Therefore he speaks (1) of the music of the German forest; (2) of that of the cloister (100-1500); (3) of the castle (1450-1420); (4) of the village (1350-1550); (5) of the towns during the Middle Ages (1400-1520); (6) of church, school, and home (1517-1618); (7) of the princely courts (1517-1618).

The Berlin Dom Choir, consisting of fifty boys and twenty men under the conductorship of Prof. Hugo Rüdell, at the present moment giving concerts all over Germany. The largest churches will not admit all those eager to listen to music which in such perfection has perhaps never been heard before. The Choir is being accompanied by Herr Wilhelm Kempff, one of the ablest organists in Germany. There is belief among some British organists that their German colleagues are prone to play a Bach fugue with full organ throughout. Nothing is more erroneous. Probably it is a revelation to many country organists present at these concerts what a fugue may become under the fingers of an artist. At the concert at Worms, Herr Kempff played the prelude in B minor and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, both by Bach. Doubtless such concerts will leave their mark behind.

The Hamburg singing societies have made a new move towards bringing music among the masses. They are giving open-air concerts in various parts of the city, drawing from the huge store of national song. A man may forget his friends, his native land, and sometimes his language, but the songs of childhood and youth never fade from his memory. It is expected that these concerts will take place elsewhere. The German male-voice societies are in full swing again, doing good work. There is no village without its Gesangverein, studying all through the winter months and competing during the summer with other societies. At the last great male-voice choir contest in 1913, the Berlin Lehrergesangverein carried off the first prize in the shape of a golden chain, a gift of William II. Recently the question was discussed as to the future of this chain, which as a Wanderpreis may be contested at another singing competition. The question being put before the ex-Kaiser, elicited the following answer signed by the general-adjutant:

'I have the honour to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your letter which I placed before H.M. the Emperor and King. H.M. maintains that the Berlin Lehrergesangverein remains in possession of the prize until another competition is proclaimed by a new Emperor, when the prize may be defended or newly acquired.'

The Dresden authorities are about to open a State High School for music and the theatre. It is something new in the domain of artistic education, and not meant to bear the character of a music school or theatre school in the old sense. The projected High School is to receive and train only exceptionally gifted students. It is not, therefore, in competition with the Leipzig Conservatorium, which is open to all, and whose authorities are naturally opposed to another Saxon establishment. Having appealed to the leading experts throughout Germany, the Ministry of Culture has received the unanimous reply that the initiation of such a school meant the realisation of long-cherished wishes; also that of all German towns Dresden, owing to her artistic traditions and rich art treasures, is the only place for such an institution.

German music flourishes, German organists starve. Before the war a church musician with an academic training had an income of £60. To-day he receives not quite a fourth of the salary of the headle. Many organists leave the Church to seek employment elsewhere. Some are obliged to play in restaurants and cinemas. Owing to insufficient funds a number of the Berlin Church choirs had to be dissolved. The country organist receives but £8 to £12, and the Saxon government, along with the consistorium, have discussed the question whether an increase of £20, resolved upon in 1919, might be paid now. Teachers whose duty it was to play the organ refused to do so any longer. The organ bench has become vacant, and everywhere courses of instruction are in progress to teach the instrument to private individuals. Ladies have volunteered to learn organ playing, and in my music school I have three farm lads who, busy all the week with field work, are anxious to solve the intricacies of a Rinck prelude or a German chorale.

At this year's meeting of the Neue Bach Gesellschaft at Hamburg the question of reintroducing Bach's music into the Church service has once more become a subject for discussion. Prof. Dr. Schneider declared, (1) that the Church cantatas of Bach cannot find room in the Protestant service, nor (2) is it proper to have them performed in the concert room, as has become the custom in many German towns. The Church cantatas ought to be performed in the Church at special Church concerts, but may also be incorporated in festival Church services. The opposition of an unmusical clergy that refuses to make the churches available for concert purposes must be overcome.

The Stadtschingschor of Halle a/S., under Chordirektor Karl Klanert, celebrated the four hundredth birthday of the Belgian Orlando di Lasso, a contemporary of Palestrina, by the performance of several choral works, chief of which was the penitential psalm Miserere mei Deus, which, owing to its rich polyphony, belongs to the most difficult unaccompanied compositions. In addition, Herr Oskar Rebling played several organ pieces by J. T. Sweelinck, a pupil of Lasso.

The students of the Berlin Hochschule für Musik have issued the following protest:

'The fees having recently been doubled, the State demands now another rise at the rate of a hundred per cent. In spite of a protest of all the students, the Minister remains firm. It is well known that on the whole the rich do not study music. The proposed rise means that many will have to give up the study of music. Otherwise the State would pocket the paltry sum of 150,000 marks.'

This protest is justified, for after the war the promise was given by the State authorities: 'Freie Bahn dem Tüchtigen' (free course to the gifted).

F. ERCKMANN.

MILAN

Puccini the indefatigable is busy working on a new opera called 'Turandot.' The first Act has been completed, and at the date of writing the work should be far advanced.

Busoni has also composed a musical comedy in two Acts, on the same subject as Puccini's new work. In fact Busoni's comedy was performed for the first time at the Opernhaus, Berlin, on May 20 last, together with another musical comedy of his called 'Arlecchino.' Busoni writes his own librettos. The Chinese fable 'Turandot,' of Gozzi, became popular in Germany through Schiller.

The usual season of opera has commenced at that busy little theatre the Carcano (the oldest theatre at Milan, not excluding the Teatro alla Scala itself). A few alterations have been made to the stage, and the orchestral pit has been enlarged in order to accommodate a greater number of players. The repertoire comprises Verdi's 'Otello,' 'Barbiere di Siviglia,' 'Carmen,' 'Traviata,' 'Favorita,' 'Amico Fritz,' 'Mefistofele,' 'Forza del Destino,' 'Pagliacci,' 'Mese Mariano' (Giordano), and 'Passa la Ronda' of E. Bossi. Four operas new to Milan may also be put on: 'Uomo che Ride e Veglia' ('The man who laughs and watches'); 'Terra Bassa' of D'Albert; 'Al Lupo' of Mulè; and 'Le furie di Arlecchino' of Luardi.

Two young maestros will conduct alternatively during the season—Pedrollo and Ugo Benvenuti, of whom the latter has done much good work abroad.

The opera season of the Dal Verme theatre will run from October 1 to December 11. The season opened with 'Aida,' after which came 'Il Trovatore.' An amended edition of 'Madame Butterfly' is also to be put on. Mascagni's new opera, 'Il Piccolo Marat,' conducted by himself, will be performed. The protagonist will be the tenor Lazaro. Included in the repertoire of the season are Catalani's 'Loreley,' 'Tristan und Isolde,' with tenor Calleja (a Maltese), and a new opera of Maestro Ugo Casalis called 'La Fonte Gaia' ('The Gay Fount'), libretto of Renzo Sacchetti.

E. HERBERT-CÉSARI.

PARIS

THE COMING SEASON

The Colonne Concerts at the Châtelet have recommenced, and the management has announced a policy of progress. As Mefistophélès says, 'Il était temps.' All last season we had to listen to compositions which are worn threadbare. Every conductor at Paris seemed to take pride in ringing the changes on Wagner and the Russians, Rimsky-Korsakov being particularly favoured, while Stravinsky came in a good second. There also is talk of introducing American music to the notice of discriminating Paris. Judged by recent efforts in this direction, the innovation is unlikely to set the Seine on fire. Some days ago the students of the newly-formed American summer conservatoire at Fontainebleau faced the fires of criticism with several immature and uninspired works—all of which were listened to politely. The American section of the audience excepted, no one expressed a wish to hear anything more of the same nature. Nor is Paris anxious to make the acquaintance of a Californian version of 'Faust'—which is threatened. The composer has announced to a wondering world that he 'will present something calculated to make Gounod's admirers sick with envy,' and that he is 'off to the Rocky Mountains to search for the information and inspiration necessary for the final polish.' Unsympathetic Parisians consider that a grizzly bear would prove the best inspiration—and cure. Du reste, Paris, without being exactly antagonistic, does not take great interest in American-made music. MacDowell has not made the hoped-for appeal, and the cock-tail-inspired 'jazz' is viewed with horror.

THE OPÉRA

Things are moving at the Opéra, even though the subsidy has not been increased. Massenet's 'Esclarmonde' and 'La Vierge Reine' are in rehearsal, and next month Charles Silver's 'La Mégère Apprivoisée,' which is taken from 'The Taming of the Shrew,' is promised. Mozart's 'L'Enlèvement au Sérail' and Saint-Saëns' 'Ascanio' are to be revived early in the season, M. Reynaldo Hahn being the conductor. Those who know what singing should be are asking themselves if a competent cast will be got together. Few French singers of the present generation are fit to try conclusions with Mozart, and even fewer managers are ready to admit so deplorable a state of things. Meanwhile, nothing more has been heard of the contemplated revival of 'Don Giovanni.' It has been under contemplation for months, but not since last spring has any sort of bulletin been issued. Should M. Renaud be available, we could not wish for a finer exponent of the title-rôle, and Madame Démougeot would make a satisfying Donna Anna. To distribute the other parts is another matter.

Meanwhile, the regular répertoire has attracted record houses, made up largely of visitors drawn from every nationality under the sun. 'Aida' (which sounds odd in French) has had several performances; 'Thaïs' (which comes next to 'Manon' in popularity) is the sole Massenet representative of the month, 'Le Cid,' a dull thing, having been given a holiday; and Dupont's exotic 'Antar' has been much appreciated. 'Rigoletto' always fills the theatre, though it must be confessed that after Battistini no baritone succeeds in doing justice to the name-part. The revival of 'L'Or du Rhin' is a success, for, apart from the scenery and the stage mechanical devices (important considerations with the habitués), the performance is a satisfactory one. 'L'Or du Rhin,' however, is not a work to please the average musical Parisian.

THE OPÉRA-COMIQUE

The list of coming novelties at the Opéra-Comique is a long one, though whether it is an equally strong one remains to be seen. The chief excitement centres in Jean Cras' 'Polyphème,' which gained the prize offered by the Paris Municipality, and in which M. Vanni-Marcoux (who is, or should be, well remembered by Covent Garden audiences) will create an important rôle. Georges Hué's 'A L'Ombre de la Cathédrale,' with Madame Davelli, an excellent—and handsome—artist, is promised, as also are Henry Büsser's 'Les Noces Corinthiennes,' and H. Bachelet's 'Quand la Cloche Sonnera.' A number of ballets, too, are to have their première, one of which bears the strange name 'Les Uns et les Autres.' Hillemacher's 'Fra Angelico' is amongst the novelties, and it should prove an acquisition, since the composer has written some very taking music.

Pending the presentation of these new operas, 'Tosca,' 'Lakmé' (Paris delights in Eastern scenes), 'La Vie de Bohème,' 'Carmen,' and 'Butterfly,' seldom miss a week, while they sometimes are well sung. 'Butterfly,' by the way, is extraordinarily popular, though 'Bohème' runs the sympathetic work close. Parisians, being an emotional people, are easily moved; pleurez mes yeux is their motto, and they are upon occasions ready to weep copiously.

TETRAZZINI FOR PARIS

Madame Tetrzzini's £500 fee, M. Chaliapin's reputed offer of £600 a performance and the size he takes in boots, and other chatty information which enlivens the columns of the Daily Mail's Continental edition, have set Paris a-talking. 'Why,' ask the café orators, 'are these song-birds not heard at the Opéra?' M. Chaliapin (who is described, in ignorance, by one of the various London daily papers with the 'largest circulation' as a 'magnificent bass,' whereas he is a consummately fine singer with a basse chantante voice of ordinary quality) already has sung here, and with considerable success. Madame Melba's retirement and contradicted retirement (more Daily Mail efforts) has been but slightly discussed, for Madame Melba does not greatly interest Paris musical circles. Besides, her choice of songs at last summer's Albert Hall concert is not forgotten. Madame Tetrzzini, however, claims attention, a number of pre-war Parisian pilgrims having savoured her singing at Covent Garden. One of them has even had the hardihood to suggest that she might be invited to show French coloratura sopranos how the rôle of Lakmé should be sung. But no Paris manager will pay her £500—generous fees do not prevail.

Talking of managers, one of the fraternity, who rules over the destinies of a provincial opera house, can scarcely be said to know his job. When recently engaging a distinguished Violetta, he demanded that Charlotte and Isolda should be included in her contract. To this day he cannot understand why Violetta laughed. GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

In the Dante commemorations at Ravenna, the work of Palestrina was not neglected, and the diligent pains of Giovanni Tebaldini succeeded in producing an interesting sacred trilogy, a musical comment of Dante worked out in Gregorian themes and hymns and melodies of Palestrina, given in the Basilica of St. Apollinare during the centenary celebrations. Some of the Palestrinian melodies, such as the 'Peccantem me quotidie,' were entirely new to the hearers, never having been sung, perhaps, since the composer's death. Amongst those which made the greatest impression were the 'Exaltabo Te' and 'Sicut Cervus,' the 'Domine, quis habitat' (in which, with admirable art, twelve voices are divided into three choirs), and the 'O gloriosa et beata Trinitas.'

Undoubtedly the most interesting musical feature of the Dante commemorations, and also the most important event of the month, has been the performance at Ravenna of Refice's great symphonic poem, 'Dantis poetæ transitus,' in which, following the poem of Giulio Salvadori, the composer has described the last moments of the great poet's life. It is reported that after the success obtained at Ravenna, Refice contemplates a tour in America for the execution of his poem.

The recent Franciscan Congress at Rome provided occasion for an interesting concert in the Basilica of the Apostles, under the direction of Alaleona. Confined almost exclusively to ancient Italian music, the following programme was worthily presented:

Two ancient Laud: Spirituali ... .. Anon.
'The clothing of St. Clare.' For orchestra.

From the 'Frate Sole' of Mancinelli
Three Dante melodies ... .. Alaleona
Four ancient Italian 'Canzoni.' For strings and harp, rewritten by D. Alaleona
'Ave Maria' (words from Dante)...

For soprano and strings Verdi

Four Laudi Spirituali.

For orchestra of strings, flutes, and trumpets.
Hymn for St. Francis. For three, four, and five voices and chorus. ... .. Palestrina
'To Dante.' For tenor, choir, and orchestra Alaleona

To raise funds for the proposed new Art Museum of the athedral of Bergamo, Signor Bossi, the director of the cademia St. Cecilia, was recently called from Rome to ve an organ recital in that city. He was heard in the llowing programme:

'Prayer' ... ..	... ..	Franck
'Noël' ... ..	... ..	Daquin
Good Friday music from 'Parsifal' ... ..	... ..	Wagner
'Momenti Francescani' ... ..	... ..	Bossi
Sonata in F. For organ and violoncello ... ..	... ..	Gaillard
Siciliana e Giga ... ..	... ..	Bossi

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

The music season here has not yet commenced. There ave been, however, two recent events of interest—the nnual Convention of the Canadian College of Organists nd music at the Canadian National Exhibition.

Approximately twelve years ago a Guild of Organists was ounded in Canada, to be remodelled in 1919, and named e Canadian College of Organists. Dr. Albert Ham, of oronto, was the founder and first president. Local centres ave now been established at Montreal, Ottawa, Hamilton, nd London, the headquarters being at Toronto. Examinations on a similar basis to those of the Royal College of rganists, as eight members of the council are F.R.C.O.
he activities of the Convention included two council meetings, a garden party, a banquet, and a special service in he Metropolitan Church.

Music is one of the main features of the Canadian National Exhibition. In addition to performances by local artists, wo special bands are engaged annually to play during the wo weeks of events. This year His Majesty's Canadian renadier Guards (Montreal), under the conductorship of
A. J. J. Gagnier, and the Anglo-Canadian Concert Band
Mr. Herbert A. Clarke) were particularly appreciated wing to the high standard of music performed. Works
f such composers as Tchaikovsky, Glinka, Wagner, Brahms, Dvorák, Saint-Saëns, Weber, Gounod, Coleridge-Taylor, and Edward German, were the average rather than he exception.

Competitions feature prominently in the Music Building.
With the principal musicians of the city as adjudicators, ontests are held for military bands, pianoforte, violin, and voices.

There is at present here a noticeable increase in the ppreciation of good music by the general public. Canada s a young country, and rapidly is she realising the importance of the art. The use of gramophones in the schools, the compulsory knowledge of music for teachers, the keen competition in choir and solo contests, the large classes at all the teaching colleges and academies, are facts which prove that music is keeping pace with the vast commercial and industrial development of the nation.

VIENNA

Musically the end of the summer was very dead. With the exception of the nightly concert in Belvedere Park nothing of importance occurred, and all thoughts have been turned on the Theater Konzert Und Kino Messe, which was held from September 4 to 25.

This Messe was in conjunction with the Wiener Internationale Messe, which was open from September 11 to 17.
The musical Messe was divided into twelve parts, the principal of which comprised opera, concerts, theatres, cinemas, voice-training, dramatic-training, music publication, theatre lighting, &c. The concert portion was very interesting. The principal events held in this connection were as follows: the Bruckner D minor Symphony, under the direction of Dr. Schalk; the Cappella choir, under the direction of Hans Wagner; the Strauss 'Alpen' Symphony, under the direction of Reiner; two concerts of the Company of Musical Friends; the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Felix Weingartner; the massed 'orchestras of Vienna, also under the direction of Weingartner; the choir of the State Opera, in the Mozart 'Requiem'; massed orchestras, under the direction of Fred Lowe; Mahler's Symphonies Nos. 7 and 8; a Schubert evening by Duhan; and Beethoven's ninth Symphony.

Three historical chamber concerts, given on September 12, 14, and 17 in the Ceremonial Hall of the Hofburg, stand out prominently. The programmes comprised selections from the works of Mozart, Bach, Nardini, Stamitz, de Herveo, Sacchini, Grétry, Hasse, Matheson, Handel, Scarbeatti, Lach, Salmhofer, and Mittler.

Another important event was the Festival concert on September 16, at the Grosser Konzerthausaal. The band of two hundred and fifty performers was made up of Philmoniker, Tonkünstler, and Volksoper orchestras, under the direction of Felix Weingartner. The programme was as follows:

Largo ... ..	... ..	Handel
Air ... ..	... ..	Bach
March from 'The Ruins of Athens' ... ..	... ..	Beethoven
Symphonic Prelude, 'King Lear' ... ..	... ..	Weingartner
Prelude, 'Lohengrin' ... ..	... ..	Wagner
Overture, 'Tannhäuser' ... ..	... ..	Wagner

Though this programme presented no novelties it was exceptionally interesting and perfectly rendered.

The opera season opened on September 1, but the programme in connection with the Messe presents no items of special interest. A revival of the 'Marriage of Figaro' is announced for production in the coming season.

Dr. Richard Strauss commences a tour of the United States on October 20. It will last two months, and will embrace many concerts.

Music at Budapest is slowly recovering from the Bolshevik regime. The most important productions announced for the opera season beginning on September 15 are the Puccini
Trilogy and a new opera by d'Albort.

STANLEY WINNEY.

Miscellaneous

An 'Evening with Coleridge-Taylor' was held by the Primrose Hill Choir, Northampton, on September 20, the programme including 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' partsongs, five Negro melodies for Pianoforte Trio, a Sonata movement for violin and pianoforte, and a selection of songs.

Mr. Duncan McKenzie, Director of Music at the High Schools, Montreal, and Lecturer on Theory to McGill University Conservatorium of Music, Montreal, has been appointed Director of Music to the Public and High Schools, Toronto. This is the leading position of its kind in Canada.

On November 16, at the Culloden Street Evening Institute, Poplar, and on November 21, at the Evening Institute, Fleet Road, Hampstead, Mr. R. J. Pitcher will lecture on 'The Composer's Workshop,' with illustrations. Both lectures will begin at 8 p.m.

Mr. Claude Landi has been appointed conductor of the Wandsworth Technical Institute Orchestra in succession to Mr. T. Maskell Hardy, who has resigned after twenty-two years.

Mr. Ernest Dumayne, conductor of Hither Green Choral and Orchestral Society, has been appointed conductor of Walthamstow Choral Union.

The Hampstead centre of the British Music Society has announced its second series of concerts at the Town Hall, Haverstock Hill, on six dates from October 19 to April 5.

The Guild of Singers and Players has arranged a second series of concerts by members of the Guild to be held during the autumn at Steinway Hall.

Our 'Gramophone Notes' are unavoidably held over.

Answers to Correspondents

'NATURAL.'—You must not expect us to answer your question as to which are the 'sharps' and which the 'flats' in our little monthly collection. You must do your own classifying. Nor do we care to say how far the title applies to the writers as well as to the quotations. In general, the selection is intended to consist of current remarks of an epigrammatic nature, but occasionally we come across a pronouncement so richly flatusous that it cries out for inclusion.

G. E. S. H.—There is no agency of the kind in England so far as we can ascertain. Write to Musical America, 501, Fifth Avenue, New York, and the Musical Courier, 437, Fifth Avenue, New York.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

AUSTIN, ERNEST.—"Sweet Night." Arranged for Small Orchestra. 1st Violin, 4d.; Cello and Bass, 8d.; Flute, 4d.; Clarinet, 4d.; Cornet, 4d.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—"Arise, shine, for thy Light is come." Anthem for Christmas. (No. 1093, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

FAYRFAX, ROBERT.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, set to Gregorian Tones with verses in faux-bourdon. Edited by ROYLE SHORE. (No. 1093, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 4d.

FAYRFAX, ROBERT, and WILLIAM MUNDY.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, set to Gregorian Tones with verses in faux-bourdon. Edited by ROYLE SHORE. (No. 1063, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 4d.

GIFFORD, A. M.—"The Irish Widow's Lament for her Son." Tone-poem for Organ, Contralto Voice, and Harp (or Pianoforte). 2s. 6d.

HARRIS, CUTHBERT.—"O lovely voices of the sky." Carol. Arranged for Four Voices. (No. 945, The Musical Times.) 2d.

HARWOOD, BASIL.—"Benedicite, omnia opera." Set in free chant form. 4d.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

No. 394. "Carol of the three Kings." 2d.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE. 2d.

No. 395. "Green grows the Holly Tree." 1½d.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE. 1½d.

No. 396. "The coming of Christmas." 1½d.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE. 1½d.

No. 397. "Ising the birth was born to-night." 1½d.

THOMAS ADAMS. 1½d.

No. 398. "O lovely voices of the sky." 2d.

W. G. ALCOCK. 2d.

No. 399. "This Day." GERRARD WILLIAMS. 1½d.

PACKMAN, M. S.—"Now, Father, we commend." 1½d.

Vesper Hymn. 1½d.

RHODES, HAROLD.—"The voice of Spring." 4d.

Three-part Song. For S.S.A. (No. 473, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice

Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notation, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic

Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1305. "It was a lover and his lass." 3d.

T. MORLEY. Arranged as a Two-part Song by

GEORGE RATHBONE ... 3d.

SHARP, CECIL J.—Folk-songs of English Origin collected in the Appalachian Mountains. (Second Series.) With Pianoforte Accompaniment. 7s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2355. "Lord of the worlds above." Anthem for Festival or General use. JOHN E. WEST 3d.

No. 2370. "Fair, sweet, cruel." Four-part Song. J. G. WILLIAMS 3d.

No. 2371. "Love is enough." Four-part Song. G. T. HOLST 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

No. 2372. "Sweet Kate." Four-part Song. J. G. WILLIAMS 3d.

No. 2373. "Fill the bowl with rosy wine." Four-part Song. For Men's Voices. JOHN E. WEST 3d.

WOOD, CHARLES.—"Now the bright morning star." Two-part Song. (No. 197, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 3d.

— "To Daffodils." Two-part Song. (No. 198, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 3d.

— "La fileuse." Two-part Song. (No. 199, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

— "Evening." Two-part Song. (No. 200, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

— "Young and Old." Two-part Song. (No. 201, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 3d.

— "Under the Greenwood Tree." Two-part Song. (No. 202, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 3d.

REDUCED PRICES.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—"Serenade." Choral Song for S.A.T.B. (No. 1301, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 6d.

— "Serenade." (No. 2175, Novello's Tonic Sol-fa Series.) 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CLOKEY, J. W.—"The Catbird." Song. 60 cent (2s. 6d.).

DE MARKOFF, A.—"Inca Dance" (Poem). Pianoforte Solo.

— "Pescador" (Brazil). Pianoforte Solo.

— Brazilian Modinha ("Oh yaya," "Oh Madame") Pianoforte Solo.

— Brazilian Modinha on the death of an ox. Pianoforte Solo.

— Valse des feuilles. Pianoforte Solo.

— Mazurka. Pianoforte Solo.

— Polka. Pianoforte Solo.

MARTIN, M. P'a.—"Benedictus es Domine. ("Blessed art Thou.") Anthem. 10 cents (4d.).

SMITH, D. S.—"Shepherds, all shepherds." Carol 10 cents (4d.).

— Tyrolean Folk Carol. 8 cents (3d.).

SPELMAN, T. M.—"Christ and the blind man." Poem for Orchestra. Arranged for Pianoforte Duet $3.00 (12s.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—"Little Boy Blue." Two-part Song. For Children's Voices. 12 cents (6d.).

— "My Shadow." Two-part Song. For Children's Voices. 12 cents (6d.).

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male Quartet, by Arthur Mangelsdorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd. 160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 497 Coventry Road, Birmingham.

JOHN ROW

TENOR.

19, Warwick Crescent, Paddington, W.2.

ORATORIO, CONCERTS.

Organist.—"Your renderings were the best we have heard at Chingford."

Organist.—"I like your style of singing. Very artistic."

WILL BE READY THIS MONTH.

EURHYTHM

THOUGHT IN ACTION.

THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL THERAPY

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF

TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

M.A., Oxford; M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price. Cloth Boards ... Nine Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

BY

CYRIL SCOTT.

STRING QUARTET

IDYLIC FANTASY

FOR

This work is in the form of a SUITE in five part movements:

PRELUDE
PASTORALE
SCHERZO (on an Irish Air)
ELEGY
RONDO RETROSPETTIVO

VOICE (SOPRANO), OBOE, AND 'CELLO

Will be performed this season at:

THE CHELSEA "POPS."
THE FOXON FIVE O'CLOCKS
(SHEFFIELD)
SHEFFIELD UNIVERSITY

Score, 7s. 6d. net.

Parts, 12s. net.

Price complete, 5s. net.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 96.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

ORNAMENTATION

IN THE WORKS OF

FREDERIC CHOPIN

BY

JOHN PETRIE DUNN

(Lecturer in Music at the University of Edinburgh.)

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSICAL.

Excellent TEACHING CONNECTION FOR SALE (Piano and Singing). Most of the teaching done at private schools and colleges. Fees, &c., amount to about £1,000 per annum. Good record of England appointment with a fine organ, and position as conductor of a choral society in the town. Magnificent opportunity for a brilliant organist and a good teacher of singing, with musical fees. Upwards of 100 pupils per week. Good fees. No position to speak of. All applications treated in the strictest confidence. Apply "J. S. B." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANISTS.—A 2-Manual PEDAL PIANO (Rogers) for sale. In excellent condition. Price £100, or any offer. Apply by letter to Ernest Read, 7, Neville Terrace, Low Gardens, S.W.7.

IANO PEDALS, as new (Norman & Beard), with carved Organ Stool. Complete, £12 10s. Holford, 76, Street, Dresden, Longton, Staffs.

CHAMBER ORGAN FOR SALE, 2-Manual, Pedal, 12 Stops (Flight & Robson, enlarged J. W. Walker & Co.). Suitable for church seating about 200. Now on loan London. Valued 1920 at £400, with hydraulic engine and blowing gear. Offer? Apply Mrs. Marriott, South Malling Vicarage, Lewes.

ENOR and BASS REQUIRED for City church. £15 per annum. Good readers essential. Apply Choirmaster, Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, E.C.3.

RGAN PRACTICE AT HOME.—Set Norman & Beard's Pneumatic Pedals for attachment to ordinary piano. Complete with stool. Offers? 21, Bradley Gardens, Ealing.

GUIDE TO CANDIDATES FOR THE
A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA PIANO TEACHERS'
EXAMINATION.

Price 1s. 8d. post free.

By ARTHUR FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.,
3, The Crescent, Roundhay, Leeds, Yorks.

WILLIAM BAINES' FOUR SKETCHES FOR PIANO.

1. THE CHIMES.
2. ONLY A FEW WOODEN SOLDIERS.
3. DREAMING.
4. LITTLE IMPS.

Price, 2s. net each.

Played by FREDERIC DAWSON, Esq.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

Sacred Songs by Joseph H. Adams.

- "THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD."
"SUN OF MY SOUL."
"THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
"DIVINE LOVE."
"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD"
"LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
"THE NAZARENE."
"THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
"JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES).

In keys to suit all voices, Two Shillings each.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

ANTHEMS FOR CHRISTMAS.

*A song of joy .. .. .	John E. West	4d.	*Nazareth .. .. .	Ch. Gounod
And the Angel said unto them .. .. .	J. P. Sweelinck	6d.	*Now is come Salvation .. .. .	Cuthbert Harris
*And thou, Bethlehem .. .. .	F. W. Wadely	2d.	*Now when Jesus .. .. .	Joseph Holbrooke
*Angels from the realms of glory, F. H. Cowen 3d.; E. Vine Hall	4d.		O come, all ye faithful (Adeste Fideles) Arr. by G. J. Tredaway
*Arise, shine, for thy light is come .. .. .	Geo. Elvey	2d.	O come hither .. .. .	W. Jackson
*Arise, shine, for thy light is come .. .. .	G. F. Cobb	6d.	*O come, Redeemer of mankind .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchant
*Arise, shine, O Jerusalem .. .. .	Thomas Adams	6d.	*O come, Redeemer of mankind .. .. .	John E. West
*Awake, put on thy strength .. .. .	F. R. Greenish	6d.	*O Holy Babe .. .. .	A. C. Mackenzie
Before the heavens were spread abroad .. .. .	Horatio W. Parker	4d.	*O Holy Night .. .. .	Adolphe Adam
Behold, all the earth lieth still .. .. .	G. F. Huntley	6d.	O Jerusalem! look about thee .. .. .	E. W. Naylor
Behold, a star appeareth .. .. .	Niels W. Gade	6d.	*O Jerusalem! look about thee .. .. .	John E. West
*Behold, a star appeareth .. .. .	B. Luard-Selby	2d.	*O sing to God (Noël). (Female Voices) .. .. .	Ch. Gounod
*Behold, I bring .. .. .	J. Barnby and E. V. Hall, ea.	4d.	*O sing to God (Noël). (Arranged for S.A.T.B.) .. .. .	Ch. Gounod
Behold, I bring you glad tidings .. .. .	J. Goss and Giovanni Croce, ea.	2d.	*O Thou that tellest .. .. .	Handel
Behold, I bring you glad tidings .. .. .	*C. W. Smith and Vittoria, ea.	2d.	*O world in sorrow sleeping .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
Behold, I bring you good tidings .. .. .	J. M. Crament	6d.	*O Zion, that bringest good tidings .. .. .	J. Stainer
*Behold my servant .. .. .	J. Frederick Bridge	4d.	Of the Father's love begotten .. .. .	E. C. Bairstow
Behold, the name of the Lord .. .. .	Percy Pitt	6d.	*Rejoice in the Lord .. .. .	J. B. Calkin
*Behold the Tabernacle (Two-part Anthem) .. .. .	G. A. Macfarren	4d.	*Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
Be peace on earth .. .. .	W. Croth	3d.	*Rejoice greatly, O Daughter of Zion .. .. .	Charles H. Lloyd
Beside Thy Cradle .. .. .	J. S. Bach	2d.	Rejoice, O ye people .. .. .	Mendelssohn
*Bethlehem .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	2d.	*Rest, weary earth .. .. .	A. M. Goodhart
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel S. S. Wesley & The Earl of Mar, ea.			*Ring out, wild bells .. .. .	P. E. Fletcher
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel .. .. .	C. L. Williams	6d.	Say, where is He born (Trio) .. .. .	Mendelssohn
*Blessed be the Lord God of Israel .. .. .	E. Vine Hall	4d.	*See, amid the winter's snow .. .. .	John E. West
Born to-day (Motet. S.S.A.T.B.) .. .. .	J. P. Sweelinck	4d.	Ditto (Three-part) .. .. .	John E. West
Break forth into joy .. .. .	*H. A. Matthews and W. G. Alcock, ea.	4d.	*Silent Night (Melody by F. Grüber) .. .. .	Arr. by John E. West
*Break forth into joy .. .. .	T. Ridley Prentice	8d.	*Sing and rejoice .. .. .	J. Barnby and John E. West, each
*Break forth into joy .. .. .	S. Coleridge-Taylor and Bruce Steane, ea.	4d.	*Sing and rejoice .. .. .	Basil Harwood
*Break forth .. .. .	J. S. Bach	2d.	Sing a song of praise .. .. .	Oliver King
*Brightest and best .. .. .	E. Vine Hall	6d.	*Sing, O Daughter of Zion H. W. Wareing and W. G. Alcock, ea.
*Calm on the list'ning ear of night .. .. .	Horatio W. Parker	4d.	Sing, O Daughter of Zion .. .. .	H. Gadsby
*Christ's Incarnation .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	2d.	Sing, O heavens *H. Davan Wetton, Kent, & T. T. Trimmell, ea.
*Christians, awake .. .. .	J. Barnby, 4d.; *H. M. Higgs	6d.	Sing, O heavens .. .. .	A. C. Mackenzie
Christians, be joyful .. .. .	Bach	6d.	*Sing, O heavens .. .. .	J. H. Maunders and B. Tours, each
*Christmas Day (Choral Fantasy on Old Carols) .. .. .	G. Holst	6d.	*Sing, O heavens .. .. .	Bruce Steane, 4d.; *Arthur S. Sullivan
Come and thank Him .. .. .	Bach	4d.	*Sing, O heavens, and be joyful, O earth .. .. .	A. Gaul
*Come and worship the Lord .. .. .	Thomas Adams	4d.	*Sing unto the Lord .. .. .	Vincent Novello
*Come hither, ye faithful .. .. .	H. Hofmann	6d.	*That God doth love the world .. .. .	Bach
*Come, ye Gentles, hear the story .. .. .	Edward C. Bairstow	2d.	*The Angel Gabriel was sent from God .. .. .	H. Smart
*Come, ye lofly .. .. .	H. Elliot Button	2d.	*The Angel said unto them (Two-part. Sop. and Bass) .. .. .	Brown
*Crown Him, the Virgin's Son .. .. .	B. Luard-Selby	3d.	*The first Christmas (Words only, 3s. per 100) .. .. .	J. Barnby
Dawns the day, the natal day .. .. .	Robin H. Legge	4d.	*The Grace of God which bringeth salvation .. .. .	J. Barnby
Drop down, ye heavens .. .. .	J. Barnby, 2d.; J. Stainer	6d.	*The hallowed day hath shined .. .. .	B. Luard-Selby
*For unto us a Child is born .. .. .	Handel	3d.	*The hallowed day hath shined upon us .. .. .	J. Stainer
*Give the king Thy judgments, O Lord .. .. .	A. H. Brown	2d.	*The Hymn of the Angels .. .. .	John E. West
Glory be to God .. .. .	Bach	4d.	The light hath shined .. .. .	E. Silas and C. G. Verrinder, ea.
*Glory to God .. .. .	Bach, 2d.; Handel	12d.	*The Lord our Righteousness .. .. .	Hugh Blair
Glory to God in the highest *Clowes Bayley and Pergolesi, ea.			*The morning stars sang together .. .. .	J. Stainer
*Glory to God in the highest .. .. .	E. Markham Lee	4d.	The morning stars sang together .. .. .	G. A. A. West
*God so loved the world .. .. .	J. Goss and M. Kingston, ea.	2d.	*The New-Born King .. .. .	Percy E. Fletcher
*God so loved the world .. .. .	J. Varley Roberts	4d.	*The star that now is shining .. .. .	Oliver King
*God so loved the world .. .. .	J. Stainer	2d.	The whole earth is at rest .. .. .	J. Varley Roberts
*God, Who at sundry times .. .. .	Edward C. Bairstow	2d.	*The Word is flesh become .. .. .	Ch. Gounod
*God, Who at sundry times .. .. .	J. H. Moss	6d.	*The Word is made Incarnate .. .. .	Thomas Adams
*Good King Wenceslas .. .. .	Arr. by W. G. Ross	6d.	*There shall a star .. .. .	Mendelssohn
Hail! thou that art highly favoured .. .. .	Arthur Carnall	6d.	*There shall come a star .. .. .	Cuthbert Harris
*Hail to the Christ (Carol-Anthem) .. .. .	J. Barnby	3d.	There shall come forth a Rod *Ferris Tozer & F. W. Wadely, ea.
*Hallelujah! for unto us a Child is born .. .. .	W. H. Monk	4d.	*There shall come forth a star .. .. .	O. A. Mansfield
Hallelujah! the light hath shined .. .. .	Oliver King	2d.	*There was silence in Bethlehem's fields .. .. .	J. Stainer
*Hark! the glad sound .. .. .	Myles B. Foster and E. V. Hall, ea.	4d.	*Ditto (Unison) .. .. .	J. Stainer
*Hark! the herald angels sing .. .. .	E. V. Hall	4d.	*There were shepherds .. .. .	Myles B. Foster and B. Tours, ea.
Hark! what news the angels bring .. .. .	Oliver King	4d.	Ditto (Two-part Anthem) .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
Hear, King of Angels .. .. .	Bach	2d.	There were shepherds (Edgar Pettman and H. W. Wareing, ea.
He cometh forth .. .. .	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*There were shepherds .. .. .	Charles Vincent
How beautiful are the feet (Appendix to the "Messiah") .. .. .	Handel	4d.	*There were shepherds .. .. .	E. A. Sydenham and Healey Willan, ea.
I desired wisdom .. .. .	J. Stainer	8d.	This day Christ is born (Men's Voices) .. .. .	Basil Harwood
*I will set His dominion in the sea .. .. .	Horatio W. Parker	6d.	This is the day which the Lord hath made .. .. .	J. Turle
*In a stable lowly (Carol-Anthem) .. .. .	Oliver King	2d.	*This is the month .. .. .	E. W. Naylor
In that day .. .. .	J. F. Bridge	4d.	*Thou art My Son .. .. .	Thomas Adams
*In the beginning .. .. .	G. B. Allen and B. Luard-Selby, ea.	2d.	*Thou must leave Thy lowly dwelling .. .. .	Berlioz
*In the beginning .. .. .	Charles Macpherson	6d.	*Thus speaketh the Lord of Hosts .. .. .	J. Stainer
*In the beginning was the Word .. .. .	E. H. Thorne	2d.	Unto us a Child is born .. .. .	F. Adlam
*In the beginning was the Word .. .. .	Ferris Tozer	6d.	Unto us was born (Two-part Anthem) .. .. .	G. A. Macfarren
*In this was manifested .. .. .	F. E. Gladstone	3d.	What sweeter music can we bring .. .. .	H. Walford Davies
*It came upon the midnight clear .. .. .	J. Stainer	2d.	When Christ was born to earth .. .. .	H. Walford Davies
*Jesu, Who from Thy Father's throne .. .. .	F. C. Woods	4d.	*When Jesus was born in Bethlehem .. .. .	W. A. C. Cruickshank
*Let us now go even unto Bethlehem J. T. Field & E. J. Hopkins, ea.			*While all things were in quiet silence .. .. .	Henry J. King
*Let us now go even unto Bethlehem .. .. .	Bruce Steane	2d.	*While all things were in quiet silence .. .. .	Oliver King
*Like silver lamps .. .. .	J. Barnby	2d.	*While all things were in quiet silence .. .. .	G. A. Macfarren
Lo, God, our God has come .. .. .	Battison Haynes	3d.	*While all things were in quiet silence .. .. .	Healey Willan
Lo, star-led chiefs .. .. .	W. Croth	3d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks Geo. Elvey & E. V. Hall, ea.
*Love Divine, all love excelling .. .. .	E. V. Hall	4d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks J. Barnby, 6d.; W. T. Best
*Mercy and truth are met together (Words, 3s. per 100) J. Stainer			With all Thy Hosts *John E. West and A. W. Wilson, ea.

THE "LUTE" SERIES OF CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

*72 Arise, shine .. .. .	T. W. Stephenson	4d.	*71 Fear not; for behold .. .. .	F. J. Sawyer
*95 Arise, shine .. .. .	F. C. Maker	4d.	*12 Hark! what mean (Carol Anthem) .. .. .	Arthur Sullivan
179 Behold! He cometh .. .. .	Albert W. Ketelbey	4d.	*143 How beautiful are the feet .. .. .	W. A. C. Cruickshank
16 Behold, I bring .. .. .	F. Aubrey Owen	4d.	*144 Let us now go .. .. .	A. Kempton
94 Behold, I bring you good tidings .. .. .	Fredk. Peel	4d.	*131 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem .. .. .	Arthur Page
225 Behold, my Servant .. .. .	C. Harris	4d.	*170 Sing, O Daughter of Zion .. .. .	H. Elliot Button
108 Behold, my Servant .. .. .	Ebenezer Prout	4d.	*180 Sing, O Daughter of Zion .. .. .	Arthur Page
166 Behold, upon the mountains .. .. .	A. W. Ketelbey	4d.	*154 Sing, O Heavens .. .. .	Coldham Hall
*59 Blessed be the Lord .. .. .	J. Barnby	4d.	*48 Sing, O sing .. .. .	Henry Leslie
204 Break forth into joy .. .. .	F. Aubrey Owen	4d.	*83 There were shepherds .. .. .	A. R. Gaul
155 Break forth into joy .. .. .	J. C. Bridge	4d.	*132 Unto us a Child is born .. .. .	H. E. Nichol
*119 Break forth into joy .. .. .	Seymour Smith	4d.	*191 While all things .. .. .	Cuthbert Harris
*23 Come near, ye nations .. .. .	Michael Watson	4d.	*118 While shepherds watched .. .. .	G. C. Martin
*35 Daughter of Zion .. .. .	F. C. Maker	4d.

Anthems marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1st, 2d., and 3d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS
interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Four Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, Two Shillings.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE

STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR CHRISTMAS SERVICES, ETC.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Three Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Singing Parts, 8s. 9d.; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

NIELS W. GADE.

(Op. 40.)

Price Two Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

CHRISTMAS SCENES

FOR FEMALE VOICES

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Price Four Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Full Vocal Score, Four Shillings; Vocal Parts, Two Shillings
each.

Parts 1 and 2, 2s.; Parts 3 and 4, 2s.; Parts 5 and 6, 2s.
Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 8d.
Books of Words (per 100), 12s. 6d.
Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6s. 6d.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND THE MUSIC

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, Tenpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price Two Shillings.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI,
CHORUS, AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

YULE-TIDE

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ANDERTON.

Price Three Shillings.
Paper boards, 5s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

BY

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

SET TO MUSIC FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA

BY

B. J. DALE.

Price Two Shillings.

MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, in E (Four Voices) ... ..	4d.
BENEDICITE, in E ... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, in E... ..	4d.
COMMUNION SERVICE, in E ... ..	1s.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, in E ... ..	4d.
" " " " Tonic Sol-fa ... ..	2d.
CANTATE AND DEUS, in E ... ..	4d.

ANTHEMS.

IN THE BEGINNING—CHRISTMAS ... ..	4d.
" " Tonic Sol-fa ... ..	2d.
BEHOLD, I BRING GLAD TIDINGS ... ..	3d.
ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT ... ..	4d.
" " " " Tonic Sol-fa ... ..	2d.
I WAS GLAD (Four Voices) ... ..	4d.
" " " " Tonic Sol-fa ... ..	2d.

FIVE SETS OF CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

In Books, Sixpence each. Or in single numbers, One Penny each.

The Composer will be pleased to send Specimens.

Address: 36, CHRIST CHURCH ROAD, NORWICH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise that tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake ... ..	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem ... ..	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... .. 1s. 4d. 10d.

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)... ..	4d.	2½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use) ... ..	2s	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE ORIGINAL TUNES

SET TO

FAVOURITE HYMNS

BY

FREDERICK R. GREENISH,

Mus. Doc., Oxon., formerly Organist and Director of the Music at St. Mary's, Haverfordwest.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOLK-SONGS

OF

ENGLISH ORIGIN

COLLECTED IN

THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

BY

CECIL J. SHARP

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

SECOND SERIES.

Price Seven Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR ADVENT AND CHRISTMAS

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

BENEDICITE IN D (Just Published) ... ..

A MORNING, COMMUNION, AND EVENING SERVICE in E minor. Op. 28:

Te Deum and Benedictus ... ..	...
Communion Service (including Benedictus and Agnus Dei) ... ..	...
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	...

ANTHEM, "When the Son of Man shall come" ...

TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

1. "Lowliest! Loftiest!" ... ..
2. "O hearken, all ye sad and lone" ... ..

ORGAN FANTASIA, "Christmastide" ... ..

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MINOR MELODIES

Lyrics and Songs for Musical Settings

BY

J. M. STUART-YOUNG.

Ready about May, 1921, through Messrs. T. & A. CONSTABLE, the University Press, Edinburgh, at 10s. 6d. net per copy, to the general public, first edition of 2,000 copies. 250 pp., Crown 8vo.

NOTE.—Composers may secure single copies on sending cash more of their published songs, as proof of their bona fides 1s. 6d. (to cover cost of packing and postage) to

THE MISSES HARVEY, TYPISTS,

45, ST. ALBAN'S ROAD, SEVEN KINGS, ESSEX.

"MINOR MELODIES" will be followed a few months later a second volume of Lyrics, this time with more tropical settings (Mr. Stuart-Young is permanently resident in West Africa) under the caption of "THE SEDUCTIVE COAST." Composers who are captivated by "Minor Melodies," and who wish to hold an early reserve of Lyrics now being written, should ask the Misses HARVEY to put down their wish for the new volume. It will be supplied to composers on the same terms (cost of postage and packing only).

MURDOCH'S PUBLICATIONS

ARNOLD BAX CHORAL WORKS.

NET.

- ter. Ora Filium—Carol for Unaccompanied Double Choir - - 2s. 6d.
a Rose I Sing—Carol for Choir, Harp, 'Cello, and Contra-bass 2s. 6d.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE SACKBUT.

"Among Bax's new works is a remarkable setting of a fifteenth century carol ('Of a rose I sing a') for small choir, harp, one 'cello, and contra-bass. The work is built on a very beautiful melody, which is treated in a masterly way and with much wealth of invention. It is to be hoped that it will be heard far and wide during the coming winter."

MUSICAL NEWS.

"There are many features of the carol which cannot be sufficiently admired, of which one need only mention the exquisite modal sadness of the opening phrase, the beauty of the middle section wherein the melody appears in the alto and tenors against a sustained pedal in the basses and a 'bouche fermée' inter-subject in the sopranos, and, finally, the contrapuntal beauties of the climax with which the work closes."—EUGÈNE GOOSSENS.

ORCHESTRAL.

- Garden of Fand ... .. In the Press | November Woods ... .. In the Press

CHAMBER MUSIC.

- st Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte, ... .. 10s. net E ... .. ntet for Pianoforte and Strings, in ... .. In the Press minor ... ..
ng Quartet in G (score) ... .. 5s. net
" " (parts) ... .. 8s. net

SONGS WITH PIANO.

- Ideala (Bjornsen) ... .. In the Press
Aspiration (R. Dehmel) ... .. 2s. net
Parting (Æ) ... .. 2s. net
Green Grow the Rushes O! (Burns) ... .. 2s. net
Youth (Clifford Bax) ... .. 2s. net

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

- scata ... .. 2s. net
laby ... .. 2s. net
Till-Tune ... .. 2s. net
diterranean ... .. 2s. net lesque ... .. 2s. net ond Sonata in G ... .. In the Press ntry Tune ... .. 2s. net

FIVE IRISH SONGS.

1. The Pigeons ... ..
2. As I came over the grey, } Complete, 6s. net grey hills ... .. } Separate numbers,
3. I heard a piper piping ... .. 2s. net each
4. Across the door ... ..
5. Beg-Innish ... ..

ARRANGEMENTS OF OLD SONGS.

- ditional Songs of France ... .. Complete, 6s. net arabande ... ..
langueo d'Amours ... .. } Separate, 2s. net each le suis Mise en Danse ... .. emmes, battez vos Marys ... ..
a Targo ... .. 2s. net ant d'Isabeau (Canadian) ... ..

MURDOCH, MURDOCH &amp; CO.,

LONDON'S CENTRAL MUSIC SHOP, 23, PRINCES STREET, OXFORD CIRCUS, W.

AND AT 463, OXFORD STREET.

REDUCED PRICE.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WATSON, numerous Illustrations, and a Special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B.,

TEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

Stiff Paper Cover.

A few copies in the original cloth binding are still to be had at the above reduced price.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" given to it is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading. Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this volume has been added.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a casual word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy in it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE "DISCUS"

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly one thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

MADE BY

WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

THE "STAR" EDITION
OF THE
ORATORIOS

Old Notation and Tonic Sol-fa together.

NOW READY.

	CREATION - - -	HAYDN
PRICE	ELIJAH - - -	MENDELSSOHN	PRICE
2/6	HYMN OF PRAISE } AND LAUDA SION }	MENDELSSOHN	2/6
	JUDAS MACCABÆUS -	HANDEL
EACH. .	MESSIAH - - -	HANDEL	EACH.
	ST. PAUL - - -	MENDELSSOHN

Postage extra, 6d. per volume. Sample copy forwarded, post free, to choirmasters, &c., upon receipt of 2s. 6d.

SPECIAL TERMS TO CHOIRS AND CHORAL SOCIETIES.

SOME RECENT OPINIONS.

"... I am pleased to notice this issue, as I have often thought the combined notations would prove far more serviceable than separately. It will simplify the conductor's efforts referring to the position of any passage he wishes to call attention to where both notations are used. Sol-faists will have the benefit of following the instrumentation, which itself will lead to far greater intelligence. ...."

"... I think the book is very neatly got up, the printing clear and paper good, and the two notations very convenient. ..."

"... I wish I had known of your edition of the 'Messiah' earlier. It is the best possible edition for a choir composed, as mine is, of Sol-faists and Staff readers. I have thoroughly recommended it, and next year will persuade all new members to have your edition. ...."

"... I think the edition is ideal, and the Tonic Sol-fa adds greatly to its value. ...."

J. PAXTON & CO., 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.2.

The English School of Lutenist Song-Writers.

TRANSCRIBED, SCORED, AND EDITED FROM THE ORIGINAL EDITIONS

By EDMUND H. FELLOWES, M.A., Mus.Doc.

Three Volumes now ready. Vol. 1, 5s.; Vols. 2 and 3, and subsequent Volumes, 6s. net each.

This Series is planned to produce in complete form the songs of the great Elizabethan and early Jacobean lutenists. The complete Series should include upwards of five hundred songs, all of which are set to the superb poetry of the Elizabethan period.

The first eight volumes will be the following:

1. JOHN DOWLAND. First Book of Aires, 1597 (Part 1, Nos. 1-10).
2. JOHN DOWLAND. " " 1597 (Part 2, Nos. 11-21).
3. THOMAS FORD. Aires to the Lute, from Musicke of Sundrie kindes, 1607.
4. THOMAS CAMPIAN. Songs from Rosseter's "Booke of Ayres," 1601 (Part 1).
5. JOHN DOWLAND. "Second Booke of Songes or Ayres," 1600 (Part 1).
6. JOHN DOWLAND. " " " 1600 (Part 2).
7. FRANCIS PILKINGTON. "First Booke of Songes or Ayres," 1605 (Part 1).
8. JOHN BARTLET, "Booke of Ayres," 1606 (Part 1).

THE EXTENT TO WHICH THE SCHEME CAN BE CARRIED AND THE SPEED OF PRODUCTION MUST DEPEND ENTIRELY UPON THE MEASURE OF SUPPORT WHICH IS GIVEN TO IT. The Editor looks with confidence to the English-speaking peoples throughout the world, as well as to musicians of other nationalities, to support this effort to supply a complete edition of this priceless store of song, the combined product of English Music and Literature at their greatest period.

WINTHROP ROGERS, LTD., 18, Berners Street, London, W.1.

THE CHURCH HYMNAL FOR THE CHRISTIAN YEAR

APPROVED BY A REPRESENTATIVE COMMITTEE OF CLERGY.

MUSICAL EDITORS:

HUGH BLAIR, M.A., MUS. DOC. CANTAB.

LISTER R. PEACE, M.A., A.R.C.O.

MUSIC EDITIONS.

	NET PRICES 1921.
	s.	d.
Enlarged, No. 1, Complete Indexes.	Cloth	7 6
Enlarged, No. 2. For Choir Use.	Cloth	6 0

WORDS EDITIONS.

	NET PRICES 1921.
	s.	d.
Large Type	...	...	Cloth 2
Small Type	...	...	Cloth 1

To be Published shortly.

WORDS ONLY. Medium type, with musical expression marks.

For Choir Boys and General Use. Price, Cloth, 3s. net.

CHILDREN'S SUPPLEMENT, SEPARATELY.

Music Edition, Cloth, 2s. 3d.

Words only, Limp Cloth, 6d.

Paper Covers, 3d.

REFEREES:

THE REV. PREBENDARY E. N. SHARPE (Chairman of Committee), The Vicarage, Paddington, W.

VICTORIA LADY CARBERY, 30, Cumberland Terrace, Regent's Park, London, N.W. to whom, as proprietor of the Book, application for grants of books should be made.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW WORKS BY ARTHUR BLISS

MADAM NOY

SONG FOR SOPRANO VOICE, FLUTE, CLARINET, BASSOON, HARP, VIOLA, AND DOUBLE-BASS.

Score and Parts ... .. Price 10s. net cash.

ARRANGEMENT FOR VOICE AND PIANO BY THE COMPOSER

Price 4s. net cash.

Cover Design by E. WADSWORTH.

TWO NURSERY RHYMES.

1. THE RAGWORT - - For Soprano, Clarinet, and Piano.

2. THE DANDELION - For Soprano and Clarinet.

Words by FRANCES CORNFORD.

Price 4s. net cash.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

The coming of Christmas.

CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Poem by Lady LINDSAY.
(By permission.)

Music by
Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

Allegro moderato.

1. Christ - mas is a - - draw - ing near, . . .

Christ - mas - tide and Christ - mas cheer, Mer - ry . . was - sail, mer - ry song, Joy - ous dance and roun - de - lay - . .

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

( 1 )

MADE IN ENGLAND.

THE COMING OF CHRISTMAS.

All that doth to Yule be-long: Yet un-to my

Lento.

soul I say: "Thou that slum-ber-est, wake and pray."

2. Christ - mas is a - - near - ing quite, . . .

Time of feast and full de - light, Plea - sant pomp and

THE COMING OF CHRISTMAS.

al - le-gresse, Harp and vi - ol's mu-sic gay, . .

Jew - elled to - kens, gau - dy dress: Yet un - to my soul I say: "Thou that slum-ber-est, wake and pray."

Lento.

f

3. Christ - mas is a - - chi - ming soon, . . .

THE COMING OF CHRISTMAS.

Bring - ing Love for choic - est boon, Pen - sion - ers to sit in hall, Com - rades, friends of many a day, .

The first system of musical notation for the song. It consists of a treble and bass staff in G major (one sharp). The melody is in the treble staff, and the accompaniment is in the bass staff. The lyrics are written below the notes.

The second system of musical notation. It continues the melody and accompaniment from the first system. The lyrics are written below the notes.

Greet - ing fair for great and small : Yet un - to my

The third system of musical notation. It continues the melody and accompaniment. The lyrics are written below the notes. The word 'p' (piano) is written above the final note of the treble staff.

Lento.
soul I say : "Thou that slum - ber - est, wake and pray."

The fourth system of musical notation. It begins with the tempo marking 'Lento.' above the treble staff. The melody and accompaniment continue. The lyrics are written below the notes. The word 'pp' (pianissimo) is written above the final note of the treble staff.

This Supplement is part also of the November issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 160.

MANCHESTER AS A COMPETITION CENTRE.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

Manchester occupies an anomalous position in the Competitive Festival movement. The acknowledged musical centre of the most populous industrial area in the world, with a record of interest in and devotion to choral music in particular which literally goes back through the ages, how comes it that, unlike East London, Birmingham, and Glasgow, Manchester has hitherto been indifferent to the good which would accrue from a thoroughly well co-ordinated scheme such as is to be found in the afore-named cities, not to mention some of the Lancashire developments which have sprung up on its coast-line? Tentative efforts have been made, but they are narrowly sectional, originating either as purely commercial propositions, or, as was the case recently, in a merely sectarian effort on the part of musical people meeting at the Diocesan Church House, with assistance to a 'charitable waifs' and strays' institution as its objective (but, unhappily, not yielding a surplus); or again, as will be the case late in October, a movement along rankly Eisteddfod lines by the Welsh community domiciled here. This dissipation of effort is simply lamentable; it is thoroughly wrong-headed, and no good can come either to promoters or participants. It cannot be that Manchester lacks the right representative people whose co-operation in such a scheme on a generous scale would command success, artistic and material; they literally abound—men and women of capacity, experience, energy, and, above all, of enlightened ideas. The lack is of some powerful unifying personality who shall command unquestioned allegiance, both on the grounds of ideals and practicability, and the crying need of Manchester's musical life to-day is, first, an awakening to the supreme folly of prolonging this dissipation of effort, and, secondly, the emergence of this compelling personality who shall know what he is about, and so carry conviction to the minds of the great public.

THE BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL.—October 18-22.

Not a little of the success of this Festival, from its inception in 1901, has been due to the permanent character of its executive, this continuity having been especially manifest in the secretariat. After twenty-one years' work as hon. secretary, Mr. L. H. Franceys has now retired to the less arduous duties of vice-chairman of the executive, and suitable acknowledgment of his untiring efforts is made in the preface to the programme, where his name is associated with those of the late Miss Wakefield (Westmorland), the late Canon Gorton, Mr. R. G. W. Howson (Morecambe), and the late W. G. McNaught, as staunchest of adherents to the doctrine of paramountcy of artistic principles over all other considerations, financial or economic. The executive is to perpetuate Mr. Franceys' long connection by the provision of a special trophy bearing his name for use in future festivals.

Crowded audiences, spacious corridors, and splendidly appointed halls thronged with competitors greeted the visitor to this Festival. The easy accessibility of the various halls made the task of hearing competitions proceeding simultaneously a comparatively easy one, and a complete stranger found no difficulty in moving about, so carefully guide-posted were the promenades and corners of the Winter Gardens. Broadly speaking, the week was subdivided: Tuesday and Friday, morning and afternoon, were devoted to juniors' performances—instrumental, vocal, and dancing; Wednesday, predominantly to operatic work and to four sections of the adult vocalists in the song-cycles; on Thursday the song-cycles were continued, and completed in the 'Rose Bowl' class, in which the winners gave the respective cycles at the evening concert—a matter of twenty songs. Variety in this day's competitions was provided by a class for advanced pianists and quartet singing. Saturday was given up to choral singing from early morning to ten o'clock at night.

At three of the evening sessions (lasting from 6 or 6.30 until 10 p.m.) considerable time was devoted to church and chapel choir-singing of anthems, chants, and hymns, with roughly twenty places of worship represented. It is difficult to overestimate the leavening influence of participation in such events. The audience (generally members of some congregation) perceives that a higher level of attainment is possible, and is stimulated to a more helpful appreciation, not only of the difficulties confronting average choirmasters where voluntary choirs are the rule, but also of the benefits which flow from concentration on Festival work like the anthems by the 16th century Christopher Tye, or by Dr. Bairstow, which were among those used; nor surely can audiences tolerate any longer the snail-pace hymn-singing so common after the wholesome examples of hymn-singing revealed on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings in 'Nun danket' or Monk's 'Angel voices.' Every member of the crowded auditorium had a book of words, and the lesson could have been driven home still more effectually by massed singing from the audience in association with some of the choirs. They would then have felt what real rhythm meant in congregational singing. Many of these choirs were quite well-balanced, although Noble's setting of 'Hail, gladdening Light' proved too severe a test when it broke into six- or eight-part harmony. Some can manage a divided soprano, but tenors usually find it enough to sing one part, let alone two. One may hope that experiences of this sort will lead all concerned to see that such examples of church music well studied are of more use to their worship than dissipated effort on cantatas or the minor oratorios. Worship to-day stands in some danger from the pretentious both among composers and choirmasters, and old Christopher Tye's anthem must have been a conspicuous object-lesson of the beauties and grace of simplicity.

The juvenile instrumental classes, as usual, had many entrants who were not adequately equipped for the task. The standards were stiff, but to relax them, as is often advocated, would lead only to flattering personal vanities, and in the long run would be productive of less good than along present methods. The adjudicators in the pianoforte work, Messrs. C. H. Kelly and T. Keighley, warmly commended the choices from McEwen, Swinestead, and York Bowen as welcome and timely. Two young Yorkshire players in the chief violin class playing (without the cadenza) the first movement of Mozart's A major are additional evidences of discoveries of capacity by this Festival movement which otherwise might have remained hidden and undeveloped.

THE SOLO-SINGING.

The song-cycle innovation, of which mention has been made in previous issues, has triumphantly emerged from the severe test to which it has been put. Involving the preparation of much more material than in former years, the slightly diminished entry may be taken to represent the strictly less competents of former years, so that artistic gain has accrued to performers and audience from such abstentions. The judges, Madame Edith Hands, Madame Gleeson-White, Mr. Bonavia, Mr. Plunket Greene, and Mr. P. le Vallon, each exercised a wise discretion in utilizing the variety of material to their hands, and the audiences were not slow to seize the chance of hearing the wider range of songs thus provided.

What of quality amongst the competitors? Naturally among five or six hundred entrants there was a negligible residue; but with the possible exceptions of the mezzo class and that for basses, there was in each of the other classes an emergence of some half-dozen men and women with not only beautiful voices but emotional and intellectual qualities far in advance of reasonable expectations. The choice of Vaughan Williams' 'On Wenlock Edge' was regarded in some quarters as bordering on lunacy, yet in the event I heard nine tenors of whom six had real distinction, and of the winner Mr. Plunket Greene said in effect that were he beginning a career as a tenor he would wish no better vocal equipment than this exponent from Todmorden possessed. Julius Harrison's 'Fiammetta' cycle also produced many lamentations in advance, but again half-a-dozen women arose and confounded the croakers. With 'On Wenlock Edge' this was probably the artistic rarity of the Festival in this kind, and so abundant evidence is available to show that the very boldness of the departure has at once lifted the solo work out of the comparative poverty of accomplishment revealed last year on to a definitely higher plane. Probably the intellectual demands of all this music has at one end served as a deterrent but at the other quickened appreciation and perception, and this in turn has undoubtedly reacted on the audiences, which have been larger, keener, and more discerning.

The Rose Bowl Competition ostensibly is designed for the discovery of the best singer among the six surviving soloists. There is no firm basis for accurate comparison of merit, but the song-cycles heard from the successive singers furnished a glorious programme of music. If there can be no possible accurate measurement of relative technical powers, the occasion should (and actually did) throw into greater prominence any decided temperamental gifts. The lady who had amongst her Berlioz songs the 'Spectre of the Rose' hardly realised her possibilities; the singer of the four Brahms 'Serious Songs' had the most sustained opportunity, and exhibited some reasonable approximation to the needed nobility of style. The singers of the 'Fiammetta' and 'Maud' cycles scarcely maintained the level of their preliminary work, so that the tenor in 'On Wenlock Edge' and the contralto in the Browning-Bantock dramatic lyrics were almost left with the field to themselves. Incidentally, it may be stated that these, together with 'Fiammetta', attracted continuously the largest audiences during the preliminary singing. The best songs in 'On Wenlock Edge' in one brief day at this Festival became intimately known not only to some two score tenors, but probably to a couple of thousand listeners. How many professional tenors sing them publicly, and to what size of audiences? There is food for much reflection here. The Browning-Bantock arguments on woman's love were presented with such convincing emotional appeal that the destination of the trophy was no longer in question. Mrs. Vera McLean, of Preston, revealed a voice swiftly responsive to her exceptionally strong imaginative and emotional gifts, and it may easily become a much finer and disciplined instrument.

THE CHILDREN'S DAY.

Some portions of the juvenile performances took place on the earlier days of the Festival, but by long association of idea, Friday is emphatically 'Children's day.' Whether it will ever work back to its old proud position of supremacy in the public mind would seem to lie with teachers in the Elementary schools, and the outlook is not promising. Possibly some remodelling of at any rate the junior choral classes will have to be undertaken. Individual performances, both instrumental and vocal, increase in numbers and efficiency. The music was bright and cheerful, appealing irresistibly to young and old alike. What action-songs we heard were not calculated to raise this feature in public esteem. The folk-dances received no assistance from Blackpool schools, teams coming from a Blackburn school and Fylde Village—Wrea Green.

THE CHORAL SINGING.

Saturday's great choral events went far to re-establish the old-time standards of performance. It is probably true to say that in the male-voice department no such formidable assembly of good choirs in music of such graphic power has been present at any Festival in the North. In 1914, at Birmingham, seven choirs sang in the great Bach Motet 'Sing ye to the Lord'; on October 22 nine choirs, drawn from Blackpool, Blackburn, Hebburn-on-Tyne, Halifax, Huddersfield (Gledholt), Kendal, Morecambe, and Manchester, came together to sing before Sir H. P. Aller and Mr. F. Austin the first two movements of this Motet, the four best each singing in the evening the entire work. A note in the programme intimated in quite uncompromising language that Bach is the musical Bible—the foundation of the faith—and that any person whom Bach fails to interest had better renounce all pretence to being musical. One ventures to believe that the monster throng of three or four thousand who listened with such enthusiasm to over a dozen renderings of this stupendous work would disperse to become active Bach propagandists. Quite possibly some of these choirs and even their conductors had had no previous experience of Bach's bigger-scale works; but one watched the result of turning them loose on this Motet with no feelings of misgiving, confident that though some were novices, all would be eager triers and quick to take advantage of hints. If perseverance in the acquisition of a Bach style more nearly approaching the ideal is forth coming, improvement on these very satisfactory performances will follow along three main lines: (1) a smoother delivery of florid passage work; (2) the abandonment of all idea of sentimentalizing Bach's slow movements, coupling with this a realization that delicacy of nuance is equally out of place (Bach's degrees of for or piano are obtained by adding to or cutting off a vocal part); (3) an appreciation of the vitalizing effect of a real vivace rhythm in such a movement as the 'All breathing life' fugue; perhaps the last can only come when an adequate technique has been acquired.

No other work conveys so vividly the sense of the multitudinous in song, and after climbing such Pisgah heights what a prospect of future possibilities is disclosed from the summit of those exultant closing 'Hallelujahs.' In the presence of art so august the ordinary critical, fault-finding spirit is silenced, and thoughts are turned rather to the task of ascertaining how far it is possible to utilise in a legitimate manner this Festival movement as an instrument for shaping and perfecting the development of a true Bach choral style. Perseverance on the part of conductors and executives can do much in directing the enthusiasm of the singers to this desired goal. Can matters be so devised that amongst choirs resident in given contiguous areas, e.g., Lancashire and West Riding, who habitually attend such Festivals as this or Morecambe, &c., the study entailed by the preparation of this Motet can be followed up? At Birmingham next May, for example, Bach's 'Be not afraid' Motet is to be used (probably some northern choirs will be present), and at Lytham in the following month it is understood that another Bach work is in contemplation. The main point is to substitute a systematic course of Bach study for more or less casual or haphazard choices. Many people whose judgment is trustworthy believe that the acquisition of a perfected Bach style is the best antidote for the poisons of false styles which have found their way into the body choral, and as Mozart's operatic style was found under the Beecham regime to nourish practically every other in which English singers appeared, so, in due course, the lessons learned in Bach will fructify in a vastly enlarged capacity for handling adequately the modern problems of choral song. Consideration of other aspects of the Festival must be reserved for the December issue.

We give below the results in the orchestral, adult solo-singing, and adult choral competitions:

FULL ORCHESTRAS.

Test: 'Celtic Suite' (J. H. Foulds).

- 1st. Ossett Orchestral Society (Mr. Harold Leach).
- 2nd. Blackpool Philharmonic Orchestra (Mr. Jesse Spencer).

STRING ORCHESTRAS.

Test: Suite for Strings (Purcell) (arranged by Albert Coates).

- c. Huddersfield Philharmonic Society (Mr. Fletcher Sykes).
d. Blackpool Philharmonic Orchestra (Mr. Jesse Spencer).

SOLO-SINGING.

Soprano.—Miss Olive Whitaker, Oldham.
Soprano (Operatic).—Miss J. Roberts, Cleckheaton.
Mezzo-Soprano.—Miss Cissie Bowler, Darwen.
Contralto.—Mrs. Vera McLean, Preston.
Tenor.—Mr. Barker Beaumont, Todmorden.
Baritone.—Mr. Ernest Pollard, Harlesyke.
Baritone (Operatic).—Mr. T. Walton Pritchard, Chester.
Bass.—Mr. J. W. Greenwood, Hebden Bridge.

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS (A).

- Sale and District Musical Society (Mr. Alfred Higson).
Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. Herbert Whittaker).
d. Blackpool Orpheus Ladies' Choir (Mr. J. S. Warburton).
Horbury Bridge Social Glee Union, Wakefield (Mr. Sam Peace).
Kendal Ladies' Choir (Mr. Paul Rochard).
Dr. Herman Brearley's Choir, Blackburn (Dr. Herman Brearley).
Mr. Aldous' Choir, Lancaster (Mr. J. W. Aldous).
Mr. E. R. Benton's Ladies' Choir, Grimsby (Mr. Edward R. Benton).
Blackpool Lyric Ladies' Choir (Mr. Percy M. Dayman).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS, TENOR LEAD (A) (nineteen entries).

- C.W.S., Manchester (Mr. Alfred Higson).
d. Hadley and District Orpheus (Mr. Raymond Lewis).
Southport Harmonic (Mr. J. P. Hill).
Stourbridge Institute (Mr. G. H. Woodall).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (A).

- Blackpool Orpheus Glee Society (Mr. J. S. Warburton).
Dr. Brearley's Contest Choir, Blackburn (Dr. H. Brearley).
Halifax Madrigal Society (Mr. H. Shepley).
Kendal Competitive Choir (Mr. Paul Rochard).
Mr. Aldous' Choir, Lancaster (Mr. J. W. Aldous).
Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. Herbert Whittaker).
Hebburn Mixed-Voice Choir (Mr. T. E. Simpson).
Morecambe Madrigal and Festival Choral Society (Mr. James Cooper).
d. Gledholt Vocal Union (Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes).
Sale and District Musical Society (Mr. Alfred Higson).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIR SIGHT-TEST (twelve entries).

- Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. Herbert Whittaker).
d. Gledholt Vocal Union (Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes).
Halifax Madrigal Society (Mr. H. Shepley).

OTHER CHORAL COMPETITIONS.

- Church Choirs (A) (eight entries).—1st, Adelaide U.M., Blackpool (Mr. J. S. Warburton).
Church Choirs (B) (six entries).—1st, Springfield Road U.M., Blackpool (Mr. P. M. Dayman).
Church Choirs (men and boys) (five entries).—1st, St. Paul's, North Shore (Mr. Frank Hill).
Female-Voice Choirs (B) (four entries).—1st, Hesketh Vocal Union, Preston (Mr. P. Whiteside).
Male-Voice Choirs, Alto Lead (eight entries).—1st, Matlock Prize Choir (Mr. L. G. Wildgoose).
Mixed-Voice Choirs (B) (nine entries).—1st, Ryecroft Vocal Society (Mr. Jack Ramsden).

SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

A two-days' Competition Festival was associated with the Musical Festival held at Walsall during the second week of October, of which an account appears in the Musical Times for the present month.

Saturday, October 8, was occupied with some preliminary tests for solo singers, the adjudicators being Mr. Richard Wassell and Mr. Sydney Grew. There were over a hundred and thirty competitors, many of whom revealed good voices and excellent musicianship. Each candidate had a choice of songs; few selected such a song as the delicate Quilter-Blake piece, 'Memory, hither come,' when the alternative was such an orthodox piece as the Tchaikovsky 'None but a lonely heart.' Yet the carefully calculated 'Wanderer's Song' of Julius Harrison was favoured by three singers to the one who favoured Tchaikovsky's 'To the Forest.' There was one test-song quite unworthy of association with pieces like those just named, or other pieces like Parry's 'Odes of Anacreon,' the Bantock-Browning 'A woman's last word,' or 'Onaway, awake.' It is unfair to introduce one class to less useful music than another class.

Saturday, October 15, with Mr. Ernest Newman and Mr. Julius Harrison adjudicating, was filled with the testing of the forty-three selected solo singers and the eighteen choirs. The choral test-pieces were simple, but effective and adequate. The chief feature revealed in the choral competitions was the superb beauty of the basses. These had the profundity of tone which belongs to the organ, with the expressive flexibility of the bassoon and contra-bass. Such basses do not seem inclined to join the larger choral societies of the district, but if they could be induced to do so, and if the men proved to have as much musical intelligence as natural beauty and power of voice, their work in the public choral concerts of South Staffordshire would do a great deal towards perfecting these events.

We give below the tests, entries, and results of the choral competitions:

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Test: 'Sound sleep' (Vaughan Williams).

- 2nd. Willenhall (Mr. E. Dunton).
1st. Willenhall P.M. (Mr. Ernest Downing).
Wolverhampton (Dr. Darby).
Wednesbury and District (Mr. Ernest Amphlett).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Test: 'The Assyrian came down' (Cyril Jenkins).

- Mills Male-Voice Prize Choir (Mr. W. H. Jennings).
1st. Willenhall (Mr. E. Dunton).
2nd. Old Park (Mr. F. O. Page).
Wolverhampton Apollo (Mr. H. Underwood).
Cheslyn Hay Working Men's Club (Mr. Ernest Amphlett).
Ocker Hill and District Choral Society (Mr. F. O. Page).
Willenhall P.M. (Mr. Arthur Morris).
Victoria Tube Works, Great Bridge (Mr. J. Bannister).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

Test: 'Death on the hills' (Elgar).

- 1st. Walsall Madrigal Society (Mr. Joseph Yates).
Darlington Street Wesleyan Church Choir, Wolverhampton (Mr. Walter Morgan).
2nd. Wolverhampton Mixed Choir (Dr. Darby).
Wednesbury and District Ladies' Choir and Gleemen (Mr. Ernest Amphlett).
Willenhall Mixed Choir (Mr. Ernest Dunton).
Hednesford and District Philharmonic Society (Mr. Ernest Amphlett).

The prizes for solo singing were won by Miss Enid L. Finch (soprano), Miss Edith Ryder (contralto), Mr. W. Ingram Benning (tenor), Mr. C. H. Keeling (baritone), and Mr. Bert Gaunt (bass).

NOVELLO'S CLASSICAL SONGS.

Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment.

VOLUME I.

THIRTY-FIVE CLASSICAL SONGS.

Alone ... ..	Mendelssohn	May-dew ... ..	W. Sterndale Benn
Autumn Song ... ..	Mendelssohn	May Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Come, ever-smiling Liberty ... ..	Handel	Mermaid's Song, The ... ..	Hay
Come, gladsome Spring ... ..	Handel	My mother bids me bind my hair ... ..	Hay
Come, happy Spring ... ..	Giordani	O for the wings of a dove ... ..	Mendelssohn
Contentment ... ..	Mozart	O sunny beam ... ..	Schumann
Cottage, The ... ..	Schumann	Rose, softly blooming ... ..	Spi
Creation's Hymn ... ..	Beethoven	Say, ye who borrow ... ..	Moz
Crusaders ... ..	Schubert	Slumber Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Evening Song ... ..	Mendelssohn	Song of May, A ... ..	Beetho
Fairest Isle ... ..	Purcell	Sun of the sleepless ... ..	Mendelssohn
First violet, The ... ..	Mendelssohn	To Chloe (in sickness) ... ..	W. Sterndale Benn
Fisherman, The ... ..	Schubert	Verdant Meadows ... ..	Han
Forget me not ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	Wandering Miller, The ... ..	Schut
Greeting ... ..	Mendelssohn	Welcome to Spring ... ..	Mendelssohn
Hark! hark! the lark ... ..	Schubert	Whither ... ..	Schut
Hear thou my weeping ... ..	Handel	Who is Sylvia? ... ..	Schut
Hey, Baloo! ... ..	Schumann

VOLUME II.

THIRTY-SIX CLASSICAL SONGS.

Angels, ever bright and fair ... ..	Handel	Lord, at all times I will bless Thee... ..	Mendelssohn
Ave Maria ... ..	Schubert	Lotos Flower, The ... ..	Schumann
Bird is softly calling, A ... ..	Mendelssohn	O star of Eve ... ..	Wag
Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... ..	Arne	Old German Spring Song (Frühlingslied)... ..	Mendelssohn
By Celia's Arbour (The Garland) ... ..	Mendelssohn	On Wings of Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Coming of Spring, The ... ..	Schumann	Rose among the heather ... ..	Schut
Cradle Song ... ..	Schubert	Sailor's Song, The ... ..	Hay
Evening Star, The ... ..	Schumann	Slumber, beloved ... ..	Bi
Fisher's Song ... ..	Schubert	Smiling dawn of happy days, The ... ..	Han
Free mind, The ... ..	Schumann	Thou art repose ... ..	Schut
Garland, The (By Celia's Arbour) ... ..	Mendelssohn	Though far away ... ..	Mendelssohn
Gentle zephyr ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	Thou'rt like unto a flower ... ..	Schumann
Holiday on the Rhine, A ... ..	Schumann	To Music ... ..	Schut
Huntsman, rest ... ..	Schubert	Trust in Spring ... ..	Schut
I love thee... ..	Beethoven	Two Grenadiers, The ... ..	Schumann
Joy of Spring, The ... ..	Mendelssohn	Wanderer's Night-Song ... ..	Schumann
Know'st thou the land? ... ..	Beethoven	Where'er you walk ... ..	Han
Lay of the imprisoned huntsman ... ..	Schubert	Where the Bee sucks ... ..	Ar
Litany ... ..	Schubert

VOLUME III.

THIRTY-EIGHT CLASSICAL SONGS.

Art thou troubled (Dove sei) ... ..	Handel	Memory, A ... ..	Brah
But the Lord is mindful of His own ... ..	Mendelssohn	Morning Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Butterfly, The ... ..	Cornelius	Nazareth ... ..	Gour
Courage ... ..	Schubert	Nymphs and Shepherds ... ..	Purc
Dawn, gentle flower ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	O my love's like the red, red rose ... ..	Schuma
Deep treasure'd in my heart ... ..	Schumann	O rest in the Lord ... ..	Mendelssohn
Erlaf-lake ... ..	Schubert	O think of me ... ..	Cornel
Fishermaiden, The ... ..	Schubert	Ode to joy... ..	Schub
Full-orbed moon, The ... ..	Schubert	Of in my dreams ... ..	Cornel
Good-night, my dearest child... ..	... Brahms	Oh I had I Jubal's lyre... ..	Han
Greeting to Spring, A ... ..	Schumann	Out over the Forth ... ..	Schuma
How beautiful are the feet ... ..	Handel	Peace ... ..	Schub
I will sing of Thy great mercies ... ..	Mendelssohn	Sandman, The ... ..	Schuma
In May ... ..	Schumann	Secrets ... ..	Schub
Know'st thou the land? ... ..	Schubert	Sing, Maiden, sing ... ..	W. Sterndale Benn
Lark, The ... ..	Rubinstein	Spring advancing (Frühlingsglaube) ... ..	Mendelssohn
Let the bright Seraphim ... ..	Handel	Swallow's flying west, The ... ..	Brah
Little Sandman, The ... ..	... Brahms	Trout, The ... ..	Schub
Lord of our being (Sorge nel petto)... ..	Handel	Violets ... ..	Cornel

VOLUME IV.

THIRTY CLASSICAL SONGS.

Cherry Ripe ... ..	Horn	Lullaby ... ..	Brah
Children at play ... ..	Mozart	My heart ever faithful ... ..	Ba
Come let us all this day ... ..	Bach	Now fades the sun's last lingering ray ... ..	Fa
Flower thou resemblest, A ... ..	Rubinstein	O come, do not delay ("The Marriage of Figaro") ... ..	Moz
Gentle flowers ("Faust") ... ..	Gounod	Organ-grinder, The ... ..	Schub
Gentle touch, The ... ..	Goetz	Orpheus with his lute ... ..	Sullivan
Greenwood calls, The ... ..	Schubert	Prepare thyself, Zion ... ..	Ba
Harper's Song, The ... ..	Schubert	Serenade ... ..	Goun
I attempt from love's sickness ... ..	Purcell	Shepherds, The ... ..	Cornel
It was a lover ... ..	Morely	Tender wood-dove ... ..	Goun
Jerusalem ... ..	Mendelssohn	Under the greenwood tree ... ..	Ar
Lass with the delicate air, The ... ..	Arne	Violet, The ... ..	Moz
Legend ... ..	Tchaikovsky	Walnut-tree, The ... ..	Schuma
Like to a linden tree ... ..	... Dvorak	When all was young ("Faust") ... ..	Goun
Longing ... ..	Schubert	When daisies pied ... ..	Ar

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS EACH VOLUME.

Separate Numbers from 2d. to 3d. In Books, containing six or eight songs, from 8d. to 1s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

ANTHEM FOR CHRISTMAS

isaiah lx. i, ix. 2; 2 Esdras ii. 37.

MUSIC BY

H. A. CHAMBERS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro moderato. SOPRANO. FULL. mf A - rise,

Allegro moderato. ♩ = 108. mf (Gt. Sv. coup.) Gt. to Ped.

shine, for thy light is come, and the glo - ry of the Lord is ris - en up - on thee. A - rise, shine, for thy light is come, and the ALTO. A - rise, . . . shine, for thy light is come,

TENOR. A - rise, shine, for thy light is come,

BASS. A - rise, shine, for thy light is come,

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME.

cres. ff

glo - ry of the Lord . . is ris - en up - on thee, is

f cres. ff

And the glo - ry of the Lord . . is

f cres. ff

and the glo - ry of the Lord is ris - en up

f cres. ff

and the glo - ry of the

ris - en, ris - en up - on thee.

ris - en, ris - en up - on . . thee.

ff ff

on thee, is ris - en up - on . . thee.

Lord . . is ris - en up - on thee.

Gt. or Ch. uncoup.

Sw. Reed.

p

The peo - ple that walked in dark - ness . . have

p

The peo - ple that walked in dark - ness . . have

Sw. (Reed in.)

Sw. to Ped.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME.

Gt. to Ped.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

shi - ned, on them hath the light . . shi - ned. . .

shi - ned, on them hath the light shi - ned. . .

shi - ned, on them hath the light . . shi - ned. . .

shi - ned, on them hath the light shi - ned. . .

A - rise, shine, for thy light is

A - rise, shine, for thy light is

A - rise, shine, for thy light is

A - rise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glo - ry of the Lord is ris - en up - on thee. A - rise, come, and the glo - ry of the Lord is ris - en up - on thee. A - rise, come, and the glo - ry of the Lord is ris - en up - on thee. A - rise, come, and the glo - ry of the Lord is ris - en up - on thee. A - rise,

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME.

shine, for thy light is come, a - rise, shine, for thy light is shine, for thy light is come, a - rise, shine, for thy light is shine, for thy light is come, a rise, . . . shine, for thy light is shine, for thy light is come, a - rise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glo - ry of the Lord, the glo - ry of the come, and the glo - ry of the Lord . . . is come, and the
 Lord is ris - en up - on thee, is ris - en up - on . . .
 Lord is ris - en up - on thee, is ris - en up - on . . .
 ris - en, is ris - en up - on thee, is ris - en up - on . . .
 glo - ry is ris - en up - on thee, is ris - en up - on . . .

cres.
cres.
cres.
cres.
f
f
f
f
marcato.
marcato.
marcato.
marcato.
poco rall.
poco rall.
poco rall.
poco rall.
poco rall.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME.

Andante.

(Solo ad lib.) p espress.

thee. . . . . O re - ceive, re - ceive the gift that is thee.

thee.

thee.

Andante. ♩ = 92.

mp Sw. p Man.

giv - en you, and be glad, and be glad, re - ceive the gift, and be glad. . . .

(FULL.)

mp cres.

O re - ceive, re - ceive the gift that is giv - en you, and be glad, be

mp cres.

O re - ceive, re - ceive the gift that is giv - en you, and be glad, . . be

mp cres.

O re - ceive, re - ceive the gift that is giv - en you, and be glad, be . .

mp cres.

O re - - ceive . . the gift that is giv - en you, and be glad, be ad lib. cres.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME.

(Solo.)
mf
 glad, re-ceive the gift, and be glad, giv-ing thanks to Him, giv-ing thanks... to..
 glad, re-ceive the gift, and be glad.
 glad, re-ceive the gift, and be glad.
 glad, re-ceive the gift, and be glad.
mf
Man.
 Him that hath call-ed you, hath call-ed you to the heav'n - ly king - dom.
(FULL.)
p
cres.
 O re - ceive, re - ceive the gift that is giv - en you, the gift that is
p
cres.
 O re - ceive, re - ceive the gift that is giv - en you, the gift that is
p
cres.
 O re - ceive, re - ceive the gift that is giv - en you, the gift that is
p
cres.
 O re - ceive the gift that is giv - en you, the gift that is
p
ad lib.
cres.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME.

First system of the musical score. It consists of five staves. The first four staves are vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and the fifth is a grand piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "giv - en you, and be glad, be glad, re - ceive the gift, . . . and be glad, giv - en you, and be glad, be glad, . . re - ceive, receive the gift, and be glad, giv - en you, and be glad, be . . glad, re - ceive, receive the gift, and be glad, giv - en you, and be glad, be glad, . . re - ceive the gift, and be glad,". The music features a melodic line with a "dim." (diminuendo) marking. The piano part includes a section marked "Gt. 8 ft." and "p Sw." (piano swell), ending with "Sw. to Ped." (swell to pedal).

Second system of the musical score. It consists of five staves. The first four staves are vocal parts and the fifth is a grand piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "O re - ceive, re - ceive the gift. O re - ceive the gift. O re - ceive the gift. O re - ceive the . . gift." The music features a melodic line with a "pp" (pianissimo) marking and a "morendo." (morendo) marking. The piano part includes a section marked "Sw." (swell) and "ppp" (pianississimo).

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 946.—Vol. 62
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

DECEMBER 1 1921

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Conductor: Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

FIFTY-FIRST SEASON, 1921-22.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

CAROLS

MISS LAURA EVANS-WILLIAMS.
MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. JOHN COATES.
MR. HARRY DEARTH.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS CARRIE TUBB.
MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. WILLIAM BOLAND.
MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

FULL CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

At the Organ: Mr. H. L. BALFOUR, Mus. Bac.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

100, MARK LANE, MARK LANE, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus.Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

WEDNESDAY CONCERT, Saturday, December 3, at 3.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Wednesday,
December 7, at 3.

WINTER TERM will begin on January 9, 1922.

GRAND EXAMINATION on or about January 5.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

100, MARK LANE, MARK LANE, LONDON, S.W.7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1893.)

Telegrams:
Musical, South Kensington, London."

Telephone:
"1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Students who wish to enter the College are asked to send in forms of application as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Admission and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND has been established by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart., for the encouragement of young Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres.
Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 8th, 1922.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 1st, 1922.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed Centres in March-April, 1922, and in all subsequent periods. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

An official edition of Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte, and of Music for Violin, and also of Written Papers, is published by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... .. LANDON RONALD.

Fees for Curriculum, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Single Subjects, from
£2 2s. 6d.

THE SCHOOL BEING NOW FULL

It is necessary for Students intending to join for next term (January 9th) to make immediate application.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAM-INATION are:

Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. J. S. Bach. (Novello & Co., Book 10, p. 214; Augener & Co., p. 382; Peters, Vol. I.)

Choral Prelude on "Darwell's 148th," No. 2 of Three Choral Preludes. H. E. Darke. (Novello & Co.)

Prelude and Angel's Farewell (Gerontius). E. Elgar. Arranged by A. H. Brewer (this arrangement only). (Novello & Co.)

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the January, 1922, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for July, 1921.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their Names for FELLOWSHIP by DECEMBER 8th, for ASSOCIATESHIP by DECEMBER 15th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS proposal forms duly filled up must be sent in before December 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

The Distribution of Diplomas by the President, Dr. C. Macpherson, will take place on Saturday, January 21st, at 11 o'clock.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Books of Examination Papers may be obtained by members only.
Vol. I., 1881-96, price 6s.; Vol. II., 1897-1906, price 8s. 3d.
including postage.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.,
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Thirtieth Year began on October 10.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and opera.

School Performances: Musical Afternoon, December 10; Musical Evening, December 19; Orchestral Concert, December 22
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND
STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC. GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. Bac. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London, and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom on DECEMBER. Last day of entry, November 8.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Association (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A.M.L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L.Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary
Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 387.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.
Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATHURST.

THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE.

21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C. 1.

APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses have been drawn up by an experienced teacher of this subject. These are non-technical, and are enjoyable to all interested in Music.

Further particulars from Secretary.

THE TECHNIQUE

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

A LECTURE DEMONSTRATION will be given by Mr. R. PITCHER, on Thursday, January 5, 1922, when the chair will be taken by RICHARD H. WALTHER, Esq.

A Recital of Pianoforte Music by Tchaikovsky, Scriabin, and Chopin will be given at the end.

ADMISSION FREE.

Send for particulars and testimonials of the Technique.

"Hand Development" - - - 7d.

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O., Secretary,
21, Boundary Road, N.W. 1.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System) covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly most interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Full Particulars, address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

POSTAL TRAINING IN MUSIC.

COMPLETE AND INDIVIDUAL PREPARATION FOR L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., AND ALL DIPLOMAS OF T.C.L. AND R.C.O.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES AT THESE EXAMINATIONS.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

- (1) L.R.A.M. Paper Work. Revision Lessons for Xmas Exam.
- (2) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Revision Lessons for Jan. Exam.
- (3) A.R.C.M. Paper Work. Full Course for April Exam.

PRACTICAL WORK.

Personal Lessons in London, Bath, and Bristol.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

MUS. DOC. (LONDON).

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O. L.R.A.M.

CANDIDATES for the above cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Course in "From Brain to Keyboard," to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

- "Far beyond anything I ever expected."
- "I have practically a new pair of hands."
- "The fee you charge is a mere nothing."
- "I am quite unable to express my gratitude."
- "Your discovery marks a new epoch."
- "The best outlay I have ever made."
- "I can play pieces hitherto undreamt of."
- "I have passed my exam. with honours."
- "Your system is simply marvellous."
- "The half was not told me."

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

The illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. In applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MR. CHARLES TREE

LECTURE-RECITALS on

THE ART OF THE "BEL CANTO."

Forfar Herald, November 10, 1921.—"The eminent baritone added to his high reputation. A real treat to an audience, the dimensions of which reflected the drawing power of the lecturer and his subject. He enthralled them from beginning to end. Much delight and amusement were afforded, and he closed amid a veritable crescendo of appreciation."

Wolverton Standard, October 15, 1921.—"A big audience. An evening interesting and entertaining to a degree spent with this great singer."

Darwen News, November 5, 1921.—"An evening remarkable not only for its entertaining qualities, but also for the easy manner in which he deals with the subject." A packed house.

Coventry Philharmonic.—Telegraph, November 9, 1921.—"A large audience, full of interest for the subject. Ripples of merriment continually ran through the gathering. He finished to prolonged applause."

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s. 2d.).

(If difficult to obtain this work, write direct to author.)

Mr. Matthews (Coventry conductor) writes: "How appreciated it all was, and what a bumper audience. Intense interest from beginning to end."

Mr. Tree will have ready about January, 1922, "A Book of Exercises for Vocal Placement" (with amplified instruction as to use of same) Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5.

WALLASEY MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

FIVE GUINEAS

Will be awarded for an ORIGINAL FOUR-PART SONG for MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS suitable for Competition.

Copyright to belong to Composer.

For Conditions send stamped addressed envelope to CHAS. E. COWLEY, Hon. Sec., 44, Canterbury Road, Wallasey.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO (Bach) will be given with full Orchestra and Organ, at St. Anne's, Soho, on FRIDAY EVENINGS, December 16, 23, and January 6, at 8 p.m. Tickets may be had by sending stamped addressed envelope to Rector, 28, Soho Square, W. 1.

SINGING LESSONS BY POST

The Finest Vocal Tuition brought
within reach of everyone.

Here is a course that is not a fad or fancy, but the result of twenty-five years' training in the hard school of experience by a man who has overcome all obstacles and won through to success. Here in eight concentrated lessons is the information that will save you years of struggling and disappointment and lead you straight to success. If you are quite untrained, the Course will put you on the right track straightaway. If you are partially trained you will find the information positively priceless to you. Written for the masses but particularly suitable for the teacher or student.

A teacher of Singing writes :

" . . . . Your books put the matter in a nutshell . . . . worth many times the cost . . . will be most useful to me in my teaching work."

The Course is fully illustrated and misunderstanding—given average intelligence—is impossible.

The following are among the subjects dealt with:

Breathing; how to prevent loss of breath; the scientific production of tone; the secret of penetration of tone; how to improve the volume and quality of the voice; how to cure breaks in the voice; the art of singing high and low notes; pronunciation and articulation; how to sing a song; singing for pleasure, profit, and health, &c.

The Booklets are convenient in size for a lady's satchel or gentleman's breast-pocket. Your tutor can thus accompany you anywhere—always a hand for advice or reference. The price of the complete Course of eight lessons is Three Guinea Cash, or One Pound with enrolment form and Ten Shillings a month for six months. A booklet giving full particulars will be forwarded free with pleasure, but the forwarding of either forms below along with name, address, and remittance will serve to put you in possession of this unique tuition by return.

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP.

To the Worth Conservatoire, Beech Avenue, Sherwood Rise, Nottingham.

CASH APPLICATION.

Please enrol me as a Student of the Worth Method, for which I enclose £3 3s. (three guineas) for the Complete Course to be supplied immediately.

GRADUAL PAYMENTS APPLICATION.

Please enrol me as a Student of the Worth Method, for which I enclose £1 (one pound) and agree to pay the sum of ten shillings a month hereafter till £4 (four pounds) in all is paid. Two lessons to be supplied immediately and a further one on receipt of each instalment.

Signature.....

Full Postal Address.....

Date..... Training (if any)..... Voice.....

THE WORTH CONSERVATOIRE (DEPT. W.),
BEECH AVENUE, SHERWOOD RISE, NOTTINGHAM.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL :

ARTHUR MCALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

MATRIC.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—64 Students of the M.C.C. have been successful in gaining the Matriculation. The Principal of the M.C.C. has made a special study of this Examination, and has an intimate knowledge of the requirements of the Examiners. The 64 successes refer to Durham University alone.

THE M.C.C. HAS SECURED MORE SUCCESSES AT DURHAM THAN ALL THE REST OF THE CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGES PUT TOGETHER.

MUS. BAC.

For a fee of £20, tuition is given for the complete series of Examinations, Matric., 1st M.B., Exercise, and Final. The M.C.C. has organized special Courses as follows:

MATRIC.	-	-	-	July, 1922.
1ST M.B.	-	-	-	September, 1922.
EXERCISE	-	-	-	March, 1923.
FINAL M.B.	-	-	-	September, 1923.

By taking a combined Course for the Complete Degree, students receive work in the Musical part concurrently with the Matric. work, which enables a student to gain the Degree in the shortest possible time.

A special combined Course has been arranged as follows:

A.R.C.O.	-	-	-	July, 1922.
F.R.C.O.	-	-	-	January, 1923.

In addition to help with the Essay and certain sections of the practical work, students also receive special papers for certain sections of the F.R.C.O. whilst they are studying for the A.R.C.O. This enables a student to gain both Diplomas in the shortest possible time.

The Guarantee Course—that is, tuition until both Diplomas are gained—is £10, which can be paid by easy instalments.

A special Course has been prepared as follows:

A.R.C.M. (Teaching of Pianoforte),	April, 1922.
L.R.A.M. (Teaching of Singing),	September, 1922.

The Guarantee Course for both Diplomas is the same as for A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.

This Examination can be taken in Theory only, and affords an excellent preliminary to Mus. Bac. Students who hold the A.R.C.O. Diploma can gain the A.Mus. T.C.L. by taking a paper in the "Art of Teaching" only.

FREE

Guide to Matric.,
Mus. Bac., &c.

MORECAMBE MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL

MAY 11th, 12th, 13th, 1922.

THE COMPLETE SYLLABUS OF THE
COMPETITIONS IS NOW READY,

And may be had (price 7d., post free) from

WM. C. FAWCETT, Secretary,
25, VICTORIA STREET, MORECAMBE.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION

FOR
MUS. B. AND MUS. D.

DR. B. BURROWS

(Mus. D. LONDON.)

Terms, Testimonials and Successes:

30, HIGHFIELD STREET, LEICESTER.

L.R.A.M.

(CHRISTMAS EXAMINATION)

POSTAL REVISION LESSONS
IN PAPER WORK.

The object of these lessons is to give a grip of vital points essential to success.

For full particulars, address

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
Mus. D. (Lond.), L.R.A.M.

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL. Telephone: Bristol 3033.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

COMPOSERS' PROBLEMS SOLVED.

PAXTON'S COMPOSERS' DEPARTMENT, Staffed by Experts, is at the Service of all Composers, and undertakes the following work:

CRITICISM OF COMPOSITION.
SLIGHT REVISION OF COMPOSITION.
REWRITING AND IMPROVING.
WRITING LYRICS.
TRANSFERRING MUSIC TO LYRICS.
ADDING ACCOMPANIMENT.

ORCHESTRATION.
COPYING (SAME KEY).
TRANSPPOSITION FROM ONE KEY TO ANOTHER (OLD NOTATION).
TRANSPPOSITION (OLD NOTA-TION TO TONIC SOL-FA).

ALSO ENGRAVING AND PRINTING MANUSCRIPTS.

LOWEST TERMS.

EFFICIENT SERVICE.

Send your Manuscripts for Production to

W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., COMPOSERS' DEPARTMENT,
22, High Street, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.2.
Stamps for return should accompany all MSS.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

St. Paul's Cathedral.

Tel: Hornsey 603.

73 Stapleton Hall Road, N.4.

MR. JOHN MACLENNAN, Tenor, Oratorios, &c.
185, Loughborough Road, S.W.5. Telephone: Brixton 1702.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

EDWARD BENNETT

(TENOR).

c/o Messrs. Cramer's Studios, 128, Kensington High Street, W.8.

FRANK CARLETON

TENOR.

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.

Address:

13, GROSVENOR ROAD, HYDE, CHESHIRE.

RALPH WILLIAMS

L.R.A.M. TENOR.

Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

EDGAR DYSON

BASS-BARITONE,

Lay-Vicar, Salisbury Cathedral,

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.

Address: 25, Wyndham Road, Salisbury.

VERNON HARRISS

BASSO CANTANTE.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL

ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.

The Precincts, Canterbury.

(CAPTAIN)

LEWIS STAINTON

(BASS).

ORATORIOS, ETC.

The Cloisters,
Windsor Castle.

Telegrams:
Stainton, Cloisters, Windsor

MR. CHARLES THORNTON

(BASS BARITONE).

Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

"Possesses a magnificent baritone voice."—Recent press notice.

Address: Rook's Nest, Whytecliffe Road, Purley, Surrey.

HERBERT TRACEY

BASS (of Westminster Abbey).

8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E.5. London Wall 4033.

MR. R. J. PITCHER

Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,

A R.C.M. (Double Diploma Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M. (Class A)
Professor Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915.

Special Lecturer on Mus. Appreciation to the L.C.C.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES in "Singing for Teachers,"
Form and Teaching," "Touch," "Accompaniment," and a special
course on "Musical Appreciation."

Over 500 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

'Recitative and its rendering,' 1/6; 'Vade Mecum for Singers,' 6d

Send for Prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

MADAME ALISON CARLISLE

Professor of Voice-Production and Singing.

(Pupil of Mr. Charles Tree.)

75, Carlton Hill, N.W.5.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

MISS GLADYS UNDERWOOD (L.R.A.M.)

ACCOMPANIST

Is open for engagements at Concerts, Rehearsals, &c.
(Vocalists and Instrumentalists).

7, Hemstal Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method.Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lustania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

*The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT.

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),

c/o "The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C.2

MR. EDWARD OXENFORD

Author of "I FEAR NO FOE," and thousands of other Songs, &amp;c.

SUBMITS UP-TO-DATE AND PROFITABLE LYRICS.

Speciality: New Words written to Songs.

Haddenham, Bucks.

Postage refunded.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &amp;c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course with Models. 44 Successes in One Year.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 180 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 45 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice
Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), gives
Lessons, by post, in Harmony and other Theoretical Subjects, and prepares for Examinations. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanters Road, Bideford.DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 392 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.O., &c. 56, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS HAS MOVED TO
58, AVONDALE ROAD, GORLESTON-ON-SEA.MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM- INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
Victoria Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) on the four-manual pneumatic organ at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.Recent successes, 1921, after preliminary course in Composition,
Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. "Exercises" (7), all at first attempt.
Durham, September, 1921: Final Mus. Doc., Final Mus. Bac. (4), 1st Mus. Bac. (3).

Over 100 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920),specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 32, Wigmore Street, W.1.MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES forL.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes,
L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.L. R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGINGL. Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), Ingleside, Goldswong Terrace, Nottingham.DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) A.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (3) F.R.C.O. Preparation.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

RECENT SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
undertakes to develop Perfect Memory
for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W.3.WANTED.—SOLO CONTRALTO and SOLO TENOR; also ladies and gentlemen for oratorio choir at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London. Sundays only. Herbert Hodge,
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2.ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED.State qualifications, experience, and salary required, by letter, to the Secretary, Jesmond Presbyterian Church, Burdon Terrace, Newcastle-on-Tyne.ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required forSt. Augustine's Presbyterian Church, New Barnet. Two-manual organ by Norman & Beard, electrically blown. Apply, stating previous experience and salary required, to J. Semple, "Wydon," Hadley Road, New Barnet.

REQUIRED, ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for South Woodford Congregational Church. Salary, £50 per annum. Write, giving references, Charlesworth, 9, Eastwood Road, South Woodford.

RANGOON CATHEDRAL.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED. Quarters and £150 per ann. Good opportunities for adding to stipend. There must be a sincere desire to serve the Church abroad. The Warden, St. Augustine's College, Canterbury.

THAME, Oxon, Parish Church. ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, by February 1st, 1922. Salary, £80. Wanted also at the same date, and in combination with the above, A VISITING MUSIC-MASTER, at the Lord Williams' Grammar School, Thame. Piano, preference to teacher of Violin as well. Salary, fees (at present £98—and rising) dependent on number of pupils. All information can be obtained from the Vicar of Thame, to whom applications should be sent, containing age, qualifications, and testimonials. Excellent opening for able and energetic man.

MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give an Organ Recital (1686th), at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, on December 6th, at 1 p.m., and every Tuesday except 27th) on the four-manual organ.

ACCOMPANIST (Certificated Pianist). Studio, Private, or Orchestra. Miss Player, 79, Brecknock Road, Camden Road, N.7.

SHOULD any Singer desire an Accompanist for Rehearsal purposes, will they please write to Gladys Langham, 47a, Lime Grove, W.12?

VIOLIN MISTRESS REQUIRED for Public School in Jamaica. Commencing salary £110 to £120, with board residence, laundry and medical attendance, and passage. For fuller particulars apply to Truman & Knighley, Ltd., Scholastic Agents, 61-62, Conduit Street, W.1.

FOR DISPOSAL.—A College of Music, in London suburb. Large Teaching connection. For particulars, apply, "S. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160 Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.— Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGAN FOR SALE, 2-Manual. Harrison & Sons. Offers accepted and particulars given by Parkinson, Auctioneers, Barnard Castle.

FOR SALE.—Two-Manual PIPE ORGAN, by Norman & Beard, lately completely overhauled. Suitable for house or small church. Four Stops each, Great and Swell, and complete 16-ft. pedal. Pneumatic and tracker action, hydraulic blowing. Further particulars from "W. B. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street W.1

FOR SALE.—ORGAN HARMONIUM, with Pedals, five Stops, hand and foot blower, in solid walnut case. Pedals act on the Bourdon. Suitable for organ practice, or mission. Price 25 guineas or near offer. Write, S. V., Stanley Lodge, Alexandra Grove, North Finchley, N.12.

MUSTEL ORGAN, 22 Stops; equal new. £250. Also Broadwood BABY GRAND. Both seen London. "W. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A SMALL One-Manual and Pedal PIPE ORGAN with 3 Stops to be disposed of. Admirably suited for a choir practice room or small church or chapel. The instrument is now in St. Jude's Church, Hampstead Garden Suburb, where it can be seen any day from 10 to 4. Price £60. No reasonable offer refused. Apply F. Hamblin, 8, Clifton Gardens, Golders Green, N.W. 11.

TWO-MANUAL PIANOFORTE with Pedals and Organ Bench, by Rogers. Excellent condition. 90 guineas, or near offer. "M.," 8, Fawcett Street, Redcliffe Gardens, South Kensington, S.W.10.

ORGAN, or PIANO PEDAL ATTACHMENT, for SALE, with stool, &c., made by The Malkin Patent Pedal Co. In perfect order. Will accept £6, cost double. Write, Heber Evans, Byrn Celyn, 14, St. Alban's Road, Treherbert.

BROADWOOD GRAND. Full size. Walnut. Good condition. Worth 300 guineas. Must sell. Take £150. "E. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

AUTOMATIC PIANO-PLAYERS. The owners of British Patent No. 17738/15, for "Improvements in Automatic Piano-Players," are desirous of entering into negotiations with one or more firms in Great Britain for the purpose of exploiting the above invention either by sale of the Patent rights or by granting licences to manufacture under Royalty. Inquiries should be addressed to Messrs. Abel & Imray, 39, Southampton Buildings, W.C.2.

CLAVIER FOR SALE. Good condition. Also Organ Pedals. What offers? Knight, 12, Dennington Park Road, West Hampstead.

FOR SALE.—VIOLINS: Duke £6, Tononi £12 25, Wingate Road, Hammersmith, London, W.6.

HARP, by Erard (Grecian), Double-action beautiful tone; perfect condition. £35. "B. M.," 96, Elm Park Mansions, Chelsea.

DOUBLE-BASS FOR SALE. Four strings Good tone. £8. Apply Miss Barker, Royal Holloway College, Englefield Green, Surrey.

FOR SALE.—VOCAL SCORES, ORGAN MUSIC, BOOKS, Etc. Returnable List from B.Mus., 3, Bell Vue, Weymouth.

AGENTS WANTED for the "Worth" Course of Voice-Production by Correspondence. Liberal commission. A profitable side-line for choir secretaries or others who are in touch with musical societies and Festivals. Apply for terms, The Worth Conservatoire, Beech Avenue, Sherwood Rise, Nottingham.

INVENTOR of useful PIANOLA DEVICE seeks CAPITAL to exploit same. Phillips, 122, Cambridge Street, London, S.W.1.

MR. JOHN NEWTON (Author of "65 Dont's. Messrs. Heffer, Cambridge, 1s. 2d. post free) Lectures on (1) Carols; (2) Plainsong; (3) Hymns and Tunes. Address: Norfolk House, East Grinstead.

WANTED, Original Compositions, Songs, and Dances. Advertiser is open to consider the publication of two or three selected pieces either on royalty basis, or will purchase outright. Write particulars in the first instance to "Publisher," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male Quartet, by Arthur Mangelsdorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy descriptive song "THE VOICE OF THE DEEP" (Oakley). Compass G (6 low E flat) to E flat. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1.

REPAIRS.—VIOLINS, 'CELLOS, GUITARS MANDOLINS, &c., cheaply, promptly, and carefully repaired. Foucher & Son, 25, Wingate Road, Hammersmith, London, W.6.

GROUNDWORK OF MUSIC AND EAR TRAINING by Arthur Mangelsdorff, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Price 1s. 6d. Winthrop Rogers, Berners Street, London, or Arthur Ellarshaw, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

GUIDE TO A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMINATION IN THE ART OF TEACHING

By A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.

Price 1s. 8d. post free.

VIDE PRESS, ETC.

"A handy brochure; gives a clear idea of what is expected."—Musical Record.

"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.

"Most original and encouragingly helpful."—J. H. Thomas, Esq., L.R.A.M.

And many others.

3, THE CRESCENT, ROUNDHAY, LEEDS.

BLACKBURN'S EDITION OF ORATORIOS

Edited by ARTHUR PEARSON.

HYMN OF PRAISE.
ST. PAUL.
CREATION.

JUDAS.
ELIJAH.
WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

Price 1s. 6d. each, 25% discount allowed to Choirs purchasing six copies or more.

To introduce, a sample will be sent for 1s., or the six assorted as above for 5s., post free to officials, stating position held, when sending.

Ask for samples of our SACRED CANTATAS. A large selection to choose from.

JOHN BLACKBURN LTD., MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

MILGROM'S

CONCERT DIRECTION,

RECITALS AND CONCERTS ARRANGED.

324, REGENT STREET, W.

(NEAR QUEEN'S HALL). 'PHONE: LANGHAM 2714.

FIRST-CLASS OPERATIC AND ORATORIO VOCALISTS,
 ... INSTRUMENTALISTS, CONCERT PARTIES, ETC. ...
 ON MY BOOKS.

PLEASE STATE YOUR REQUIREMENTS TO ABOVE ADDRESS.

ALBERT DOWNING

(CANADA'S POPULAR TENOR)

Soloist, Toronto Oratorio Society, "Elijah," 1920; Winnipeg Choral Society, "Elijah" and "Hiawatha," 1921; also leading Soloist, Canadian and American Choral Clubs.

Recent English Appearances include

QUEEN'S HALL; ÆOLIAN HALL; PEOPLE'S PALACE; PUBLIC HALL, CROYDON;
 ST. PAUL'S INSTITUTE; ROYAL PIER, SOUTHAMPTON, Etc., Etc.

MR. ALBERT DOWNING can now be booked for Oratorio, Recitals, Concerts, &c.

For vacant dates, wire or write, MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,

324, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

'Phone: Langham 2714.

MILGROM'S PIANOS.

SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO THE PROFESSION.

TRADE SUPPLIED.

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,
 324, REGENT STREET, W.1.

'PHONE: LANGHAM 2714.

(NEAR QUEEN'S HALL).

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

December 6th.—Last day of entry for the next Higher Examinations for Teachers' Diplomas and Certificates.

December 17th.—Last day of entry for the Open Competition for the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship (value £100 per annum), and other Scholarships for all subjects.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The Opera for performance at a London Theatre in the Summer Term is "Iolanthe." Conductor Mr. CAIRNS JAMES. There are a few vacancies. The OPERA CLASS meets on Tuesdays, at 5.30 p.m.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

MUSIC

FOR

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

THREE SUGGESTIONS.

MACDOWELL'S WOODLAND SKETCHES

Bound in Cloth, with gold lettering, 6s. 6d. net.

MACDOWELL'S SEA PIECES

Bound as above, 7s. 6d. net.

ROGER QUILTER'S MUSIC TO THE FAIRY PLAY

"WHERE THE RAINBOW ENDS"

Pianoforte Arrangement (by the Composer), 4s. net.

"Of modern fairy music none is more charming than Roger Quilter's to 'Where the Rainbow Ends.'"—The Referee.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 &amp; 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

And of all Music Sellers.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS - 9d.

- |                     |                          |
|---------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Ring out.        | 4. Christmas Day.        |
| 2. A Babe y's born. | 5. When Christ was born. |
| 3. Welcome Yule.    | 6. Yonder in Bethlehem.  |

Separately, 3d. each.

THOMAS ADAMS.

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS - 9d.

- |                       |                       |
|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1. 'Tis at Christmas. | 4. Born is the Babe.  |
| 2. No more sadness.   | 5. Christmas Bells.   |
| 3. Into this world.   | 6. How bright was the |

Separately, 3d. each.

THE BOSWORTH CAROL ALBUM

1s. 3d. net.

"Many Old and New Friends."

A wonderful Collection. 25 Carols. 48 pages

THREE ANTHEMS.

E. J. HOPKINS. Let us now go even unto Bethlehem
W. GRIFFITH. Blessed be the King ...
JACOB HANDL. Behold thou shalt conceive ...

BRIDGE.

BIRTHDAY BOOK - - - 5s.

(Shakespeare and Music.)

Now again in print. A very suitable Christmas present

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON,

BISHOPSGATE INSTITUTE

(Two minutes from Liverpool Street Station)

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

will give a

CHRISTMAS CONCERT

ON TUESDAY, DECEMBER 13TH, AT 8 P.M.

The Programme will include

CAROLS, MADRIGALS, FOLK-SONGS

And the CANTATA

GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD

BACH

SOPRANO - - - MISS DOROTHY ...
BASS - - - MR. JOSEPH FARRINGHAM

Organ - - - MR. HARVEY GRACE
Piano - - - MISS MARGUERITE SWALE

Conductor - - MR. HAROLD BROOKS

Tickets (including Tax): Reserved, 5s. 9d., 3s. 6d., 2s. 4d., and 1s.
To be obtained from Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, White Street, W.1; The Reference Library, Bishopsgate Institute, and
H. A. GRIFFITH (Secretary Novello Choir),
Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.1.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

DECEMBER 1 1921

In our article in the November Musical Times 'The Musical Press' we pointed out the difficulty of a monthly journal in regard to news matter. We showed that, owing to the increased prominence given to music in the daily and weekly press, provincial as well as London, a monthly could contain nothing fresh, and was bound to publish a good deal that was stale. 'It seems only [we said] that such journals will eventually reduce their news department to a bare record of important events at home and abroad for purposes of reference.'

But even a bare record is a formidable affair, great is the amount of musical activity throughout the country. Our provincial news section is already double the size of that of ten years ago. Roughly it now fills nearly a quarter of the letterpress space, and if we acceded to all the requests of readers who wish to act as our correspondents home and abroad the Musical Times would retain little but news—mostly a month old. Obviously the time has come for a drastic step. The time-honoured policy of this paper has been to present a bird's-eye view of musical doings throughout the country, and that policy must be maintained so far as possible. It can be done, we think, by steadily holding in view the object of the columns, viz., the recording of the chief provincial concerts, partly as a matter of interest, chiefly for future reference.

The value of such a record lies in facts rather than in views—that is to say, it should be concerned with the matter performed rather than with the manner of its performance. The former is indisputable; the latter is a mere opinion. There may be some interest in reading and discussing the varying views of critics on the matter after a concert, but each succeeding day lessens the interest, and by the time the criticism appears in a monthly journal the performance itself has often been forgotten.

We have been considering this news question some months, and it seems that the beginning of our 1922 volume offers a good opportunity for an attempt to solve the problem. We are therefore making arrangements by means of which the Musical Times will continue to furnish the record that has made its volumes so useful in the past; it will do so, we trust, at the cost of far less space than at present. Similar compression may be applied to our foreign correspondence, and, in a lesser degree, to our London news. The columns thus saved will enable us to widen the scope of the journal in several directions impossible hitherto.

ST. PATRICK'S (R.C.) CATHEDRAL, ARMAGH

BY W. WOODING STARMER

This noble and imposing pile is built on an eminence known as Sandy Hill—a position to the north of the city commanding the entire neighbourhood.

The foundation-stone was laid in 1840, the completed structure being consecrated in 1904. The foundations, in some instances 60-ft. deep, cost a large sum on account of the friable nature of the surface strata.

As in the case of so many other ecclesiastical buildings, the original plans were not carried out. The first architect, Mr. Duff, produced a perpendicular Gothic design strongly reminiscent of York Minster. When the walls were well advanced (the architect having then been dead for some years) a rising young architect named McCarthy was consulted, with the result that many changes were made. He produced an entirely new design in the 14th century style of decorated Gothic, and this was adopted. Five Primates spent their lives in advancing the construction of the Cathedral, but the finishing of the whole conception, particularly with regard to the interior decoration and adornment, has fallen to the lot of the present Primate, Cardinal Logue, who has accomplished his task with the greatest success. Most of the recent additions have been made to the designs of Messrs. Ashlin & Coleman. The building of the Cathedral has necessitated the expenditure of over £175,000. It is cruciform in plan, and the dimensions are:

Total length, 212-ft.
Width of transepts, 120-ft.
Length of nave, 114-ft.
" chancel, 60-ft.
Width of nave and chancel, 75-ft.
Exterior roof-height, 100-ft.
Interior " 81-ft.
Two western towers, with spires 210-ft. high.

The principal entrance is the deeply-recessed west door, which is approached by a magnificent seven-terraced flight of steps, 225-ft. long, leading from the entrance gates up to the spacious piazza fronting the building.

THE EXTERIOR

The exterior is a successful example of 14th century Gothic. The two lofty and elegant spires add much dignity to the general design, which as a whole is imposing.

THE INTERIOR

The interior is one of the most beautiful of any modern ecclesiastical building in the kingdom, both in regard to general proportions and detailed decoration. The whole of Europe has been laid under contribution for precious marbles of varied colours, which have been employed on a very extensive scale and with beautiful effect.

The mosaics are remarkable, particularly at the crossing where the high altar stands. The six spandrels over the great arches (80-ft. high and 40-ft. wide) are inlaid with figured subjects in gold and colour with gorgeous effect. The groining of the aisles, side chapels, baptistery, and tower porches is of Bath stone.

THE ORGAN

The organ, by Messrs. Telford, of Dublin, is erected on the west gallery, and contains 2,453 pipes.

The oak case, of excellent design, rises to a height of 30-ft. at the sides, and in the centre is recessed to a depth of 10-ft. in order to prevent any obstruction of the large west window. The console faces west.

The action is tubular-pneumatic. An excellent wind supply is provided by an electric installation placed in the south-west tower.

SPECIFICATION

COMPASS

Manuals	CC to G	...	...	56 notes.
Pedals	CCC to F	...	...	30 notes.

GREAT ORGAN

	Ft.		Ft.
Double open diapason ...	16	Octave ...	4
Open diapason ...	8	Twelfth ...	2½
Harmonic diapason ...	8	Fifteenth ...	2
Gamba ...	8	Mixture... ..(ranks)	5
Hohl flute ...	8	Trumpet ...	8
Harmonic flute ...	4	Orchestral oboe ...	8

SWELL ORGAN

	Ft.
Bourdon ...	16	Mixture ...	...(ranks)
Open diapason ...	8	Cornopean ...	...
Dulciana...	8	Oboe ...	...
Rohr flute ...	8	Clarion ...	...
Octave ...	4	Tremulant	...
Fifteenth...	2

CHOIR ORGAN

	Ft.
Salicional ..	8	Dulcet ...	...
Viol di gamba ...	8	Piccolo ...	...
Lieblich gedackt ...	8	Clarinet ...	...
Flauto traverso ...	4	Dulciana ...	...

PEDAL ORGAN

	Ft.
Open diapason ...	16	Quint ...	...
Bourdon ...	16	Posaune...	...
Open diapason ...	8	Trumpet ...	...
Octave ...	8

COUPLERS

Swell to Pedal.	Swell to Great.
Great to Pedal.	Swell to Choir.
Choir to Pedal.	Choir to Great.

Swell Super-Octave.

II Combination Pistons.
Pedal Helps to Swell Great and Choir Organs.

The organist and choirmaster is Mr. J. V. Holden, who has held this position for the eighteen years.

Photo by

INTERIOR: LOOKING EAST

[H. Allison & Son, Armagh

Photo by

THE WESTERN TOWERS

[H. Allison and Son, Armagh]

A new powerful clock with quarter chimes time. There are no chime tunes. The carillon (estminster), containing the most modern consists of thirty-nine bells with clavier (three improvements in construction, has been put in octaves chromatic), with the two largest bells Messrs. Potts, of Leeds. The hour is struck diatonic. the great bell, the first stroke being the exact

SCALE

All sounding one octave higher.

The founders are Messrs. Taylor, of Loughborough.

This splendid set of bells—perfect as to accuracy of tune and of rich resonant tone—constitutes one of the finest modern carillons in Europe, and in one respect the best extant. Messrs. Taylor have introduced many improvements in the action-work connecting the clavier with the bells, making the touch so easy and light that a child could play every note without undue exertion, and also giving the player absolute control of the tone from pianissimo to fortissimo. This is a great advance on anything existing in Holland or Belgium, where every carillon demands very considerable physical strength for its effective manipulation.

The total weight of the bells is eleven tons.

Particulars of the three largest bells are as follows:

NOTE.	WEIGHT CWTs.	INSCRIPTION.
C	43½	Gloria in excelsis Deo—1920.
D	30½	B. Maria Virgine Mater Dei.
E	21½	B. Michaeli Archangelo.

The smallest bell weighs twenty pounds.

THE LARGEST AND SMALLEST BELLS

The carillon is placed in the north-west tower in an excellent position acoustically.

The inauguration of this most recent addition to the Cathedral took place on Sunday, November 6, when His Eminence Cardinal Logue was present at the Pontifical Mass. A sermon on bells was preached by the Rev. Dr. Beecher, of Maynooth. Immediately after the service M. Antoine Nauwelaerts, the city carillonneur of Bruges, who came over specially for the occasion, gave the opening recital with the following programme:

Prelude: 'The Cuckoo' ... ..	Van den Gheyn
'Ave Maria' ... ..	Schubert
Sonata ... ..	Van Hoey
Adagio ('Pathetic' Sonata) ... ..	Beethoven
'Le Retour de la Fauvette' ... ..	de Boeck

Irish Folk-Tunes:

- (a) 'Londonderry Air.'
- (b) 'Snowy-breasted Pearl.'
- (c) 'Foggy Dew.'

'Rubens March' ... .. Benoit

All these items were listened to with attention by a very large gathering.

M. Nauwelaerts is one of the best representative carillonneurs of the modern Belgian school. His playing is most brilliant, with well-defined rhythm, and to him technical difficulties are no existent. His expressive powers were amply displayed in the music of Schubert and Beethoven, which revealed to the listener the extraordinary possibilities of the instrument in the hands of such a virtuoso.

Recitals were given in the afternoon and evening, also on Monday.

Ireland now possesses two magnificent carillons, at Queenstown and Armagh, both made by the same founders.

CHARLES KŒCHLIN

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

(Continued from November number, page 761)

III.

It will easily be realised that when Kœchlin resorts to recondite or apparently complicated modes of expression, he does so not in consequence of a taste for the far-fetched or the exceptional; but with a steadfast purpose and for well-weighted reasons. For instance, the most searching examination will fail to discover in 'Paysages et Marine' a single passage of which it might be said that could have been written more simply without anything vital being sacrificed.

If the same can hardly apply to the piano accompaniments to certain of his songs, it is for the reason that most of these were originally conceived for various combinations of instrument. A survey of the three books of Songs, and three of Rondels, will show that the composer's favourite medium for accompaniments is the orchestra. Of seventeen songs in the first book, only three are not published with orchestral accompaniment. In the second book we see that out of fourteen songs, four exist with orchestral accompaniment, another four with accompaniment by string quartet and pianoforte. The whole contents of the third book are orchestrated. And in all likelihood it is the orchestral form that represents the composer's original conception.

At times an extra solo part, or an optional choir are provided for. It may happen that these added voices do little but duplicate the principal part (e.g., the female choir in 'Promenade Galante' in the first book). Likewise in 'Le Nénuphar' (second book) a solo flute is required more for the sake of colour than in order to provide specific patterns. Some of the things contained in these books—for instance, 'La Jeune Tarentine', 'Néere', 'Juin', 'Midi', 'Le Sommeil de Canope'—are not songs in the usual sense of the word, but big tone-poems for voice and orchestra, in which the pianoforte part can hardly do justice to the composer's intentions.

Therefore let us revert to his methods of writing pianoforte sans arrière-pensée, as is the case in 'Sonatines' and in 'Paysages et Marines.'

What he aims at is variety and intensity of colour and fullness in polyphonic effects. He is content on obtaining from the instrument a good deal more than has been obtained before, and something different. He achieves his purpose by means which, however daring, are perfectly simple. As regards the extension of the pianoforte's compass-range (apart from any question of polyphony) his methods are not dissimilar in principle to those of Debussy in pieces such as, for instance, 'Hommage à Rameau' or 'Cathédrale Engloutie'; that is, he relies on plain chords and aggregations of sounds rather than upon arpeggios, runs, or intertexture of more or less complicated designs: and those chords, however rich and unusual, can all be explained by reference to some elementary acoustic fact.

But before considering his work from the technical point of view, and in its most intricate aspects, it will be well to emphasise that he is not a musician whose mind is uniformly turned towards complexity, nor—any more than Vincent d'Indy—who is more skilful than inspired. And that must best be made clear by quoting a few more instances of the beautiful, exquisitely simple, and original melodies with which his works teem. For instance, the broad and thoughtful opening of the Andante of his second Sonatine (the whole movement is on the same lofty plane):

This delightfully sweet and breezy tune from 'Promenade vers la mer':

and bright exhilarating motives such as that of the final section of his third Sonatine:

or this (from the fourth Sonatine):

Although very much at ease and full of eloquence when dealing with melodies of this kind, supported by a minimum of harmonic or polyphonic reinforcement, he frequently displays his fondness for deep, rich layers of colour which he is an adept at obtaining.

For instance, he will impart additional fullness and glow to a sequence of chords by duplicating them at a semitone's distance in another octave (an effect akin to that of the vox humana on the organ):

or trust to the combination of partials resulting from widely-spread fifths (a favourite method of his in view of special effects of transparency):

Generally speaking, he is an expert in the matter of calculating the results of spacing. From means as simple as the duplication of a pattern at an interval of two octaves or more, he derives useful elements of variety.

He frequently resorts to sequences of fifths, simple, or double, or triple: e.g., in the following wise:

Devices of this kind are all too frequently utilised nowadays. There are few beginners or dabblers who do not imagine that by using the commonplaces of modern idiom they will conceal the flatness of what they write. Wading through almost any lot of newly-published music one gets even more weary of consecutive fifths and seconds and ninths than one ever did of the diminished sevenths and Neapolitan sixths and deceptive cadences of the academists. But the most depressing experiences of that kind are forgotten as soon as one encounters things as lovely as the following (from 'Promenade vers la Mer'), which is perhaps the most felicitous example of its kind ever written since consecutive fifths made their appearance in the vocabulary of contemporary music:

Ex. 8.

The investigation of Kœchlin's methods cannot be carried very far without our having to consider harmony and polyphony jointly. Kœchlin has given a considerable amount of his time to the study of the principles and practice of contrapuntal writing. At the beginning of 1921 he published in Le Monde Musical, under the unassuming title 'An Essay on Passing-Notes,' an invaluable contribution to the study of that important topic.

Eked out with a few passages from works by other authors, that essay might provide a theoretical justification, if necessary, for every piece of apparent irregularity or recklessness discoverable in his music. But the more thought one devotes to the question of writing upon music, and especially of appraising music or justifying our appraisal of it, the more one realises how exceedingly futile is the labelling of harmonies, or of any other point in a composer's technique, so far as regards a critical estimate of his work. I dare say that from the disinterested point of view of the analyst, or of the reader content with an analysis, it is quite useful to be shown (as we were, more than twenty years ago, by Jean Marnold, the first of French critics to undertake the study of Debussy's music from the point of view of science) that Debussy's chords are uniformly founded upon the exploitation of upper partials. The discovery also supplied a retort capable of silencing—if anything could do it—the pundits who gravely asserted that Debussy ran counter to all principles, and to commonsense as well as to taste. But certainly nothing of the kind would have any bearing upon the way which Debussy's music, or any other, affects anybody's sensitiveness. And when similar theories began to crop up with regard to Scriabin's music, they proved unconvincing to those who found no beauty in that music: whereas those who admired it, we must hope, had not awaited the publication of the nomenclatures and diagrams in order to do so.

But what we should in any case retain from Kœchlin's essay are the following passages on polytonality, and upon the necessary relationship between the 'vertical' conception of music and the 'horizontal':

In a new type of polyphonic writing, which seems to originate in Arnold Schönberg's works, the parts move freely within the compass of one key or of several simultaneously. The question of harmonic conception no longer arises (as it still does in Stravinsky's 'Petrouchka' or 'Sacre du Printemps'). So freely are the parts written, that at times the composer seems to ignore all questions of congruence between simultaneous sounds, all deference to the law which, for the sake of logic, prohibits consecutive octaves and similar inadequacies or temporary disparities. But in all likelihood any composer who resorts to similar devices, if he is a true musician, instinctively keeps the 'vertical' result in view. I resort to them occasionally: in my 'Heures Persanes' and my second String Quartet, instances of bi-tonal or polytonal counterpoint are to be found. The main difficulty occurs when one has to pass from that style of writing to the diatonic, consonant style, and consists in avoiding that plain octaves, thirds, and sixths should come to sound by contrast poor and thin. So that again the necessity to bear in mind the 'vertical' effect is obvious. Studying the works of Bizet, or Chabrier, or Saint-Saëns, or Fauré, or Debussy, or Ravel, one sees how necessary is the alliance of harmony and counterpoint, and how great is the error of the 'verticalists' and the 'horizontalists': the human ear listens both ways simultaneously—a fact of which everybody, in spite of high-falutin' theories, is perfectly aware.

The second Quartet being unpublished, and the sole excerpt from the 'Heures Persanes' available ('La Paix du Soir au Cimetière,' which appeared as a supplement to the Revue Musicale of August, 1921) affording none of the instances referred to, we need not at present go further into the question of polytonality as practised by Kœchlin.

But even in the simple polyphony of the Sonatines we meet with remarkable instances of unconventionality. For instance, he will write consecutive fourths or fifths in pure organum style, relying upon the logic of part-movement and the pregnancy of the designs thus combined to make up for the temporary impoverishment of sonority.

Ex. 9.

Or he will write successions such as the following (from 'Chant de Pêcheurs'), in which, however,

8. 10.
pp smorz.

However unusual the combinations to which he resorts, it is very seldom that they will not be found perfectly natural, and their results pleasing. Whether a line should be drawn at some of them is very much a matter of personal opinion. To me the following passage, in which the two forms of the whole-tone scale are superimposed in fourths, remains more strange than beautiful:

X. 11.

Ex. 12.

In 'Le Chant du Chevrier,' one of Kœchlin's masterpieces, we have on the one hand a tune similar to those which are played by French goatsherd on their Pandean pipes (it was possible to hear such sounds even in the Paris streets, and still may be), and on the other a beautiful harmonic setting, altogether independent and forming a whole in itself. In the atmosphere created by the simple, deep-toned, long-vibrating chords, the tune naturally

The following quotation will show that here polytonality is real, not only apparent:

Ex. 13.
Son.....

mp sost. L.H. R.H. c.c.

p c.c.

Ex. 14.

Par l'es-pa-ce sans fin des so-li-tu-des nu-es et c.

(To be continued.)

BY GUIDO M. GATTI

(Concluding Article)

POSTLUDIUM

Having now reached the end of this series of rapid sketches of Italian musicians, it is proposed to conclude, as was forecasted in the introductory article, with a synthetic table of the Italian musicality of to-day. But first—in no particular order and still more briefly than was done in the case of the eight musicians who form the subjects of the articles—mention must be made of a few composers who cannot fairly be passed over. Even with this addition the review will still be incomplete, but it will furnish some characteristic traits and help to outline the complete picture: and in any case we shall appear less unjust to some composers who, even if they have no decided artistic personality, yet contribute in a greater or less degree to raise the tone of our modern musical life.

RESPIGHI

Above all it would be a serious oversight not to mention Ottorino Respighi (born at Bologna, July 6, 1879), a composer of European renown, who makes up for lack of individuality in his creations by marvellous technical knowledge, especially of orchestration, and by good taste and delicacy of feeling. Respighi is a prolific writer: among Italian composers he is perhaps the one who in twenty years of creative activity has the largest number of works to his credit. Of these may be mentioned, on the one hand, the exquisite vocal lyrics, several of which reach a very high artistic level, some being little masterpieces of intimacy and poetry; and on the other, the many symphonic pages, as, for example, 'Fontane di Roma,' 'Ballata delle Guomidi,' and 'Poema Gregoriano' for violin and orchestra. Respighi is above all a lyrical composer, and it is in this field that he chiefly distinguishes himself. When he wishes to dramatise his expression, as in the Sonata for violin or in the 'Sinfonia Drammatica,' he often lacks true emotion and his technique gets the upper hand, creating an obvious lack of equilibrium between the essence and the form. But even with these reservations the figure of Respighi is one which commands respect; he is a true maestro, and his teaching abilities are highly appreciated at Rome, where he is professor of composition at the Santa Cecilia Lycée.

ALALEONA

A teacher at the same institute is Domenico Alaleona (born at Montegiorgio Piceno, November 16, 1881). Alaleona is a solitary who tenaciously pursues some æsthetic ideas of his own, which, though they may be disputable, are still worthy of consideration. So far, he has not given us much: a few vocal lyrics, almost all inspired by poems of Pascoli, and 'Mirra,' an opera composed about ten years ago, but not performed until last spring, at Rome. One of the characteristics of this musician is his direct contact with our 19th century music (to which he alone perhaps of all the modern Italian musicians attributes great value), in so far as concerns his conception of vocal lyrics and opera. Reference is made, of course, in both cases to the general conception of the form and not to the language adopted by the musician, which is modern and often bold. Alaleona is also a valued writer on musical history and criticism. His essays on modern harmony, published in 1911, in the Rivista Musicale Italiana, are in many passages truly prophetic, and may perhaps be considered as the first attempts, at least in Italy, to systematise what at that time the advanced composers felt confusedly and practised instinctively.

GASCO

Alberto Gasco, too, lives at Rome (born at Naples, October 3, 1879); he is a composer, and is musical critic to the Tribuna. As a symphonic writer Gasco has many admirers. Prominent among his works are the poem 'Presso il Clitumno,' and 'Bufalmacco.' This composer possesses a keen sense of vision, which, joined to his special fondness for figurative art, frequently leads to his translating into music the pictorial situations of great artists (as, for instance, in the quartet 'Venere dormente' inspired by one of Giorgione's pictures, or in 'Vergine Orsola' for violin, inspired by Carpaccio's celebrated Venetian canvases). A fine musician, he was among the first to make known the French school with which he is connected, especially through the work of Vincent d'Indy.

LIUZZI

Travelling towards the north of Italy we meet at Florence the interesting figure of Fernando Liuzzi (born at Bologna, December, 1884), a composer who, after a silence, lengthy indeed but rich in maturation, has lately attracted public attention. His work, although of no great bulk, is, however, rich in poetry—e.g., the delicious Sonatina for violin and pianoforte and the three lyrics on some popular poems by Tommaseo. These two compositions, if they do not allow us fully to characterise the personality of the musician, yet inspire us with the greatest confidence in one who is still young and full of energy. The symphonic Intermezzo which he is now finishing for the tragedy 'Dafne e Cléo' of the late poet Morselli, arouse anticipatory interest.

PRATELLA

A singular figure of a man and artist we find at Lugo di Romagna in the person of F. Balilla Pratella (born there, February 1, 1880). He had a brief celebrity when he compiled the prospectus of the futurist music and joined Marinetti's company. But as he is anything but a futurist in the ordinary meaning of the word (among other things he has since shown himself to be a devotee of our old music), he soon withdrew from the group, and in great solitude (his chief pleasure being his property in the country and the company of peasants living on it) set about creating a music that should be instinctive expression, simple and emotional, springing from the soul of the people. His works are largely inspired by visions of his own countryside, and often contain local folk melodies. We may mention his symphonic poems, collected under the title 'Romagna,' and several vocal lyrics not without charm. But however his work may be judged, it is an undoubted fact that for the sincerity and warmth which often animates it, it is worthy of notice and merits separate mention.

PERRACHIO

At Turin is working silently, but faithfully and conscientiously, a musician who has published only a small number of compositions, among others nine 'Poemetti' for pianoforte—Luigi Perrachio (born at Turin, in 1883). But those who know his many works in manuscript have great faith in his strong temperament and frank sensibility, and believe that his recognition by a larger public is not far distant.

There are also two composers who live abroad—FRANCESCO SANTOLIVIDO (born at Naples, August 6, 1883) and PIERO COPPOLA (born at Milan, October 11, 1888).

Santolivido, who lives in Tunis, although not possessing a notable individuality and still under the influence of a certain form of impressionism which probably has had its day, has yet given proof of poetic feeling, among other things, in some of his symphonic sketches inspired by the vision of the country where he lives and of which he is enamoured.

Coppola, who lives in London, is of a very different temperament. His music is all nerves, and always has a decisive rhythmic character. A very strong musician, he loves to translate musically certain grotesque and gruesome poses which he succeeds in making very impressive. His compositions of this kind are an undoubted success, from the vocal lyrics written on the bizarre sonnets of Rubino to the opera in one Act, 'Mikita,' which is awaiting its first performance and of which a pianoforte version has filled us with the highest hopes. The above must not be taken to imply that he is lacking in emotion or that he does not know how to express it; in refutation it is sufficient to mention the 'Poema Elegiaco,' which the London public will hear shortly (through the initiative of Eugène Goossens), and the two 'Poemetti dell' anima angosciata e dello spirito burlesco,' performed at Rome, conducted by Tullio Serafin, in 1914.

The young composers of opera have been omitted, as more rarely succeeding in avoiding the field worked by their predecessors. All the same, there are some among them who cannot be overlooked, e.g., RICCARDO ZANDONAI, born in South Tyrol, May 28, 1883, who has not only written operas of considerable value, as 'Conchita' and 'Francesca da Rimini,' but also some good symphonic pages ('Primavera in Val di Sole'); and ANDRIANO LUALDI (born at Larino, March 22, 1887), who, after having proved his worth with a String Quartet and some vocal pages, is preparing to reveal himself more fully in the opera, 'La figlia del re,' which will be performed at Turin during the coming Carnival.

PIZZETTI

The reader who is versed in modern European production will have noticed that one of Italy's best-known musicians—Ildebrando Pizzetti—is omitted.

To avoid misunderstanding, this silence must be explained. Ildebrando Pizzetti is doubtless the greatest musician in Italy to-day; that is, the one who has most fully attained his individuality, and who in his work expresses with the widest sense of equilibrium the deep feeling of his country and race, using the most adequate and modern means that can be imagined. This fine figure of an artist stands out clearly on the national horizon: and advances surely and steadily, full of study and love for his art. He needed a larger frame than the brief space allowed for each sketch. Pizzetti will be dealt with fully so soon as occasion offers: that is, directly after the production of his latest opera, 'Dèbora e Jaèle,' which Toscanini will present at the Scala next spring. This opera, judging from those fragments which the composer has played on the pianoforte, will probably reveal in its dramatic vicissitudes nearly all the soul and feeling of the artist, and will therefore represent almost the apex of his art, clearly and repeatedly affirmed by the musician both in his keen critical writings and his fine compositions of recent years: e.g., 'Fedra,' the Sonata for violin, the five Lyrics, and the music for 'Pisanella.'

Many readers are doubtless familiar with some of the essential characteristics of contemporary Italian music: here and there in the course of these monographs a pause has been made to consider these, with special reference to the work in which they were most clearly revealed. The subject is important, and has one outstanding feature.

This is, that the greater and the better part of the music written in Italy to-day is, above all, melodic and lineal in character. This melody—which has nothing to do with that of the 18th century, when a beautiful or an ugly melodic line could exist, while now there are only expressive melodies and inexpressive melodies—never presents itself to us emaciated, austere, or dry (as, for instance, it may easily be found to be in the pages of the latest exponents in France of linea, the ultra-anti-impressionists), or as something so rigid that it can hardly bend without breaking, and that cannot adhere perfectly to a curved shape. Of Italian melody it may be affirmed that it has a plasticity very different from that arabesqued on a pianoforte lacking warm tones or depth and volume. It may be said to have three dimensions, and to create around itself, as it were, a halo that multiplies its expressive power and imparts to it an intrinsic life which alone can inspire that artistic emotion which is at the same time pleasure of the mind and enjoyment of the senses. The Italian melody is always an abandonment to a lyrical or dramatic impetus, and not the presentation of an idea springing from the brain. It may be that at times it is slightly provincial and rustic, but it is so vigorous and healthy that it immediately captures universal sympathy, even when it is transported to the concert-hall. Italian melody, in short, sings—even when it is instrumental—while in its spontaneity it preserves that measure and equilibrium which make us compare the pages of a Monteverde and a Bellini to Greek marbles. Italian melody is, then, plastic from a stylistic point of view, and vocal from the point of view of expression.

A second feature of Italian music has its origin in this melody, and consists in solidity of construction and a tendency to conclude the discourse with a fine full stop; that is to say, it preserves the love of order. Although the modern Italian musicians were among the first to break down the barriers of scholastic form and to burst the bonds of the 'quadratura,' there is always in their compositions a sense of concreteness along with a logical spirit tracing round the page a line which, even if not apparent, is quite distinct: that is, that the composition, even if it may not present those points of resemblance and periodicities necessary for its classification in one or other of the formal categories, yet has a truly intimate unity—a unity not conferred upon it by almost mechanical externals.

Latent in every member of the Italian race, lying at the bottom of the spirit even of the most turbulent, is love of order (love of order and not of discipline imposed by others—the German type). A certain type of tight-rope dancing musician much in vogue lately, and introduced to Italy as the latest international fashion, has not found imitators here. All the capers and shrill laughter represented in compositions of one or two pages deficient in musical notes but abounding in literary precepts and boulevard wit, have rapidly fallen into oblivion under the indifference of the public and of native composers.

Passing on to what might be called the content of the work of art, along with the new tendencies we find in Italy a renewed religion of art—that is, the vision of art as something high and pure, and therefore not to be contaminated by realisations which are mean or grotesque or in any way wanting in human feeling.

In every composition of modern Italian musicians there is the endeavour, at least, to include therein the greatest quantity of human feeling, to embrace the vastest horizon, and to rise towards the highest contemplation of life. Hence a certain pleasure in handling the amplest musical forms—the sonata, the quartet, the music-drama—and in giving preference to the healthiest and weightiest poets and to arguments of universal comprehension: subjects from ancient Greece, from the Bible, from the great historical epochs, or else purely fanciful creations hovering in a lofty poetical atmosphere. It is, in short, a spirit of elevation which inspires the minds of the musicians; and it is a good symptom even if the intentions are not always sincerely and deeply matured and the realisation consequently is not adequate. It is a good symptom, inasmuch as it denotes at the same time that public opinion is tending towards more breathable air, that it desires to understand and appreciate art in its true meaning and in its highest mission.

The writer does not attempt to prophesy as to the future of Italian musical art; but basing an opinion (as would be logical) on the present, it would doubtless present itself in a very promising light. There exists a firm tendency towards greater artistic consistency; and to embrace in this unity the greatest variety of single characteristics, tastes, and sympathies. During the past few years—ten, or perhaps less—have appeared works which, it may be said without fear of presumption, are well worthy of the respect of all who judge without prejudice—e.g., 'Fedra' and the Violin Sonata by Pizzetti, the Sette canzoni and 'Rispetti e strambotti' by Malipiero, 'Fontane di Roma' and 'Poema Gregoriano' by Respighi, 'Coplas' and the pianoforte pieces by Castelnuovo-Tedesco, the Sonatina by Luizzi, 'A Motte Alta' and the pieces for string quartet by Casella, 'Basi e bote' by Pick-Mangiagalli, 'Chiari di luna' by Tommassini, and 'Sakuntala' by Alfano. There is here quite enough to illustrate in the clearest possible manner the sincere musicality of a nation that wishes to be once again what it was in the centuries of its greatest artistic splendour.

There is enough, too, to cause reflection among those who, outside Italy, still believe (doubtless in good faith) that our art has stopped short at verismo and the young school of Mascagni (no longer young, alas!); and who think that 'Cavalleria' and 'Tosca'—to quote two examples of that school—still represent the mirage of young musicians in Italy.

THE 'OLD VIC.': AN APPEAL

Who doesn't know of the splendid work for music and the drama the 'Old Vic.' has done and is doing? To ask for a Shakespeare theatre or a National Opera House at present is like asking for the moon. While we are waiting for times when such schemes will be feasible, let us not forget that at the famous old theatre in the Waterloo Road we have a very near approach to both institutions under one roof. But that roof can cover it for only a little longer, and unless the appeal printed below meets with a speedy and generous response there will be no more 'Old Vic.' All who have seen for years past densely crowded audiences enjoying the best in drama and opera will agree that the collapse of the enterprise would be a big set-back to the cause of popular art. We hope that the following appeal, backed as it is by so powerful and representative a body, will be completely successful:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE Musical Times.

SIR,—The admirable work done at the Royal Victoria Hall, popularly known as the 'Old Vic.,' is now well known. By very strenuous effort Miss Baylis and her colleagues have succeeded in producing Shakespeare performances and opera continuously, on lines artistically right, at such low charges that every section of the public is able to see them. So warm has been the appreciation of these performances that it is certain that their cessation would be regarded as a disaster by the people generally, and not least by the 'Vic.'s' many friends in the Dominions over seas. It is to avoid this disaster that we now venture to appeal to you.

The 'Old Vic.' has reached a crisis in its career. Some time ago the London County Council warned the management that it would have to put its house structurally in order. The building is an old one, and compliance with the County Council's standard will mean heavy expense. The County Council has been very forbearing, as the 'Vic.' would be the first to acknowledge with lively gratitude. Now, however, the time has come when these alterations and extensions must be carried out. If this is not done the 'Vic.'s' licence may be in serious danger.

As it happens, the building is so placed that the 'Vic.' cannot extend except by disturbing its neighbour, the Morley College. Therefore the 'Vic.' must provide a new home for that institution. A suitable building in the near neighbourhood is available if funds can be raised to acquire it. To reinstate the Morley College and make the necessary alterations and extensions will cost about £30,000. Of this sum the 'Vic.' can lay its hands on about £10,000; for the remainder it must look to the interest and generosity of the public.

In asking help on an occasion of very great stress we feel we are justified in appealing not only to the regular friends of the 'Vic.' (who will certainly not fail it), but to all who are concerned for the humanities. The work of the 'Old Vic.' is moral and spiritual, no less than artistic, and there is abundant evidence of its actual influence for good.

Contributions of any amount will be thankfully received and can be sent to the Secretary of the 'Old Vic.' Appeal Fund, Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo Road, S.E.1. Cheques should be made payable to Sir W. P. Herringham (Chairman of the Governors).—We are, Yours obediently,

H. H. ASQUITH.	L. C. F. CAVENDISH.
DUNSANY.	HERBERT FISHER.
JOHN W. GILBERT.	A. BONAR LAW.
W. MANCHESTER.	ARTHUR PINERO.
ETHEL SMYTH.	CYRIL SOUTHWARK.
J. H. THOMAS.	EVERARD G. THORNE.

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XXII.—NICHOLAS LUDFORD

Great as is the reputation of Robert Fayrfax, there is another early Tudor composer whose works may bear favourable comparison with his: this man is Nicholas Ludford. And yet it is only since the beginning of the present century that Ludford may be said to have been 'discovered.' His compositions are almost as numerous as those of Fayrfax, and hence we are in a position to estimate their value. Even Dr. Terry recently admitted that Ludford's works 'show him to be a much bigger man' than he had at first suspected; and—stronger proof still—the general verdict of musical critics, who have been given an opportunity of hearing seven of Ludford's Masses sung during the past few years at Westminster Cathedral, has confirmed the expert views of Messrs. Collins, Davey, Terry, and Walker. I was hoping that Mr. Orsmond Anderdon, in his recent book on 'Early English Music' (1920), would throw some new light on the biography of this important composer, but, alas! he writes thus:

No information as to his life is available except that he was about contemporaneous with, possibly a little later than, Fayrfax. Several of his Masses are in use at Westminster Cathedral, including seven for three voices, one for each day in the week. Of these perhaps the finest is the 'Missa Sablato.'

Mr. H. B. Collins writes in an almost similar strain in his excellent paper on 'Latin Church Music by Early English Composers,' Part 2, in the 'Proceedings of the Musical Association' (1916-17):

Another composer of about the same period as Fayrfax, or slightly later, was Nicholas Ludford, with regard to whom I have been able to ascertain no particulars whatever. His name does not appear in Grove, nor in the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' though he is mentioned at the end of Morley's 'Plaine and Easie Introduction' as one of the composers whose works the author had consulted.

Thus it may be briefly stated that hitherto the biographical data regarding Ludford was nil, save that he was more or less the contemporary of Fayrfax: that is to say, we may assume him to have flourished in the years 1495-1521. A diligent search has revealed a few more facts regarding this early Tudor composer. It may be well to note, however, that he was not, as generally surmised; a member of the Chapel Royal. Doubtless a further investigation may bring to light more details, but meantime the following notes will be helpful, though the net result has not been as fruitful as could be desired.

Nicholas Ludford first appears in an account book of the Steward of Ashby Leger, in March, 1520, printed in the 'Calendar of Letters and Papers of Henry VIII.' (vol. iii). At one time I was inclined to believe that Ludford was a member of the Chapel Royal, and a friend told me that his name occurred in some accounts in the Public Record Office, in connection with the Dean of the King's Chapel, Dr. John Clark. An examination of the Calendar, however, revealed the fact that although the accounts of the Dean of the Chapel are given for March, 1520, Ludford's name does not appear in them, yet his name does occur in the succeeding entry recording the payment of £119 8s. by a number of persons in the Steward's Account of Ashby Leger (Northampton). Moreover, in the detailed account of the Chapel Royal at the Field of Cloth of Gold, in 1520, Ludford's name is not to be found.* In 1520 he seems to have been a contemporary of John Kite, who had been sub-dean of the Chapel Royal, and was promoted to be Archbishop of Armagh. Consequently, he would then be about forty years of age, from which we may safely place his birth as c. 1480.

The next notice of Nicholas Ludford, who was married in 1535; is on July 3, 1538, when he was granted an exemption 'from serving on juries and from being made escheator, coroner, collector of taxes, constable, or other officer.' This notice is to be found in the 'Calendar of Letters,' &c., of Henry VIII., and it may be assumed that the exemption arose from Ludford's connection with the Court, and was probably due to some serious accident or illness, for it could scarcely be on the score of old age, as he was then on the sunny side of sixty.

Evidently Ludford died in 1541, or early in 1542, as on June 1, 1542, among the Life Grants in the King's Books (33 Henry VIII.), there is an entry of a Lease for twenty-one years to Elizabeth Ludford, widow, of certain lands and a water-mill in Birmingham Manor, Warwickshire. Through the courtesy of Mr. Collins, I am enabled to give the following list of Ludford's works, all as yet in MS.:

Six Masses for solo and three-part chorus, each containing a Sequence (Brit. Mus., R. Appen., 45-47).
Missa 'Benedicta,' for six voices (Lambeth and Caius).

In the former MS. it is given anonymously.

Missa 'Videte Miraculum,' for six voices (MS. at Caius College).

Missa 'Christi Virgo,' for five voices (MSS. at Caius, Cambridge, and Peterhouse).

Missa 'Inclina Domine,' for five voices (Peterhouse).

Missa 'Lapidaverunt Stephanum,' for five voices (Lambeth—but anonymously—and Caius).

Missa 'Regnum mundi,' for five voices (Peterhouse).

Missa 'Le Roy'—only fragmentary (Brit. Mus. Add. 30,520).

Magnificat, for six voices (Caius).

Ave Maria Ancilla, for five voices (Peterhouse).

Ave Cujus Conceptione, for five voices (Peterhouse).

Domine Jesu Christi, for five voices (Peterhouse).

Salve Regina (No. 1), medius only (Harley, 1709).

Salve Regina (No. 2) (Harley and Peterhouse).

(N.B.—The Peterhouse MS. wants the Tenor.)

* See an article on this subject in the Musical Times for June, 1920.

Mr. Collins has scored many of these Masses—written in 'black void' notation—and he gives the following estimate of the first of the six Masses for solo bass voice or unison chorus, alternating with a three-part choir. It is also worthy of note that the Canto Fermo, in plainchant, is in 'strictly measured music' like that of the chorus:

The counterpoint is at least as fluent and facile as that of Fayrfax, and is also of a rather more advanced character, the parts often entering one after another with points of imitation, showing a transition to a later style. The whole composition is lighter in character than Fayrfax's work, partly owing to the use of only three voices, and also owing to the fact that in most of the movements the 'greater prolation' is substituted for 'perfect time,' though the latter is used for the Sanctus and Agnus. The Mass is founded on the same melody as that used by Taverner in his Kyrie entitled 'Ley Roy.' The Credo is set complete without any omissions, and the Mass also includes a setting of a lengthy Sequence, 'Ave praelara Maris stella,' which occurs in the Sarum Gradual on the Octave of the Assumption. The Mass is altogether an interesting composition, which makes one desire to know more of the author's work.

Music in the Foreign Press

WHY DEBUSSY WROTE 'PELLÉAS ET MÉLISANDE'

Comedia (quoted in the Nouvelle Revue Musicale, October) publishes a note written by Debussy, and entitled 'Why I wrote "Pelléas"':

I had wanted long ago to write music for the stage. But the form which I intended to adopt was so unusual that after various attempts I almost gave up the notion. Previous research in the domain of pure music had led me to detest classical working-out, whose beauty is solely technical, and can interest only our Mandarins. I desired for music a freedom which belongs to that art more than to any other—music being founded not upon mere imitation of nature, but upon mysterious relations between nature and imagination. After several enthusiastic visits to Bayreuth, I began to entertain doubts as to the Wagnerian formula; or rather, to believe that it could be useful only to Wagner's genius. Wagner was a great collector of formulae; those formulae he mustered into one formula which is considered as personal for the sole reason that music is not well known. Without denying Wagner's genius, one may say that what he did was to set the seal on the music of his time. After him, it became necessary to seek other resources. Maeterlinck's 'Pelléas' struck me as wonderfully suited to my own purpose. The suggestiveness, the sensitiveness of the wording were things which would find their natural extension in music. Also I tried to obey a law of Beauty which writers of dramatic music often appear to overlook: I tried to make the characters sing like living beings, not in an arbitrary style made of threadbare conventionalities. Thence the allegation that I sedulously aim at monotony. I do not pretend to have discovered everything: but with 'Pelléas' I have tried to open a path which will be followed by others whose discoveries will perhaps free dramatic music from her long durance.

THE PARIS PUBLIC OF TO-DAY

In Le Courrier Musical (October) Louis Laloy writes:

Since 1914, and especially since 1918, the Paris public has undergone a great change, and a change for the worse. People seem no longer to know themselves, nor what they want. They have learnt little, and forgotten much. Before the war, the Paris public comprised a strong proportion of nouveaux riches and of foreigners. It was to be feared that dramatic art was tottering to its fall, since one third of the public was unacquainted with the French language, and another third with the merest rudiments of grammar and history. A reaction has come, however. And now what remains of our intellectual élite shun the theatres that cater for the crowd, and assemble in smaller places to listen to plays worthy of their attention. But operas, lyric dramas, and ballets cannot be played on small stages, nor to small audiences. The people who applauded 'Pelléas et Mélisande' in 1902 were not more than three hundred. To-day 'Pelléas' is consecrated by success. But had it been produced for the first time before the public of 1919 or 1920, those three hundred would have sunk to two hundred. And instead of the people who scoffed at them, but whose good faith was amenable to persuasion, we should have had gloomy, unconcerned bores staring at the enthusiasts without so much as a smile. Before the war, the Paris public was suspicious, restive, irreverent, but also capable of enthusiasm. Very little of all that remains. Even of protesting against the most grotesque shows that public is incapable.

A SOLOIST'S INCOME AT PARIS

In the same periodical (November) Louis Charles Battaille describes the prospects of the average interpreter of good standing, singer or instrumentalist:

No fee for playing or singing at a symphony concert, or any concert given by the existing musical associations; no fee at charity and gala entertainments; at private parties, no fee: of late, the fashion is to invite a composer to give a hearing of his works, and find his own interpreters. Should the artist give a concert, four times out of five the expenses, taxes, super-taxes, rights of various kinds, and so forth, will exceed the takings. The income derived from teaching is generally precarious, and at best unsatisfactory. In fact, the interpreter can hardly hope to make a living. We are in danger either of seeing their number decrease until it becomes insufficient, or of their organizing into a trade union—which will mean that financial questions will relegate questions of art to the background.

ON TRANSCRIBING BACH'S CANTATAS

In the Signale (November 2) Hans Oppenheim criticises the pianoforte transcriptions of the instrumental parts of Bach's Cantatas in the Breitkopf edition:

They correspond with what Bach has written neither in actual fact nor in character. They are often difficult to play, at times impossible. The 'Neue Bachgesellschaft' might well direct its activities towards publishing an adequate edition of these masterpieces.

ACOUSTICS AND MUSIC

The Rivista Musicale Italiana for October contains a long instalment of Jean Marnold's 'Nature et Evolution de l'Art Musical,' devoted to the study of sound. The writer is one of the very few experts in acoustics whose concern is not with the science per se, or as a means of prescribing to music a certain course, but with the data which it provides for the practical purposes of analysis and criticism. The present part of his contribution is instructive, clear, and thorough. Its continuation will no doubt contain valuable conclusions, which will be recorded here when the time comes.

MONTEVERDI'S LOST 'ARIANNA'

In the Revue Musicale (November), Xavier de Courville analyses the poem by Rinuccini, which except for the preserved 'Lamento,' is all that remains of the famous 'Arianna' performed in 1608 at Mantova. He expresses the hope that Monteverde's score may some day be found, as was (in 1888) that of the 'Incoronazione di Poppea.'

NICOLAI OBUKHOF

The same issue contains an extensive article by Boris de Schloezer on this new-comer among Russian composers:

Obukhof's music can hardly be considered apart from his strong vein of religious mysticism. For him, music is not an end, but a means: yet all that he thinks and feels was revealed to him sub specie musicae. He does not try to convey ideas through the medium of music, but seems to conceive everything as music. In his first works, played in 1917, when he was still a student at the Petrograd Academy of Music, no dynamism, no rhythm were at first perceptible. All seemed frozen and motionless, all consisted of massive, apparently unrelated chords. Later, after a further course of study at Paris, Obukhof published four songs, written as early as 1913. Those are not characteristic of his present style, which can best be described as founded on the employment of complex harmonic units. It is from this harmony that Obukhof derives his melodies, his rhythms, his polyphony, treating each note of the chromatic scale as a perfectly independent unit. His vocal parts are always in sharp contrast with the instrumental accompaniment. He frequently resorts to vocal glissandi which enable him to introduce, in his music, besides the twelve tempered notes of the chromatic scale, the infinity of the natural notes. He is at present composing a vast work called 'The Book of Life,' whose text he has written under the influence of the Fourth Gospel and the Book of Revelation.

HUNGARIAN FOLK-MUSIC

In the same issue, Béla Bartók supplies, on the musical lore of his country, a wealth of accurate information which was particularly needed. Despite repeated warnings, many people continue to believe that gipsy music is Hungarian music (Liszt did a great deal to propagate the notion). Pending the time when the eight thousand genuine folk-tunes collected by Bartók, Kodály, and others will be published, nothing could be more welcome than a digest of the knowledge to be gathered from their study:

Hungarian folk-tunes are to be divided into three groups. The first comprises very old tunes, characterised by the use of the pentatonic scale (sometimes altered into a Dorian, Æolian, or Phrygian), by their asymmetrical structure, and by the fact that they start on an accent (never with an up-beat); they include many examples of parlando-rubato. The second group reveals the influence of foreign systems (chiefly Western), and comprises examples of the more or less regular structure which with the third group becomes the rule. This third group consists of genuine folk-songs, modern in origin, and whose rhythm, always tempo giusto, is generally that of some dance.

A DUTCH COMPOSER

In the same issue, Henry De Groot gives interesting particulars of Johan Wagenaar, born at Utrecht in 1862, whom he calls 'the Dutch César Franck':

Wagenaar is remarkable both as a composer and as an educator. He is also a conductor of great merit and untiring activity. He has written many organ works, orchestral and chamber music, humoristic cantatas, and several operas. His musicianship is profound, and he is as great in his humorous as in his earnest vein.

A BELGIAN COMPOSER

Side by side with the above article, another by André Cœuroy praises the output of the Belgian, Désiré Pâque, in a way that will inspire the reader with an equally eager desire to know the works he refers to.

UNKNOWN WORKS BY GREAT COMPOSERS

In the Signale (October 26) Prof. Hans Schorn gives an account of the first production (at Carlsruhe, a hundred and fifty-three years after its composition) of Mozart's comic-opera in three Acts, 'Die verstellte Einfalt.'

In the Musikblätter des Anbruch (October), Prof. Franz Moissl briefly describes a newly discovered Overture by Brückner, written about sixty years ago, as 'full of vitality and deserving frequent performance.'

In Die Musikwelt (November 1), Dr. Rudolf Stephan Hoffmann devotes an article to three early songs by Mahler, the manuscript of which is in the possession of Mahler's sister, Frau Justine Rosé.

OLD GUITAR MUSIC

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (October), Adolf Kocirz describes and publishes four Fantasies for seven-stringed guitar, written by Melchior de Barberis in 1549. The first and third are quite attractive.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

GERVASE ELWES MEMORIAL

Sir Edward Elgar said: 'I loved the man—a great gentleman, a great artist, a great friend!' Sir Hugh Allen said: 'The perfect singer,' and Father Bernard Vaughan: 'A lay apostle.' Has another singer had tributes of this quality? Has, to the memory of another singer, such a scheme been dedicated as the Gervase Elwes Memorial, scheme launched at Æolian Hall on November 17? Most of the speakers dwelt on the dead singer (who lost his life nearly a year ago in a railway accident at Boston, U.S.A.) in tones both subdued and fervent. This became peculiarly impressive; not less so was the almost unbounded field of activity indicated for beneficence by the Memorial fund. Aid for needy students and musicians stricken in health is subsidiary to this principal aim:

To render assistance to any institutions, societies, or movements, large or small, in towns or in the country, which have for their object anything which will further the cause of Music.

This large outline was modified by the chairman of the executive committee, Mr. W. H. Leslie, who said that the smaller institutions and movements were primarily to be helped. The committee has rejected an easy form of memorial—tablet or stained-glass window—in favour of one involving much administrative toil, in a belief that the dead artist's memory will thus be the more truly honoured.

Mr. Plunket Greene stood up to rejoice that the memorial was not to be a scholarship or other aid to any intensive musical culture, maintaining that the moment's need was broadening the base, not sharpening the apex of musical appreciation. He called for a movement to bring the joys of symphony, sonata, and song to the factory-hand and the Wiltshire shepherd, like honeysuckle and clematis to the city child in Tennyson; for, as things are, the inept cinematograph (he held) which makes no call either on intelligence or imagination, is a fatal menace to good concerts.

Sir Hugh Allen made some definite suggestions—a book describing as nearly as may be Elwes' art, his technique, and ideals; Elwes prizes at competition festivals for songs chosen, taught, and performed in the light of his example; and the subvention of the publication of certain choral works at present too costly for due dissemination (Vaughan Williams' 'Sea Symphony' was a named example).

On the administrative side, funds are to come from donations and from annual subscriptions, and the income only is to be distributed. Each donation of 10 guineas or annual subscription of 10s. 6d. gives right to one vote on the allocation of grants. The executive committee numbers sixteen members, four of whom will retire annually. Subscribers should address themselves to the hon. treasurer, Major J. Leslie, D.S.O., M.C., 5, Fenchurch Street, London, E.C. 3.

Sir Edward Elgar used a phrase of charming reticence in speaking of the early days of his friendship with Elwes: 'It began with his impersonation of the principal character in a poem to which I was allowed to add some illustrative music.' Sir Edward, while disclaiming oratorical gifts, had the art to leave us in no possible doubt over what poem it was in particular.

A letter was read from Mr. G. Bernard Shaw disapproving of the scheme and declining to contribute.

R. C.

New Music

PIANOFORTE

A second set of three Miniature Pastorals by Frank Bridge (Winthrop Rogers) is sure of a welcome from all who played the first three. They cover a good deal of the keyboard without making demands that cannot be met by the young player of fair technique and good musical feeling. The pieces have no titles, but a little sketch by M. Kemp-Welch tells the player what each piece is about—a method that beats titles hollow.

It is good to see our composers able to write for youngsters, or (the next best thing) able to write to or about youngsters. Herbert Howells' Sarum Sketches (Augener) are not too difficult for clever children, but on the whole they belong rather to the kind of music grown-ups should play to kiddies in order to show them that music is after all not a dry affair, but really good fun when you can get about the keyboard quickly and not spoil the funny chords by jibbing at them. Mr. Howells unbends with delightful results, and his Sketches will be enjoyed by lots of children old and young, as well as by the lucky small boy—nicknamed 'Ooce'—to whom they are dedicated.

John Ireland's 'The Darkened Valley' (Augener) is far less difficult than most of his pianoforte music. It carries a quotation from Blake, 'Walking along the darkened valley, with silent melancholy,' and the music, quiet and lyrical, well expresses the motto. Mr. Ireland should write more music of this modest degree of difficulty. This little piece is as characteristic as some of his big things that few players can tackle. Why not cater more often for the great crowd of people who are a bit short of technique, but well off in the far more important matters of taste and feeling?

Ernest Austin's 'An Indian Pipe Dance' (Elkin) is a quaint piece, in which a rhapsodic kind of tune is played over an unchanging bass of six notes. The implied harmony is a chord of F minor followed by a first inversion on D flat, and Mr. Austin shows a lot of ingenuity in dodging the monotony that is always round the corner when a composer sets out to emulate the Chopin Berceuse.

An excellent number of the Chester Library is a set of Seven Selected Pieces by H. Pachulski. They vary considerably in degree of difficulty, but all alike call for imaginatively playing and all are attractive. There is no disputing the Russians' knack of writing short pianoforte pieces.

Still, they haven't all got it. Here, for example, is a second Gavotte by W. Sapellnikov (Chester), which shows that he for one has little of the talent of his countrymen in this way. His main subject is trite, and the rest of the material, though somewhat better, really does very little with a good deal of fuss.

Victor Vreuls' Caprice and Prélude Elégiaque published separately (Chester), are far more attractive. They are difficult in the sense of calling for players used to extended writing for the keyboard and skilful pedalling. The Caprice lives up to its title, and the Prelude is as impressive as an Elegy ought to be.

With this modern pianoforte idiom in one's mind, it is startling to take up a couple of sets of Schubert's Dances, with their left-hand part almost invariably consisting of a bass note followed by two chords—usually either tonic or dominant. Book I. contains Opp. 9, 18, and 33, and Book II. Opp. 50, 67, 91, and 127. They are edited by Liszt, and published by Augener.

Robert Elkin's 'Sarabande Pensive' (Elkin) shows him still sticking to his antique models. This essay, however, is much better than its predecessors, showing more originality in several respects. The occasional consecutives add a welcome modern touch of the right kind. Touches of the wrong kind, I venture to think, are the chromaticisms in bars 6, 9, and 10 of the last page. All three discords are out of the picture, though mild enough in themselves.

Had Sydney Rosenbloom been a Russian, he would have called his Postlude (Augener) a Prelude. It is just that kind of piece, in E flat minor, short (only a couple of pages) and emotional in the heart-on-your-sleeve way that most people like.

The same composer's 'Sous le Beau Ciel,' a Serenade (Augener), is a good specimen of light writing, which falls away slightly in its middle section, but still remains what Americans would call 'a worth-while' piece.

Montague F. Phillips' 'Sea Dreams,' 'Scherzetto,' 'Rêverie,' and 'Impromptu' (Augener), are four attractive salon pieces which show throughout the facile hand of the successful song composer. They are fairly difficult.

From the same house comes the first of four books of duets, 'Celebrated Ballet Music of the 17th and 18th Centuries,' for sight-reading. They are well adapted for this useful purpose, but as they consist of delightful pieces by such composers as Lully, Rameau, Gluck, Gossec, Monteclair, &c., &c., most players having read them at sight will promptly add them to their repertoire of easy and moderately difficult duets.

Another easy and tuneful duet is 'In the Arbour,' one of Hofmann's well-known 'Rustic Pictures' ('Kirmess'). It has now been extracted from the suite and published separately (Novello). H.G.

SONGS

One takes up a collection of Russian songs expecting to find familiar examples by Tchaikovsky or Moussorgsky making up the bulk. Volumes I 12 of the 'Russian Song Books' (Chester) have great merit of breaking a good deal of ground. It will be fresh to the average English singer and listener. The volumes are for bass voice, and will be followed by others for tenor, soprano, and contralto. Each of these two sets contains six songs, mostly drawn from the repertory of Chaliapin. The composers represented are Arensky, Balakirev, Bleichman, Glinka, Slonov, Sokolov, Tchaikovsky, Koenenman, Tchaikovsky, and Korestchenko. Mrs. Newmarch and Jean-Aubry supply English and French versions. The biographical details are contributed by Mrs. Newmarch. What will no doubt prove to be a fine collection thus makes the best of starts.

The ugliness of Cyril Scott's 'The Huckster' (Elkin) is no doubt intentional, but even ugliness could sound natural; here it doesn't. Nor are the accents pleasant, though here again there may be some deep intent at the back of things.

The same composer's 'Have ye seen him or his by?' (Elkin) is overloaded with far-fetched melody. The opening phrase of the voice-part, a simple diatonic affair, is made to carry all sorts of harmonies, generally the sorts that seem to belong to some other work. Nobody denies the suggestive power of varied harmonies applied to the vocal melody, but there is a point beyond which it is dangerous to go. Mr. Scott passes it in the very first page, and stays there a long time—with a disappointing result.

That one may do this kind of thing successfully is shown in John Ireland's 'The Merry Month of May' (Winthrop Rogers). At the end of each verse the accompaniment makes a wild plunge away from the melody of the voice-part, followed by as wild a plunge back again for the cadence. But the excursion is so brief, and is so clearly the climax of the verse, that the effect is exhilarating. The numerous rough resonances are quite in keeping with the bucolic character (Dekker), and the song is a strikingly energetic piece of work.

In 'Love is a sickness full of woes' (Winthrop Rogers), Mr. Ireland is, on the whole, simpler, though it would not be J. I. if he did not make us wince occasionally at a first hearing. There is real expressiveness in this setting of old Samuel Daniel's plaint. The by, one falls over a rather worrying misprint in the first of page 2. The natural is placed before the first chord, and it seems all right till one reaches the next chord, when one sees it belongs to C. The trouble is that the player wonders whether the D should not be naturalised too, though a rough flat is possible.

One wants to see how bizarre a harmonic scheme can be made to sound natural, and of a piece with its voice-part, he can hardly do better than turn to the Berners' 'Trois Chansons' (Chester). Here we have the thing done with such ease and assurance that it comes off brilliantly. The songs strike me as being the best the composer has so far published, because they contain a few welcome cases of diatonic melody, and also because they are not mere 'pulling.' The poems are by Jean-Aubry, and so delightful that it is a pity they seem to be possible in any tongue but their original French. The 3, 'La Fiancée du Timbalier,' should be a brilliant success, on account of both words and melody.

Two more of Roger Quilter's arrangements of old English songs have been issued by Winthrop Rogers: 'Barbara Allen' and 'The Jolly Miller.' If good old songs ever need a new lease of life, such admirable arrangements as these should give it them.

C. W.

VIOLIN AND CHAMBER MUSIC

M. Gabriel Fauré's second Quintet has now been published (Durand, Paris). It is a work that will be welcomed amongst the more skilled amateurs and by performers generally. The public at large, I fancy, will be less eager to accept it for the reason that it gives greater pleasure to the performer than to the listener. It is most ably written, and violinists, violist, cellist, pianist, must needs delight in playing fluent and interesting music. Listeners, on the other hand, will view it from a different standpoint. Construction counts much more for the listener than for the performer, and the construction of the Quintet is not its strongest feature. M. Fauré, it is known, takes his stand half-way between the modernists and the conservatives. From this point of vantage he is undoubtedly in a position to avoid the errors of both. But there is also the possibility of his falling between two stools. His music, it is true, is free from whimsicalities and platitudes, but also lacks occasionally stimulus and ease. Self-criticism is one of the most valuable assets of the creative artist, but even self-criticism can be pushed to a point when it seriously hampers the imagination and the faculty for invention. The Quintet suggests a determination to eschew certain blemishes evident in other compositions of the kind—the duplication of the pianoforte part in the strings and the abuse of the obvious contrast between pianoforte on the one hand and the strings on the other. This aim must, of course, commend itself to all educated musicians. But to succeed completely one must also be alive to the dangers of the opposite extremes, and this is, perhaps, what M. Fauré did not quite realise. The impression given by the performance of the Quintet is that, admirable as the work is in many ways, it lacks the contrasts that could have been obtained by the judicious use of the opportunities the quintet gives for using the pianoforte as a foil, as an antagonist, instead of as a coadjutor. That is its weakness. Its strength lays in the careful balance of the parts, the aristocratic distinction of its themes, and the general high standard and skill of the writing.

In his Sonata for pianoforte and violin in G (Durand, Paris), M. Rhené-Baton makes no mystery of his sympathies. The type of his rhythmic design, of the melodic outlines, reveal him an ardent admirer of the Russian school. There is plenty of zest and energy in his writing—which does not necessarily imply authority and conviction. In fact, the Sonata suggests an interesting and skilfully-executed experiment rather than a mature achievement. But there is no doubting where the composer's allegiance has been given—a very few bars are enough to prove his bias for pungent rhythms and close, complex harmonies. He knows his own mind, and he gets what he wants, apparently, by industry, but without much strain. Whether the public is likely to want this kind of music to-morrow or a year hence need not now be discussed. M. Rhené-Baton is obviously certain that we must all turn to the East for light and guidance.

New short violin pieces are more plentiful than usual. The Welsh Airs and Dances arranged by Mr. Alfred Moffat (Augener) could supply excellent themes for compositions of greater weight and importance. In the present form they go to swell the already considerable volume of pieces of moderate difficulty used as a relaxation after strenuous technical studies. The same applies to the five pieces (Prelude, Rigaudon, Gavotte, Aria, Minuet) of Mr. Adam Carse (Augener)—unpretentious, well-written music, more interesting from the educational than the artistic point of view. More ambitious, and a trifle over-elaborate, is the 'Lied' for violoncello and pianoforte of M. Marcel Labey (Durand), while M. Coppola's 'Poema Triste' for violin (Ricordi) and M. Milhaud's 'Le Printemps' (Durand) are excellent examples of music thoroughly modern in spirit and workmanship, yet free from the oddities and whimsicalities that so often make modernity difficult of digestion.

Prof. Auer's 'Violin Playing as I teach it,' which was reviewed in these columns a little while ago from the original American publication, has now been issued in slightly different form by Messrs. Duckworth. The English edition quite equals the American as regards type and binding, and will no doubt be warmly welcomed by the many violinists of this country. As a record of personal experience, as well as a compendium of excellent advice, the little-volume is invaluable. F. B.

FOLK-SONGS, SHANTIES, AND NURSERY RHYMES

Of several collections received, brief notice must be included in this number, as such books are suitable for Christmas gifts. Here is a second series of 'Folk-Songs of English origin collected in the Appalachian Mountains,' by Cecil Sharp (Novello). The book contains seven ballads and seven songs, with brief notes. To students of folk-lore there is real romance in the fact of these old English ditties having been carried across the Atlantic so long ago and being still in use among a community that remains curiously primitive. The songs, however, have an appeal beyond that of mere survivals and variants. The best of them are delightful, and it need hardly be said that much of their effect is due to Mr. Sharp's accompaniments—diatonic and essentially simple as such things should be, and yet full of life and interest. To every one his fancy; here mine turns to 'Soldier, won't you marry me?' 'The Gipsy Laddie,' 'Jack he went a-sailing,' 'The Two Crows' (a quaint version of 'The Three Ravens'), and the deeply expressive 'Black is the Colour.' But the whole set will be enjoyed by all who like good tunes and rhythms.

When Mr. Sharp returned from the Appalachians he brought back something for the children as well, in the shape of a set of 'Nursery Songs' (Novello). Here they are, in a slim bound book, with large pages, and decorated with most delightful drawings in silhouette by Esther B. Mackinnon. There are eighteen songs; some are old and honoured friends, with slightly different text and tune, but most are new—at all events to the writer. The accompaniments are very simple, but not dull or tame. On the contrary there are touches that will please the youthful auditors, e.g., the little bit of imitation in 'Who killed Cocky Robin?' This reviewer can recommend the Appalachian Nursery Songs to parents and guardians with confidence, having given them the most severe of tests. They have been tried on an exacting two-year old for some months, with great success.

'Old English Nursery Songs' (London: G. Harrap) is a volume containing thirty-seven familiar examples. The music has been arranged with due simplicity by Horace Mansion, and Anne Anderson has contributed some excellent drawings, in both colour and line.

George H. Westbury's 'Twelve Nursery Rhymes and Little Songs' (Bayley & Ferguson) differs from the above collections in that the settings are new, and in some cases the words also are unfamiliar. The music is tuneful, and the songs as a whole will perhaps appeal to children who are just past the nursery rhyme stage. A good point is the use of Tonic Sol-fa for the voice-part, placed just below the Staff.

Shanties will soon be among the most popular of folk-songs, partly because they are such jolly tunes, and also because they appeal to us as survivals of romantic naval conditions that have gone for ever. Dr. R. R. Terry has long been known as a shanty enthusiast and expert, having grown up with the ditties both here and in the West Indies. The first is one that so far has been but little explored, probably because so few musicians have come into contact with the genuine article. Dr. Terry is one of the few, and has started to give us the result of his experiences and investigations in 'The Shanty Book, Part 1' of which has just been issued by Messrs. Curwen. Thirty are included in the set, with a pianoforte part of the right kind, and copious notes. Sir Walter Runciman, in the rôle of an old sailor, contributes a Foreword. Dr. Terry's long Introduction is so extremely interesting and well written, that most readers will be—as I was—a long while reaching the shanties themselves. There is no need to speak of these rattling songs, save to point out that their solo-and-chorus construction makes them just the thing for camps and such like free-and-easy comings-together. H. G.

CHURCH MUSIC

The latest additions to Mr. Royle Shore's valuable series of settings of Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis of Gregorian tones with verses in faux-bourdon by various old English composers (Novello) should prove of special interest to Church musicians. Robert Fayrfax, who died in 1521, was organist of the old Abbey of St. Alban's, and was accounted the greatest musician of his day. A recent revival of some of his music at St. Alban's Cathedral included his Magnificat in the first Mode, and it is from this Service that Mr. Royle Shore has adapted the faux-bourdon verses in his new setting, No. 4A of the series. The music is for S.A.T.B.B. with the addition for the last part of the Gloria, of a descendant for treble solo provided by the editor. For the Nunc Dimittis an unknown Edwardine composer has been drawn upon. In another setting (No. 7A) the musical material of the faux-bourdon verses is the same as in No. 4A, but the parts are here inverted. It is for S.A.T.T.B. For the Nunc Dimittis the editor has adapted music from a Latin Magnificat by William Mundy (c. 1591). This admirable series may be warmly recommended to the notice of choirmasters.

A batch of new carols issued by Novello should suit a variety of tastes. Three characteristic examples from the practised pen of Sir Frederick Bridge—'Green grows the Holly Tree,' 'The Coming of Christmas,' and 'The Carol of the Three Kings'—are settings of poems by Lady Lindsay. Dr. Alcock's 'O lovely voices of the sky'—a graceful example in pastoral style—is taken from his anthem 'Break forth into joy.' Another extract from a larger work is 'Thomas Adams' tuneful and straightforward

'I sing the Birth was born to-night,' from the tata 'The Nativity.' Decidedly unconventional. This day, a setting by Gerrard Williams of some ds from William Byrd's 'Psalms, Songs, and nets,' 1611. In this short, spirited little work composer gives us that blend of the old and the new which is a characteristic of much of the work of modern writers.

L. A. Chambers' anthem for Christmas 'Arise, O, for thy Light is come' (Novello), is effectively written in a straightforward style, and should prove useful to choirs of moderate attainments.

Two new plainsong issues deserve notice. These Godfrey Seats' arrangement of Merbecke and the 'Messe Royale' by Henry Dumont (1610-84) (Ston). In both cases faux-bourdon treatment is provided for the shorter portions of the piece. For the Creed and Gloria, which are in son throughout, a simple accompaniment has been written, well designed to allow of the free flow of the vocal part.

G. G.

The Musician's Bookshelf

BY 'FESTE'

With 'The Hymns and Hymn Melodies of the an Works,' Part 3 of 'Bach's Chorals,' Prof. Sanford Terry brings to an end a task that has occupied him some years. (Cambridge University Press, 30s.) For the information of those who wish to study this side of Bach's work, it should be mentioned that Part 1, published in 1915, dealt with the chorals used in the Passions and Oratorios, Part 2 (1917) with those of the Cantatas. This volume continues the thorough-going method of predecessors. It gives the source of both hymn melodies, the earliest published form of the tune, an English version of the text of every hymn used by Bach in the organ works. Further, the case of any authors and composers not mentioned in the earlier volumes, a mass of information, biographical and bibliographical, is provided. In his preface the author lays stress on the importance of a study of the chorals as a preliminary step towards a complete understanding of the Preludes based on them. These works are being more and more played, not only as antaries, but as recital pieces, so Prof. Sanford Terry's book comes at a good moment. Ten years ago it would have found organists uninterested. In comments on the æsthetic and programmatic side of the Choral Preludes, Prof. Terry agrees in the main with Schweitzer as to the pictorial details, though he and there (e.g., in his comments on the 'Puer us' Prelude) he goes farther and perhaps is more in the music than Bach put there. One dare not hastily reject any programme far-fetched, knowing the length to which Bach went when the tone-painting fit was on him. It is a good thing that so few of these works fail to appeal to us on purely musical grounds. At first sight this might seem to imply that a knowledge of the character of the text is unnecessary. But in many cases we cannot be sure of the mood of the piece unless we know the mood of the text. Looked on in the light shed on them by the hymn, some movements which appear from their notation to be fast, are out to be slow, and vice versa. Even where it appears to be a definite programme, however, the player need not be over-anxious to bring it out, though he will usually play the piece better if he is aware of such a basis. One might almost say that a sound general principle is to study the pictorial details, and then forget them, remembering only the general character and mood of the music. Moreover, the player who wishes to give a detailed interpretation will frequently find himself in a quandary. For example, some commentators tell us that the pedal part in 'Herr Gott, nun schliess den Himmel auf' represents a dying man knocking at the gate of Heaven; others, including Prof. Terry, that it 'depicts the faltering footsteps of the aged Simeon.' The student may adopt either or neither suggestion, but he cannot afford to be ignorant of the fact that the text of the hymn is a death-bed meditation.

As an instance of a tendency to discover tone-painting on very slender grounds, take Prof. Terry's comment on 'Ich ruf' zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ.' Bach writes a slightly elaborated version of the melody in the treble, accompanying it by a bass of repeated notes and an arpeggio middle part. Here are the opening bars:

Ex. 1.

Prof. Terry says 'the pedal asserts a firm and confident rhythm which seems to express the True faith from Thee, my God, I seek of the fifth line, and may be compared with the steadfast procession of pedal crotchets in the "Credo in unum Deum" of the B minor Mass, which symbolises the unshakable solidarity of the Church's faith.'

But surely Bach wrote the pedal part thus for one or more of the following reasons: (a) The piece being a trio, the parts should be fairly equal in importance; the repeated notes give the bass a rhythmic interest, and by sharing some of the activity of the middle part prevent the arpeggios from becoming unduly prominent. (b) Bach may have been influenced (as he so often was) by the idiom of stringed instruments. This type of bass was almost a convention in slow movements for strings. (c) Most likely of all the real point lies in the emotional effect of the throb of the repeated notes. A similar device is met with in the early Prelude on 'Embarm' dich mein,' where both left hand and bass consist of slow quaver repetitions.

By the by, Prof. Terry says of the brilliant D major Prelude on 'Valet will ich dir geben,' that 'the movement has the rhythm of a funeral march.' But surely the only rhythm that reaches the ear is that of the semiquaver sextolets in the manual parts. The cantus in the pedal becomes merely a bass of long notes.

An interesting point made on page 324, and one probably new to most of us, is that the prelude Bach finished on his death-bed ('Wenn wir in höchsten' or 'Vor deinen Thron') is based on the Orgelbüchlein prelude dealing with the same tune (Novello Edition, Book XV., p. 115). A comparison shows that when composing the later version Bach perhaps unconsciously fell back on his youthful essay so far as the treatment of the choral phrases was concerned. The harmonic basis is almost exactly the same, and the use of the little four-note figure drawn from the opening of the tune is common to both preludes. As an interesting detail note that whereas in the early piece Bach writes the bass in bars 3 and 4 thus:

it appears in the later version as:

making the little figure more insistent. It should be added that the connection between these two preludes is easily overlooked, because in the early one we have the choral melody very highly ornamented and without interludes, whereas in the late version the melody is plain and its phrases are separated by long and astonishingly skilful interludes. How Bach contrives to incorporate so much of the early prelude into the late, double the length of the piece by adding interludes and prolonging the final note of each choral phrase, and yet leave a result so beautifully balanced and finished, is well worth the student's attention. A quiet half hour's examination of the two pieces bar by bar will be time well spent.

Hereabouts an impatient reader may exclaim, 'Is this man reviewing a book or writing one?' Sorry! The fascination of the subject must be my excuse. Those who have lived with the Choral Preludes for years will bear me out when I say it is easy to begin to talk about them, even easier to go on, but very hard to stop. Let me avoid further temptation by winding up my review of Prof. Terry's book in as few words as possible. An Introduction of eighty pages gives an account of each of the various collections of Preludes, the greater part of this section being devoted to the 'Orgelbüchlein.' This is natural, because being an unfinished work, there is so much room for conjecture as to Bach's intentions. Prof. Terry appears to be the first to have solved the riddle as nearly as it is ever likely to be solved. The references in the text are to the Novello edition, but for the convenience of readers three other editions are collated in the Introduction. Here, in three hundred and fifty pages, is apparently all that is known or can be known on the subject, arranged in the most handy way and set forth with an attention to detail that is rare in these hurried days. A big and difficult task worthily carried out.

A few months ago it was my painful duty to come down rather heavily on Mr. J. F. Porte's book on 'Sir Edward Elgar.' Here is another book from him—'Sir Charles Stanford.' (Kegan Paul, 7s. 6d.) I wish I could say this shows a marked improvement, but the truth must be told—it doesn't. True, there are fewer examples of eccentric English, and the addition of the publisher's name under each work is a useful feature that the former book lacked. As a work of reference, then, Mr. Porte's volume is hanging as it does particulars of Stanford's output to Op. 177. As a critical study, however, it fails badly. Anyone who has tried to write analytical notes for even a few works knows how difficult it is to avoid staleness in such comments. The most hardened programme annotator would shy at the task of writing paragraphs on nearly two hundred compositions. He would not mind taking them piecemeal spread over a few seasons' concert-programmes, to write them at one fell swoop for publication in a book! . . . Mr. Porte is young and daring, and ventures lightly on such a job. The results are often trite. We get tired of expressions such as 'The second movement is very charming and nicely scored'; 'Presto 3-4 time moves very swiftly although the theme is prominent and boldly outlined'; 'Variation 1 is rather brilliant in the last part'; 'This variation is larger, and has a certain jerkiness'; 'The final one is rather stirring and brilliant.'

Mr. Porte scatters his 'rathers' and 'somewhats' too freely, with the result that they sometimes only qualify a statement. For example, what is the force of word doing here: 'The note of exultation that runs through the music is rather effective—even striking in character'? This is said of the 150th Psalm, a note which of course calls for a continuous note of exultation. Again, of the splendid 'Last Post': 'It is written in an inspired and somewhat stirring vein throughout.' Later Mr. Porte tells us it was 'undoubtedly composed during a period of burning inspiration.' No wonder it is 'somewhat stirring!' There is some unnecessary information occasionally, e.g., 'Sullivan, the famous comic-opera composer'; 'Joseph Bennett, a well-known musical journalist'; 'First performed at Berlin, Germany,' &c. Mr. Porte is evidently an enthusiast, and has taken lots of trouble in gathering his material. I hope he will go on being enthusiastic even after being told that the writing of a critical study of this kind is work not for a novice, but for one who has had longish training and experience in both music and literature.

Our Church music has suffered badly from the efforts of all sorts of people who knew little about composition and even less about the liturgical and other practical considerations involved. Such a kind of direction has long been overdue, and Mr. Martin Shaw's little book, 'The Principles of English Church Music Composition' (Musical Opinion Office, 2s.), will be welcomed by all save those who seem to think that the test of Church music is its ability to soothe or titillate the ears of the faithful. There is even something to be said for the opposite view that good Church music, like a good sermon, ought to make its hearers uncomfortable. No one pretends that the preacher's job is the serving out of spiritual dope; nor is it the choir's. Mr. Shaw is useful for the strong and (generally speaking) the single consecutive fifths and false relations, as he shows by examples, are more to be desired than like allowances of diminished sevenths and augmented sixths. Perhaps he is a trifle hard on some of our Victorian composers in regard to these points. Stainer and other theorists 'did not mention' false relations are a characteristic English 'progression,' for the good reason that the great mass of English music in which such progressions are frequent was buried in libraries and museums in separate voice parts, awaiting the resurrection which has only recently taken place. And our Church composers over-used diminished sevenths for the same reason that their contemporaries over-used it: it was a convention of the period. Still, you may use your convention, as you may wear a rue—with a difference, as is well shown by the examples quoted by Mr. Shaw. The diminished seventh, for instance, is one thing when used by Bach as the climax of a phrase, led up to and left as is proper to such points. Over-used it becomes merely wishy-washy, as in the awful example on page 11, wherein, of the eight chords making up one phrase of a well-known hymn tune, seven are diminished sevenths! To all but a very few readers the weakness of such writing is obvious that Mr. Shaw might well have been content to let it speak for itself. There is no better way of demonstrating the futility of bad music than by pillorying characteristic passages. Mr. Shaw, however, thinks that the pillory is not sufficient. He has got the victims duly exposed, he likes to throw a missile at them, 'over-ripe banana,' 'a piece,' 'the final thing in grovel,' &c. Readers who are not persuaded by the examples themselves will be won over by epithets. They are more likely to harden their hearts against reform.

One of the strongest points about this book is its completeness as a guide to books on the subject, as well as to typical works which should be read by all who wish to be in touch with the movement that is undoubtedly taking place in Church music. We may differ from Mr. Shaw in some matters of detail, but there can be no denying that the principles he lays down are those on which a decreasing number of Church musicians and composers, as well as choirmasters, are beginning to work. The book is therefore of great value as a first essay in the direction of clearing the ground and defining the position of those who are trying to bring the standard of taste and fitness in Church music up to the level of that of the schools and competition festivals. The need for such a crusade cannot better be shown than by the plain statement of a glaring fact—that thousands of children sing and play good music in the elementary schools during the week, and infinitely poorer music in church on Sunday. What is good enough for the Church is not good enough for the London County Council. What is terrible come-down from the days when the Church was a home of the finest in art!

Though written primarily for schools, Mr. Percy Scholes' 'Learning to listen by means of the gramophone' (The Gramophone Company, 3s.) will be very useful to the already large number of teachers and other musicians who have come to regard the gramophone as a valuable part of their equipment. Mr. Scholes divides his work into fifteen sections, beginning with Folk-Music, and passing through the Elizabethan English composers, and Purcell, Handel, Bach, to the moderns, ending with Elgar. Each section contains brief historical and biographical notes, followed by a discussion of a few works of which records are available. The reader is also put on the track of other material that may be helpful, such as of full scores, books, and records. The text, admirably lucid, and not overladen with technical terms, is helped out by plenty of picture-type illustrations. Not often do we find Mr. Scholes tripping over a matter of fact, but surely he is wrong in leading the reader to think that Bach wrote his Air on the G string. 'Leaving the higher, softer strings of the instrument unused, the composer draws full, rich expressive tone from the lowest string alone,' says P. A. S. Substitute 'arranger' for 'composer' and the passage will stand. The lovely tune was written for those 'higher, brighter strings' of the first fiddles, accompanied by the rest of the string band, as, of course, is well known to Mr. Scholes and thousands of others who have heard the third Orchestral Suite. This excellent book has a kind of official blessing in the shape of an Introduction by Dr. John Adams, Professor of Education in the University of London. It is good to see that educational authorities as a whole are awake to the value of the gramophone. With all its obvious imperfections, it promises to be the most potent factor in the propagation of music. That it will propagate floods of rubbish goes without saying. It is up to people like ourselves to see that good music gets at least an equal chance.

ADMIRABLE CRICHTONS: NEW STYLE

There is an advertisement in The Times of Monday, November 7, 1921, which deserves to be rescued from oblivion, for it is a human document of value.

A 'Star Lady theatrical artiste'—a phrase worth noting—asks for the services of 'a maid-companion, who is a good dressmaker and can play the pianoforte,' and all for £78 a year.

What a combination of qualities and accomplishments. We are not told how much about the pianoforte the paragon is expected to know. Will it suffice if she can struggle through the accompaniment to a 'best seller,' or will she be expected to play Scriabin and Liszt, or to sit down at a moment's notice and soothe the Lady Star Artiste's overwrought nerves with a dose of the classics?

Sir Hugh Allen, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Mr. Landon Ronald should take notice, and fill up the gap in the curriculum of the school they respectively direct. Clearly, classes for dressmaking should be started in Prince Consort Road, and a course of deportment for maid-companions in Marylebone Road.

Of course there have been and are distinguished artists who have made their own dresses, but one may doubt whether they learnt the art from their teachers of music.

In these days of unemployment of musicians the idea might be extended indefinitely. We may expect demands for chauffeurs who can take the 'cello part in a quartet; for a gardener in a vicar's family who will take a Sunday service and train a choir; or a butler with a good tone on the bassoon. If the system developed there would, no doubt, be some delicate questions to be settled with the Amalgamated Society of Engineers or the Union of Cooks and Hotel Waiters, but the ingenuity of our leading composers and labour leaders can be trusted to find a solution.

Seriously, it is a tragedy, for it shows what a lady, presumably with some knowledge of the world (would she otherwise be a 'star'?) expects from a musician; but after all, was not Haydn once made to hold an archbishop's jug of shaving water? As I write far from reference books I may be wrong; but 'some sort of menial service' was exacted.

That we should be in danger of returning to such a state of affairs after two centuries of progress is not a pleasing reflection. Most of us would prefer to be in the service of a princely patron than to be at the beck and call of a 'Star Lady theatrical artiste.'

A. K.

London Concerts

MR. GOOSSENS' CONCERTS

The first two of Mr. Eugène Goossens' series of concerts took place at Queen's Hall on October 27 and November 9. The audience was not large on the first occasion, and was decidedly small on the second. Regrettable as this may be so far as the organizers are concerned, it is even more so from the public point of view. The standard of orchestral performance in London is at present a good deal below what it ought to be, and nothing would do more to cure the public of its complacent uncritical attitude than attendance at concerts such as these, where could be heard, not only an exceptionally fine orchestra, but fine playing as well. On October 27 a brilliant success was scored at the beginning of the concert by Elgar's orchestral version of Bach's C minor Organ Fugue, played for the first time, and encored. Not often is the first performance of an orchestral work so speedily followed by a second. Bax's 'The Garden of Fand' (a work full of beauty, but over-long), Honegger's 'Pastorale d'Été,' Holst's 'Beni Mora,' and Brahms' first Symphony made up a programme of exceptional interest.

On November 9 we had an unexpected and jolly revival in Rossini's Overture to 'The Siege of Corinth,' followed by an overdose of modernity in Arthur Bliss' 'Mélée Fantastique,' J. R. Heath's symphonic poem 'The Builders of Joy,' Delius' 'On hearing the first Cuckoo in Spring,' Ravel's 'Alborada del Gracioso,' Schönberg's Five Orchestral Pieces, and Strauss' 'Thus spake Zarathustra.' Ravel's work is an orchestral version of an early pianoforte piece of the composer's. So far as brilliance of colour and rhythm were concerned, it made the rest of the programme seem tame. 'The Builders of Joy' has some good stuff in it, but suffers from over-length and over-emphasis. The Schönberg pieces gave a poor result for a terrible lot of trouble, and 'Thus spake Zarathustra' sounds far less like a masterpiece than it did ten years ago. It came last in the programme, and sent us away convinced of what we had felt on and off during the evening—that the honours were with the conductor and players rather than with the composers. H. G.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The opening concert of the series of ten announced by the London Symphony Orchestra took place on October 24. A new work by Szymanoffsky, 'Song of the Night,' was played, but despite some tremendous moments, made no great impression as a whole. Mr. Sammons gave a beautiful performance of Elgar's Violin Concerto, and 'The Meistersingers' Overture and Brahms' D major Symphony completed the programme. On November 7, Mr. Coates led off with the Bach-Elgar Fugue—again enthusiastically received—and followed it up with a good performance of 'Ein Heldenleben.' We had a feeling that much in this work that formerly seemed so thrilling had become rather tame, and the suspicion was made a certainty by Holst's 'The Planets' Suite, which followed. 'Mars' made the once-horrific 'Battle scene' of Strauss seem a mere tea-fight. But how little do thrills depend on noise, after all! The end of the Suite, with the female-voice choir singing behind the scenes, and becoming more and more remote till one hardly knows when they leave off, was the most impressive moment of the concert. 'The Planets,' its composer, and Mr. Coates received a well-earned ovation. H. G.

MR. SAMMONS' CONCERT

Mr. Albert Sammons has now been accepted for some years as the foremost British violinist of the day. That title has not been easily won. Violin playing in England is now a different thing from what it was twenty or thirty years ago. Mr. Arthur Catterall and Mr. Beckwith can each boast of different ways rare and great merits unsurpassed by Mr. Sammons himself. Where he does surpass them is in the extraordinary brilliance of his technique which combined with sincere and intelligent interpretation makes his performances irresistible. Mr. Catterall is a more intellectual player and Mr. Beckwith more of a stylist, but Mr. Sammons' dashing temperament dazzles an audience as nothing else can. His readings of the Elgar and Brahms Concertos give an unmistakable proof of this magnetism of his art. It was individuality and character that kept the audience spell-bound, as well as the sheer beauty and finish of his playing. In the Brahms Concerto he concluded the first movement with a cadenza of his own, which if not worse, is also not better than the majority of cadenzas written by modern virtuosi. Most of them, alas! ignore the golden maxim that cadenzas, like the rest, ought to be brief and strictly to the point. F. P.

THE ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

This very-much-alive old Society began its hundred and tenth season on November 3 with a crowded audience. The 'Enigma' variations opened the ball brilliantly, and if we were somewhat disappointed by the second number—Brahms' D minor Concerto—the blame must be shared between M. Cortot (who was a good deal below his usual form) the orchestra (which was ditto, no doubt catching the complaint from the soloist) and the composer, for the Concerto is surely the least ingratiating in the repertoire. The second half of the concert revived everybody with Ravel's 'Ma Mère L'Oye' suite and 'Petrouchka.'

On November 17 a smaller audience heard a less enjoyable programme. Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Cortège des Noces' is little more than a glorified fanfare, Holbrook's 'Ulalume' is splendidly scored, but fails to grip us—just as this side of Poe's wit fails to grip us now, and for pretty much the same reason. Delius' 'On hearing the first Cuckoo in Spring' was too heavily treated. The cuckoo must have been an ostrich. Arnold Bax's Viola Concerto, played by Tertis, had a first hearing. It contains some exquisite music, especially in the slow section, but it has a fatal defect—the solo instrument is lost in the orchestral background. It is the old problem of the 'cello concerto, only more so. The performance, so far as the orchestra was concerned, seemed far from good. We ought to hear the Concerto again, with a balance which would give the unrivalled art of Mr. Tertis fair play. The concert closed with Brahms' third Symphony, unusually grateful after so much that was unsatisfactory. H. C.

CHORAL

The Royal Choral Society, like many other societies, opened its season with 'Elijah.' The performance was given at the Royal Albert Hall on October 29, under Sir Frederick Bridge, with Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John ies, and Mr. Herbert Brown. Among other al happenings the performance of 'The lempion' by the People's Palace Choral and hestral Society, under Mr. Frank Idle, on umber 12, deserves mention as an example of growing musical activity of which the People's ace is the centre.

W. MCN.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts are running a ular course under Sir Henry Wood's direction. October 22 the Symphony was the 'Eroica,' Ethel Smyth conducted two excerpts from her atswain's 'Mate,' and Moiseiwitsch played erepnin's C sharp minor Concerto. Some of erner's Fire Music and Stravinsky's 'Fireworks' alized Guy Fawkes' Day, when the Symphony Tchaikovsky's fifth, and Lamond played the thoven G major Concerto.

Mr. Adrian C. Boul's Sunday afternoon concerts the British Symphony Orchestra go from ess to success, and the design of the programmes been fully justified. On October 30 the works en were the 'Hebrides' Overture, Beethoven's Symphony, the 'Good-humoured Ladies' Suite, Armstrong Gibbs' Ballet music, 'The Betrothal.' Frederick Holding gave Elgar's Violin Concerto November 13, the Overture was 'Egmont,' and Symphony Mozart's in E flat.

W. MCN.

CHAMBER CONCERTS

There has been great activity in chamber music. v works have come to light, but none have stood vell. Pizzetti's Quartet, played by the Catterall rtet for the London Chamber Concert Society, was (appointment. It sounded like an early work. er composers, from Bach and Beethoven downds, have suffered in the same way. A reputation t on first-rate work brings out the second-rate. Fauré's Pianoforte Quintet, played by M. Cortôt the Allied Quartet for the Classical Concert iety, caused no pulses to quicken.

British works have had plenty of attention, and notes with pleasure the following performances: nk Bridge's Phantasy Trio in C minor by Miss oda Backhouse, Mr. Felix Salmond, and Mr. old Craxton; Goossens' Phantasy Quartet by Philharmonic Players; York Bowen's Quartet , Op. 46, by the Spencer Dyke Quartet; a work Mr. Alfred Wall by the new Beatrice Hewitt nfororte Quartet; a Septet for strings and wind by J. R. Heath, given for the first time at a concert he Guild of Singers and Players.

The Chamber Music Players were again supreme amiliar works at Wigmore Hall on November 8; also was the Flonzaley Quartet at Wigmore Hall October 21. Nothing that has happened since effaced the impression of their Haydn playing. MS. Quartet by M. Enesco which followed it e forgotten without reluctance.

We must not omit to mention the Harmonic Trio, hree ladies, who played with much spirit at gmore Hall on November 12.

W. MCN.

MR. JOHN COATES

f the recitals of Mr. John Coates at Chelsea n Hall become an institution they should have a hy effect upon our singing fashions. So much ght about them that is wrong elsewhere. First, blessed word 'decentralization.' Half of the als given in the West End should be held in ent suburban obscurity. Now that the best people are beginning to look miles from Oxford Circus for their concert-halls, perhaps the worst will follow suit, saving in pocket without damage to their pride. Secondly, Mr. Coates' programmes are worth a journey. He seldom makes a bad choice. One may be fairly sure that a song is included, not because it is English, or of a period, or still in MS., but because it is good. The labels 'Ante-Purcell,' 'Purcell to Parry,' and 'Modern,' are Mr. Coates' way of grouping the songs he approves of, and not an easy way of getting a list together. Thirdly, Mr. Coates sings the words of his songs. This is important, because most singers seem to think it unnecessary, or rather don't think about it at all. Few of them seem to realise that unless a singer's words are heard, he or she might just as well not sing at all. These are the three chief distinctions of Mr. Coates' Chelsea recitals. Of course his singing, as everybody knows, is all music and expression, but in these matters nearly all singers do their best. The recitals covered by this month's chronicle are those of October 18, with twenty modern British songs by twenty composers, and November 9, when the programme illustrated English songs before Purcell. The accompanist was as usual Mr. Berkeley Mason.

W. MCN.

OTHER SINGERS

Miss Doris Manuelli has lately taken her place among lyrical singers of distinction. Her voice (a rich contralto) has a strange trick of completely changing its quality in the middle of a song, or even of a phrase, without due reason; but it does good service nevertheless, and Miss Manuelli extracts from it every variety of expression. Her singing is real interpretation, and it has that rare and necessary virtue of clear words. At Æolian Hall, on October 25, her programme was modern and British; on November 1 she sang German classics.

Mr. Philip Wilson gave excellent British programmes at Wigmore Hall on October 31 and November 14. His music—old and new—was very well chosen, and he sang with refinement and ability. One is grateful to a new-comer who knows so well how to offer his credentials.

In the multitude of vocalists one can also distinguish Madame Anne Thursfield, with her gift of expression; Miss Dorothy Moulton; and from other lands, Tilly Koenen, Marcia von Dresser, and Rosing.

W. MCN.

VIOLIN AND VIOLONCELLO

M. Thibaud, whose name conveys little to the general public, is one of the world's best violinists, and therefore takes first place in the recital record. He appeared at Wigmore Hall on October 29, and played Vivaldi, Bach, and Chausson with a sense of style and a technique that could hardly be bettered. He gave a second recital on November 1. M. Isaac Losovsky, at Æolian Hall, on October 26, was responsible for a new Sonata by Mr. F. J. Morgan.

Arnold Bax's E major Sonata was played by Miss Bessie Rawlins and the composer on November 2, and Sonatas of Debussy, Pizzetti, and Ireland, by Mr. Spencer Dyke and Mr. Harold Craxton on November 7.

For violoncello music we have been indebted to Mr. Ivor James, who played Hurlstone's D major Sonata with Mr. Harold Samuel on November 3; and M. Maurice Dambois, a proficient player and the writer of a shapely Concerto.

W. MCN.

PIANISTS

Rosenthal leads the way in pianoforte recitals, having announced seven of them, with historical programmes. Also, he is a big pianist, big enough to adapt music to his own ends, while lesser people strive to adapt their ends—finger-ends—to the music. If he declaims Schumann (Wigmore Hall, November 5), or rides rough-shod over Chopin (November 12), he does it in the grand manner. He cannot always descend to taking pains over trifles. When he does, however, he serves them up deliciously. Perhaps he came nearest to normal and human standards in his Weber-Schubert programme (October 29). His stirring interpretations were just what every pianist would like to put into the same music.

Hofmann, at Queen's Hall, on October 25, was very different. The more of himself he puts into a performance the better one understands the music. Even so slight a thing as the Beethoven G major Rondo became an experience that remains in the memory among the fleeting impressions of busy concert-going.

We have also had Pouishnov and Cortôt again—the former a little below his best, and the latter unique in Debussy's first book of Preludes; Mark Hambourg; and several recitals from Mr. Herbert Fryer. A Concerto in E minor by M. Dohnányi was introduced to England by Miss Olga Carmine at Queen's Hall on November 2, Sir Henry Wood conducting the Queen's Hall Orchestra. Miss Marguerite Tilly showed herself a true exponent of Bach at Wigmore Hall on November 4. Miss Katherine Goodson at Queen's Hall, on November 14, played Arthur Hinton's D minor Concerto with the London Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Albert Coates.

W. McN.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

THE CARL ROSA SEASON: GILBERT AND SULLIVAN WORKS

All that there has been of opera in London during the past month has been in English, a fact from which one might draw many conclusions were there many to draw. There are some, but they do not give us any very new matter on which to ruminate. The main point established is that the amusement-seeker is evidently ready to include opera in his possible sources of pleasure, and that he has a decided liking for the examples of Gilbert and Sullivan so long denied him. For the more serious blend provided by the Carl Rosa Company at the Royal Opera, Covent Garden, he has shown all possible regard, and those to whom prices are no consideration have thronged the theatre night after night. Consequently the Company's season may well be deemed successful. I think, too, that those who subscribed for the more expensive seats have been well satisfied; and where this has not been the case, they have certainly been surprised.

Few people seem to take cognizance of the true facts with regard to the performances of opera in English. As a matter of actuality, it is a most remarkable achievement on the part of our British singers. Many a time I have marvelled at what the Carl Rosa Company has offered its patrons during the past month or so. It is really wonderful what has been accomplished. All sorts of operas, and all nationalities, have been represented in a spirit and tuneful fashion by people to whom the whole thing, as an art, is totally strange. Good, worth English men and women have presented themselves in all sorts of unrelated foreign character from that of the Saga-figures in the Wagner 'Ring' to the erstwhile very live and human, but thoroughly Latin, people in Puccini's 'La Bohème.' A long succession of singers has come on to the stage and impersonated these and numerous other people with pleasant mien and tuneful voice. And all this has been done 'off their own bat,' so to speak, because operatic art in this country is a branch our schools of music do not teach. The would-be opera singer has to be thrown on to the stage to sink or swim, supported only by the saving grace of such gifts as the gods may have endowed him with. He has no technique acquired in school to rely on, no knowledge of the ropes gained by careful tuition on the boards, under skilled and experienced hands. When we remember the conditions with regard to preparation on the part of the operatic performer that prevail in this country, we can only echo the words of the good Brabantio when they saw Lohengrin materialising out of the mist of the Scheldt: 'A marvel, a marvel!'

Thus, then, there can be nothing but the warm commendation of the efforts of everyone concerned in the presentation of grand opera in English. It is, as our neighbours would put it, a tour de force. Adverse comment—save by the ignorant—is disarmed. It is quite easy to say that Miss So-and-so might be better, or that Mr. Thingumbob cannot sing the music of Cavaradossi; but when I think of the circumstances—in reality thick, prickly hedge—that surround the British singer who 'goes in' to opera—truly I marvel at what he accomplishes. Anyone who sings fairly in tune and moves with some meaning (not necessarily the right one) in foreign opera performs a miracle. The Company has offered plenty of variety in the course of the five weeks of the season has run down to the time of writing, and for the most part it has been provided by members of one or other of the numerous sections belonging to the organization. A feature of the season has been the specialisation of the Wagner operas, and we have had 'Valkyrie,' 'The Mastersingers,' and 'Ring' at increased prices and with larger orchestras. Outside help has been called in for one or two other operas. The most successful of the visitors has been Mr. John Coates, whom some of us knew of old as a very fine operatic artist. He is one of those who, thanks to unremitting hard work, wide experience, and great natural gifts, represents what the British singer really can do in grand opera. But then it is not all who have had the same opportunities as Mr. Coates, and it is not all who are equally gifted. A man who can sing 'The Dream of Gerontius' and 'Carmen' in the same week with equal conviction, both is by way of being notable. Personally I think there will be many more John Coates' when our schools of music give serious attention to the practical I repeat, practical—teaching of opera. As it is, Mr. Coates remains on a pinnacle by himself, to which he has climbed with infinite labour, unaided save by his own efforts. It was an immense personal satisfaction to me to note the enthusiasm with which the performance of Lohengrin was received at the end and not at the earliest stage, showing that he had

(Continued on page 851.)

SHORT ANTHEM.

Words from Sarum Primer, 1558.

Music by R. WALKER ROBSON, Mus. D.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

♩ = 69.

PIANO.

And in my un - der - stand - ing. God be in mine

ALTO.

And in my un - der - stand - ing.

TENOR.

And in my un - der - stand - ing.

BASS.

p God be in my head, . . and in my un - der - stand - ing.

♩ = 69.

CCOMP.
(For practice only.)

p mp

eyes, . . and in my look - ing. God be in my mouth, and in my mf and in my look - ing. God be in my mouth, and in my

mf and in my look - ing. God be in my mouth, and in my

mf and in my look - ing. God be in my mouth, and in my

Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

speak-ing. God be in my heart, and in my think-ing. God be at mine end, .
mf
 speak-ing. God be in my heart, and in my think-ing.
mf
 speak-ing. God be in my heart, and in my think-ing.
mf
 speak-ing. God be in my heart, and in my think-ing.
mf pp
pp
 God be at mine end, and at my . . . de - part - - ing.
pp ppp
 God be at mine end, and at my de - part - - ing.
pp ppp
 God be at mine end, and at my de - part - - ing.
pp ppp
 God be at mine end, and at my de - part - - ing.
pp ppp

(Continued from page 848.)

gained the goodwill of his hearers. The other guests have been less notable. M. Rosing essayed Italian opera in the shape of 'La Tosca,' but his concert-room experiences hardly seem to have prepared him, and the result was frankly disappointing to those who thought he would be able to achieve wonders. M. Dinh Gilly also took part in the same performance, and with success. He has sung in English before, but—though it is an Irishmanism—did not do so on this occasion, or when it suited him he sang the Italian words. But the brunt of the battle has been borne by the regular members of the Company, and of these in particular are to be commended Miss Beatrice Miranda, Miss Eve Turner, Miss Doris Woodhall, Miss Enid Cruickshank, Miss Gladys Cranston, Miss Nora d'Argell, Miss Gladys Parr, Mr. William Morland, Mr. John Perry, Mr. Parry Jones, Mr. Booth Hitchin, Mr. Kingsley Lark, Mr. Frederick Lendon, Mr. Appleton Moore, Mr. William Anderson, and Mr. Harry Brindle. The conductors have included Mr. Eugène Goossens, jun., who occupies a place held in turn by his father and grandfather—a pleasant observation of tradition. M. de la Fuente and Mr. Charles Webber have done sound work in carrying on a season that the majority have found entirely to their liking.

'RUDDIGORE' REVIVED

Beyond the fact that the Gilbert and Sullivan operas at the Princes Theatre have in point of attendance beaten all other musical pieces hollow, the outstanding feature has been the revival of 'Ruddigore.' It is now known as a matter of history that our 'forefathers'—to wit, the Gilbert and Sullivanites of 1887—did not appreciate it. To the superior (of course) judgment of present-day worshippers of the twain, it is quite evident why. There were two things against it. In the first place it followed 'The Mikado,' one of the most brilliant pieces of work produced by this or any other pair, and, in the second, it burlesqued dramatic methods that had completely passed out of ken. They were the methods of the mid-Victorian melodrama, the P. Cooke style of thing that flourished at the 'Old Vic.' It was an incomprehensible language to the lay-goer of 1887, and he failed to see its point. Now—to many, but not to me—it comes as something fresh. It is very well done in every way. The mounting is gorgeous and the cast excellent. Mr. Henry A. Clayton distinguished himself greatly as Sir Ruthven, or in the haunted scene he revealed himself as a serious actor of weight. Mr. Leo Sheffield gave the right touch to Sir Despard, and Miss Catherine Ferguson presented a clever portrait of Mad Margaret. Mr. Derek Oldham was the Bold Sailor to the life, the cornpipe included, and Miss Elsie Griffin was very charming as Rose Maybud. All the others were excellent, and the audience received the piece with delight and crowded the house for every performance during the three weeks allowed. But the work will now take a permanent place, so that we are certain to see it again. One can only hope that the day is not far distant when we shall have these masterpieces with us all the year round. And it will be very much better for everyone when we do.

Mr. Augustus Littleton has been elected president for the ensuing year of the Livery Club of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, and presided at the Annual Dinner on November 22.

THE RUSSIAN BALLET 'THE SLEEPING PRINCESS'

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

M. Diaghilev and his Russian Ballet have returned to London, and, I am glad to see, in chastened mood. The weird and wild has been abandoned in favour of the classic, and an uncommonly fine classic it is. The work presented at the opening of the season at the Alhambra was nothing less than the great example of the Ballet's most glorious development in the shape of Tchaikovsky's 'The Sleeping Princess.' It was given at Petrograd thirty years ago, and that production M. Diaghilev has reproduced by the light of his own genius. The choreography is that of Marius Petipa, which is retained as the foundation for some of the most perfect dancing ever seen in London. The production, in five scenes, is simply wonderful. I have never seen such beautiful dresses and colouring as that provided by M. Leon Bakst, who has designed them, and the execution is of the finished order such as only a master-hand and one genuinely imbued with the divine fire could offer. Mlle. Lopokova delights once more, this time as the Good Fairy, and the Princess' chief exponent has been Mlle. Spessiva, a most accomplished dancer whom we have not seen before. She differs considerably from the others, and provides an element of novelty that is highly attractive. But the whole thing is a stupendous production that definitely replaces the Ballet in its right position as one of the most glorious of the arts. Tchaikovsky's music has been overhauled by M. Stravinsky, but he has practically touched nothing, and has contented himself with scoring some extra and unscored numbers in his own particular way. The conductors are Mr. Gregor Fittleberg and Mr. Eugène Goossens.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The Council of the Royal College of Music has instituted an honorary diploma of Fellowship, for bestowal on those who have rendered notable service to music and to the College. The first group of Fellows consists of Sir Ernest Palmer, Sir Walter Parratt, Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Charles Stanford, Dr. Charles Wood, Mr. Frederic Cliffe, Mr. Gustave Garcia, Mr. Achille Rivarde, Mr. Herbert Sharpe, Mr. Albert Visetti, and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse. The announcement was made at a Patron's Fund rehearsal on November 17, when Sir Hugh Allen sprang a surprise on Sir Ernest Palmer by informing him of his election, and calling on him to sign the roll as the first F.R.C.M.

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

GOLD MEDAL PRESENTED TO SIR HENRY WOOD

A large and representative gathering met at the Grafton Galleries on October 30, to do honour to Sir Henry Wood. Sir Alexander Mackenzie presided, and paid a warm tribute to Sir Henry as a versatile and tremendous worker in the cause of good music. Princess Beatrice then presented the guest of the evening with the Society's Gold Medal. Sir Henry responded in an interesting and amusing speech, and the usual votes of thanks were moved by Sir Hugh Allen, Lady Cooper, Lady Swaythling, Mr. Norman O'Neill, and Mr. Landon Ronald, after which the proceedings closed with a delightful performance of the 'Siegfried Idyll,' conducted by the new medallist.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

With two months' arrears to overtake, it will be necessary to pass over some records with little more than bare mention. First, let us look at the efforts to reproduce madrigal singing. The difficulties are obvious. We know that polyphonic music as a rule suffers on the gramophone from a want of balance, brought about chiefly by the comparative weakness of the bass when that part lies low. We know too that distinct enunciation of the words by the singer is far from being a guarantee that the gramophone will go and do likewise. Obviously a group of people singing complex polyphony will give the instrument a severe test. The three H.M.V. records (10-in. d.s.) of the English Singers' performance of madrigals are on the whole a good deal more successful than one would have expected. No. E233 gives us three items. On one side we have Ford's 'Since first I saw your face,' which, being simple, comes off well. On the reverse side is Wilbye's 'Flora gave me fairest flowers' and Weelkes' 'On the plains, fairy trains.' The former is excellent, but the latter is indistinct and gives us the wrong kind of pianissimo effect. We ought to hear the performers singing softly, close at hand, instead they sound as if they were singing on the other side of a closed door. A better pair is 'The Silver Swan' and Morley's 'Now is the month of maying.' In the latter the soft singing is so distinct as to make the muffled effect in 'On the plains' inexplicable. I put on 'The Silver Swan' with some misgivings, but was agreeably surprised at the result. The lovely old music loses surprisingly little, and the loss becomes less apparent at each repetition. This is a point that should be borne in mind in discussing the gramophone. In the case of very familiar music the ear evidently fills in or strengthens details that are lacking. I have often found a record of the kind disappoint at a first hearing and become a favourite at the half-dozen. The remaining madrigal record is of Weelkes' 'Sing we at pleasure' and Byrd's 'Lullaby, my sweet little baby,' two violently-contrasted numbers and on the whole the most successful of the batch. Familiarity with the music is often an important factor in our enjoyment of a record, and I imagine that this is specially the case with reproductions of madrigals. Indeed, the fullest enjoyment of this type of work can be got only by the singers. Probably most people who have sung in a madrigal choir will agree that such music is often more interesting to sing than to hear. I say this for the benefit of gramophonists who have neither sung nor heard madrigals. Don't expect to be taken by storm. Make sure of getting the full benefit of the record by buying a copy of each of the works sung, and make yourself familiar with both words and music, especially the former. Some day we may expect every record to carry with it a slip bearing the words. Meanwhile, let us be grateful to the H.M.V. Co. for having made a start in what should prove to be a very important branch of educational recording. I should add that a medium needle will usually be found best for use with these madrigal records. A 10-in. d.s. of the Gresham Singers' performance of Hatton's 'Good-night, beloved' and Elgar's 'After many a dusty mile,' seems to indicate that, so far, better results can be obtained from mixed-voice than from male-voice choirs.

A few operatic records need little more than mention. 'L'Onore! ladri!' from Verdi's 'Falstaff,' sung by Tita Ruffo (12-in.), is very telling, the dramatic parlando passages especially so. But how much more we should enjoy it if we had an English version of the words supplied with the record! (I shall harp on this, and if all the rest of you will harp with me, it will be done.) Another good record—especially in its variety of vocal colour—is that of Mattia di Battistini singing 'O Carto fior' from Massenet's 'Re di Lahore' (12-in.).

A typical Galli-Curci, high note at the end and all is 'Sovra il sen,' from 'La Sonnambula' (10-in.).

It is pleasant to leave these operatic fireworks for a couple of plain English songs—'The Lute Song' (Stanford) and 'The Fairy Pipers' (Brewer) admirably sung by Miss Carmen Hill (10-in. d.s.) The words of the first are not clear. That slip of paper for which you and I are agitating is almost as important in the case of English songs as of foreign ones, because the gramophone is capricious in such matters. It will give us on one side a singer with tolerably clear enunciation, on the other side the same singer with a plum in his mouth. With the words before us our pleasure would be doubled and the singer get fair play.

A brilliant pianoforte record (12-in.) is Cortôt, busy with Liszt's 'Rigoletto' Fantasia. The interest, of course, is pianistic rather than musical. It is both in Rachmaninov's performance of the D flat Waltz of Chopin, recorded on a 10-in. Holding over a number of records, I close with one of Caruso singing 'Domine Deus,' from Rossini's 'Messi Solennelle.' This is easily the most powerful record I have so far heard. If you want to live with it in an ordinary room, put on a soft needle and close the sound-box. If you have only loud needles, either you or the machine must go outside.

With a good many other press representatives recently had a welcome surprise at a demonstration of a new type of gramophone. The instrument is called the 'Cliftohone,' after its inventor, Mr. W. E. Clifton. I have neither the space nor the scientific knowledge to justify my attempting a description of the new features of the Cliftohone. Besides our concern here is with results. Here I am safe. The instrument is far and away the best gramophone I have ever heard. Its tone is fuller and more musical, it reproduces the lower notes with a success hitherto not attained, and the surface noises and other flies in the ointment are reduced to a minimum. The test applied was the reproduction of a record of an ordinary gramophone of good standard, repeated on the Cliftohone—a practical ordeal from which the new-comer emerged triumphantly. One point that struck me was that on the Cliftohone we heard details that did not come out on the ordinary gramophone. This indicates that some, at least, of the present faults are not in the record, but in the reproducing mechanism. Mr. Clifton is now turning his attention to some problems of recording, so we may look for a further advance in this direction also. The Chappell Pianoforte Company is putting the Cliftohone on the market.

The Gramophone Company is holding informal demonstrations of the educational use of the gramophone on Saturday mornings, from 10.30 to 12, at 363, Oxford Street. School and music teachers who desire to attend are asked kindly to notify the Education Department of the Company, at the above address.

WELCOME, YULE!

ANCIENT CAROL, 15TH CENTURY

SET BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Vivace.

PRANO. f Wel - come, mf Wel - come, born on this morn - ing,

ALTO. f Wel - come be Thou, hea - ven - ly King, mf Wel - come,

TENOR. f Wel - come be Thou, hea - ven - ly King, mf Wel - come,

BASS. f Wel - come, mf Wel - come, born on this morn - ing,

Vivace. ♩ = 100.

ACCOMP. f mf f mf

f Wel - come, f Wel - come, wel - come, Yule!

mf Wel - come for whom we shall sing, f Wel - come, wel - come, Yule!

mf Wel - come for whom we shall sing, f Wel - come, wel - come, Yule!

f Wel - come, f Wel - come, wel - come, Yule!

f mf f

WELCOME, YULE!

Wel-come, Wel-come, In-no-cents, ev-ry one, Wel-come,
 Wel-come be ye, Stephen and John, Wel-come, Wel-come, Thom-as, Mar-tyr one,
 Wel-come be ye, Stephen and John, Wel-come, Wel-come, Thom-as, Mar-tyr one,
 Wel-come, Wel-come, In-no-cents, ev-ry one, Wel-come,
 Wel-come, wel come, Yule! Wel-come,
 Wel come, wel come, Yule! Wel-come be ye, good New Year,
 Wel come, wel come, Yule! Wel-come be ye, good New Year,
 Wel come, wel come, Yule! Wel-come,
 Welcome, Twelfth-day, both in fere, Wel-come, Wel come,
 Wel-come, Wel-come, Saints, loved and dear, Wel come,
 Wel-come, Wel-come, Saints, loved and dear, Wel come,
 Welcome, Twelfth-day, both in fere, Wel-come, Saints, loved and dear, Wel come,

WELCOME, YULE!

wel - come, Yule! Wel-come, Wel-come be ye, Queen of Bliss, wel - come, Yule! Wel-come be ye, Can - dle - mas, Wel-come,
 wel - come, Yule! Wel-come be ye, Can - dle - mas, Wel-come,
 wel - come, Yule! Wel-come, Wel-come be ye, Queen of Bliss,

Wel-come, Wel - come, wel - come, Yule!
 Wel-come, both to more and less, Wel - come, wel - come, Yule!
 Wel-come, both to more and less, Wel - come, wel - come, Yule!
 Wel-come, both to more and less, Wel - come, wel - come, Yule!

WELCOME, YULE!

Animato.

Wel-come be ye that are here, Wel-come all, and make good cheer, Wel-come all, an - o - ther year,

Wel-come be ye that are here, Wel-come all, and make good cheer, Wel-come all, an - o - ther year,

Wel-come be ye that are here, Wel-come all, and make good cheer, Wel-come all, an - o - ther year,

Wel-come be ye that are here, Wel-come all, and make good cheer, Wel-come all, an - o - ther year,

Animato.

Wel - - - come, wel-come, wel-come, wel-come, wel-come, Yule, wel-come, Yule!

Wel - - - come, wel-come, wel-come, wel-come, wel-come, Yule, wel-come, Yule!

Wel - - - come, wel-come, wel-come, wel-come, wel-come, Yule, wel-come, Yule!

Wel - - - come, wel-come, wel-come, wel-come, wel-come, Yule, wel-come, Yule!

This Supplement is part also of the December issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 161.

THE WELSH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

This was held in the Pavilion, Mountain Ash, on October 22 and 24. The adjudicators were Mr. Julius Harrison, Mr. Cyril Jenkins, Mr. Samuel Langford, and Mr. Ernest Newman, and the accompanists, Mr. Anthony Bernard, Mr. Percival Garratt, and Mr. Gerrard Williams.

The instrumental playing was laudable, and met with due encouragement. The choral singing, though very fine on the whole, came in for some mild strictures. The test-pieces were all modern works, and some of the choirs had difficulty in entering into their varying moods. The climaxes were anticipated, and attention was often concentrated upon expression marks (some of them misinterpreted, e.g., animando and animato) with consequent loss of breadth. Warning was given against 'over' and 'under' singing, and undue emotional coloration. To remedy the flattening of the major third and sixth, to which male-voice choirs especially are subject, excellent advice was given to practise these intervals—and indeed all intervals of the scale—regularly.

The prizes of £250 and silver shield for the Chief Choral, and of £100 and silver cup for the Chief Male-Voice competitions, were abnormally large, and part of these may well have been diverted to the encouragement of chamber music (quartets, quintets, &c.) and of small orchestras.

Below are particulars of the chief contests:

MIXED CHOIRS (1st Class).

Tests: 'The Silent Land' (Cyril Jenkins).
'The Shower' (Elgar).

- 1st. Glanaman (Mr. Stanley Jones).
- 2nd. Britonferry (Mr. Evan Morris).
- 3rd. Mid-Rhondda (Mr. W. J. Hughes).

MIXED CHOIRS (2nd Class).

Tests: 'Nocturne' (Bantock).
'In Celia's face my heaven is' (Julius Harrison).

- 1st. Northampton (Mr. F. W. Marshman).
- 2nd. Hirwaen (Mr. George).
- 3rd. Trecynon (Mr. W. Gwynne).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (1st Class).

(Seven entries.)

Test: 'The War Song of the Saracens' (Bantock).

- 1st. Penywern and Dowlais (Mr. Evan Thomas).
- 2nd. Rhymney (Mr. Abel Jones).
- 3rd. Treorchy (Mr. J. Thomas).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (2nd Class).

Test: 'Song of the Bards' (Julius Harrison).

- 1st. Rhymney (Mr. Abel Jones).
- 2nd. Barry (Romilly Old Boys).
- 3rd. Garndiffaeth.

LADIES' CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Night in the Desert' (Cyril Jenkins).
'Shadowy Woodlands' (R. Thompson).

- 1st. Northampton (Mr. F. W. Marshman).
- Mid-Rhondda.

JUVENILE CHOIRS.

(Seven entries.)

Test: 'The Child and the Robin' (E. T. Davies).

- 1st. Abertillery (Mr. Tom Bundred).
- 2nd. Miskin.
- 3rd. Cardiff.

BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL—October 18-22.

(Continued from November number.)

The Bach singing rather overshadowed other notable doings on the final day, especially in the male and female choral classes. Mr. W. S. Nesbitt is not disposed to bestow compliments indiscriminately, but he characterised the 'tenor-lead' class, in which nearly a score of choirs participated, as the biggest and finest assembly singing high-class music which has yet been seen in the North. Of old it was often a three-cornered tussle between Manchester Orpheus, Nelson, and Habbergham, with a few hangers-on. The renaissance of male-choir singing, so widespread in its development, is not the least gratifying feature in the present situation. The work of the Manchester C.W.S., under Mr. Alfred Higson, worthily upholds the Manchester tradition. Bantock's 'Ballade' (after Villon) avoids his tendency to fasten on picturesque externals, and in the most vivid readings, amongst which must be placed that of the Isle of Man, there were some illuminating revelations of the Villon psychology; one especially recalls the phrase 'though justice, for offence, put us to death.' Once or twice, despite imperfect technique, great dramatic intensity was achieved, but the union of the two qualities was found in really convincing degree only in the already-named Co-operative Wholesale Choir from Manchester.

Unhappily in the literature for tenor male-voice choirs there is little or nothing comparable to the mixed-voice madrigal libraries, and for these sturdy 'sons of art' one longed for music analogous to the Bach Motet.

Listening to the women's choirs, often drawn from business, if not actually artizan circles, with little or no pretensions to culture, musical or other, in the music of the 'Rhinemaidens,' one's thoughts travelled back to early Bayreuth—to Wagner's efforts to devise and train up a school of interpretative singers—and now, in a brief two or three generations, here were Lancashire and Yorkshire working girls and women thrilling us with the never-fading beauty of this music, relying on nothing but magical purity of voice and the swift intuition born of spirits that had drunk deep at the exhaustless springs of romance. To have achieved so much despite the drawbacks inseparable from such imperfect conditions was more than notable.

The 'Impromptu' of Sibelius was generally misconceived. Conductors and singers alike developed no freedom of handling. The music alone will not suggest it, but the verbal spirit imperiously demands it. Had Aino Ackté been present, what terrific energy and frenzy she would have poured into those Bacchic allusions. But temperament of that sort does not reside in the staid women-folk of the manufacturing North.

The evening programme was overloaded, and the expected united performance of the Bach Motet under Sir Hugh Allen was performed abandoned. This was the only instance during the crowded week of a time-table going awry: otherwise matters went with clock-work precision, thanks to efficient staff-work. Strangers must have been impressed with the courteous consideration shown to competitors who were delayed by the circumstance of classes in which they were concerned running simultaneously in different halls. The sense of fair-play and fair-mindedness seemed highly developed amongst competitors and audiences.

The North London Festival opened on November 17 at the Northern Polytechnic, Holloway, and at Islington Central Library. A report will be given in our issue for January.

MANCHESTER AS A COMPETITION CENTRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE Competition Festival Record.

SIR,—The letter which appears in the November Festival Record from a Manchester correspondent differs somewhat from the usual tone of the articles in your paper, which are invariably helpful and not destructive. It is difficult to see what he is driving at. He writes of the 'crying need of Manchester's musical life to-day,' and yet disparages, nay actually condemns, a really serious attempt to cater for that crying need.

Three separate efforts are mentioned—first, 'a purely commercial proposition'; secondly, 'a merely sectarian effort'; and, lastly, 'a movement on frankly Eisteddfod lines' organized by the Welsh community. Of the purely commercial proposition I know nothing beyond the fact that a Competitive Festival in which the claims of art were ignored would have little chance of success at Manchester. Nor do I know much of the aims and achievements of the Cambrian movement, but it is quite conceivable that music may benefit from well-organized work on Eisteddfod lines.

Of the Manchester Competitive Festival held last June. I can give you some definite information. It was promoted by a number of music-lovers, mostly amateurs, whose only aims were to induce a more serious spirit into the study of music and to raise the standard of performance to a higher level. Their efforts met with astonishing success for a first venture, no fewer than eight hundred and eighty-five competitors entering for the various classes. The test-pieces were chosen from Bach (three), Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Verdi, Brahms, Goss, Sterndale Bennett, Parry, and Elgar. This selection will surely speak for the artistic aims of the promoters.

The statement your correspondent makes that the Festival is a merely sectarian effort is not true. How could it be? The absurdity of the suggestion is obvious, for to discriminate between the sects of to-day would compel every competitor to make a declaration of faith. One wonders if your correspondent, who laments the 'dissipation of effort' and yearns for the 'emergence of a compelling personality,' could be induced to join the executive committee, reveal his identity, and assist in destroying the wrong-headedness from which Manchester is suffering.—Yours, &c., 69, Barton Arcade, Manchester. R. H. WILSON.

[Our correspondent's reply is printed below. We publish both the letter and the rejoinder, not with any relish for presiding over an altercation, but in the hope that in whatever manner the question is raised the discussion of it will help to unify and broaden competitive effort at Manchester.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE Competition Festival Record.

'Mr. Wilson's letter calls for little comment beyond that furnished on page 3 of the Competition Festival Record of August last, where it is reported, evidently from a well-informed source, that the Festival on June 25 to which he alludes:

"... originated in the somewhat unlikely quarters of the Old Rectory Club, where several members deeming it strange that Manchester could boast no such institution save and except the annual Belle Vue contest (which, of course, is a private business enterprise), resolved to remedy this shortage... and an influential committee was formed with the Rev. A. E. Smith as secretary... As the Festival was under such a large measure of clerical patronage, it was not surprising to find a preponderance of sacred music in the tests... Dr. A. W. Wilson, Dr. T. Keighley, Mr. R. W. Baker, and Mr. R. H. Wilson formed a strong quartet of adjudicators."

'This extract fairly justifies the complaint of "narrowly sectional efforts." Musical Manchester is rather bigger than the Old Rectory Club, and if she is to have a worthy Festival it must have something more than "a large measure of clerical patronage" behind it.

'May I refer Mr. R. H. Wilson and his friends to a study of the prospectus of the Festival to be held next spring at Birmingham (obtainable from the hon. secretaries, Queen's College, Birmingham), particularly with reference to its constitution and the personnel of its executive, from which he will gather that in the fullest sense of the word it is a city affair, embracing practically every phase of musical and artistic activity, and, with Prof. Bantock at its head, making the widest possible appeal.

'It is the realisation of the inadequacy of anything so far done at Manchester, in comparison with such a scheme as this at Birmingham, that compels me to state the case with perfect candour, and to claim that Manchester ought to have, under unmistakably authoritative city auspices, a Competitive Festival in keeping with its musical reputation. This means no narrowly sectional movement, however worthy may be the motives of promoters, but an assembly of all the available directing minds now associated with every phase of the city's musical life. When that is done, the compelling personality will quite probably emerge.'

A MANCHESTER EISTEDDFOD.

The second annual Manchester Chair Eisteddfod attracted a crowded and enthusiastic audience to the Albert Hall on October 22. The entries, which numbered over three hundred and fifty, included twenty-seven choirs, eight of which figured in the chief choral contest. An effort to stimulate interest in instrumental music took the form of violin, string quartet, and pianoforte classes. Test-pieces and the chief prize-winners in the choral competitions were as follows:

JUVENILE CHOIRS.

- 'Under the greenwood tree' (Charles Wood).
Talke, Staffordshire (Mr. J. Smith).

CONGREGATIONAL CHOIRS.

- 'The Lord shall come' (Tom Price).
1st. St. John's Wesleyan Choir, Salford (Mr. J. T. Edwards).
2nd. Chesterton Primitive Methodist Choir (Mr. J. Shrigley).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

- 'The Assyrian came down' (Cyril Jenkins).
1st. Manchester Orpheus Glee Society (Mr. G. Sidney Smith).
2nd. Holmes Valley, Huddersfield.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

- 'How lovely are Thy Dwellings' (Brahms's 'Requiem').
1st. May Bank Choral Union, Stoke-on-Trent.
2nd. Cefn and District Choral Society.
3rd. Upper Hawley Vocal Union.

The adjudicators were Mr. H. M. Dawber, Mr. J. Owen Jones, Mr. Ivor Owen, and the Rev. George Vaughan.

FORTHCOMING FESTIVALS.

(Secretaries of Competition Festivals are requested to send all particulars—date, syllabus, when issued, &c.—to the Editor of the Competition Festival Record.)

1921.

CONGLETON MALE-VOICE CHOIR FESTIVAL.—December 9 and 10.

1922.

SOUTHPORT.—January 14.

SOUTH-EAST LONDON.—March 3, 4, 20-25.

LONDONDERRY FEIS.—March 7-10.

WHARFEDALE (Ilkley).—April 5-8.

CROYDON.—April 24-29.

MANX (Douglas).—April 24-27.

WIRRAL AND EDDISBURY (Chester).—April 27-29.

STRATFORD (E. London).—May 6, 8, 10-13.

MIDLAND FESTIVAL (Birmingham).—May 6, 8-13, 15-20.

PEOPLE'S PALACE (E. London).—May 16, 17, 19, 22-27.

LEAMINGTON.—June 22-24.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, nouncements by amateur chamber musicians who sh to get into touch with other players. We shall glad if those making use of the scheme will let us ow when their announcements have borne fruit. iling such notice, advertisements will be inserted ee times.

od 'cellist, capable of playing classical and modern chamber music, is invited to join pianist and violinist or the study and practice of trios, quartets, &c. Large library available. Herne Hill, Norwood, or Clapham districts.—W. H. C., c/o Musical Times.

dy pianist (trained) wishes to play in trio or quartet, also wishes to meet good pianist with whom to play pianoforte duets. (London.)—E. L., c/o Musical Times.

dy pianist desires to form or join chamber music party Tuesday or Wednesday afternoons or evenings. Could arrange for rehearsal room. Brighton and district.—M. I., c/o Musical Times.

dy viola player seeks practice with orchestra or chamber music party. London, S.W. district preferred.—OMEGA, c/o Musical Times.

ung tenor vocalist-violinist would be glad to meet capable pianist (lady or gentleman) for mutual practice. Wakefield district.—S. M., c/o Musical Times.

ung violinist desires to join trio or quartet for practice and study of classical and modern chamber music. Hampstead or Brondesbury districts.—Write F. C. W., c/o Musical Times.

e Balsall Heath Amateur Orchestra requires good instrumentalists of all kinds (pianoforte excepted).—ALBERT BASTICK, 122, Edward Road, Balsall Heath, Birmingham.

companionist (lady) would like to practise with singer or violinist. London, S.W. district preferred.—M. G. H., c/o Musical Times.

ntleman pianist wishes to meet three or four stringed instrumentalists with view to mutual practice of advanced chamber music.—L.R.A.M., c/o Musical Times.

llist and viola players are invited to join a musical party (voices and strings). Rehearsal, Thursdays, 7-9. Central London.—Apply, 'ENTRE NOUS,' 43, Great Russell Street, W.C.1.

brano and tenor required for small party on quartet basis, with own orchestra. Practice room, New Oxford Street, Thursdays evenings.—Write secretary, 12, Sandmere Road, S.W.4.

dy pianist would like to meet 'cellist and violinist for practice.—L. B. B., 24, Acot Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

nist desires to meet violinist in Beaconsfield or Gerrard's Cross district for practice of violin sonatas, &c., classical and modern.—'DIGIT,' c/o Musical Times.

ung enthusiast would be glad to meet instrumentalists with a view to forming small orchestra. Rehearsals could be held at Slough or Windsor.—'DATCHET,' c/o Musical Times.

llist. Good amateur wanted to join violinist and pianist or the practice of trios, classical and modern.—G. F. H., 224, Reddings Lane, Hall Green, Birmingham.

ateur orchestra would welcome string and wood instruments at a South London Parish Church. Practice and service weekly.—S. C. C., 59, Waleran Buildings, Old Kent Road, S.E.1.

ntleman Baritone would be glad to meet a capable pianist (gentleman) for mutual practice in Manchester or High-own districts.—S. CARLTON, 57, Peter Street, Hightown, Manchester.

inist, violist, and harpist would give services. Church, orchestral, or chamber music.—Address, S. B. S., 6, Hauberk Road, London, S.W.11.

dy pianist would be glad to meet capable violinist and 'cellist for chamber music practice—Miss RITZ, L.R.A.M., 266, Elgin Avenue, W.9.

B. W. A. (North Finchley) is fond of playing pianoforte accompaniments, and would be glad to meet a singer (amateur or professional) for the purpose.—B. W. A., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur Orchestral Society in North London (Stoke Newington and Clapton) has vacancies for good instrumentalists. Second season commenced Monday, October 24.—Write for particulars to A. W. ROBINSON, 115, Brooke Road, N.16.

Small amateur orchestra just forming requires services of male or female musicians—violinists, 'cellists, wood-wind, and reed players. Preferably resident in South-West London.—Write or call, V. B., 34, Frances Street, Battersea, S.W.11.

Experienced and enthusiastic string quartet losing its leader requires a first-class amateur violinist to act in that capacity. Practices weekly in North London.—'BEAUMARIS,' c/o Musical Times.

There are vacancies for good amateur instrumentalists of both sexes in the Wandsworth Technical Institute Orchestra, High Street, Wandsworth, S.W.18. (Conductor, Mr. Claude Landi.) Rehearsals, Tuesdays, 8-9.30 p.m. No fees. Music provided.

Orchestra (Brixton Brotherhood). There are vacancies for all stringed instruments, and cornet, flute, clarinet, and oboe. Rehearsals on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, St. Matthew's Church Schools, Church Road, Brixton, commenced October 27.—Apply, E. G. MEDLEY, Free Press Office, Brixton Road, S.W.

Amateur solo violinists and amateur orchestras required to co-operate in musical recitals at St. John's, Clapham Rise, on the second Sunday evening in each month and on the last Monday evening of each winter month.—WALLACE G. BREACH, organist and choirmaster, 42, Honeybrook Road, S.W.12.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

The second concert of the season will take place at Bishopsgate Institute on December 13 at 8, when the programme (chiefly of Christmas music) will include Bach's Cantata 'God so loved the world.' The soloists will be Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Joseph Farrington.

Church and Organ Music

ROBERT FAYRFAX

CELEBRATION AT ST. ALBANS

The fourth centenary celebration took place in St. Alban's Cathedral on Sunday and Monday, October 30 and 31, and created great interest—local rather than national, unfortunately. Through the enterprise of Mr. E. N. Wix, to whom the Diocese owes so much in so many ways, the brasses of which the grave of the great musician was deprived, doubtless during the Commonwealth, have been restored. Happily a sketch was taken of them in 1643,* and thus has enabled the restoration to take place. On Sunday morning at the Choral Eucharist the celebrated 'Albanus' Mass was sung to the arrangement in English of Mr. Luttman, the Cathedral organist, who, as a successor of Fayrfax, has taken the deepest interest in the revival of the composer's music. The 'Albanus' music—unhappily at present only in manuscript—was sung from the Saint's Chapel at the back of the High Altar, the choir leaving their stalls for the occasion. The effect was heightened by the concealed position of the singers, and the control the conductor was able to bring to bear upon them. Too much praise cannot be given to the choir for its zeal and devotion in preparing the music. In the evening the Magnificat to the first Tone, and a portion of the anthem 'Æternæ laudis liliū,' composed at the request and charges of Queen Elizabeth of York, in 1502, were sung in the course of Evensong in the English form in which they have recently been published. On Monday evening Dr. Terry lectured in the Cathedral on the work and influence of Fayrfax, with illustrations by the choir taken from the music of Sunday. The lecturer called attention to the special suitability of Fayrfax's music for great buildings like the Cathedral, and the ideal setting in which the music was being sung. He described the Magnificat as 'almost Italian in its smoothness and freedom from those harmonic clashes in which the English composers of the polyphonic period so frequently indulged.'

* See article in the Musical Times of October, 1909.

A facsimile of some of the contents of the great Fayrfax Choir Book, now in the library of Lambeth Palace, is in course of preparation by Mr. Royle Shore, and is displayed 'in medio chori' when any of the music is sung in choir. Under the guidance of Sir Guy and Lady Sebright, who subscribed towards the cost of reproduction, Her Majesty the Queen and Princess Mary recently visited the Cathedral and the brasses were shown by the Dean, who has been a potent force in the Fayrfax commemorations.

Mr. George Straker, the sub-organist, is making a collection of all that concerns Fayrfax.

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL

BACH RECITALS AND A MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

An astonishing amount of musical activity has lately taken place at this well-known City church. The series of six Bach recitals given by Dr. Harold Darke drew great crowds, every seat being occupied, and many people standing. The published programmes were gone through without alteration—a fact worth mentioning. Hard on the Bach recitals came a four-day Festival in connection with the St. Michael's Singers, a choir of City workers, formed in 1919. The programmes deserve recording in full:

November 14, at 1.....Organ recital, Dr. Harold Darke
November 14, at 6.....The St. Michael's Singers

Te Deum	...	...	Purcell
'Jesu, joy of man's desiring'	...	...	Bach
'Voces Clamantium'	...	...	Parry
New Work—'The Kingdom of God'	...	...	Harold Darke
Aria	...	...	Bach

Miss Dorothy Silk

November 15, at 1.....Organ recital, Dr. H. G. Ley

November 15, at 6.....English Church Music
St. Michael's Church Choir

Anthems and Motets by Redford, Byrd, Gibbons, Tomkins, Dering, Purcell, Greene, Boyce, S. S. Wesley, Stanford, Howells, and Charles Wood.

November 16, at 1.15.....Festival Service

Anthem, 'O Thou the Central Orb' ... Charles Wood

November 16, at 6.....Chamber Music

Two Fantasias	...	...	Purcell
Slow Movement, Quartet in A minor	...	...	Schubert
Pennington String Quartet	...	...
'By the Waters of Babylon'	...	...	Herbert Howells
Air	...	...	Bach

Mr. Madoc Davies

Solo Cantatas: 'Strike at last, thou hour desired,'

'What God does, that is rightly done' J. S. Bach

Miss Margaret Champneys

November 17, at 1.....Organ recital, Mr. S. H. Nicholson

November 17, at 6.....The St. Michael's Singers

Stabat Mater	...	...	Verdi
'Toward the Unknown Region'	...	...	Vaughan Williams
'As the leaves fall'	...	...	Darke
'Blest pair of Sirens'	...	...	Parry

The soloists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Doris Tomkins, Miss Margaret Champneys, Mr. Walter Dennis, Mr. Madoc Davies, and Mr. George Tinney.

The only alteration in the above scheme was the substitution of Howells' Organ Rhapsody No. 1, for his 'the Waters of Babylon,' owing to the indisposition of Mr. Madoc Davies.

The Church was crowded throughout the Festival, and the performances reached a high standard. To the conductors Dr. Darke, and his band of helpers, especially Mr. Thall Ball, who did fine work with organ accompaniment, hearty congratulations are due. In an article dealing with the Festival in The Times on November 19, Mr. H. C. Co added an appreciation of the work of English organists as a body. We quote a portion thereof for the benefit of the superior folk who affect to regard the church organist as a dull dog or stick-in-the-mud:

London has lately been impressed by the brilliant solo performances of certain foreign organists who have visited us. This is as it should be; but do we quite realise the remarkable capacities of our own musicians of this class? In addition to the high standard of pure organ playing which prevails among them, they are ready to do what Schumann said Brahms did at the pianoforte, turn their instrument into a full orchestra. And, apart from organ playing, it is their powers as conductors, as choir-trainers, and as general organizers which make such Festivals as this one possible and conspicuously successful. Possibly organists more than any other class of musicians in this country can effectively close up the breach between the specialists and the general public by re-creating a standard of taste.

MOLD PARISH CHURCH

Specification of new organ by Messrs. Rushworth, Draper, Liverpool.

The East end portion of the organ only has been erected at the outset, and this is placed in an elevated position, the Chancel, the casework being to the design of Thomas Jackson, R.A. The remainder of the organ will be placed in a gallery at the West end of the Church, a connected by electro-pneumatic action to the console of the Chancel.

GREAT ORGAN (West end)

FT.
1 Contra Geigen	...	16 5 Principal
2 Open Diapason (Large)	...	8 6 Fifteenth
3 Harmonic Claribel Flute	...	8 7 Tromba
4 Dulciana	...	8

SWELL ORGAN (West end)

FT.
1 Geigen Diapason	...	8 5 Octave Geigen
2 Rohr Flöte	...	8 6 Oboe
3 Echo Viol	...	8 7 Cornopean (Harmonic
4 Voix Celestes	...	8 Treble)

Tremulant.

1 Octave	} acting also through Unison Couplers—
2 Sub-Octave
3 Unison-off

CHOIR ORGAN (East end)

FT.
1 Open Diapason	...	8 4 Boehm Flöte
2 Hohl Flöte	...	8 5 Trumpet
3 Æoline	...	8

(Enclosed in separate Swell Box)

Tremulant.

PEDAL ORGAN

FT.
1 Harmonic Bass	...	32 5 Octave (partly from No. 2)
2 Open Diapason	...	16 6 Flute Bass (partly from
3 Violone	...	16 No. 4)
4 Bourdon	...	16

UNISON COUPLERS

1 Swell to Great.	4 Swell to Pedal.
2 Swell to Choir.	5 Great to Pedal.
3 Choir to Great.	6 Choir to Pedal.

ACCESSORIES

- 3 Thumb Pistons to Great Organ.
- 3 Thumb Pistons to Swell Organ.
- 3 Thumb Pistons to Choir Organ.
- 1 Reversible Thumb Piston for 'Great to Pedal' Coupler.
- 3 Pedal Pistons for Pedal Organ.
- 3 Pedal Pistons for Swell Organ.
- 1 Reversible Pedal Piston for 'Great to Pedal' Coupler.
- 1 Stop connecting Great Pistons and Pedal Pistons.
- Balanced Swell Pedals to Swell and Choir Organs.

LONDON CHURCH CHOIR ASSOCIATION

The forty-eighth Annual Festival took place at St. Paul's Cathedral on November 10. About forty choirs were represented. The Canticles were sung to Alan Gray in A, the anthem was Wesley's 'Ascribe unto the Lord,' the procession 'The God of Abraham praise' was sung 'Leoni' with imposing effect. Dr. Macpherson conducted, and Mr. Gerald Bullivant was at the organ.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

Brahms' 'Requiem' will be sung on Saturday, November 10, at 3 p.m. The London Symphony Orchestra will assist. No tickets are required.

The revival of the Liverpool Church Choir Association's annual Festival, after a lapse of eight years, was attended with gratifying musical success in St. George's Hall on October 18. Twenty-two choirs combined in a responsive way of between four and five hundred voices of men and boys, with a few ladies, and Sir Ivor Atkins, of Worcester, guest-conductor, was warmly appreciative of the 'virility and sympathy of the singers.' The music included Ivor's impressive anthem 'There is none that canst Thy voice,' and his splendid setting in A and D of Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. Sir Ivor conducted a performance which reflected great credit on the choirmasters concerned. Mr. Branscombe conducted the other parts—Bairstow's beautiful 'Save us, O Lord,' Elgar's 'Ave Verum,' Thorne's 'Let us now praise famous men,' and men's voices alone (sung In memoriam), and Mendelssohn's 'O great is the depth.' Three trombones, and timpani supplemented the organ in the accompaniments, which were ably played by Mr. H. Goss Custard, and the organ solo, the first movement from Widor's sixth symphony, was a brilliant performance. Also worthy of mention was the playing of Beethoven's 'Equali' for four trombones, the players being stationed aloft in the cross-gallery. The Festival has unfortunately resulted in a heavy loss.—Mr. Marcel Dupré paid a return visit to Liverpool on October 20, and greatly impressed a large audience at St. George's Hall by his ready skill in improvisation, the subject given to him being Arne's 'Rule, Britannia.' His pieces included Franck's Choral in B minor and the finale from Vierne's second Symphony. In Bach's major Fugue clarity was sacrificed to speed, and the brilliant registration of the Purcell Toccata in A did not rest the strength underlying the framework. W. A. R.

The Southwark Diocesan Plain-song Association sang its ninth annual Festival Evensong in Southwark Cathedral on October 27. The service was rendered by a hundred and fifty-five voices, and the production and finish of the service reached a very high level. This result, due in the main to the musical director (Mr. E. T. Cook, organist of the Cathedral), reflected no less credit upon the six individual choirmasters who brought their singers to the rehearsal with the music already well known and practised. It is a feature none too common in choir festivals. The introduction in the Canticles was by Italian composers of the 16th century, the Magnificat being by Carolus Andreas and the Nunc Dimittis anonymous. The Motet was Byrd's Sturm animæ.

On November 1, at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, the late of Connaught unveiled a tablet in memory of ten members of the choir who were killed in the war: Mr. E. Butler, F. Leslie Carter, W. B. Manson, Major George Mayor, William E. Osborne, F. Pownall, Mr. C. Sanderson, Reginald P. E. Shaughnessy, Major Thorogood, and W. Ivor Wright. The music was drawn from past-members and organists of the Chapel—Purcell, Samuel Sebastian Wesley, Croft, Humphries, and Goss, Gibbons, Byrd, and Tallis. The Bishop of London gave an address, and an impressive ceremony ended with the 'Last Post,' sounded by the buglers of the Household Cavalry Guards.

A meeting of the Epping Forest Branch of the London Society of Organists was held at St. Barnabas', Woodford, on November 5. After tea a lantern lecture on 'English Cathedral Organists' was given by the Rev. C. O. Raven.

Mr. G. D. Cunningham gave a series of recitals at St. Alban's, Holborn, on the Monday evenings in November. The programmes were a fine blend of old and new, and included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque' and Choral in E, Howells' Psalm Prelude No. 1, Reger's Intermezzo, the Finale from Vierne's first Symphony, Saint-Saëns' Prelude and Fugue in B major, Mozart's Fantasia in F minor, Chorale Preludes by Bach, Karg-Elert, and Vaughan Williams, and Dupré's Prelude and Fugue in B. There were very large attendances.

During the Patronal Festival of St. Michael's, Croydon, a musical service took place at which the W. H. Reed Sextet played Byrd's Fantasia and a movement from a Sextet by Mr. Reed, four of the players later giving Purcell's Suite. The choir sang Brent-Smith's 'Let all the world,' S. S. Wesley's 'Lift up your hearts,' Bach's 'My heart ever faithful' (boys' chorus), Noble's 'The Saints of God,' and Oldroyd's Nunc Dimittis for unaccompanied double choir. Dr. George Oldroyd, the organist of the Church, conducted. The Church was crowded.

In the report in our November issue of the Salisbury, Winchester, and Chichester Cathedral Choirs' Festival we inadvertently omitted to state that Dr. Prendergast took part, playing S. S. Wesley's Andante in E flat during the collection. The first post-war Festival, by the bye, took place at Chichester last year—not this year at Salisbury, as we were led to understand.

At the opening organ recital on October 4, in the King's Hall, Town Hall, Stoke-on-Trent, of the winter series of weekly recitals, given by the Borough organist, Lieut. Sydney H. Weale, the audience numbered close on three thousand, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. During last winter over twenty-five thousand persons attended these weekly recitals.

In connection with the free organ recitals at the National Institute for the Blind, 224-6-8, Great Portland Street, W.1, where the instrument is a replica of that at the Royal College of Organists, candidates for the forthcoming F.R.C.O. Examination will be interested to hear that the test-pieces will be included in the programme given by Mr. H. V. Spanner, on Wednesday, December 7, at 3 p.m.

Mr. George Lightfoot, organist and choirmaster at Christ Church, Cannes, will be glad if instrumentalists and vocalists spending a holiday in that neighbourhood this winter will kindly communicate with him, c/o the Rev. G. Crawford, Christ Church, Cannes, South France.

Stainer's 'The Daughter of Jairus' was sung at St. Mary's, Widnes, by the Choral Society connected with the Church. The soloists were Miss A. Myers, Mr. J. Brimelow, and Mr. T. Owen. Mr. George Pritchard was at the organ.

At High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, a tablet of Austrian oak, similar in design and decoration to the choir stalls, has been erected by members of the family of the late Mr. William Hugh, a prominent member of the choir for thirty-five years.

Brahms' 'Requiem' will be sung at Christ Church, Blackfriars Road, on December 13, at 8, by the choir (augmented), with orchestral accompaniment.

Frances Elizabeth Hughes, of Ramsgate, left £200 to St. George's Church, Ramsgate, for the upkeep and repair of the organ.

The performances of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' at St. Anne's, Soho, will take place on Fridays at 8 p.m. this year, and not on Saturdays as in recent years.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Spencer Shaw, Central Hall, Westminster—Toccata and Fugue, Bach; 'Finlandia'; 'Le Cygne,' Saint-Saëns. Queen's Hall—Intermezzo, Hollins; Grand Chœur, Guilmant.

Mr. E. T. Cook, St. Agnes', Kennington Park—Chorale No. 3, Franck; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Fantaisie Pastorale, de Séverac; Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt.

Mr. Ernest H. Smith, Parish Church, New Brighton—Overture to the 'Occasional' Oratorio; Rhapsodie, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. S. Kirby, St. Agnes', Kennington Park—Villanella, Ireland; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge; Chorale Prelude, 'St. Peter,' Harold Darke.

Mr. A. E. Jones, Town Hall, Bolton (two recitals)—Introduction and Fugue in C minor, Benjamin Cooke; Grand Festal March, Brewer; Prelude and Fugue in E, Bach; Ave Maria d'Arcadelt, Liszt.

Mr. Hugh W. Wood, Holmeswood Wesleyan Church—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Sonata in A, Corelli; March on a Theme of Handel, Guilmant. St. Paul's, Southport—Overture to the 'Occasional' Oratorio; Schiller March, Meyerbeer.

Dr. William Prendergast, Winchester Cathedral—Allegro Moderato and Tempo di Marcia Solenne ('Sonata Eroica'), Stanford; Choral Prelude, 'I give to thee farewell,' Bach; Berceuse, Arnold Bax.

Dr. J. C. Bradshaw, St. Paul's Cathedral, Dunedin (two recitals)—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Andantino, Franck; Andante Pastorale, Bradshaw; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; 'Verdun,' Stanford.

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Central Hall, Westminster—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Gavotte, Durand; Toccata in G, Dubois; Imperial March, Elgar.

Mr. Herbert E. Knott, St. Anne's, Moseley, Birmingham—Basso Ostinato, Arensky; Psalm Prelude No. 2, Howells.

Mr. Warrilow, The National Institute for the Blind (two recitals)—March in B flat, Silas; Grand Chœur in G minor, Hollins; Prelude in F, Stanford; Introduction and Fugue (Sonata No. 2), Merkel.

Mr. Wolstenholme, The National Institute for the Blind—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Fantasy Rustique and 'Bohemesque,' Wolstenholme.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Pomp and Circumstance No. 1, Elgar.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach; Psalm Prelude No. 1, Howells; Cantabile, Franck; Musette and Scherzo, Bossi.

Mr. Alban Hamer, the Cathedral, Bloemfontein—Fugue, Reubke; Variations on a Ground Bass, Farrar; Passacaglia, Cyril Scott.

Dr. G. H. Smith, Sculcoates Parish Church (two recitals)—Choral Prelude 'Vater Unser,' Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Romance in E minor, Elgar.

Mr. Sydney Townshend, St. Columba's, Helensburgh—Finale, Sonata in A major, Rheinberger; Dithyramb, Harwood; Arcadian Idyll, Lemare.

Mr. Alex. McConachie, Christ Church, St. Kilda, Melbourne—Fugue on BACH, Schumann; Adagio non Troppo and Allegro Maestoso (Sonata in F sharp), Rheinberger; Pensée d'Automne, Jongen; Berceuse and Pastorale, Vierne; Andante Cantabile and Finale (Symphony No. 4), Widor.

Miss E. Bowman, St. Mary's, Baldock—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Marche Pontificale, Widor.

Mr. Theo. Keynes, Scottish National Church, Russell Street—Sonata in E minor, Rheinberger; Carillon, Wolstenholme; Overture in C minor, Hollins.

Mr. W. Hunt, Parish Church, Belfast—Sonata No. 3, Guilmant; Adagio, Frank Bridge; Psalm Prelude No. 2, Howells; Epilogue, Harvey Grace; Two Short Pastorals, Hunt.

Mr. M. M. Gilchrist, Old Machar Cathedral—Sonata No. 4, Rheinberger; Andante in F, Merkel; Villanella, Ireland.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (four recitals)—Choral Prelude, 'Darwell's 148th,' Harold Darke; Fugue in G, Samuel Wesley; Sonata in F minor, Mendelssohn; Postlude in D minor, Stanford; Psalm Tune Postlude, 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace; and a Bach programme.

Mr. Leitch Owen, Edge Hill Parish Church, Liverpool—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; 'March of the Magi,' Varley Roberts.

Mr. G. Virgil Dawson, Mount Zion Congregational Church, Sheffield—First movement (Sonata No. 6), Mendelssohn; Pavane, Bernard Johnson; Concert Scherzo, P. J. Mansfield.

Mr. Norman Collie, Stoke Newington Parish Church—Overture to the 'Occasional' Oratorio; Sonata No. Guilmant; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Sonata A flat, Rheinberger; Psalm Prelude No. 3, Howells Sonata No. 2, Bossi.

Mr. Ambrose P. Porter, St. Matthias', Richmond (four recitals)—Epilogue, Willan; 'Finlandia'; Prelude and Fugue in C minor and Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Marche Nuptiale, Tombelle.

Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta (four recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach; Vision, Rheinberger; Psalm Tune Postlude, 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace; 'Now thank we all,' Karg-Elert; Two Psalm Versets, Dupré; Prelude Dialogue, Clérambault.

Mr. Wayland Brown, St. Anne's, Lambeth Road—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Madrigal, Lemare; Marc Solennelle, Mailly.

Mr. T. J. Crawford, Immanuel Church, Streatham Comm.—Overture in F, Faulkes; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. H. A. Fricker, Metropolitan Church, Toronto—Petite Suite, E. S. Barnes; Désespoir, Quef; Fugue à Gigue, Bach; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Toccata, Franck.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Choral Prelude 'Come, Holy Ghost,' Bach; Prelude 'Gerontius'; Concert Overture, Faulkes.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. A. Kenyon, organist and choirmaster, Ashby de Zouch Parish Church.

Mr. G. Lightfoot, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Cannes, S. France.

Mr. D. Emlyn Prosser, organist and choirmaster, Yarmouth, Tees Parish Church.

Letters to the Editor

'THE MUSICAL PRESS'

SIR,—I hope and believe that you are wrong in your statement that the musical press in this country inserts or suppresses reviews, or modifies their tenor according as the work reviewed is or is not advertised in the paper concerned. And I am quite sure that you are wrong in saying: 'There must be some "concession" however slight, just as there must be give and take in all business relations.' I read reviews in the Musical Times with great interest, but I thought your practice was according to your theory I would never trouble to read another, for reviewing influenced 'concession' on grounds of 'business relations' would be valueless. When you maintain that such a practice exists in British musical journalism you are giving a very nasty knock to public confidence, and when you defend the practice you are giving one just as nasty to public morality.

You mention the Music Student. You think this paper is not 'financially independent' because as many as 'thirty of its sixty pages are devoted to advertisements.' The fact has no bearing upon independence. The Music Student has never reviewed a work because it was advertised, failed to review it because it was not advertised, more favourably reviewed it because it was advertised, or less favourably done so because it was not advertised. I call that 'independence.' I thought our British musical press in general (including, emphatically, the Musical Times) exercised exactly the same 'independence'—and I had faith enough in my brother editors still to think so.

I oppose your view that it is good 'business' to allow the contents of the advertisement columns to influence the contents of the editorial columns. To do so would be indeed bad business. An advertiser pays for advertisement space, and, if the advertisement rates are reasonable, he gives value for his payment. To give him anything more is to admit that the advertisement space is not worth the price asked for it. If his publication gets a good review it gains in value by his and the reader's knowledge that the publication not been approved the review would have been just as candidly a bad one. Let the publisher and advertiser get a buffet when the editor or reviewer honestly feels he deserves it; every word of praise subsequently gets becomes the sweeter—because its sincerity is clear. Putting the matter right down on its merits business' level you have so unexpectedly adopted in a review of your article, I would say emphatically that, as a matter of business, independence pays. For the editor to enjoy the respect of his advertisers is the best business—and who will respect him if he is known to be otherwise?

There is another matter concerning the Music Student. I refer to something I said in my parting words when resigning my office with the October issue of that paper, your reference is likely to be misunderstood. You speak almost as though I had written in a self-righteous way of the paper's 'financial independence'; reflecting thereby on other papers not 'financially independent.' This is not the case, and there was in what I wrote decidedly no reflection (direct or implied) upon the Musical Times. I was engaged in politely putting in his pocket the editor not of the Musical Times but of another paper (with a fraction of the circulation of the Music Student) who had drawn the inference that the Music Student was in some financial difficulty from the fact that it had recently bought up another paper and absorbed it, which was about as sensible as would be the inference that the Pall Mall was failing because it recently bought the Globe, or, to use your own simile, that tigers are skittish because they take young ladies for rides. I pointed out that the Music Student had survived a period of fourteen years during which other papers had come in and gone out, and that it was the only musical paper which had done so barring certain obvious exceptions such as papers (however good) run as propaganda by publishing firms. The exception was made because I had in my mind an excellent little paper bearing in its very title the name of a firm. Obviously if such a paper does not for a period of years the firm is quite willing to support it for the sake of (a) the prestige it brings to the firm; (b) the publicity it affords the firm in its advertisement pages. My point (quite clearly put, I think) was that the Music Student had survived without such support, and this I regarded merely as a proof of its stability. Please observe that there is no flavour of 'superiority' in this, or any hint of papers supported by publishers are less editorially independent. I never entered into that subject at all.

As a small matter of fact it must be added, too, that you are not quite right in your statement that 'the Music Student is owned by a firm of educational and musical publishers.' The time since 'The Music Student,' Ltd., an association of readers of the paper, transferred its business cares to Messrs. Evans Bros., Ltd. But it reserved, by the instrument of a legal agreement, control over the editorial contents. Should any business-biased review, for instance, appear in the Music Student, the directors of 'The Music Student,' Ltd., would have absolute power to veto the further appearance of such reviews—and they would exercise this power promptly! It may be remarked, further, that all chance of either profit or loss having been transferred to the enterprising firm mentioned, 'The Music Student,' Ltd., with this considerable power of control of the editorial columns, is now actually and absolutely 'financially independent.' But I lay no stress on that, assured as I am that other papers not in the same sense 'financially independent' are yet honest, even in their reviewing. In certain quarters we suffer from careless reviewing (especially of books on music), but not, I think, from venal reviewing. Incidentally, Messrs. Evans Bros., Ltd., are not a firm of 'musical publishers,' but a firm of educational publishers. They may amongst their educational publications include a review of a musical character, but they do not publish pianoforte music, organ music, songs, choral music, chamber music, or orchestral music. The point is best summarised in the statement that their trade relationships are with the book trade, not the music trade.

But all this question of the Music Student is a small one. In our general statements that (a) reviewing is influenced by advertisement, and that (b) it is right in being so influenced, is of what matter. Do, my dear Sir, assure us that you wrote this thoughtlessly, or that you have been misprinted, that what you wrote was but a touch of your graceful ironic humour which we have for once been too thick-headed to understand.—Yours, &c., PERCY A. SCHOLES.

[How much depends upon the manner in which a case is stated! In our article we mentioned a fact so familiar to all connected with the Press, musical and otherwise, that we almost hesitated before setting down anything so obvious. Moreover, the frankness of our remarks should have made it clear that we were dealing with a perfectly harmless and well-understood practice. Does Mr. Scholes seriously think that an editor would accuse himself and his confrères of dishonesty? The article as a whole has brought us many comments, oral and written, but so far Mr. Scholes appears to be the only reader who saw in it anything calculated to 'give a nasty knock to public confidence' and public morality. The suggestion that 'public morality' could be lowered by anything so harmless as a journal's occasionally letting its advertisers 'fall soft' is too funny for serious discussion, and we should pooh-pooh it but for Mr. Scholes' desperate seriousness.]

As we have said, our statement of the case left everybody else unperturbed. But Mr. Scholes gives an exposition of it which, though not inaccurate, is yet so misleading that if we left it unanswered public confidence would indeed suffer a 'nasty knock.'

Take Mr. Scholes' opening sentence as an example of his uncomfortable talent for taking a perfectly innocent convention and holding it up as a corrupt practice: 'I hope and believe that you are wrong in your statement that the musical press in this country inserts or suppresses reviews, or modifies their tenor according as the work reviewed is or is not advertised in the paper concerned.' Anyone reading this without having previously read our article would have good cause to rub his eyes. He would see a mental picture of editors and reviewers with one eye on the advertisement pages and the other on the music awaiting review, praising the publications of their advertisers, and damning or ignoring the rest. Yet our contention was merely that a journal whose existence depends largely upon its revenue from advertisements (as is the case with practically every organ of the press, especially musical and other technical papers which have a comparatively small circulation) must make 'some concessions, however slight,' to its advertisers. Mr. Scholes is sure that we are wrong in saying this. We are no less sure that we are right, and it is just because we are equally sure that these concessions are slight and perfectly harmless that we had no scruples in mentioning them. If such concessions ever took the form of giving favourable reviews of bad music, they would deserve all Mr. Scholes says of them. But we have too high an opinion of our musical press to imply such a thing. It is often stated that the British musical journals are at least second to none in the world for fairness, and, speaking with some knowledge of similar organs published abroad, we echo that opinion. No English musical journal shows such unabashed connection between its advertisement pages and news columns as do some foreign publications.

We hope Mr. Scholes will continue to read the Musical Times reviews 'with great interest.' He may trust them too, for they express only the honest and considered opinion of our reviewing staff. In practically every issue he will find unfavourable notices of works issued by publishers who use our advertising pages. (Apropos of our quotation from Mr. Newman, a reader kindly points out that we did the Musical Times less than justice, inasmuch as its columns recently contained a distinctly unfavourable review of some publications of Messrs. Novello.) None the less, we readily plead guilty to showing occasional tenderness for the feelings of our advertisers, and even more for the feelings of the composers concerned. Nor do we confine this consideration to advertisers. When we are faced with a bad work we either pass it over in merciful silence or abuse it as little as is consistent with a clear expression of our opinion. After all, one can make it plain that a piece of music is a failure without dealing the publisher (and of course the composer as well) one of those 'buffets' in which Mr. Scholes has so much faith. Nobody is a penny the worse for this leniency. On the contrary, there is a net gain in the way of good-will and easy working. No publisher is likely to withdraw his advertisement on account of an unfavourable review, fairly and considerably expressed, but he would begin to think about it after a few 'buffets.' An editor who chose to demonstrate his journal's 'independence' by driving away advertisers when he can retain them without the slightest sacrifice of principle, would soon be ripe for the unemployment dole. (One almost blushes to set down such obvious things, but the Amazing Innocence of Mr. Scholes is such that we have no alternative.) And after all, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. If our review columns were spurious, readers would long since have discovered the fact. Instead, we constantly receive proof that no portions of the journal are more appreciated than those dealing with new music, books, and gramophone records. To resume the pudding simile, even Mr. Scholes' palate and digestion were suited, as he admits, until he suddenly takes it into his head that he has a conscientious objection to one of the ingredients or the method of mixing.

A word on behalf of the editor who 'suppresses reviews.' (Oh! Mr. Scholes, you do make it sound like a Horrible Crime! One thinks of 'movie' titles—'Hushed Up,' 'Blood Money,' 'The Suppressed Review,' in Five Reels.) Everybody in our profession knows that of the flood of new music sent for review only a small proportion—in the case of the Musical Times not more than a quarter—can be dealt with. The important works always receive notice, no matter who the publisher may be. The choice of the rest depends chiefly upon such questions as to how far it lends itself to interesting discussion, or to what extent it is likely to be of use to the readers of the journal. If we have to choose for inclusion one of two works with equal claims, we unblushingly give the preference to that issued by one of our advertisers, just as Mr. Scholes' butcher, baker, and candlestickmaker would oblige him, a regular customer, in preference to a chance caller. That terrible 'suppressed review,' like the 'concessions,' is really a very harmless affair after all!

We have no quarrel with the Music Student (which does a valuable educational work that no other journal is able to do), and Mr. Scholes has long been a valued friend. All in the way of kindness, however, we seize the opportunity for saying a few things that have been in our mind for some time. Mr. Scholes proudly claims: 'The Music Student has never reviewed a work because it was advertised, failed to review it because it was not advertised, more favourably reviewed because it was advertised, or less favourably done so because it was not advertised.' This is mere rhetoric, because as a rule the Music Student does not review music. It publishes instead a bald catalogue headed 'A List of the Month's Best Music,' a substitute which saves much labour, but which is of very little use to the ordinary reader, and still less to the students and teachers for whom the journal caters. Surely they wish to know more about new music than the bare particulars furnished by the title-page, plus an occasional indication of the degree of difficulty? As an example of the shortcomings of such a list, take the choral part of the October selection. Two works for eight-part choir are mentioned, one being Edward German's 'Orpheus with his Lute,' the other Arnold Bax's 'Of a Rose I Sing a Song.' The former is a straightforward piece of choral writing; the latter is a complex and subtly-conceived piece of chamber music. The reader of the Music Student is given merely the titles, the publisher, and the price. He is told nothing about the degree of difficulty, and is even left unaware that one work should be sung a cappella and the other with an accompaniment for three solo instruments, the two forces being nicely balanced. This is not an exceptional instance of the Music Student's reticence. It would be easy to give many other cases in which the reader is left guessing on all sorts of important points.

These lists are unsatisfactory in yet another way. All music reviewers are aware of the extraordinary fluctuations in the standard of new music from month to month. Sometimes a whole batch will be a long way below the average good level. In such a case the 'month's best' is merely the best of a poor lot, and the Music Student list becomes actually misleading. We used to wonder at the inclusion of second-rate works until we realised that 'the month's best' may easily become the month's 'least bad.'

If Mr. Scholes is so anxious that publishers should receive a 'buffet' every time they issue bad music, why did he not include in the Music Student a second headed 'The Month's Worst Music'? The answer is obvious that no one need trouble to make it.

If ever the Music Student drops its monthly list of best music and gramophone records in favour of reviews we would give a good deal to be in the editorial room when, opening a parcel of review music sent (say) the publisher who regularly takes four of the Music Student's advertisement pages, he finds the batch a long way below the average—as of course may happen with any publisher. In our mind's eye we can see the editorial board corrugate as its owner wonders whether he had better do the advertiser a buffet or let him down lightly. Our enjoyment of the scene, however, will be diminished by the fact that Mr. Scholes had retired from the editorship before such problems arose. For, frankly, we have never regarded 'A List of the Month's Best Music' as anything but a rather easy way of dodging this and other problems incident to reviewing. The Music Student having avoided one of the most difficult tasks of a journal, its founder and late editor is of all men the least fitted to hortate those of his confrères who are trying to keep their readers informed as to new publications.

Mr. Scholes says we are not quite right in stating that 'the Music Student is owned by Messrs. Evans Bros. Well, we got our information from the best possible source—the cover of the journal itself. On the back of the October issue—the only number handy—we read 'Published by the Proprietors, Messrs. Evans Bros. Ltd.' Our dictionary tells us that a proprietor is 'owner,' 'one who has the exclusive right to a thing,' and both cover and dictionary tell the truth, we would not grudge much for that right of veto which Mr. Scholes flourishes so proudly.

Further, Mr. Scholes tells us that Messrs. Evans Bros. are not a firm of music publishers. He ought to know, of course, but as we have occasionally received review copies of music issued by the firm, we reasoned in our simple way that a music publisher is one who publishes music (hence the name); Messrs. Evans Bros. publish music; therefore Messrs. Evans Bros. are music publishers. Mr. Scholes eschews logic, and says that they are not music publishers because they do not publish this or that kind of music, although their output is small—an ingenious argument that reminds us of the nurse in 'Midshipman Easy,' who thought she was explaining away an inconvenient baby by pointing out that 'it was only a very little one.' However these are small matters, and we allude to them only in order to show that we had good grounds for our statements.

In conclusion, let us return to Mr. Scholes' fanfare: 'The Music Student has never &c., &c.' With very slight reservations the same might be said of any other music journal. Mr. Scholes would have been more convinced had he been less negative. To justify his mounting pedestal he should have mentioned a few cases in which the Music Student has roundly condemned music issued to its advertising clients. We have been pretty familiar with the journal since its inception, but recall no examples of the wild and reckless policy that Mr. Scholes advocates. On the contrary, it has always struck us that the Music Student, so ostentatiously courageous about the month's best music, and discreetly silent about the worst, left contemporaries panting in the rear so far as playing for safety is concerned.—[Ed., M. T.]

SUMMER SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC

SIR,—If, as 'Mus. Bac.' says, 'the practice of hymns despised by the ordinary choir,' is not the main reason to be found in the dullness of many of the tunes in common use. Use better tunes, and a keener interest in hymn-singing will follow.

One can hardly imagine a choir being unwilling to practise 'For all the saints' to Dr. Vaughan Williams' tune, neither can one feel that the success which has attended the hymn festival movement would have been attained had the hymns and tunes chosen been on no higher level than those commonly heard in our Churches.—Yours &c.,

ARTHUR S. WARRELL.

12, St. Matthew's Road,
Gotham, Bristol.

MODERN SCALES AND ACOUSTICS

SIR,—Owing to modern musical development so much change is taking place in the teaching of 'harmony' and 'composition', that I think it is time our colleges and schools of music began to realise that more importance ought to be attached to that in music which can never change, and therefore should be the basis of all our theoretical training. I refer to acoustical facts—for these have a more important bearing on our aural perceptions than many of our ding musicians realise.

A number of splendid articles have been written, and papers given, by Dr. Clay and Prof. Rankine of the Northern Polytechnic, Prof. Walford Davies, Vincent d'Indy, Edwin Evans, and others, but a great deal more remains to be said, and much more exploring must be done before we have a firm basis to work upon.

Prof. Walford Davies gives us a start with the following, which I take from his paper read before the British Association, and which was reported in the Musical Times of October, 1920:

'The distinguishing mark of music is Euphony . . . Now there are in music three immutable euphonies based on mathematical associations, viz., the octave, the fourth, and the fifth, having the proportions 2 : 3, 3 : 4, and 1 : 2.'

If we take the notes forming these intervals with their harmonic series, they make up the major scale, thus:

Now these are directly derived from these 'immutable euphonies.' (That is, if our fundamentals are of the richest quality, for we know that the quality of a musical sound depends on the relative order and intensity of its upper partials, and further that the best tone is produced when the partials get weaker the farther they are away from the foundation tone.)

Now, is it illogical to assert that this diatonic major scale is the most natural scale to us because of its scientific origin? Whatever modern music we train ourselves to enjoy, we must not deceive ourselves into believing that we are merely following tradition. The fact is that this scale—whether invented or not—existed as early as strings began to vibrate. We can pick out any succession of sounds going in one direction and call it a scale, but we cannot prove it has a natural basis like this one; yet in Dr. Dunstan's 'Cyclopædic Dictionary of Music' we read the following:

'We cannot prove that the scales which we employ are better than those used by other races or at other epochs.' (Elson.)

And again:

'The final conclusion is that the musical scale is not one, not "natural," or even founded necessarily on the laws . . . so beautifully worked out by Helmholtz, but very diverse, very artificial, and very capricious.' 'Musical Scales of Various Nations' (Dr. A. J. Ellis, F.R.S.).

The weak part about the 'whole-tone' scale and some of the other modern so-called 'scales,' is that they have no sense of key tonality, whereas in our major scale as above: forth we have tones and half-tones (we need not here enter into the subject of equal temperament) arranged by a natural law in such an order that in melody we can always get a sense of direction. Having seen that the intervals of tone and half-tone are as fixed as the laws of light and heat, at what could we do better than divide the tones into half-tones when we want smaller intervals—thus forming a chromatic scale.

We now arrive at an interesting point: not every musical instrument gives forth the overtones from which we have formed our scale. The clarinet, for instance, which only gives out 'odd' partials, would require different treatment on the flute, with tones almost simple, i.e., without partials.

At the Northern Polytechnic, Prof. Rankine is at the present time experimenting with apparatus by which he will be able to register the quality of a musical sound.

In the edition of the Musical Times already referred to, Vincent d'Indy is said to exhort his student 'to weave into the very texture of his thought the existence of the series of Upper and Lower Partial.'s

Now, until sound quality has in some measure been standardised by the scientist, the mere knowledge that these partials exist will not help the student very much. He must know how they affect his work, so that possibly the young composer will get his effects in accordance with new harmonic rules, by using certain orchestral instruments that bring out this or that overtone.

Mr. Edwin Evans says (Musical News and Herald, February 26):

'The relation of timbre to harmony and counterpoint is one of the many unexplored mysteries of music.'

And again:

'One has to realise that in a modern score a progression may be wrong between instruments of a kindred timbre, and right between others in sharp contrast, or vice versa.'

And yet in the same article he disparages the scientist in this manner:

'Musicians . . . dispense altogether with the long-sought solution, and very rightly proceed on their own lines, leaving theory to hobble along in the rear.'

In several of his articles I have thought Mr. Evans was getting near the heart of the matter, but each time I have been disappointed.

To conclude, I will ask the following questions:

Will not the octave, the fourth, and the fifth, with the scale produced by their overtones, remain throughout all generations while strings vibrate and human beings sing?

Will children ever be born with instincts for what we now call modern harmonies and sonorities in the same manner as they now have an instinct for the octave, the fourth, and the fifth?

Is the student right in working out progressions on the pianoforte as if the overtones given out by that instrument were the same as such instruments as the horn and the oboe or the flute and clarinet?

Is the time not ripe for the tabulation in our harmony and theory books of the scientific laws that govern our musical conceptions and perceptions?—Yours, &c.,

A. V. SAINSBURY.

88, Manor Park Road, N.W. 10.

October 3, 1921.

SCALES AND TONALITY

SIR,—We hear so much at the present day about different forms of 'scales' that it may be worth while to inquire into the fundamental concept of a musical scale, regarding which some misapprehension seems to exist. As the character of melody is in its main outlines determined by the scale upon which it is constructed, our inquiry will involve some consideration of the principles of melodic progression. Two truths must be kept steadily in view: (1) No scale was ever based upon scientific theory. A scale is evolved out of the genius of the people who use it; it is not constructed. (2) Theory can explain only the scaffolding upon which melody is constructed, never the melody itself. In the following remarks I am speaking only of the natural scales; our modern tempered scale is an unscientific makeshift.

We hear it asked whether F sharp is higher or lower than G flat, and the question is variously answered. A singer, who generally possesses a refined, instinctive—though often uncultivated—sense for melody will place F sharp as the higher; the instrumentalist, whose ear has been vitiated by the tempered scale, is uncertain, and sometimes thinks it is lower, sometimes that the two are equal. The truth is that the question is a wrong one. There are no such things as F sharp or G flat in music; the connotation of the names is variable, and the attempt arbitrarily to fix an absolute pitch must always fail, because it answers to nothing in nature.

What musical theory knows is not the note, but the interval. The interval D-F sharp is a definite quantity, represented by the fraction  $\frac{5}{4}$ . Again, musicians speak of 'whole-tone scales,' 'chromatic scales,' and the like. Such expressions are inaccurate; they rest on the false assumption that a scale is a division of the octave into equal parts. There is no more music in such a mechanical division than there is in a foot-rule. A scale is a series of notes, each of which bears a simple ratio to a central note—the tonic—as the axis round which the melody revolves. That is the fundamental thing in music; our understanding of melody is dependent upon the sense of tonality.

In the diatonic scale of C the ratios of the successive notes to the tonic C are as follows:

C	D	E	F	G	A	B	C
1	$\frac{9}{8}$	$\frac{5}{4}$	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{3}{2}$	$\frac{5}{3}$	$\frac{7}{4}$	2

The divisions are not equal,  $\frac{9}{8} \div 1$  is not equal to  $\frac{5}{4} \div \frac{4}{3}$ , &c. The reason why these simple fractions are the necessary conditions of a scale lies, as Helmholtz has shown, in the overtones, or harmonics. It is the coincidence of the harmonics that distinguishes melody from a mere meaningless succession of sounds. Thus the step C-G ( $3:2$ ) becomes comprehensible as melody by the fact that the third harmonic of C coincides with the second harmonic of G:

Similarly the melodic step C-E ( $5:4$ ) is intelligible because the fifth harmonic of C coincides with the fourth of E. The common overtone provides the bond of union, the 'unity of diversity,' which is the basis of all æsthetic pleasure.

It will be noticed that one interval of the scale bears a ratio which is much less simple than the rest. This is the seventh, B. Its complex character produces a certain instability of intonation; on the one hand it has a tendency to flatten to the simpler ratio of the minor seventh ( $\frac{7}{4}$ ), on the other to be attracted upwards by the neighbouring tonic so as to become the 'leading-note,' which is not a harmony note at all, but an inflection of, or preparation for, the tonic. The significance of the seventh in any particular instance, whether it be (1) the major, or (2) the minor third of the dominant, or (3) the leading-note, can be determined only by the context.

Other notes of the scale than the seventh may be ambiguous. Thus the fourth ( $\frac{4}{3}$ ) may be felt as the minor third of the supertonic ( $\frac{3}{2}$ ), and will then be slightly sharper. Still more variable are chromatic notes, but these, in so far as they are not passing-notes, must be viewed as incipient modulations—as which they are felt. The characteristics of the minor mode are, first and foremost, the minor third ( $\frac{6}{5}$ ), a simple ratio; secondly, the instability of the sixth and seventh, which sheds a vagueness over the melody, making it appear as if covered with veil.

I do not wish to pursue the subject further at present. All that I have said is well-known to everyone who has paid attention to the scientific side of music. My reason for bringing these questions forward is that they are often overlooked in practice. The executive musician is destitute of theory; the gods do not philosophise. But the feeling of tonality is all-important for the musician. To give an example, I may mention the singer who is learning to read music vom Blatt. I do not know whether pupils are still taught to visualise intervals in the sequence in which they occur in the passage, or to refer each note to its position in the scale. For example, in such a passage as:

to view the intervals B flat - E flat as a fourth, C - F as a fifth, A flat - D as an augmented fourth, &c., or to feel each note in its relation to the tonic. I have no experience of teaching, and speak under correction of those who have, but it seems to me that it would be impossible to learn complex modern melodies in the former way, which is the way in which I was taught many years ago. The singer with a sense for melody will, in spite of his teaching, be permeated with the feeling of tonality; the tonic will be felt as the centre, and each note will be felt in its relation thereto, not to the preceding note. Musical singers, i.e. those in whom the sense of tonality is highly developed, have always assured me that Wagner is easy to sing, because every note is 'just what it should be,' meaning that its tonal relation is perspicuous and easily felt.—Yours, &c.,

Oxford.

G. AINSLIE HIGHT.

October 8, 1921.

'HAND DEVELOPMENT FOR THE PERFORMER'

SIR,—Although I am merely an Australian musician 12,000 miles from the Royal Academy in body—though good deal nearer mentally—I cannot resist the temptation to tilt at the paper in your August number on 'Hand Development for the Performer,' despite the fact that it has been committed right on the door-step of the veneral institution mentioned.

The distance hereinbefore referred to prevents my making a personal examination of the 'Technique,' and although I look askance at such devices—teste Schumann—I am not controverting its usefulness; still, I am satisfied that as good results accruing from its use do so without reference to the alleged basis of its inventor's investigations.

I take it that the machine is designed for the mastery agility touches. Now, Mr. Editor, agility is dependent less on the positive development of hand and fingers than on the negative actions of:

- (1.) Eliminating arm-weight, the function of which seems even yet to be seen through a glass darkly;
- (2.) The cessation of all action at the moment of tone-production, relative to each note or group of notes where the tempo is too quick to admit of attention to each note.

(In actual point of fact, even then the cessation is applied to every note, though the speed of the mental operation apt to deceive us.)

Further, we are told that 'one hand in five hundred,' thereabouts, is formed by nature for playing an instrument. Following this statement to its logical conclusion, we are faced with the proposition that the hands of Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt, Rubinstein, &c., were therefore cast according to some mystic formula of flexors, extensors, and so on. My own observation and reading point to the conclusion that almost the only common characteristic of these hands was their possession of a thumb and four fingers, with the usual joints and muscles incidental thereto. We know also that in the case of Ludwig van Beethoven any fortuitous provision of muscular equipment suitable for pianoforte playing was greatly assisted by assiduous practice in the small hours of the morning, under the supervision of exacting taskmaster. Reverting to Chopin, we have the apparent contradiction of an artist who lacked the ability to play with a hard bright touch, but who surely, if ever any man was formed by nature to play an instrument, was that man to a degree which even the 'Technique' will have a hard job to emulate.

Playing, we are also told, requires two positions of the hand, one normal and one extended. As there are at least forty-two distinct and easily classified varieties of touch, affecting the position of the hand, and also some hybrid and collateral species, all the above being further modified by rotation movements, the limitation to two positions seems to be rather absurd! It is truly 'a great point to keep in view,' the relaxation of all muscles except the actually in use, whether of hand or arm, as well as of finger muscles. I submit that if we wish to become players, and not automata-like 'Techniques,' then proper muscular training, directed by a real live human will, is the means to this end.

As regards 'finger-lifting'—shades of Matthay!—I feel supported by high authority in saying that the training of the lifting muscles is a work of supererogation: they should come into play by reflex action on the comparatively rare occasions when their use is required.—Yours, &c.,

'Ellerslie,' Clanwilliam Street,
Chatswood, Sydney, Australia.

ROY HEAD.

September 21, 1921.

'A CORELLI FORGERY'?

SIR,—I have read Mr. W. Barclay Squire's letter in your October number with great interest. His conjecture that B. Vitali was the author of the spurious Corelli Sonatas blished by H. Aertssens at Antwerp in 1692 is supported by two facts. In the first place, the circumstance that tali died in 1692 (on October 12) would make this year a peculiarly convenient one for the fraudulent issue of a work in his under the 'better-selling' name of Corelli.

In the second place, the names of the movements in the spurious Corelli Sonatas are very exceptional—especially 'Brando,' 'Borea,' 'Pira,' 'Arcicorrente'—and the fact at two at least, of these, 'Brando' (misprinted 'Neando' in Mr. Barclay Squire's letter) and 'Borea,' occur in Vitali's works is highly significant.

At the same time there are difficulties in the way of Mr. Squire's conjecture, in particular the following: We may assume that Aertssens would hardly venture to rate a work of Vitali during the life-time of the latter, and tali's death on October 12, 1692, did not leave much time for the publication of the Sonatas that same year. Secondly, how did Aertssens become possessed of the MS.? He does not appear to have published any previous work of Vitali, and is not likely to have been in communication with him before his death. Vitali's son, Tomaso Antonio, also a violinist and composer of repute, saw to the publication—at Modena, in 1692—of his father's Op. 14. It is not, therefore, likely that he entered into any fraudulent understanding with Aertssens.

Thirdly, Tomaso Vitali was probably familiar with his father's MSS., and it seems unlikely that Aertssens would have risked discovery and exposure at his hands. Apart from these considerations there is one point, and a most important one, with regard to which Mr. Squire begs the question. He says that 'an edition of the genuine Op. 4 recorded by Goovaerts as having been published by Aertssens at Antwerp in 1695.'

Was it the genuine one? The spurious Sonatas have posed unchallenged in the British Museum for a number of years; and are recorded by Eitner as a work of Corelli. It is quite possible that M. Goovaerts, in recording the publication of 1695 ('Academia Ottobonica overo Suonate tre' istromenti da Archangelo Corelli da Fusignano detto Bolognese, Opera Quarta'), was equally ready to trust to the title-page.

I have made great efforts to trace a copy of the 'Academia Ottobonica,' but without success. M. Charles van Borren, librarian of the Conservatoire at Brussels, has most kindly been unremitting in his efforts to run it to earth. M. Goovaerts informed him by letter that all the MS. notes of his 'Bibliographie' were deposited at the Musée Plantin at Antwerp, but the curator there reports that he can discover no reference in the notes to the work in question.

There is one small point which I would like to mention in conclusion. The earliest edition of Corelli's Op. 1 recorded by Eitner is, as Mr. Barclay Squire says, that published at Rome in 1683, the year in which Purcell's 'Sonatas' in three parts first saw the light. There is, however, in the British Museum the second violin part (presented by Mr. E. J. Dent) of an earlier edition printed at Rome by Gio. Angelo Mutij in 1681.—Yours, &c., F. T. ARNOLD.

67, Prince's Gate, S.W.7.

November 12, 1921.

KNELLER HALL CONCERT: A CORRECTION

SIR,—In referring to the performance of my 'Egyptian Scenes' at Kneller Hall, on September 29, your representative adds 'Small wonder that Sir Charles Stanford, who was present, was seen to advance slowly but deliberately towards an adjacent duck pond.' As a matter of fact Sir Charles Stanford did not arrive until after the performance of my Suite.—Yours, &c.,

58, Avondale Road,

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Gorleston-on-Sea.

November 18, 1921.

'WHY USE WORDS?'

SIR,—The article which appeared in your November issue, entitled, 'Why use words?' raises several interesting questions.

In the first place, Is it an entirely new departure, as the writer seems to think? I venture to suggest that it is merely a return to very ancient—almost prehistoric—music. We know very little about the music of the Greek chorus, but we find interspersed in the MSS. various fatuous-looking words such as: 'ἰὸν, ἰὸν, ἔῃ, ἀταῖ, ὁσοτοτοτοτοῖ, ὄοο, ἄαα, μᾶ, γᾶ, &c., which seem in some way to anticipate 'G. M. C.'s' suggestions. But we must remember that these exclamations alone did not constitute the chorus. They occur only in places where the context has made it perfectly clear what feelings they are intended to represent—whether fear, pity, surprise, anger, dismay, or any other strong emotion. An examination of the 'Troades' or the 'Supplices,' or the last part of the 'Persæ,' will show what I mean. The hearer is never left to guess for himself, as he would be if 'G. M. C.'s' suggestion were adopted.

In the second place, if words are unnecessary encumbrances to the song, how was it that they ever came there at all? Why did not men continue with the good old incoherent noises they produced at first? Obviously they must have felt the need for words in song, otherwise they would never have used them, any more than they would have worn clothes or built houses if they had never felt the need for these. Besides, think of what we should have lost had words never found their way into song. Should we ever have had the English Madrigal school—Morley, Wilbye, Byrd, and their contemporaries—if they had not gone to the Elizabethan lyrics for their words? It is quite true that even these dispense with words upon occasion: they have their 'fa-la-las' and their 'hey nonny nonny's,' but these are merely lyrical conventions, and (as in the Greek chorus) their context shows the feeling they express, or they are simply refrains. Or, again, should we have had such simple gems as Farrant's 'Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake,' or such vigorous writings as Travers' 'Ascribe unto the Lord' or Purcell's 'Rejoice in the Lord alway,' or the pathos of Wesley's 'Wilderness,' had the words been omitted, to say nothing of secular songs such as Schubert's 'Erl King' or Quilter's 'Now sleeps the crimson petal'?

Vocal music has this advantage over instrumental, that the hearer is able, or should be able, to interpret it quite definitely for himself: the words, however bad, make the song at least intelligible. But it is almost impossible to go to a concert of instrumental music without finding on the programme a lot of stuff about Destiny themes and Agony themes, and the Soul wrestling with Fate, and one thing and the other—how are we to know that the music means all that? It might as well depict the composer wrestling with his collar stud. Délivrez nous de la langue figurative!

I believe it was Strauss who said that with the aid of an orchestra he could picture a man eating soup. For my part, I should never see the picture unless someone came on and sang definitely in a language which I could understand, 'I am eating soup.' I do not deny that a great deal can be suggested by instrumental music: the fairies, for instance, in the Overture to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' or the Performing Bears in Elgar's 'Wand of Youth.'

As for the fact that the words of many songs are so poor, is not this the fault of the musician for selecting them? It may be well to remind ourselves that the Greek μουσική included any art over which the Muses presided—Music, Poetry, Oratory, Philosophy—in fact, any intellectual activity, and the μουσικός to Plato or Aristotle was a man who was conversant with all these—a man of letters, thoroughly well educated. But to-day it is not so. The musician is too often a musician only in a narrow sense: he is considered fit for a high musical degree if he can pass the 'Matric.' He may become a Mus. Doc., and then perhaps some University will confer upon him an honorary M.A., though he is still under the delusion that Ella Wheeler Wilcox is greater than Sappho. It is not surprising that under such circumstances musicians have little literary appreciation, and that they choose bad words for songs.

It is equally true, of course, that in many cases literary men have no musical appreciation. Charles Lamb was forced to confess that in whistling 'God save the King' he 'could not arrive within many quavers of it,' and there may be quite a few University dons to-day who think that the Largo in G is the acme of musical perfection. But this does no harm to anyone; they do not set up as composers. Neither ought any composer to set about writing a song unless he has sound literary appreciation.

But to return to 'G. M. C.'s' suggestion. The idea may be sound enough theoretically, but practically it is impossible. Think of a singer getting up in the Albert Hall and singing strings of incoherent labials, palatals, dentals, and what not, to an audience of several thousand people. Whatever the composer might intend, the effect would be ludicrous; the British public has a strong sense of humour.—Yours, &c., L. N. C. BARNABY.

103, South Croxted Road, S.E.21.

November 6, 1921.

P.S.—It has just occurred to me that 'G. M. C.' may be pulling our legs; if so, it has been skilfully done.

Sharps and Flats

Hummel, Clementi, and Czerny were three of the most sterling musicians who ever lived, and most of their truly splendid pianoforte works, especially those of Clementi and Czerny, will continue to be studied, played, and admired long after practically everything that is being written nowadays is completely forgotten.—Algernon Ashton.

We all know why a Scotsman walks up and down when he plays the pipes: he is harder to hit that way. But I cannot understand why some opera singers keep walking up and down when engaged in the musical equivalent of a conversation with a friend.—Ernest Newman.

In Albert Sammons we have one of the two greatest living violinists; in Elgar's Concerto we have the greatest violin concerto. When Sammons plays the Concerto the hall should always be crowded; on Wednesday it was two-thirds empty. In a few days Kreisler will be here, and people will be turned away in hundreds; have all those hundreds ever flocked to hear Sammons? This wonderful artist's only fault is that, 'in spite of all temptation,' &c. . . .—Percy A. Scholes.

I should like to know what delusion the editor of Fanfare labours under when he selects the 'poetry' for the paper, for I do not think in a poetry-loving life I have yet come across more placid specimens. . . . The more I study Fanfare the more grateful I am to it for giving me the opportunity to distinguish between art and cheek.—C. Dutordoit.

Manchester is the only town where I have ever had to request an audience to cease talking during my songs. And I have never elsewhere known a gentleman to stand up in the middle of a song to remove superfluous garments.—Ursula Greville.

'While lunching with Arthur Bliss the other day, a vendor of cheap music entered the restaurant. . . .—Leigh Henry.

'Your paper, to say the least, interests me very much. In reading it over I feel an enthusiasm in it that should produce in London at last a real journal of interest. I shall be only too happy to do a cover. . . .—Very sincerely yours, Edward McKnight Kauffer,' in a letter to the editor of Fanfare.

What joy to discover oneself in the presence of a work [Stravinsky's 'Concertino'] in which the composer expresses in five minutes what Brahms and the German school stutter over for an hour!—Francis Poulenc.

'Musical Times, if we may be allowed a little grammatical laxity, evidently consist of the dead beat. There is only one good article in the [October] number . . . "Vittorio Gui," by Guido M. Gatti.—Leigh Henry.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of December, 1861:

BETHOVEN's music is now listened to with an attention and delight that his real friends and admirers could scarcely have anticipated. Not unfrequently, indeed, these feelings border on prejudice, since it is impossible that amateurs generally can appreciate those portions of his works which the cultivated professor is often at a loss to understand; nevertheless it is gratifying to witness the anxiety with which the uninitiated endeavour to comprehend what is termed classic writing, emanating from so great a man; exerting the auricular and intellectual faculties to admire that which, in all probability, is far from being congenial with their predisposed taste and ideas.—'Recollections of Beethoven,' Cipriani Potter.

BELFAST.—A performance of music was given last month at St. Malachy's Church upon the new organ, by Mr. Sutton Swaby, who brought out the tones of the instrument with great effect, and played some difficult fugues in good style.

WESTBOURNE HALL, BAYSWATER.—The first of a series of six subscription concerts was given at the above New Music Hall on Wednesday evening, November 6. . . . The second concert took place on the evening of the 20th, when the performers were Mr. and Mrs. Ferrari, Madame Dolby and Mr. George Perren. Violin, Mr. Heine; violoncello, M. Pague; pianoforte, Mr. Carter, and accompanist, Herr Ganz. The instrumental portion of the programme was the principal feature of the evening, as upon the first occasion. Joseph Heine is a very good player on the violin but one may have too much of a good thing, and half-an-hour at a time is rather beyond the limits for that instrument.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A course of three lectures on Beethoven was given by the Principal in the Duke's Hall on Wednesday afternoons commencing October 26, two of which had been previously heard at the Royal Institution in June last. In the first the lecturer dealt with the revised attitude of the present generation; personal characteristics of the master; methods of work, discoveries, and the influence of literature upon his music; young Schumann's appeal to Germany in 1833 for a national monument.

The second lecture was mainly devoted to an interesting survey of contemporary pianists; Beethoven's own style and its influence upon pianoforte technique; the Variations and Sonatas (illustrated by Mr. Harold Craxton); the lecturer's personal acquaintance with great Beethoven players.

The subjects of the last lecture were: The great String Quartets; bread-work and pot-boiling; the attitude of London and Paris towards the composer contrasted; the Philharmonic Society's connection with him; his end, and general remarks upon his genius. Mr. H. Wessely and students played the last Quartet, Op. 135.

An interesting chamber concert took place on October 31. The chief items were the first movement from the String Sextet in E flat by Frank Bridge, a movement from the Pianoforte Sonata in B flat minor by C. Albanesi (Miss May Chipperfield), and a MS. 'Suite from a Fairy Opera' for string orchestra, by Paul Kerby, a charming work conducted by the composer.

The R.A.M. Club held a social meeting in the Duke's Hall on Saturday, October 29. The musical programme included Sonatas for violoncello and pianoforte by Hummel and Rachmaninov, which were played in a characteristic manner by Mr. Felix Salmond and Mr. Harold Craxton, and Miss Dorothy Phillips contributed some dances.

The Sainton-Dolby Prize, for sopranos, has been awarded to Lucy Goodwin, a native of Nottingham.

Chamber concerts are held at Bishopsgate Institute every Monday at 1.10 p.m. for an admission fee of 3d., which includes programme and tax. The director is Mr. Francis W. Sutton. On November 7 the music included movements from works of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, and Mozart.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

There have been two Patron's Fund rehearsals this month, the first of which four British executive artists—two cellists, a pianist, and a violinist—were given the opportunity for rehearsing solo works with the New Queen's Hall orchestra, conducted by Mr. Adrian C. Boulton. The second rehearsal followed the usual plan in giving new works by British composers.

College composers have been well represented at the chamber and informal concerts: Harold E. Mackinlay by Scherzo and Trio for string quartet, Harold Clayton by two songs, Sydney Northcote by a song with string quartet accompaniment, Elsie Thornton by two songs, Maurice Jacobson by two songs, H. Stanley Taylor by a rhapsody for clarinet and piano, Dorothy A. Peache by String Quartet, and Mirabel Cobbold by vocal Quartets. The Opera Hall has been the scene of great activities, Wagner's 'Lohengrin' having received two performances with excellent casts. At these performances no outside help of any sort was obtained, the orchestra consisting of College students, and the members of the cast providing their own costumes and make-up, with a degree of success that augurs well for a high standard of operatic performance by British artists.

Excellent results are being shown by Mr. Boulton's class for conductors, seven of whom have conducted the small orchestra in a Mozart Pianoforte Concerto and a Haydn Symphony at an informal concert.

On October 26 the College assembled to do honour to the memory of Sir Hubert Parry by the opening of the new Library Room. This handsome room, which runs the entire length of the College building, is part library, part museum, and part workshop. It contains a fine collection of classical and modern music—much of great value, viz., the forty-six volumes of the Bach Gesellschaft edition, and many in the original autograph, as Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony. There is already the nucleus of a collection which will contain the finest examples of general literature. After the opening of the new room, the College orchestra and choral societies took part in a performance in the concert-hall of Parry's oratorio 'Job,' under the direction of Sir Hugh Allen.

M. J.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

During the past month Dr. C. W. Pearce completed a course of four lectures on 'The Music of the 17th century.' Other lectures were given by Prof. John Adams (on 'Educational Psychology'), and Dr. John Wariner continued his course of lecture-lessons on the 'Practical Application of Psychological Principles to the Teaching of Music.'

Entries for the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship closed at the first week of December. The Scholarship entitles the holder to the full course of training, together with a maintenance grant of about £50 per annum.

Some interesting distributions have taken place recently. At Merthyr Tydfil a successful prize distribution was held. The results were most satisfactory, as there was a large attendance of teachers and others interested, and a very creditable programme of music was performed. Prizes were presented by Mrs. Wills, in the unavoidable absence of Mrs. Hughes Evans, and Mr. V. A. Wills presided at the function. Mr. Rodwell, the secretary of the College, also attended, and gave an address in which he pointed out that the certificates and prizes gained by the successful candidates were not empty honours but had to be won by good work. He also described the work of the College, not only in England but in many other parts of the world. Mr. Thomas, the energetic local secretary, was deserving of much praise for the arrangements.

Birkenhead, on November 10, had a very large attendance at the Town Hall for the annual prize distribution of that centre. His Worship the Mayor presided, and was accompanied by the Mayoress, who presented the prizes. This year is the twenty-first anniversary of the formation of the centre, a fact which added special interest to the proceedings. To mark the occasion and its appreciation of his work, the local committee presented the secretary, Mr. Kok-Alblas, with a silver cigarette box, and his able assistant, Miss Kok-Alblas, with a hand-bag. The secretary of the College (Mr. Rodwell) gave an address on the work of the institution.

Lowestoft centre has had its first distribution since the war. There is every indication of a great revival of interest, as shown by the entries for both the practical and theoretical examinations. The Rector of Lowestoft presided, and the prizes and certificates were presented by Mr. Rodwell, who laid stress on the necessity for more entries for the theoretical examinations and the desirability for more boy candidates. Sir Frederick Bridge had intended to be present to represent the College, but to his great regret had been prevented by illness. An interesting concert was given by successful candidates.

Dr. Horner the director of examinations, has now returned from conducting examinations in South America. He reports very favourably on the prospects of the College examinations being firmly established in that continent, especially with regard to such towns as Buenos Aires and Montevideo, where examinations have now been held for some time past.

It is interesting to hear that the Education Departments of the Punjab and other States in India now recognise the practical and theoretical Senior Certificates in music.

The building alterations at the College are proceeding satisfactorily, and it is hoped that the interior will be finished before the beginning of next term.

At the forthcoming Queen's Hall concert two new works will be performed, both in manuscript—Alec Rowley's Legend for strings and organ, and Dr. C. W. Pearce's Meditation for orchestra, organ, and bells.

THE WELSH MUSICAL FESTIVAL AT MOUNTAIN ASH

This Festival was held on October 22 and 24, under the directorship of the promoter, Mr. Cyril Jenkins, with Lord Howard de Walden as president, in the spacious pavilion, a permanent reminiscence of the great National Eisteddfod of 1905. The competitive section lasted over both days, the Festival closing with an evening orchestral concert, which, with few alterations, was repeated at Maesteg on the evening of October 25.

Inaugurated last year with a degree of success, ostensibly to further the cause of modern music, and to foster instrumental playing in Wales, the Festival this year was again devoted to works by modern composers—Elgar, Goossens, Ireland, Bantock, C. Jenkins, Holbrooke, Delius, Malipiero, &c.—and if public interest is a criterion, the event was highly successful, as, despite torrential rain, fully five thousand persons visited the pavilion on Saturday, swelling to nearly double that number on Monday, and the concert attracted still more. Such attendance was not surprising in a district intensely musical and replete with associations of famous conductors and choirs, past and present.

The highest musical culture was scarcely evidenced on the vocal side, the performances being emotional rather than intellectual and psychological, and, mirabile dictu, the instrumental players reached a higher standard than the vocal solo class—a clarinet, horn, and trio (flute, violin, and harp) receiving high encomiums. This is gratifying when special consideration is being sought for this department. As is so often pointed out, there is no lack of talent here; the deficiency is rather one of really capable teachers for each instrument with its own peculiar technique, and also (sotto voce, please!) of adjudicators able to punctuate their remarks, either personally or by deputy, with practical illustrations. Individual players and small orchestras of a class are plentiful, but education and consolidation are needed for the establishment of an orchestra satisfying national ideals. Exponents are also distributed over wide areas, and rehearsal difficulties are thereby greatly enhanced. Thus the question of a national orchestra resolves itself into one of finance. So well known is this that it is surely gratuitous to labour it further from the concert-platform to the evident bewilderment of the audience. It may be suggested that part of the very generous prizes offered for choral singing might well have been diverted to encourage instrumental quartets and quintets, and small orchestras (not omitting school orchestras, for that way salvation lies); and inasmuch as professionals will compete, why not two classes?

The evening concert was mainly orchestral, and worthily did the players brought from London by Mr. Jenkins replace the London Symphony Orchestra, which was engaged elsewhere. The programme opened with the Prelude to the 'Meistersingers,' interpreted in fine style under the conductorship of Mr. Appleby Matthews, and firmly establishing the orchestra with the huge audience. Equally successful was the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' the 'Pathetic' Symphony, and Holst's 'Beni Mora.' The Mountain Ash and District Choral Society, under Mr. T. W. Millar, and accompanied by the orchestra, gave a virile reading of the 'Challenge of Thor' by Elgar; the 'Wraith of Odin,' and 'As Torrents in Summer,' by the same composer, showed the choir to advantage. Mr. Andrew Shanks gave excerpts from the 'Meistersinger' artistically. Two new orchestral works were down as first performances—a 'Welsh Rhapsody,' by Cyril Jenkins, and the Overture to 'Bronwen,' by Josef Holbrooke. Another work by Cyril Jenkins was the 'Magic Cauldron.'

On the whole, the Festival was most successful, and reflected credit on the promoter.

On Tuesday evening, at the Town Hall, Maesteg, an orchestral concert on similar lines was held, with Mr. Julius Harrison as conductor. The programme included Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture, the 'Unfinished' Symphony, 'Siegfried Idyll,' 'Ride of the Valkyries,' 'Welsh Rhapsody' and 'Magic Cauldron' (C. Jenkins), and vocal items by Mr. A. Shank.

O. P. J.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BELFAST

The Belfast Symphony Orchestra made a very successful beginning of its season by a concert in Wellington Hall, on October 22.

The Orchestra, carefully trained and brilliantly conducted by Mr. E. Godfrey Brown, earned distinction in Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Coleridge-Taylor's Rhapsodic Dance, 'Bamboula,' Mozart's 'Magic Flute' Overture, and in sundry other works. Mrs. John Seeds charmed the audience by her refined and artistic singing. The excellent programme was completed by violin solos played by Mr. J. B. Gray.

A miscellaneous concert opened the season of the Philharmonic Society, on October 28. Handel's Coronation Anthem, 'The King shall rejoice,' and the Dance from Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands,' were the only works for combined chorus and orchestra. The solo artists were Signor Lenghi Cellini (vocalist) and Prof. Michaele Esposito, the eminent pianist of Dublin, whose visits to the Northern capital have been all too rare. He played with perfection pieces by Handel, Scarlatti, Chopin, and Rubinstein. A dainty Berceuse by Prof. Esposito was well performed by the orchestra, with the composer conducting.

BIRMINGHAM

The Choral Union opened its season on October 15 with a performance of 'Elijah,' under Mr. Richard Wassell. On October 22, the Choral and Orchestral Association gave interest to its two hundred and ninety-sixth Popular concert by a revival of Cowen's melodious Cantata, 'The Sleeping Beauty.' Both this and 'Blest Pair of Sirens' were very well performed under Mr. Joseph H. Adams.

The Birmingham Bach Society gave a second performance of Bach's 'Coffee' Cantata, at the Midland Institute, on November 3, and certainly Mr. Bernard Jackson was justified in repeating this delightful work. A small orchestra took part in a pleasing performance.

The City Orchestra had a busy day on November 20. In the afternoon a children's concert was held, and it is calculated that about two thousand five hundred children attended. The idea of bringing orchestral music before the youngsters of our town has, of course, an educative tendency.

As on the previous occasion, remarks respecting the music were made by Mr. Sydney Grew. The principal items were the 'William Tell' Overture, Jarnefelt's Præludium, Dvorák Humoresque, and a Mozart Symphony.

In the evening the Orchestra gave a Wagner programme which included the Overtures to the 'Mastersingers' at 'Tannhäuser,' also the Preludes to Acts 2 and 3, and the 'Entrance of the Gods into Walhalla,' from 'Rheingold' and two vocal selections, the Prize Song and Elsa's Dream sung by Mr. Frank Titterton and Miss Margaret Harrison. Mr. Appleby Matthews, a Wagnerian enthusiast, conveyed his enthusiasm to his rank and file.

The Sunday concerts at the Grand Hotel have greatly improved as regards attendance, and so has the playing of the orchestra. The programmes are varied in character. English composers being well represented. Symphonies by Beethoven, Haydn, Mozart, Dvorák, and César Franck are the principal features of these enjoyable programmes.

The Sunday evening orchestral concert at the Grand Theatre, on October 30, was conducted by Mr. Joseph Lewis with infinite care and excellent results. Dvorák's Symphony 'From the New World' was the principal item in which the City Orchestra achieved artistic phrasing at fine tone-quality.

So far the finest concert of the season was the City Birmingham Orchestra's second symphony concert at the Town Hall, on November 9, when Mr. Albert Coates conducted a greatly augmented orchestra of nearly a hundred performers. Mr. Appleby Matthews had already prepared the programme, which comprised Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Cortège de Noces,' the 'Siegfried Idyll,' Scriabin's gorgeously 'Poème de l'Extase,' and Beethoven's C minor Symphony the last two conducted without a score. In addition to these Mr. Coates introduced the Bach-Elgar C minor Fugue. It was altogether a memorable concert, especially in tonal power and overwhelming climaxes. Naturally it aroused the enthusiasm of the audience in the fullest manner.

On the evening of Armistice Day a concert was given at the Town Hall, and a collection realised £44 which will be allotted to the Birmingham Music Christmas fund. The concert was organized by the Birmingham Police Band, under the direction of Mr. Appleby Matthews, who directed a programme quite unique in character. On this occasion the Birmingham Choir made its début under Mr. Joseph Lewis, the choir-master and conductor. César Franck's setting of the 150th Psalm and Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' were impressively performed. Intense solemnity was realised by Beethoven's 'Equality,' given out by four trombones played from concealed position.

Arnold Bax's G minor Quartet was among the works played by the Catterall Quartet on October 14, under the auspices of the Birmingham Chamber Concerts Society, the first of five concerts. Miss Beatrice Hewitt has established a Pianoforte Quintet under her name, the string players being Mr. Louis Pecska, Mr. Paul Bear, Mr. Frank Venton, and Mr. J. Cattock. At their first concert, on November 5, they did justice to the families of Brahms and Dvorák Quintets, and a Quartet by Mr. Alfred Wall received its first performance at Birmingham.

Among the soloists recently heard have been Mr. Cort at Mr. Max Mossel's first subscription concert; Dr. To Goodey, in Holst's 'Rig Veda' songs at a British Music Society concert; M. Dupré on the Town Hall organ; and Miss Ursula Greville in a programme of Messrs. Curwen's modern British songs. On October 17 Miss Murr Lambert played violin music at the Town Hall, and three vocalists sang songs by Mr. Landon Ronald.

On the stage we have had 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme' with Lully's music, as part of Mr. Barry Jackson's spirit enterprise at the Répertoire Theatre; two weeks of Carl Rosa; and 'The Beggar's Opera.'

Carlisle Choral Society gave its first concert of the season in the Drill Hall on November 17 under the conductorship of Dr. F. W. Wadely. The programme included Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls as soloist, Elgar's 'Black Knight,' and Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony.

BOURNEMOUTH

The Bournemouth Symphony Concerts are now in full swing, and on all sides the opinion is held that the opening weeks of the season have proved exceptionally interesting. In one direction, at least, the season is likely to break all records—that is to say, in regard to the general quality of the novelties.

At the second concert, on October 13, expectation ran high as to the pleasure derivable from the production here of the three movements, 'Mars,' 'Saturn,' and 'Jupiter,' from Gustav Holst's formidable composition, 'The Planets.' The most terrifying ruthlessness of 'Mars' made a profound effect, which was perhaps hardly sustained in the succeeding movements. The music was magnificently played, the adequate representation of such a large-scale work being no mean achievement to the credit of Mr. Dan Godfrey, when we consider the immense scope of the composition as compared with the numerical forces at his disposal. Mozart's great C major Symphony, by reason of its perfection of style, lost nothing in its association with the most recent phases of orchestral art.

On October 20 interest was chiefly centred in Glazounov's B Symphony and in the actual first performance of a new composition by Arnold Bax, entitled 'Tintagel.' This was very successfully produced, Mr. Bax being the recipient of a genuine outburst of applause. Lovely passages abound in the score, and the poetic quality of the music is everywhere amplified. One felt, however, that a better structural balance could have been obtained, and that a keener sense of climax would have improved this deeply-felt piece of writing. Mr. Godfrey's handling of the intricate score was once more approach.

The F major Symphony of Brahms was the principal attraction in the following week's programme, its permanence being extremely fine. New to Bournemouth were the Dances from Manuel de Falla's 'Three-Cornered Hat' ballet, sparkling, exhilarating experiments in rhythm that it carried the audience away.

Schumann's D minor Symphony, Glazounov's Fantasia, 'A Forêt,' and Bantock's Orchestral Ballad, 'The Sea Lovers' (first time at Bournemouth), came to a hearing on November 3. The well-balanced performances of these diverse compositions gave much pleasure. By no means the most successful of the works was the bracing, spume-driven escape by Granville Bantock.

The programme for November 10 was not quite up to the level of interest of the preceding concerts, although both Beethoven's second Symphony and Brahms' 'Academic' overture are not works one would wish to exclude from the repertoire. But the composition of the programme as a whole lacked that galvanic force which stirs up the latent responsiveness of an expectant audience. However, the first performances of the two works mentioned proved very acceptable to the bulk of those present. A novelty—'Autumn Nocturne,' by Albert Cazabon—received its initial performance. Pleasing, though unoriginal, it ran an auspicious course.

The soloists at these recent concerts have been Miss Dorothy Chalmers (Glazounov's Violin Concerto), Mr. Ian Clifford (Concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra by Frederic Cowen), Miss Hélène Dolmetsch (Violoncello Concerto by Saint-Saëns), Mr. Anderson Tyrer (Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in A major), and Mr. Albert Cazabon (Violin Concerto by Tchaikovsky)—all of whom gave effective interpretations of the works they had selected for performance.

BRISTOL

Of recent choral interests the most important has been the hundredth concert of the Bristol Choral Society at Colston Hall on October 22, which also celebrated thirty years of hard and inspired work by Mr. George Riseley as conductor. The end of this period finds the Society high in honour and capacity—but, like many others, low in income. Its powers of execution were well illustrated in Mendel's 'Te Deum'—clearly and effectively sung—and an excerpt from 'Boris Godounov,' wherein only dramatic intensity was wanting in a praiseworthy performance. Other choral events have included the delicate singing of Miss Florence Bradfield's Bristol Ladies' Choir (of thirty voices) on October 15; a special Congregational practice at All Saints' (City) held on the same day under several prominent Bristol musicians; and the Bristol Children's Concerts Society's gathering of six hundred school children at Colston Hall on November 5, to sing folk-songs under Mr. Geoffrey Shaw and to hear his lecture on 'Songs of our Own People'; and the vivacious and sonorous glee-singing of Kingswood Philharmonic Male-Voice Choir on October 31, under Mr. Tom Davies.

Church musicians have also been interested in Mr. Alfred Hollins' recital on October 15—Mendelssohn, Tchaikovsky, and Bach—and in a lecture on 'Church Music and Education' by Mr. Edgar T. Cook (of Southwark Cathedral), emphasising the responsibility of the Churches in raising popular standards.

A lecture by Mr. Napier Miles to the Venture Club, on October 31, summarized recent grievances.

Of other concerts we have had to rest content with Tetraxini and fellow-celebrities at Colston Hall, and an excellent chamber concert given by Mrs. Hallett and others which introduced Goossens' Suite for two violins and pianoforte and Herbert Howells' Quartet in A minor.

Coming events include, first and foremost, the Bristol New Philharmonic Society's concert under Mr. Arnold Barter on December 3. The programme contains Delius' 'On hearing the first Cuckoo in Spring,' Walford Davies' 'Five Sayings of Jesus,' and Holst's 148th Psalm. Bristol Cecilian Choral Society (formed of Messrs. J. S. Fry & Sons' employees), under Mr. Charles Read, has 'The Swan and the Skylark' and Parry's 'Pied Piper' in preparation for December 10.

Weston-super-Mare has decided to form a Society for the performance of glees and madrigals under Mr. G. H. Riseley.

CAMBRIDGE

Cambridge musicians are very busy this term. The University Musical Society—now equipped with a full set of flat-pitched wind instruments, through the generosity of Mr. Barkworth, the librarian of the Society—has a full membership, and looks capable of doing justice to the ambitious programme of the season. Rehearsals are now going forward for the choral and orchestral concert at the end of term, when Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' and Vaughan Williams' Fantasia on Christmas Carols will be given. Two successful chamber concerts—the first by the Dolmetsch family, the second by Miss Mignon Nevada and Mr. Louis Henry—have taken place under the auspices of the Society.

Dr. Rootham's new opera, 'The Two Sisters,' is to be performed at the New Theatre next term by the Operatic Society, and both chorus and orchestra are rehearsing under the direction of Mr. J. F. Shepherdson and the composer. Mr. Dennis Arundell is to be the producer, and as he has been prominently associated with most of the University's dramatic triumphs, his experience should be very valuable.

The Musical Club, now full to overflowing, 'goes sounding on its way.' The usual weekly meetings are being held, most of which are devoted to chamber music, some of it composed, and all performed, by members of the University. At a recent meeting, however, Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a recital, which was deservedly received with enthusiasm.

A number of miscellaneous concerts have been given, the most notable being a recital of modern English songs by Miss Ursula Greville. With the addition of the public lectures by Dr. Gray and Dr. Naylor, the series of organ recitals in Trinity College Chapel, and the weekly concerts of the Informal Music Society, the music-lover at Cambridge is by no means starved. Indeed, the musical activities of the University were never more flourishing.

The Dumfries and Maxwelltown Choral and Orchestral Society has included orchestral concerts in its present season's programme. On November 4 the Dumfries Select Orchestra, under Mr. W. J. Stark, played 'Finlandia' and the 'Jupiter' Symphony, and accompanied Miss Gertrude Page in the Tchaikovsky B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto.

CHATHAM

Rochester, Chatham, and Gillingham Free Church Choirs' Association drew an audience of fifteen hundred people on both occasions—October 26 and 29—that performances were given of the Crystal Palace Nonconformist Choir Union music. Mr. Leslie Mackay conducted the choir of four hundred voices, and secured plenty of vitality and vigour from his singers. There was, however, a shortage of pianos and pianissimos, but the choir shows marked improvement since its formation last year.

Prior to his long tour abroad, M. Cortôt paid a farewell visit to Chatham on November 8, when, in Chopin and Schumann, his playing was as beautiful as ever. Miss Anne Thursfield sang a number of songs in Italian, French, Russian, and English with infinite charm.

Orchestral concerts by the bands of the Royal Engineers (under Lieut. Neville Flux) and Royal Marines (under Lieut. Charles Hoby) have been resumed. On November 8 the Royal Engineers gave a first performance of an Overture, 'Cleopatra,' by August Enna. Both directors of music promise novelties during the season.

CORNWALL

Penzance Choral Society has now run a course of fifty years, and the present conductor, Mr. Hugh Branwell, has pulled the choir together, and organized a capable orchestra of twenty players. 'Judas Maccabæus' is now in rehearsal for performance before Christmas. Few towns of the size of Penzance can boast as much musical activity, for in addition to these two organizations there is a fine orchestral society conducted by Mr. Walter Barnes, whose symphony concerts are unique in the county.

The Cornwall branch of the English Folk-Dancing Society held a meeting and a display at Falmouth on November 1. Lady Mary Trefusis said that folk-dancing was an outlet for national feelings, and would be a much better expression of emotion on such occasions as Armistice Day than the rather silly and childish things done around bonfires. Folk-dancing was found useful in convalescent soldiers' camps, for men who could not walk found that they could dance, and thus were cured. The Rev. C. Daly Atkinson sang some Lancashire and Somerset folk-songs.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The opening of November brought with it a cluster of musical events at Coventry, and concert-goers have been kept busy. The latter days of October passed unmarked by any music-making of importance, except for a Festival Evensong at the Cathedral arranged by the newly-formed Church Choirs' Association, which consists of the choirs of eleven Anglican churches in the city. Stanford's Service in B flat received a fine interpretation by upwards of three hundred voices, the anthem took the form of an excerpt from 'Mount of Olives,' and well-known hymns, sung to settings provided in the 'English Hymnal,' were given with finely-balanced tone.

Chief interest in the programme presented by the Coventry Choral Society at its annual autumn concert in the Baths Assembly Hall on November 2, centred in the visit of Mr. Edgar Bainton, who is the son of a local Nonconformist minister. Mr. Bainton appeared in the rôles of composer, conductor, and solo pianist. He conducted his 'Song of Freedom and Joy,' of which the choir gave an efficient performance, and contributed a large number of pianoforte solos, mostly of the modern school. Under its conductor, Mr. John Potter, the choir also sang a trio of part-songs. The vocal soloist was Mr. Herbert Simmonds, and Miss Florence M. Hanson acted as accompanist and also played violin solos.

The first of the Armstrong-Siddeley Motor Works musical organizations to hold a concert this season was the military band, which, under Mr. John H. Williams, was heard in an interesting programme at Parkside on November 5.

The Catterall Quartet provided the programme at the Coventry Chamber Music Society's first concert in St. Mary's Hall on November 7. Compositions by Beethoven, Elgar, and Borodin were performed, and a large audience extended a cordial welcome to the players on their initial appearance here.

Under the auspices of the Coventry Philharmonic Society Mr. Charles Tree delivered a lecture-recital, 'Songs, grave and gay—and how to sing them,' at the Baths Assembly Hall on November 8.

Coventry Musical Club held its opening concert at the Union Street Assembly Hall on November 10, the Mayo taking the chair. So popular have these men's smoking concerts become, that it has been found necessary to provide larger accommodation for the coming season. The singing of the Male-Voice Choir, under Mr. John Chapman, was a feature of the programme, Walford Davies' 'Hymn before Action' being very finely interpreted. Flute and piccolo solos by Mr. Walter Heard, principal flautist of the City of Birmingham Orchestra, were executed in masterly style, and songs by Mr. Richard Bayliss and Mr. S. A. Wallace completed the bill of fare.

The Rover Orchestra, conducted by Mr. W. R. Clarke arranged an Armistice Night concert for Friday, November 11. A programme of appropriate music was performed in the Rover Sports Club Recreation Hall.

DARLINGTON AND DISTRICT

Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society has been obliged to suspend its work owing to lack of an adequate concert-hall in the town. The newly-formed Glee and Madrigal Society, under Dr. Arthur Kitson, gave its first concert in the small Mechanics' Hall on November 2, the principal choral pieces given being Bantock's 'Leprehaun Parry's 'Come, pretty wag,' and Elgar's 'Weary Win of the West.' The Chamber Music Society is flourishing and has given two concerts of the four announced for this season. On October 23 the Elzy Pianoforte Quartet gave a fine performance of Fauré's Quartet in C minor and Brahms' in G minor; and on November 15 Madam Fachiri gave a violin recital at which the chief work was Bach's Sonata in C minor. Miss Helen Anderton sang songs by Butterworth, Frank Bridge, and Parry, and Miss Ethel Page was at the pianoforte. At the Parish Church series of organ recitals have been arranged by Mr. Hubert Walton (of Glasgow Cathedral), Dr. Arthur Kitson (of the Parish Church, Darlington), Mr. Arthur Leary (of Stockton-on-Tees), and Mr. W. Ellis (of Newcastle Cathedral). The first three have taken place, and on each occasion the Church was crowded.

On November 11 a lecture of exceptional interest on 'Shakespeare's use of Song' was given at Polam Hall by Mr. Richmond Noble, with illustrations sung by Mr. J. Vine both of Belfast. The lecturer, a delightfully racy speaker, insisted on the dramatic importance of Shakespeare's use of song, and lamented the fact that so many settings were concert music and not stage music in any sense of the word. The settings composed by Mr. Vine and the lecturer in collaboration, as examples of how the thing ought to be done, were delightful in themselves and dramatically convincing.

Greatly to the regret of all concerned, Dr. Kilburn is retiring from the Middlesbrough Musical Union, whose activities will be confined to the preparation of a farewell concert late in the season. The Corbett concerts are in full swing, and as popular as ever. On October 5 MM. Dupré and Corti appeared at the first concert, and on November 2 Moiseiwitsch was solo pianist, with Miss Munthe-Kaas, Madame Kirkland, and Messrs. Ben Davies and Robert Radford as vocalists. The 'international celebrity' concerts are also running this season, and drawing good audiences.

DEVON

The small town of Axminster has now formed a Music Society, with Mr. W. C. Walton as conductor of its choral and instrumental forces. 'Lauda Sion' and 'Hear my Prayer' are in rehearsal.

Plymouth Coleridge-Taylor Choral Society, conducted by Mr. M. Durston, on October 12 sang part-songs, including Coleridge-Taylor's 'Life and Death,' and Herbert Hughes' 'Down by the Sally Gardens,' Mr. Roland Hayes sang 'Chevanchée Cosagne' by Fourdain, and some of Quilter's Shakespeare songs.

The Choral Festival of Totnes Deanery, on October 21, brought together two hundred and eighty male and female chorists from the parishes of Ashprington, Berry Pomeroy, Diptford, Holne, Harbertonford, South Brent, Stoke Gabriel, and Totnes. The Rev. T. Parry, rector of Diptford, conducted. The music for the Canticles and hymns was taken from the Cathedral Psalter. Norman Churchill's fine tune to the hymn 'Come, let us join our joyful songs,' made much impression.

Fiverton and District Choral Association, comprising seven parish choirs, at its annual meeting expressed the opinion that in affiliation with the Diocesan Associations it had resulted in improvement of Church music locally. Miss Guerra da Fontoura arranged two concerts on October 27 and 28, at Exeter, in aid of hospital funds, and secured the valuable help of Dr. H. J. Edwards (who played pianoforte music), of Mr. Walter Belgrove (who sang Parry's 'Jerusalem' and Gounod's 'She alone charmeth'), of Miss Phyllis Smith (violin), and of several local performers.

A feature of the first music-making for the season of Exeter Chamber Music Club was the singing of Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' by Mr. Walter Belgrove, with male quartet accompaniment and Dr. Ernest Bullock at the pianoforte. Haydn's String Quartet, Op. 76, No. 4, and Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata provided instrumental music, and a quartet of mixed voices sang Beale's 'Come let us join in roundelay,' 'Sweet day so cool' (E. C. Bairstow), and 'I asked my fair' (Champneys).

Plymouth Orpheus Male Choir (Mr. David Parkes) has already appeared three times this season at the 'celebrity concerts.' On the last occasion, November 4, Miss Amy Mans, Mr. Fraser Gange, and Miss Adela Verne were the singing artists.

A sacred concert given on October 26, at Exeter, by Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe, organist of St. Sidwell's Church, was particularly interesting. Mr. Gilberthorpe was at the organ, Mr. S. J. Bishop sang oratorio pieces, and Mr. A. T. played violin music.

DUBLIN

The 'Mater' Concert at La Scala on October 16, in addition to the Dublin Symphony Orchestra, had two real attractions in Mr. Harold Williams and Miss Maud Clancy, who met with a cordial reception.

Miss Jean Nolan's song recital on October 19 was a delightful treat, and the audience enjoyed the various vocal solos from which selections were made. Dr. Larchet, who played the accompaniments, was represented by his setting of W. B. Yeats' romantic lyric, 'The Lake Isle of Innisfree.' In her pianoforte solos Miss Rhoda Coghill showed a fine technique.

At the Scala Theatre, on October 23, a distinct novelty was presented in the shape of an Irish Symphony called 'Athi,' descriptive of the wonderful career of the Irish hero who is said to have been killed at the foot of the Rock of Cashel. This composition is from the pen of Mr. Joseph O'Connell, a pupil of Prof. R. O'Dwyer, and shows fine writing in some passages of remarkable power.

The inaugural concert of the Irish Musical League took place at the Abbey Theatre on October 30, under the direction of Dr. John F. Larchet. Selected items by J. S. Bach, Tchaikovsky, Grainger, and Lawrence were well performed, with Arthur Darley as leader. Mr. Joseph Reilly was a tasteful vocalist.

At the Royal Irish Academy, on October 31, the opening session of the Bibliographical Society of Ireland was held, when, inter alia, an interesting paper by Dr. W. H. O'Sullivan Flood on 'Aria di Camera, being the oldest printed section of Irish music, 1727,' was read. Only two copies of this extremely rare work are known.

The Brodsky Trio and Dr. M. Esposito gave a recital in the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society on November 7, during the inaugural concert of classical music for 1921-22.

Very pleasant were the singing of Miss Megan Foster at the 'Mater' Concert at La Scala on November 13 and the pianoforte playing of Miss Myra Hess in the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society on November 14.

EDINBURGH

A very enjoyable vocal and pianoforte recital on October 19 was given by Miss Alice M. M'Lauchlan and Mr. Ralph T. Langdon. The latter has recently gained the Bucher Scholarship at Edinburgh University. Miss M'Lauchlan is one of our promising contralto vocalists, and displayed a fine catholicity of taste. An interesting Dutch Suite by Röntgen, for pianoforte, was excellently played by Mr. Langdon.

On October 31 Miss Ursula Greville gave a finished performance of modern British songs. Certainly these songs got the best chance possible by her interpretations, and the artistic playing of Mr. Edgar Barrett. On November 9 Miss Jean Waterston gave one of her highly-enjoyable vocal recitals.

On November 9 the Royal Choral Union opened its season with 'The Golden Legend,' still a delightful and refreshing work. The alto section of the choir was excellent. The training of the singers under Mr. Greenhouse Allt showed to great advantage in Elgar's 'Lullaby' from the 'Bavarian Highlands' Suite. The 'Dance Song' also received a spirited performance. Their interpretation ranks among the best things that the singers have done, and augurs well for the heavy season's work embodied in the scheme of the Choral Union's season, which includes two performances of Holst's 'Hymn to Jesus' in the spring of 1922.

On November 9 Miss Phyllis Graves (vocalist), Miss Esther Cruickshank (violin), and Miss Ruby Dunn (pianoforte), gave a delightful chamber concert. This Trio is becoming a local institution from which we always get the best. The programme included Schumann's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata, the Eccles-Salmon Sonata for the same instruments, pianoforte solos by Schumann, Brahms, and Dohnányi, and an excellent list of songs.

GLASGOW

A large gathering assembled in Belhaven Church, on November 1, to hear a recital of original compositions by Mr. T. C. L. Pritchard, the accomplished and able organist of the Church. Six of the eight organ compositions presented were definitely 'programme' music, and showed that Mr. Pritchard possesses a fine gift of imagination which he is able to express in music with very considerable effect. Two of the pieces call for special mention—an Idyll, 'Summer Depths,' and 'Bruges: A Memory.' The two remaining numbers, a Prelude on the hymn-tune, 'St. Anne,' and an Introduction and Fugue from a Sonata in D, gave the composer more scope on the side of thematic development. Four settings of words of Keats, Byron, E. B. Browning, and S. J. Stone, were excellently sung by Miss Helena Hartley.

The first chamber concert of the Bach Choir series took place on November 3, when a programme of exceptional interest was performed. It is only at these concerts that an opportunity is afforded for hearing such compositions as the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianofortes (with accompaniment for strings), which were the main items in the programme, and which were skilfully interpreted by Mr. A. M. Henderson, Mr. Philip Halstead, and Mr. Wilfrid Senior. The programme also included a Sarabande, Minuet, and Gavotte by Rameau, transcribed for the pianoforte and played by Mr. A. M. Henderson, and Reinecke's Variations on a Sarabande by Bach for two pianofortes, played by Mr. Henderson and Mr. Senior.

From time to time one is struck by the enormous change which has taken place here in regard to Sunday observance, especially in its relation to music. Less than a generation ago a Sunday concert was unheard of, the nearest approach to it being camouflaged under the title of 'Service of Praise.' Now, musical performances are not only openly tolerated and advertised, but are welcomed by a large section of the populace. Taking October as an illustration of the changed times, there were band performances every Sunday afternoon and evening at Kelvin Hall (an immense building commonly used for exhibitions), orchestral concerts under Mr. Horace Fellowes at the Picture House every Sunday evening, set programmes at the many P.S.A.'s and P.S.E.'s for the people, and a large number of Sunday evening organ recitals in the Churches. Report says that all these musical undertakings invariably attract huge audiences.

Three great pianists gave recitals at Glasgow, viz., Cortôt on October 28, Lamond on November 9, and Hofmann on November 11.

The season of the Choral and Orchestral Union opened with a Saturday popular orchestral concert on November 12. The personnel of the Scottish Orchestra is practically the same as last season, but the string section has received some recruits, the addition giving gratifying results as regards balance of tone. A detailed notice must be held over until next month. Meanwhile it is satisfactory to record the popular reception of Mr. Landon Ronald and the Scottish Orchestra by an audience which completely filled St. Andrew's Hall.

HASTINGS

The spade-work which Mr. Julian Clifford lavished on the hard soil of Hastings two years ago has already appreciably affected the attitude of the town towards music in general. Though this is only his third winter season he has built up an enthusiastic body which, while ready with friendly criticism, was so determined to have the same orchestra again that it got its way with the corporation. An important outcome of the awakening of musical life is the formation of another choral society in addition to the long-established Madrigal Society. Thanks to the efforts of Miss Florence Aylward, the new society, strong in numbers, made a promising start in October under the conductorship of Mr. Claude Powell. That the spirit of rivalry is stimulating is evidenced by the fact that the Madrigal Society will this season join the Municipal Orchestra in performances of 'The Messiah' and an Elgar work.

To judge by the opening symphony concerts in November, the orchestra is even better this year than it was last. The 'Unfinished,' and notably the 'New World,' Symphonies, revealed a sense of rhythmic unity that is rare in provincial organizations. Among newer things Glazounov's 'Stenka Razin' stands out as a fine example of programme music, and for a strikingly individual interpretation. Mr. John Davies was quite equal to the exactions of Max Bruch's G minor Concerto, and Miss Helen Guest succeeded in making the solo part of Moszkowski's Pianoforte Concerto in E sound really impressive.

Each symphony concert will henceforth include a British work—a welcome innovation here, where the local appetites were whetted by last year's British Music Festival, and are ready for more.

On November 12 Elgar's Violin Concerto had a sympathetic and authoritative exponent in Miss Isolde Menges. She took no niggardly view of the work, nor did her well-balanced emotional temperament interfere with her luscious tone or certainty of rhythm. True, her vibrato is too continuous, and would be really acceptable if less generously employed. Taken as a whole the work had a broad and sane interpretation from the soloist and her associates.

INVERNESS

Like so many other centres, Inverness suffered artistically through the war. At present it is slowly being awakened to musical activity.

The Choral Society under the conductorship of the local teacher of music in the schools, Mr. Lewis Owen, has been revived. Prior to the war the conductor was Mr. W. S. Rhoddie, an ardent Sol-faist, who had done a great work in choral matters in these parts. The Society gave 'The Creation' (Haydn) and 'For the Fallen' (Elgar) last season. This season it proposes to give 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah'—rather old battle horses, but they may serve to brighten up interest in musical doings.

A string orchestra is in being under Miss Sara Walker, a local enthusiast, and one whose instrumental programmes kept the musical flag flying during the war.

At the Cathedral Mr. D. E. Roberts (appointed last year) gives monthly organ recitals which are very well attended. For the Church services we have a library of a hundred and eighty anthems of all schools, ancient and modern, one of which is sung each Sunday. Mr. Roberts also conducts the Inverness Male-Voice Choir. A meeting was recently held to inaugurate the Inverness and Northern Counties Musical Festival. Mr. Hugh Robertson came from Glasgow to speak, and great things are anticipated from the scheme. It is hoped to hold the Festival in June next. Much could be made of the Gaelic music of this part of Scotland, but a leader of Gaelic seems necessary. The lowland county is fortunate in having such a leader in Mrs. Kennedy Fraser, at Edinburgh. It is hoped to include Gaelic airs and folk-songs in the programme of the coming Festival.

LIVERPOOL

The programme of the Philharmonic Society's second concert, on November 1, contained only four items, but with M. Cortôt as solo pianist and Mr. Albert Coates as conductor there was plenty of interest, both musical and personal.

The Brahms D minor Concerto was not a happily chosen medium for M. Cortôt's brilliant art. He was temperamentally better suited with Franck's sparkling Variations, which were delightfully played. Strauss' 'Heldenleben' was by no means an unwelcome revival, although nowadays its exhilarating moments scarcely atone for its prolixity. The fourth number was Mr. Coates' Suite of string music from Purcell.

The performance aroused memories of the late A. Rodewald, an amateur of his art who did so much in the way to popularise orchestral music at Liverpool. To him was due the first performance of 'Heldenleben' in this city.

At Rushworth Hall, on November 5, Miss Ursula Greville made a highly favourable impression as an English lied singer at her vocal recital of recently-published songs of native composers. Her programme contained no less than twenty-four songs, which were generally noticeable for their harmonic freedom and descriptive suggestion, especially the pianoforte accompaniments. The list of composers included Percival Garrett (who accompanied the song), Martin Shaw, Leigh Henry, Gerrard Williams, H. Bainton, J. H. Foulds, and Boughton.

As usual at this time of year there has been an epidemic of pianoforte recitals, and the great players have included Moseiwitsch, Cortôt, and Hofmann. Worthy of note also was the recital given in Rushworth Hall by Mr. Edward Mitchell, who especially sustained his reputation as a Scriabin exponent, in playing 'Vers la flamme.' Another interesting recital was given by Mr. Robert Gregory in the club-room of the British Music Society, October 20. Mr. Gregory is an accomplished player, befits a pupil of Leschetitzky, and after the recital he gave some interesting reminiscences of his great teacher and his grim experiences at Vienna during the war.

At the Crane Hall Wednesday afternoon recitals were notable pianists have been heard, including Mr. Anders Tyrer, Miss Margaret Collins, and Miss Lucy Pier (Bach-Tausig D major Fugue). The accomplished McCullagh Ladies' String Quartet played Frank Bridge's charming 'Sally in our Alley' and 'Cherry ripe,' and the Ethel Midgley Trio were heard in Tchaikovsky's 'Elegiac Trio.' The vocalists included Miss May Sproston, Miss Vida Evans, Miss Hilda Roberts, and Mr. Lewis Knight, and the violinists Miss C. le Mesurier and Miss Gertrude Newsham.

At the Rodewald Concert Society's first meeting, October 24, a favourable impression was made by the Quartet in G by Arnold Bax, a work remarkable for its thematic material, skill in development, and sustaining interest. The slow movement touches inspiration in beauty and freshness. It was admirably played by the Catterall Quartet.

Dr. A. W. Pollitt, Lecturer in Music to the University of Liverpool, opened a course of six lectures, which are free to the public, on October 13, his subject being 'The Vocal Literature of the 17th and 18th Centuries.' Mr. J. Sheridan assisted as solo violinist.

On October 18 Mr. Michael Dawson concluded a course of three lecture-recitals at the Village Hall, Storrington, illustrating the violin sonata from Corelli to Elgar.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

How and where stands Manchester in relation to the national opera scheme so recently established? One reads Bradford, Liverpool, and Glasgow having been visited by, for example, Messrs. Radford and Pitt, who have addressed important meetings in its support, and at Liverpool Mr. Radford expressed the hope that the Mersey city might come the northern headquarters. Why have not these gentlemen visited Manchester? The Manchester Beecham chorus has kept matters moving, and has assisted visiting companies. In an opera festival week (October 17-22) for charitable ends, 'Faust' and 'Carmen' were each played on three evenings, and something over £3,000 was paid in mission. £600 of this sum passed to the Entertainments and £1,000 to the charities. Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted, and the full Hallé band was used.

The Hallé Orchestra had been playing in the North under Mr. Hamilton Harty for a month before coming, on November 3, to the first Hallé concert here, with the result that the initial appearance produced playing of a finished quality never before experienced so early in the season. Mr. Harty played for the first time in England 'Bürger als Edelmann,' the Suite from the opening of Strauss' opera 'Die Fledermaus' in Naxos. The geniality of this work won all hearts. It was exquisitely played, especially in the Minuet (after Schumann). For sheer ravishing grace this would be hard to surpass, and probably would do more to reconcile many listeners to the re-introduction of Strauss to the concert-room in any other of his orchestral works.

The Rosing cult is strong here, but his last two appearances have not been among his most successful. Most experienced and disciplined minds would hesitate to describe him as worthy a place amongst the great lieder singers. Outside Russian work his powers appear rather mediocre, and one may venture to think that had his earliest appearances here been made in programmes of purely classical lieder his vogue would not have attained its present dimensions. Singing the songs of his native land the performance is positively miraculous, but when he pours the heady wine of this Russian-conceived interpretation into bottles as, say, Cyril Scott's 'Invocation to Love,' or the ballad of 'Lord Rendal'—to take two widely different English types—the bottles simply are shattered.

The second Hallé concert, on the eve of Armistice Day, naturally drew some inspiration from the anniversary, adequately expressed, as I think, in Sullivan's 'In Memoriam,' which has no epic quality—nay, it is even most domestic in its grief. Cannot our conductors discover something which shall displace this puny overture? A serious commentary on the juxtaposition of ideas was afforded by Parry's aria from 'Judith,' beginning 'I will sing unto the Lord a new song,' which seemed by comparison almost worthy the commemorative occasion, when it really is diluted stuff, shuffling, even in the keeping of Miss Agnes Nicholls, to sang like a very high-priestess of Triumph, the note of the grandiose instead of the sublime. From this we were diverted via Handel's 'Water Music' in Hamilton Harty's additionally orchestrated form, and Elgar's latest Bach fugue transcription, to Scriabin's 'Divine Poem' Symphony. The Elgar-Bach fugue made many people grieve. The newly-appointed Hallé organist (Mr. Harold M. Dawber) played the C minor Fugue on the organ first. The Free Trade Hall organ is a poorish affair, but the Fugue did grow and develop grandeur in its course. In the orchestral version this sense of cumulative power and majesty is the first impression conveyed. It is brilliant, lively to the point of vivacity, but, for oneself, it contributed nothing which made it appear a really nobler thing than one already knew. The performance of Scriabin's 'Divine Poem' was a marked advance on that of last March. The average listener who has any real musical sensibility would derive little, if any, satisfaction from a study of the supposedly underlying philosophy of the work. Rather is it one which will appeal, if at all, by the sheer sustained grandeur and nobility of its quality. Never did one find it tediously cursive. Mr. Hamilton Harty and his players rose to the full height of their task.

Mr. Dawber, in addition to his appointment as Hallé organist in succession to Mr. C. H. Fogg (whose retirement is due to failing sight), has also become conductor of the Manchester Vocal Society, thus making the third change since the death of Dr. Henry Watson. On November 2 the first concert under Mr. Dawber's guidance brought Bach's 'God's time is best' and the Alto Rhapsody of Brahms. The choir is mainly composed of solo vocalists, and its chief failing under all its conductors has been an unwillingness to subordinate the individual in the interests of ensemble. That the whole is greater than the part is a choral axiom which will have to be recognised before work of the highest class can be accomplished.

Two concerts of the Tuesday Mid-day series call for almost unqualified praise. On October 25 the Catterall Quartet introduced Bax in G major, which I venture to say will make history. Its first and last movements have brightness and geniality, and I have listened to nothing more profoundly moving than its slow movement. The two hundred and ninetieth concert of this series brought joy to a large body of Bach enthusiasts in the city—the 'Brandenburg' Concerto in B minor for two flutes and strings, played by a small body of Hallé men under our leading bassoon, Mr. A. Camden; after this Mozart's 'Kleine Nachtmusik.' Such a programme is worth a snatched lunch, and is rare refreshing fruit in these harassing business days.

Chamber music in towns on the fringe of Greater Manchester flourishes exceedingly. The Bowdon series embraces three recitals of song and violin music by Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Harty and Mr. Alfred Barker; Messrs. Bantock and Mullings; and Mr. and Mrs. Moiseiwitsch.

At Rochdale, on October 25, Messrs. Murdoch, Sammons, Tertis, and Salmond played the Brahms C minor Quartet—probably the strongest combination for the work available to-day. Later, Casals and Hamilton Harty will play.

At Blackpool will appear a series of five strong groups of Manchester chamber-players—the Barker, Brodsky, Catterall, and McCullagh Quartets, and the Ladies' Trio.

At a recital given on October 28 at mid-day, by Miss Irene Morris and Mr. R. J. Forbes, the interest lay rather with the pianoforte work of Mr. Forbes than with the vocalist. Since the war I do not recall any performances here of lieder in German. Miss Morris' use of the language aroused no adverse comment in the audience. Much can be said in favour of the retention of original languages, but if singers generally follow the wholesome examples of Charles Neville, Kingsley Lark, Webster Millar, Maurice d'Oisly—to name a few singer-translators—probably more good will come to performers and public alike than would be the case where an English-speaking vocalist has to learn pronunciation of a foreign tongue. How much of Tetrassini's nature disappears when she essays 'Coming through the rye'!

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE

On October 19 the London String Quartet delighted a large audience with Dohnányi's Quartet in D flat, Op. 15, McEwen's 'Biscay,' and Mozart's No. 12, in G. It would be superfluous to speak at length of a performance in which the charm of the first-named work, the impressionism of the second, and the sparkling grace of the third were interpreted in so convincing a manner.

The Tynemouth Y.M.C.A. has arranged a series of weekly concerts on quite a high level, the first being held on October 22, when Mr. Alfred Wall and Mrs. M. Mitchell gave an artistic if somewhat restrained reading of Franck's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in A. Miss Rosa Burn was heard in a well-chosen selection of modern English songs, which she sang with wonderfully clear enunciation and thorough realisation of their varying moods.

On October 28, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Burnett, of Aberdeen, visited the local branch of the British Music Society, and gave a recital of modern violin and pianoforte sonatas. The programme consisted of examples by Pizzetti, Malipiero, Goossens, and Elgar. Well-balanced and artistic readings were given of all the numbers.

The Curwen Concert was held on November 2, Miss Ursula Greville proving to a large audience that a recital of songs of originality and worth by a real artist can sustain interest without any other items by way of relief.

The Bach Choir, at its first concert on November 5, gave a fine performance of the Church Cantatas, No. 27,

Who knows how near my latter ending,' No. 23, 'Thou very God and David's Son,' and the Motet, 'The Spirit also helpeth us.' The Motet, in particular, was sung with a flexibility that was really remarkable.

Miss Harriet Cohen created a great impression with her brilliant playing of Bax's Pianoforte Sonata No. 2 and Bach's Concerto in D minor, the latter being in conjunction with the string orchestra. Dr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

On November 9, the London Trio performed Schubert's Pianoforte Trio in B flat, Bridge's in C minor, and Ravel's in A minor.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

The opening 'international celebrity' concert on October 25, with the double attraction of Kubelik and Miss Stella Power, was entirely successful, the very large audience being provided with a varied and interesting programme. The inaugural People's Concert followed on October 26, taking the form of a pianoforte and song recital by Miss Irene Scharrer and Captain Herbert Heyner. Miss Scharrer contributed the Chopin B minor Sonata, and Captain Heyner's fine baritone voice was heard in compositions ranging from Bach and Handel to Balfour Gardiner.

On November 5 Mr. Norman Wilks and Miss Millicent Russell gave a pianoforte and song recital. Mr. Wilks' fine technique and temperament, and Miss Russell's vocal power and sympathy were much admired.

The Lincoln Orchestral Society on October 26 gave a concert with an orchestra of over seventy performers. The vocalist was Mr. John Booth, Miss Lena Kontorovitch was the solo violinist, Miss Kathleen Seely accompanied, and the Rev. Canon Scott conducted.

A new departure in Mr. B. Johnson's recitals was the introduction, on November 6, of Mr. H. Nicholson's Ladies' Choir from Oakham. The innovation was a delightful one, the choir singing tastefully in 'God be in my Head' (arranged by Walford Davies), 'Luther's Cradle Song' (arranged by W. J. Kirkpatrick), 'Silent Night' (arranged by Dr. Haydn Keeton), arrangements of 'Loch Lomond,' 'Early One Morning,' and 'John Peel' by Walford Davies, Percy E. Fletcher's arrangement of 'Ye Banks and Braes,' and Mr. B. Johnson's setting of 'The Stars.'

With Miss Cantelo and the Catterall String Quartet as executants, the first University College chamber music concert took place on November 9. Mr. H. Mortimer was associated with the Catterall Quartet in a performance of Mozart's Quintet in A major, and Miss Cantelo joined the Quartet in the Brahms F minor Quintet. It was gratifying to note a crowded audience and much enthusiasm.

PORTSMOUTH AND DISTRICT

As usual the first half of the musical season at Portsmouth is being principally devoted to vocal and instrumental concerts, most of the choral work being left over until the opening months of next year. November brought a very full diary, but as the majority of the concerts were crowded together in the latter part of the month they cannot be referred to in this issue.

The first of the 'international celebrity' concerts at the Town Hall, on October 21, did not secure quite such a strong measure of support as might have been anticipated, although the operatic programme delighted all who heard it. The visit of Kubelik, on December 10, ought, however, to leave no vacant chairs, and no doubt other concerts of the series will secure a fuller public.

The members of the local branch of the Hampshire Association of Organists, at their meeting on October 26, had the pleasure of listening to a pianoforte recital by the Rev. R. T. Arscott, who, in addition to works by César Franck, Debussy, Wagner, and Saint-Saëns, played three of his own compositions. Mr. R. H. Turner, who presided, voiced the general opinion of his musical colleagues when he observed that Father Arscott had proved himself to be a player of highly developed technique, and a composer of considerable fancy and inventive power.

The Portsmouth Temperance Choral Union is quite satisfied with the result of its first Saturday night concert at the Town Hall, on October 29, and is looking forward to an even fuller attendance on December 3. The fact that the Union more than covered its expenses shows that well-end popular concerts can be run successfully if the municipality cares to take advantage of the experiment, and with certain changes which have recently taken place in connection with the Town Hall Committee, more is likely to be heard of the project. Miss Lucy Nuttall and Miss Winifred Small were the artists engaged for the Choral Union's October concert, and a number of choruses received excellent treatment by the choir. In the absence of Mr. W. E. Green, the veteran conductor, Mr. T. E. Platts was ably deputised. Mr. Cyril J. Fogwell was at the organ.

Messrs. Murdoch arranged a chamber concert at the Palmerston Road Rooms on November 3, and the growing popularity of this class of music was shown by the fact that every seat was occupied. The artists were Madame Frederic Birch (pianoforte), Mr. Arthur Emms (violin), Mr. Hardin (violoncello), with Miss Amy Bath contributing vocal numbers. Each of the instrumentalists displayed considerable executive skill, and their work was marked by deep thoughtfulness.

At the annual concert of the Temperance Choral Union at Lake Road Baptist Church, on November 9, Mr. W. I. Green—who, in addition to being hon. conductor of the Union has also been conductor of the Church choir for forty-six years—was presented with a wallet containing £4 in notes as a token of the appreciation of the Church members of his work. The Rev. G. J. Harris, who made the presentation, while emphasising the long service of Mr. Green in connection with the Church, also specially stressed the work he had performed elsewhere in the town particularly in connection with the annual 'Messiah' festivals.

Most of the Sunday afternoon symphony concerts on the South Parade Pier are given by the local Service bands, but the band of the Grenadier Guards came down on November 14, and with Director of Music Lieut. George Miller conducting, gave a very fine programme. The vocalists of successive Sundays have been Miss Alice Coombe, Mr. Edward Chambers, Mr. Samuel Dyson, and Miss Lilia Evans.

Mr. Leonard Rayner, a pianist of imaginative power and with a fine mastery of technique, made his first appearance at Portsmouth in the Town Hall on November 14, when he gave a recital of modern pianoforte music. Such a recital unrelieved by vocal or other instrumental music, was rather unusual among local musical events, but Mr. Rayner's programme, which included César Franck, Cyril Scott, Debussy, and 'Escenas Romanticas' by the Spanish composer Granados, delighted an appreciative audience. A feature of the programme was a suite of bird songs by Mr. F. Herbert Bond, one of the youngest British composers before the public, which was performed for the first time. The songs revealed the poetic instinct of the composer, and their execution brought out to the full Mr. Rayner's wonderful delicacy of touch.

Among the newly-formed organizations in the borough the Labour Choral Society, which started practising last month. Good progress is being made, and the Society will introduce itself to the public by means of a charitable concert.

A sign of further musical activity in the district is the proposal to form a Choral Society at Bishop's Waltham where Mrs. Carpenter is directing a choral class until a conductor is appointed.

SOUTH WALES

The chief event of the month was the Welsh Music Festival at Mountain Ash, on October 22, 24, a résumé of which is given elsewhere. Two Festivals devoted to the singing of the sanctuary were held—one in connection with the Welsh section of the rural deanery of Merthyr, at St. David's, Dowlais, on October 31, with Mr. Morgan Davies as conductor; the other by the United Congregationalists of Cardiff district, at Ebenezer, on the evenings of November 1 and 2, Mr. Gwilym R. Jones (Ammanford) acting as conductor, and Mr. Elias Williams as conductor of the rehearsals.

At Swansea, two chamber music concerts of the series of have been given in Llewelyn Hall, Y.M.C.A. At first, on October 14, the Birmingham String Quartet, led by Mr. Percival Hodgson, played Quartets by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Dohnányi. For the second concert, on November 3, local talent had been secured. The programme contained Elgar's 'The Snow' and 'Fly, Singing Bird,' with pianoforte and violin accompaniments, Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in C minor, and Brahms' Piano Quartet. This policy of introducing local instrumental talent in alternate concerts of the series is stimulating, and highly to be commended, and might be profitably adopted in many other districts.

For the Cardiff chamber music concert on October 22 in the hall of the High School for Girls, the Chamber Music Society (Messrs. Sammons, Tertis, Salmond, and Murdoch) had been engaged, and the programme consisted of quartets by Schumann (E flat, Op. 47), Fauré (C minor), and Dvorák (E flat, Op. 87).

The first of the Newport series of subscription concerts took place on October 20 at Central Hall. All the artists, Messdames Donalds and Adila Fachiri, and Messrs. Angelo Rosselli, Mostyn Thomas, and Jascha Spivakovsky gave the utmost satisfaction.

On October 22, at Tabernacle Chapel, Morriston, Swansea, the Gwalia Male-Voice Choir, assisted by a full orchestra, gave a notable performance of Félicien David's 'Symphonie Ode,' 'The Desert,' to a crowded and appreciative audience. The conductor was Mr. J. T. Rees.

YORKSHIRE

BRADFORD

The Bradford Subscription Concerts have suffered a great loss in the sudden death of their chairman, Mr. Harry Behrens, whose brother, Mr. Gustav Behrens, occupies a like position in relation to the Manchester Hallé concerts. The Subscription Chamber Concert on October 14 was of the quality to be expected from such artists as Messrs. Sammons, Salmond, and Murdoch, who style themselves the 'Chamber Music Trio,' and who played Trios by Brahms (in C, Op. 87) and Schubert (in B flat, Op. 99). The Subscription Concert on October 28 was sustained by Mr. Josef Hofmann, who showed himself a great artist by condescending to play the comparatively simple music, which he interpreted with consummate technique. An event of especial significance has been the celebration of the Bradford Old Choral Society's Centenary by two interesting concerts on October 26 and 27. On the former occasion the 'Sea Drift' of Elgar (who, by accident of birth, is a citizen of Bradford) was given, under Mr. Hamilton Harty's direction. On the latter Mr. Cyril Jenkins conducted his very poetic little orchestral work, 'The Song of the Silent Land,' for the first time to the public. Without affecting the bizarre, it is individualistic, and the orchestra is handled with remarkable sympathy, a solo violin part, finely played by Mr. Catterall, being most happily introduced. On November 11, the Bradford Choral Society, under Dr. Bairstow, gave a miscellaneous programme, which included Brahms' Alto Rhapsody, with Miss Muriel Brunskill as soloist, and Elgar's 'Songs of the Sea' (Mr. Plunket Greene). The Bradford Permanent Orchestra began its season on November 12, when Mr. Julius Harrison conducted Glazounov's Violin Concerto (Mr. Laurance Turner), and Elgar's 'Haffner' Symphony, in D.

LEEDS

This has been a busy month, not only as regards the number of concerts, but because some of them contained matter of general interest. A landmark in the preparations for the Leeds Festival of October, 1922, was furnished by the first meeting of the chorus in the Town Hall on October 22. It was not so much a rehearsal as a trial of the voices collectively for balance and general effect, and this end Dr. Tysoe, the new chorus-master, took them through choruses from 'Elijah,' which, as a matter of fact, was not in the programme. The impression one got was that the basses were excellent, ringing, and brilliant, but the sopranos perhaps not quite numerous enough for weight, but best for quality I can remember in the West Riding.

The sopranos were exceedingly good, the contraltos neutral, but efficient, and, as I hear from Mr. C. H. Moody, of Ripon, who tested all the voices, distinctly the best in musicianship. There is also a new organist in Mr. Percy Richardson, and a new pianist in Mr. Norman Strafford, as well as a new conductor in Mr. Albert Coates, so if the 'new broom' theory holds, we should have some successful performances. Mr. Coates will conduct six of the eight concerts. The other two, at which choral music, and especially Bach numbers, will preponderate, will probably be directed by Sir Hugh Allen. A programme has been arranged provisionally, but is not yet sufficiently settled to be made public. If not materially altered in committee it should prove very interesting, and though probably it will not meet universal approval, it contains things to conciliate all tastes that deserve consideration.

The first of the Saturday Orchestral concerts was on October 15, when the 'En Saga' of Sibelius was heard for the first time at these concerts, and made such an impression that a repetition seems desirable in the not too distant future. Mr. Goossens is the conductor of these valuable concerts, but at the second of the series, on October 29, his place was taken by Mr. Julius Harrison, and the programme included what I take to be the first performance in this country of Balakirev's Pianoforte Concerto, his last work, and a fine, characteristic example of his genius. Its introduction was due to Mr. Anderson Tyrer, who played the solo part in his usual virile fashion.

A musically interesting service was held in Leeds Parish Church on November 2, when the late organist, Dr. Bairstow, conducted, and Dr. Tysoe, the present organist, acted in that capacity. There was a full orchestra, and the choir of York Cathedral co-operated. Anthems by Dr. Bairstow and Dr. Alan Gray were sung with orchestral accompaniment, and the 'Marcia Funèbre' from the 'Eroica' was impressively played, and was more effective than Dr. Basil Harwood's Gloucester Organ Concerto, in which organ and orchestra were not quite at one.

The London String Quartet gave concerts at the University on October 15 and 17, and the University recitals have been given on October 26, by Miss Helen Guest, who played Glazounov's Sonata, Op. 74, and on November 8 by Mr. Harold Halli, who gave a very well arranged series of songs. On November 2 the Symphony Society, an amateur body, gave a concert under Mr. Harold Mason's conductorship, when Beethoven's second Symphony met with a creditable performance, Quilter's 'Children's Overture' being one of the most enjoyable things in the programme. The Leeds New Choral Society, under Mr. H. M. Turton, gave 'Judas Maccabæus' on November 3, but without an orchestra. 'The Beggar's Opera' reached Leeds on November 7, and a week later the O'Mara Company opened a fortnight's visit, which was to include 'Marta' and 'Il Seraglio' as comparative novelties.

SHEFFIELD

Sir Henry Hadow's lectures on music, given in connection with the adult education scheme of the Sheffield Education Committee, have now been concluded. They were three in number. The subjects, 'Melody,' 'Harmony,' and 'Musical Composition,' attracted large audiences, and afforded further evidence of the keen desire of the public for enlightenment in respect of music. At the last lecture, Mr. Cyril Cantrell helped in the illustrations, playing examples of the fugue and of movements in sonata form with true insight.

The 'international celebrity' series of concerts opened here on October 20, when Kubelik and Miss Stella Power had a crowded audience at Victoria Hall. Kubelik played the Tchaikovsky Concerto, Saint-Saëns' Rondo Capriccioso, Paganini's twenty-fourth Caprice, and other items, with almost pre-war polish and more than pre-war stolidity. Miss Stella Power sang 'Ah, fors è lui,' Bellini's 'Casta Diva,' and such things, quite brilliantly. M. Cortôt being unable to fulfil his engagement at the first of the Sheffield subscription concerts, M. Spivakovsky took his place, and made a most successful first appearance at Sheffield. He was at his best in Schumann's 'Carnaval.'

The University chamber concerts opened on October 28 with the Catterall Quartet. The players were hardly in their best form, though they gave an enjoyable performance of Borodin's second Quartet. Beethoven's Op. 127 and Howells' 'Lady Audrey's Suite' filled out the programme to rather more than ideal length.

Poor orchestral work, from whatever cause, spoiled the Musical Union's concert performance of 'Samson and Delilah.' The choir sang finely, and Miss Edna Thornton as Delilah, Mr. Walter Hyde as Samson, and Mr. Herbert Heyner as the High Priest were all excellent. Dr. Coward conducted.

Mr. Claude Crossley's concert in aid of the Sheffield Hospitals was well attended. In a programme of extraordinary length and diversity the performance of Strauss' Violoncello Sonata by Mr. Collin Smith (violoncello) and Mr. Archibald Fisher (pianoforte) was of exceptional interest and merit.

The Foxon Five o'Clock concerts continue fortnightly. A little handbook giving the five programmes of the concerts due before Christmas is a catalogue of good things, and promises first Sheffield performances of such works as Rachmaninov's second Suite for two pianofortes, the Dale Pianoforte Sonata, Delius' Double Concerto (violin and violoncello), and Cyril Scott's Trio for voice, oboe, and violoncello. The Sheffield String Quartet took a large part in the second concert, on November 2, being heard in a very finished performance of Mozart in D ('Prussian'). Mr. Collin Smith gave the first of three violoncello recitals on October 31. He had the help of Miss Ivy Smith (pianoforte) and Miss Ena Roberts (vocalist). Sonatas by Henry Eccles and W. Y. Hurlstone, and a fine group of British songs, were the outstanding features of a well-chosen programme.

Miss Ursula Greville, too, sang British songs, twenty-four of them, at a concert arranged by Messrs. Curwen and given here on November 3. Mr. Percival Garratt, as accompanist, fully shared the burden, as he must the high merit, of the recital.

The Sheffield branch of the British Music Society held an open meeting at St. Andrew's Church, Sharrow, on November 14. Sir Henry Hadow spoke on 'Church Music,' and illustrations were delightfully given by the organist (Mr. O. C. Owrid) and choir.

The second of the Sheffield subscription concerts took place on November 15, when Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Jelly D'Aranyi, Mr. Lauritz Melchior and Miss Ethel Cook (accompanist) were the artists. A charming group of French songs sung by Madame Lunn, and Miss D'Aranyi's playing of Bach's A minor Violin Concerto, were worthy of special remark.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS

At Huddersfield the Choral Society, on November 11, gave 'Samson and Delilah,' this being the third performance Dr. Coward had conducted in as many days, the others being at Hull and Sheffield. Mr. Hallas, a tenor who happens to be an artist, gave one of his interesting song-recitals on October 19, and on October 26 Mr. Rosing, an artist who happens to be a tenor, gave a recital at the Huddersfield Music Club. The Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, of which Mr. C. H. Moody is the conductor, gave one of its concerts on October 25, when madrigals by Bateson and Wilbye, S. Wesley's noble Motet 'In Exitu,' and compositions by Fletcher, Elgar, and Bantock were among the features of a programme the quality of which did credit to the Society's discrimination. At the Halifax Chamber Concert on October 21 the Catterall Quartet played Herbert Howells' 'Lady Audrey's Suite' and a Quartet in G by Arnold Bax, the classics being represented by Beethoven's C sharp minor Quartet (Op. 131).

The Harrogate Symphony Concerts came to a close on October 12, when the twenty-ninth concert of the season took place. Its chief feature was Saint-Saëns' attractive 'Afrique,' in which the pianist was Miss Ethel Davey. Mr. Julian Clifford conducted.

Elgar's Quintet was given by the Catterall players and Miss Lucy Pierce at York on October 29 for the local branch of the British Music Society.

The popularity of opera was strikingly indicated by the fact that both the Hull Choral Societies began their season with concert performances of opera. On November 4 the Harmonic Society led off with Verdi's 'Aida,' under Mr. Porter's direction, and the principals, all familiar with their task as members of the Carl Rosa Company, contributed a brilliant performance—they were Miss Eva Turner, Miss Doris Woodall, Mr. Boland, Mr. Brindle, and Mr. Kingsle Lark. The Vocal Society, under Dr. Coward, came next within a week, and gave Saint-Saëns' 'Samson and Delilah' with no less popular success. As at Sheffield and Huddersfield, the principals were Miss Edna Thornton and Messrs W. Hyde and Heyner. Mr. Michael Hambourg gave one of his popular pianoforte recitals at York on October 11 and dealt with the classics in his usual drastic manner which met with the huge approval of his audience.

Obituary

Birmingham has lost an able musician, composer, an choral trainer, in Mr. THOMAS FACER, who died at the General Hospital on October 21, at the age of sixty-four. For many years he was the conductor of the Birmingham Choral Union. He was also music-master at the various King Edward's schools, a prominent organist and teacher of singing. His best-known composition was the cantata 'The Maid of Lorne,' specially written for the Crystal Palace Musical Festival held in connection with the Tom Sol-fa College in 1896. He also wrote deftly and sympathetically for children's voices, his school cantata and the operetta 'Red Riding-hood's Reception' having considerable vogue.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

The scheme of the subscription concert of October 1 had no claim to be considered particularly interesting, seeing that it comprised only excerpts from Wagner earlier operas, Madame Bauer von Pilecka and M. Jacques Urlus being the soloists. The second hearing of Franz Schreker's Chamber Symphony at the subsequent concert strengthened the favourable impression made by this work at its first performance. There is no doubt that Schreker is a strong personality, who, although speaking the language of the modernists, steers clear of unintelligible jargon which is intended to represent depth of utterance. The Symphony was played with undiminished force of strings, according to the composer's direction whenever this work is being performed in a large hall. If played as chamber music proper, I fear, however, that a small number of strings would not be able to bear up against the considerable force of percussion instruments which Schreker employs in his score. On this occasion, also, we again heard Bloch's 'Schelomo,' without, however, being affected to any greater extent than when we made its acquaintance a few months ago. At the concerts of October 23 and November 10 the young Hungarian violinist, Mlle. Erna Rubinstein, appeared as soloist in the Concertos of Mendelssohn and Bruch. Her playing showed a considerable step towards ripeness, and her faultless technique, allied to an exquisite sense of bowing and phrasing, was once more something to marvel at. On each occasion she played to overcrowded houses, and her record for this season, so far. The concert of October 27, dedicated to Russian music, furnished M. Alexandre Schumuller with an opportunity for introducing two hitherto unknown violin compositions, viz., Iwan Kryjanowsky's Ballade in F minor and Rimsky-Korsakov's Fantasia concert (on Russian folk-melodies). The first-named is the work of an amateur (Kryjanowsky being professor of medicine at Petrograd University). The impression created by this work is rather that of a protracted violin cadenza than a carefully thought-out composition, one of its prominent features being that it is written in 5/4 time throughout. Rimsky-Korsakov's Fantasia, on the other hand, is a very impressive essay in creative art, full of blazing temperaments and original colour. It should prove a valuable addition to the violin repertoire. Schumuller very deservedly was hailed with vociferous acclamation; indeed, as an artist eschews cheap successes, he cannot be too highly eulogised.

Madame Noordewier-Reddingius, whose style in dealing with Bach can hardly be rivalled, was heard to great advantage in two of the finest arias of the immortal Cantor, and, on October 30, Mengelberg gratified us with a beautiful reading of the third 'Brandenburg' Concerto and the second Suite in B minor. The second part of the programme consisted of Diepenbrock's 'Hymn to the Night' and the Overture to Aristophanes' 'The Birds.' Eugen Albert's reappearance at Amsterdam, on November 3 and 4, cannot be recorded with such satisfaction as might have been expected. The former high level of his performances of Beethoven's fourth and fifth Pianoforte Concertos was approached only in the last-named. D'Albert seemed, however, to find himself in a more congenial atmosphere when it came to displaying his technical wizardry in Liszt's 'Danse Macabre.' I refrain from enlarging upon his solo recital on November 9, which, musically at all events, might still be a greater disappointment. The scheme of the concerts of November 10 and 13 included on each occasion spighi's splendid 'Fontane di Roma,' which, as an instance of modern programme music in its most gratifying form, was received with uncontested acclamation. On the first of these occasions Mengelberg also advocated the cause of his colleague, M. Cornelius Dopper, whose 'Adagio mesto' with variations he produced after having bestowed very imaginable care upon its preparation. The result was that the undeniable merits of this very clever work were made evident to a far greater extent than had been the case when the composer himself conducted it some time ago.

On November 2 the first concert of Der Anbruch took place. 'Anbruch' ('Dawn') is a Society recently founded of German and Austrian composers for the propagation of modern music. It is hoped ultimately to extend this society over the whole of musical Europe, and thus to form part of 'Musical League of Nations.' The scheme of four chamber music and three orchestral concerts to be given at Amsterdam in the course of this season includes, besides works of modern German and Austrian composers, much of modern Dutch school and a sprinkling of French works, but, however, of the latest examples. The first chamber music concert, which was entrusted to the care of the Allandsch String Quartet, brought a String Quartet by Henry Zagwyn (a Dutch composer) which showed clever craftsmanship. After this M. Emile Enthoven, who is barely eighteen, introduced a Pianoforte Suite of his own, in four movements. But the young composer is obviously not yet able to run free of his models; and so far was very little of Enthoven, and, among others, very much of Chopin and the earlier Rachmaninov. Still there is much to be found in this Suite that would indicate the presence of a healthy and natural kind, in itself no small commendation. John Huré's Pianoforte Quintet, the pianoforte part well sustained by M. Evert Cornelis, concluded the performance. On October 22 we had a guest in London in the person of Miss Dorothy Moulton, who gratified us with works of the modern British school, viz., songs by Peter Warlock, Ivor Gurney, Arnold Bax, Eugène Ionesco ('Philomèle'), and Arthur Bliss ('Madame Noy'). In spite of the fact that Miss Moulton seemed to suffer from indisposition, she gave evidence of being an artist of considerable attainments. The highly interesting series of chamber music concerts arranged by the management of the Concertgebouw must be deferred to my December letter. I must not, however, conclude without mentioning the enormous success gained here by the young Russian pianist, Tossy Spiwakowsky, who indeed seems 'born to play.'

W. HARMANS.

At the Town Hall, Melbourne, on August 30, the Women's Choir sang Wilbye's 'Sweet honey-sucking bees,' and the Cellists' Motet 'Thou knowest, Lord,' Elgar's 'Go, song of the reeds,' and other choral pieces. Mr. Frederick Mewton conducted.

The programme presented by the Stockport Vocal Union under Dr. T. Keighley on October 24 included Weekes' 'Vesta was,' Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' Balfour Gardiner's 'Sir Eglamore' and 'Cargoes.'

BERLIN

Humperdinck, before his death, had the satisfaction of witnessing the great success of his last opera, 'Gaudeamus,' at its first performance at the Darmstadt Landestheater. His 'victory' was to all appearances complete, for he was the recipient of enthusiastic applause, many recalls, and three laurel wreaths presented by the students who had assisted at the performance. The opera, bearing the motto 'Hoch die Jugend Tod den Philistern,' is a students' opera. Beautifully wrought, full of humour and melody, remarkable for splendid musicianship, and elaborately and gorgeously scored; it is full of vigour and dash, with a great abundance of popular themes, handled in Humperdinck's well-known fashion. Of great musical worth is the introduction to Act 2, in the form of variations. When, in 1893, Humperdinck produced his 'Hänsel und Gretel,' the work came like a salvation, revealing to composers the way to emancipation from Wagnerian fetters. The road was shown, but few followed it. The influence of Italian opera is too great. Hans Albert Mattausch's new opera, 'Graziella,' is steeped in hotly pulsing Italian life, saturated in love and lust, primitive savagery, cunning, and piety. It was performed at Bremen and Magdeburg under the direction of the composer, who brought out all the beauties of the orchestral score. The opera was well received, although it is well-nigh impossible for Northern artists truthfully to represent Southern characters. Of a different stamp is Paul Grasner's opera 'Don Juan's letztes Abenteuer,' recently performed at Leipsic, under the direction of the composer. The music is nobly characteristic, and is based upon powerful invention. The instrumentation is rich and mellow, so that the boldest dissonances lose much of their harshness, and the treatment of the voices deserves much praise. All German stages devoted themselves to worthy performances of Weber's 'Frieschütz' in memory of its hundredth birthday. Reforms, however, are confined to the scenic representation of the first and last Acts. The Wolfschluchtszene, that troublesome scene of all 'Freischütz' performances, was generally left untouched.

One of the unluckiest composers for the operatic stage is Siegfried Wagner. He belongs to those sons of great men whose creations suffer through the genius of their fathers. Had he composed operas in the style of his father the world would have called him an imitator. As he writes works of a personal character the German stage does not exactly know what to do with them. At his last concert with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and Walter Kirchhoff, the tenor, he produced introductions and fragments of his operas 'Banadietrich,' 'An allem is Hütchen schuld,' 'Sonnenflammen,' 'Friedensengel,' and 'Schmied von Marienburg.' The Welt am Montag writes:

'A well-educated composer, with a mission, striving to achieve praiseworthy aims. Popular themes, logically developed, a clear and fine orchestration. Above all, agreeable melodies, hostile to fashion. At the same time inherited faults—lengthy and heavy language. Were he to find a friend, to develop self-criticism, perhaps he could give us the much desired popular opera in the style of Humperdinck's, his teacher's, "Hänsel und Gretel."'

While these wishes remain unfulfilled, two composers, Richard Strauss and Franz Schreker, set musicians and critics by the ears. Strauss belongs already to musical history—to a past as well as to a future period. After studying his development since his Op. 1, and hearing the splendid performances of his ripest works, the writer would fain be 'on the side of the angels' and proclaim him a genius who has forced his music upon the world, whether the world likes it or not. History repeats itself. Franz Schreker too is a great power that cannot be ignored, much less annihilated by adverse criticism. We may abominate his music, but we cannot avoid admiration for the masterfulness alike of the conception and execution of his music-dramas, and we shall have to endure that which now seems unendurable. Orchestral players may protest that his music cannot be played. They will have to learn to play it, just as their predecessors had to learn to play Beethoven's, and Wagner's, and Strauss' music.

F. ERCKMANN.

MILAN

The stage alterations to La Scala which were commenced on August 17, 1920, are being hurried forward as much as possible in order to reopen the theatre for a season of opera. The date for the reopening has been fixed for December 26. The old roof of the stage was of wood; the new one is of ferro-concrete, and will be over a hundred feet high. An old house adjacent to La Scala in Via Filodrammatici was purchased and demolished. On the site a new building is being raised, which will give the Theatrical Museum greater space, and will accommodate offices, archives, &c. Furthermore, the building will be a centre for all the vital services of the theatre, and will contain a scenery storeroom capable of holding the complete scenery of seventy different operas, enormous concrete shelves having been made for this purpose. The alterations to the stage necessitated the removal of a great number of supporting pillars, with the result that the foundation had to be reinforced. To this end excavations were made 22-ft. below the street level and a new wall 13-ft. high and 6-ft. thick installed under and all round the old stage-supporting wall. The artists' dressing-rooms have been renovated, and baths fitted in each cubicle. The dressing-rooms of the chorus have also been enlarged and improved. Over 800,000 candle power will be used for illuminating the stage. The luminous cupola—an invention of the well-known Spanish artist, Don Mariano Fortuny, which was described in the Musical Times for December, 1920, is already in place. Some German technicians visited the works some time ago in order to see this cupola, and frankly expressed their admiration. In appearance is like an ærostat. There is no doubt that the scenic effects will gain enormously, the illusion of endless space and blue sky being perfect. Sunrise, sunset, and moonlight, with all their accompanying colour effects and nuances, will be marvellously real on La Scala stage.

Several months ago it was rumoured that Boito's second and last opera, 'Nerone,' had been selected as the opening feature of the first season of opera, but evidently such is not to be the case. Also it was stated on very good authority that Boito had finished composing four Acts, and had sketched the fifth. Be that as it may, the opera is believed to be complete in itself in four Acts, and there would appear to be no plausible reason for not having it performed.

The following operas comprise the répertoire of the season: Verdi's 'Falstaff'; 'Parsifal' and 'Die Meistersinger'; Puccini's 'Il Tabarro,' 'Suor Angelico,' and 'Gianni Schicchi'; Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godounov'; Boito's 'Mefistofele'; Pizzetti's 'Debora and Jaële' (first performance); Catalani's 'La Wally'; 'Barbiere di Siviglia'; and 'Rigoletto.' One more opera has still to be chosen from among Mozart's 'Il Ratto dal Serraglio,' Rabaud's 'Maruf,' and Wolff-Ferrari's 'Quattro Rusteghi.' About fifty artists have been engaged. Of these the more important are Mesdames Elvira Casazza, Elvira de Hidalgo, Toti Dalmonte, Anna Gramigna, and Sheridan, an Irish soprano who made a rather successful début at Rome three years ago. Among the male singers there are some valuable exponents: Messrs. Carlo Galeffi—admittedly the finest baritone of the day; Giacomo Lauro Volpi, a tenor with 'velvet' in his voice, who made a great hit last year at the Costanzi at Rome; Luigi Marini, an excellent, reliable tenor; Charles Hackett, the American tenor of Irish descent, who created a sensation by his really excellent singing in 'Mignon' at La Scala in 1917 and at the Costanzi, Rome, and revealed a brain at work behind a fine voice; Nazereno De Angelis, the basso; and Gaetano Azzolini, the bass-comico who is supposed to have 'succeeded' the late Pini Corsi. In all truth the only singer to-day possessing the qualities and capability of succeeding the famous Pini Corsi is Gaetano Rebonato—who, by the way, was a pupil of the late Prof. Dr. Riccardo Daviesi, whose recent demise was announced in the Musical Times.

No encores will be conceded. Toscanini and Panizza will conduct alternately, and the orchestra will consist of a hundred players, a great many of whom formed part of the famous Toscanini orchestra which toured the United States.

One more centenary has to be celebrated in this 'year of centenaries,' viz., that of Angelo Mariani, the greatest Italian conductor of orchestra of the 19th century. He was, in fact, the first real conductor in Italy, and was the first to introduce Wagner's and Meyerbeer's works into the country. Also he pushed Verdi's operas to the fore. Fate intervened, in the shape of a woman, to cool the war friendship between Verdi and Mariani, when Teresa Stoltz, the famous singer, transferred her affections from the dashingly handsome conductor to the rising composer. The centenary was celebrated on October 11, at Ravenna, Mariani's birth place, public honours being rendered to his memory under the auspices of the Municipality and the 'Musical Academy Giuseppe Verdi' of that town. Thus it fell that his and Verdi's names again were linked together. A commemorative concert was also given the same evening at the Alighieri Theatre, the programme consisting entirely of Mariani's own compositions, which have a deeply sentimental vein and melody. Mariani's biography by Prof. Mantovani has just been published by the Rome publishers, 'Ausonia.'

E. HERBERT-CÉSARI.

NEW YORK

In the crowd of aspirants for musical fame that flock to New York from every one of the United States of America and every one of the un-united States of Europe, there are many that find an available hall only in the early autumn while the critics and the musical public are still lingering in the country, or in the late spring when everyone is jaded and fagged with too much listening. The real concert season begins and ends with the performances of the various orchestras.

No other city in the world offers to music-lovers series of concerts given by four entirely different first-class orchestras each band consisting of from ninety to over a hundred men. True, only two of these orchestras are resident, the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra being visiting organizations, but local pride or envy, or any other uncharitableness, does not seem to influence the judgment passed upon their work. They stand or fall partly by the merits or demerits and partly—it must frankly be confessed—by what appears to be the fad of the day. For years the Boston Symphony, which did such superb work under George Henschel, Nikisch, Gericke, Fiedler, and the unmentionable Muck, was called the finest orchestra in the world, and the man would be rash who would dispute the claim. There were several sound reasons that accounted for the waning of the prestige of this famous organization besides the proverbial fickleness of the public, but the fact remains that the mantle has descended upon Leopold Stokowski, and the Philadelphia Orchestra has become the fad of to-day. It is almost impossible to buy a seat for any of its concerts, and it fell to this band, on October 18, to open the orchestral season of 1921-22. Stokowski dearly loves to do something 'different,' and the first thing to strike the eye on this occasion was his re-arrangement of the players. First and second violins and violas were massed to the left, the violoncellos were put where custom has assigned the second violins, and the wood-wind was placed behind them. It was a distinct innovation that had met with universal approval, though undoubtedly many young enthusiasts sanctioned it as they would anything dictated by such a favourite conductor. In their eyes, he can do no wrong. Stokowski always comes on to the platform carrying his baton in his hand and conducting entirely without score. To many he is very magnetic; every one feels his intensity and recognises his perfect control over his men. The concert opened with Brahms' second Symphony, played with great vigour, perfection, and breadth of tone, though sometimes over-sentimentalised, as Brahms so often is by many conductors. One of the fashions of the moment seems to be the inclusion of a novelty—good or bad—in every programme, and Stokowski's closing number was a long-drawn-out tiresome fantasy on a theme from Berlioz' 'Damnation of Faust,' by Walter Braunfels.

Immediately following came the opening concert of the New York Symphony Society's season, directed by Walter Damrosch. This old Society has its regular followers who are personally attached to the conductor, but they were to his father before him, and as the Society itself is heavily endowed by Mr. Harry H. Flagler (of Standard Oil ne) it can go calmly on its way year by year undisturbed by financial troubles that affect almost all similar organizations, as there are practically none that can live on box-office receipts alone. Mr. Damosch's novelty, 'Marche ançaise,' by Roger-Ducasse, was another futile attempt to make capital out of nothing—à la Ponzi—and one more lure to make inspiring war music.

Though financial troubles do not disturb the New York Symphony Society, they have of late years sorely tried the other New York organization, the Philharmonic Society, is, the second oldest orchestra in the world, has just run its eightieth season. It has no patron like the Flagler, and it has one more rival in the last two years to contend against, viz., the National Symphony. It was long too much of the New York public to listen to a hundred orchestral concerts in one winter, so reason prevailed, and the Philharmonic has this year absorbed the National, putting some of the best players of the newer orchestra into the older one, retaining Josef Stransky as chief conductor, with Henry Hadley as associate, and Kling Wilhelm Mengelberg and Arthur Bodanzky as assistant conductors, thus obtaining financial assistance from patrons who had been allied with the National. It would have been a hard blow to music-lovers at New York to have seen the Philharmonic fall by the wayside, overcome by its younger competitor, for the personal element of the popularity of the conductor is not the first consideration in such a case. Stransky has many admirers, as also have other conductors, but the public bestows its strongest affection on the organization itself, which has weathered many storms since 1842, and has grown in eighty years from a modest band of forty members, who stood (except violoncellists) while playing, to the modern group of a hundred men selected from the best that can be obtained. On a matter of sentiment, Stransky, at the opening concert of the eightieth season, played Beethoven's fifth symphony, which opened the first concert given by the society on December 7, 1842. The inevitable novelty was 'Prelude and Fugue for pianoforte and orchestra' by Daniel Gregory Mason, with Mr. John Powell at the solo instrument. It must have been the personal popularity of Daniel Mason and Mr. Powell that produced the storm of applause, and demands for the repeated appearance of the composer and performer, for it seemed a vague composition, lacking construction, and confusing to the listener. Possibly it would improve at a second hearing—so let it be to the benefit of the doubt.

At the first concert of the Boston Symphony, Mr. Monteux played Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Sadko' and some Debussy selections. In both of these he was more successful than was with the Symphony, which was Beethoven's 'Eroica.' Fortunately the French conductor is following the fashion by others of the day, playing Beethoven as if he were a modern composer, taking all sorts of liberties with the piece, and making violent contrasts in dynamics. The climax of the opening week of the musical season was the advent of Richard Strauss. When Toscanini here last year he brought an orchestra with him—a rare mistake, for there are no orchestras in Italy to compare with ours. Dr. Strauss and his managers were there, and the famous musician has embarked on a series of tours in the United States, using the Philadelphia Orchestra as his instrument. Arriving only four days before the first concert, rehearsals were necessarily few, so the first programme included only works familiar to the players—'Don Juan,' 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and the 'Symphony in E-flat major.' Carnegie Hall was packed to suffocation, and the 2nd (as he is familiarly called here) met with a tremendous ovation as he stepped on to the platform, the evening applause lasting for several minutes, and it was deserved, for it is doubtful if he has a peer. While we are accustomed to hear his tone-poems played with great emphasis—with scant attention given to the more delicate passages—Strauss makes every shade of dynamics of equal importance, and when the music demands fortissimo, instead of 'letting himself loose' the composer-conductor gives the impression of restrained power. 'Till' was the first of the evening; and it was a new 'Till' to most of his hearers, though the present writer had the good fortune to hear his reading in Europe some ten years ago. New Yorkers are accustomed to think the pranks of Till are simply amusing, but there is, too, a pathetic side to the story, and Strauss' baton can move the listener to a tear as well as to a smile.

At the second concert of the New York Symphony Society, Madame Florence Easton appeared as soloist, singing Clarchen's songs from 'Egmont,' and Brunnhilde's 'Immolation.' This sterling English artist sang both selections in her native tongue with her usual beauty and clearness of tone and remarkable diction. She is a great favourite in America, both at the Metropolitan Opera House and on the concert-platform, and it is matter for surprise that some London manager has not recognised the place she has earned as a musician, and engaged her to charm the musical public of her own country.

M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

DECADENCE

Following M. Messager's recent example, several composers have attempted to revive an interest in modern opérette. Some—taking the scathing admonitions of the musical papers to heart—have announced their allegiance to the standard set by Lecoq, Audran, Planquette, and others of this genre. None, however, succeed, the result of their labour usually being poor stuff, mere uninspired jingle. These efforts, in short, are little better than a musical comedy, fine dresses and shapely wearers usurping the place of good music properly sung. This undesirable state of things is—according to the managers—owing to the presence at Paris of so many foreigners. 'We cater,' declares each impresario, hand on heart, 'for the visitors.' As a matter of cold fact, Parisian taste has deteriorated. Few, except profiteers and other war-enriched persons, can afford the inflated prices which are charged for seats. And they care only for rubbish. That, perhaps, is why 'La Belle de Paris,' the latest venture, has little connection with the triumphs of the past. Certainly the music is lively; so, too, is a one-step tune. The costumes are gorgeous; but musical people do not go to the theatre to look at mannequins. As to the plot, it is pure musical comedy.

An agreeable contrast is afforded by Von Suppé's 'Boccace' with handsome Mlle. Marthe Chenal as the principal attraction. Mlle. Chenal, who has sung many serious rôles in her time, is scarcely a second Hortense Schneider, for the voice is not under perfect control, and her singing lacks distinction. Still, she is an improvement on the average divette, most of whom have been in too great a hurry to appear in public. These adventurous young women generally face the fires of criticism successfully, owing to the leniency of the average daily paper music-critic. Some of these people know very little about the use to which the voice should be put; and, consequently, the performers score.

Several performances of 'Le Barbier' have taken place at the Gaité-Lyrique, with M. Vanni-Marcoux as Don Basille. The distinguished artist gives a particularly fine character-study, while he manages his voice with considerable effect, ringing the changes on every imaginable variety of tone-colour. But the immortal work does not go well in French; Rossini's delightful voice-parts, as well as the action and the scene, demand the original libretto. There is, by the way, a talk of Paisiello's 'Barbiere' being revived—and in Italian. The music should come as a novelty, since Paisiello is practically forgotten at Paris. Audran's 'La Poupée' has been presented at one of the smaller theatres; and Hirschmann's 'La Petite Bohème' is pleasing the Parisians. The author has taken many a liberty with Mürger's story, the opérette being a brisk affair with a happy ending. Ballets and choruses galore are included in the entertainment, the idea being to combine music with musical comedy. Certainly, French taste has changed. When 'La Petite Bohème' first made its bow it was more or less based on Puccini's version. The present edition, moving with the times, has been parisienisé. Still, the times are to be deplored.

Halévy's 'La Juive' has also found favour with Parisians, the revival being at the instigation of the older opera-goers.

The exacting rôle of Eléazar has for its exponent an artist who performs creditably without causing enthusiasm among good judges. However, to find a fort ténor capable of doing complete justice to the part is no easy matter.

'CAMILLE'

Marc Delmas' 'Camille,' a one-Act trifle which has been produced at the Opéra-Comique, has so slight a plot that the ingenuity of the librettist, Paul Spaak, has been taxed. Fortunately, the score justifies the production, for M. Delmas is musical as well as musicianly. 'Camille' is vastly preferable to many of the more pretentious operas which have been produced in France during the past few years. The success of the performance is mainly due to M. Lafont, the very admirable basse chantante. Not only does he use his powerful voice with rare skill, but he employs a wealth of tone-colour. 'Camille' should prove a welcome substitute for 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' provided an artist of Lafont calibre appears in it.

'Orphée' has been revived at the Opéra-Comique, with a tenor, M. Anseau, in the title-rôle. At first musical Paris was agast at (what was thought to be) an unforgivable innovation. It was, however, explained that Gluck originally intended the part for a 'sopranist,' with good lower notes, and the malcontents were satisfied. The music has been adapted by M. Paul Vidal, and, happily, without sacrificing too much of its character. As to the representation, it is a satisfactory one, the warm, velvety quality of M. Anseau's voice being heard to particular advantage, while in 'J'ai perdu mon Eurydice' his singing affords an object-lesson to the intelligent student. And that is a great deal more than can be said of most tenors—no matter what their nationality may be. Mlle. Vallandri is the Eurydice of the cast, the beauty of her voice and the fine art which she brings to bear upon her interpretation adding greatly to the success of the revival. Indeed, there is no French lyric soprano who can equal la Vallandri.

M. Messager demands another national theatre, at which the operas of young French composers may be mounted. The Opéra and the Opéra-Comique cannot, it appears, produce more than eight new works a year, while no fewer than thirty composers have written an opera apiece, none of which can be heard at Paris for years to come. So M. Messager considers that the time is ripe to demand a subvention—and the tax-payers are furious. Some of the last-named even declare that modern French operas are not worth producing; that the old répertoire is infinitely more satisfactory. Meanwhile, one of these works, after waiting a trifle of forty years, has seen the light of day. Léopold Dauphin is the fortunate composer, and the name of his one-Act opera is 'Le Huron,' the plot being taken from Voltaire's 'L'Ingénu.' The music is fresh, without being particularly interesting.

CONCERTS

The Lamoureux and Pasdeloup concerts have recommenced, recent programmes having included Florent Schmitt's 'Tragédie de Salomé,' Liszt's 'Dante Symphony,' which is rarely heard, and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture. Lalo's atmospheric 'Roi d'Ys' Overture, which is in such marked contrast to the opera, Ravel's 'Ma mère l'Oye,' and the 'Walkürenritt' have also been performed and appreciated. The Flonzaley Quartet and the Poulet Quartet have delighted their hearers, and M. Serge Koussevitzky has conducted a specially selected orchestra. As to minor concerts, their name is legion.

During December Mr. Albert Spalding is to give two recitals, which should be of interest. He, or his agent, announces a Paganini 'Caprice' as being by 'Paganini-Spalding.' Really . . .

At their recent concert Miss Jean Nolan and Miss Hélène Dolmetsch placed Paris under a debt of gratitude. Miss Nolan afforded Parisians the opportunity for hearing songs they had not heard before, while Miss Dolmetsch's playing of the viola da gamba was a revelation to them. Her contributions to the programme included a fine Sonata by Purcell and several unaccompanied Elizabethan pieces, in all of which she showed to great advantage, her tone and technique being excellent. Miss Nolan was heard in songs by John Ireland, Rutland Boughton, Arnold Bax, Ravel, Duparc, Gretchaninov, and others, as well as in a number of ancient Irish airs arranged by various modern composers. Paris does not understand why prominence should be given to the adapters, who figured in the programme as though they had composed the songs. These items, by the way, were not of much account, though Miss Nolan certainly did all that was possible with the material. Her serviceable voice, of good quality, was preferred in some of her other selections. The English songs did not greatly impress the French section of the audience, but Duparc's 'Extase' and Ravel's 'Toi, Gai' were well received.

GEORGE CECIL.

ROME

By the institution of a Prix-de-Rome, the American Academy in this city has, according to Americans, taken the most important step yet made in the musical history of the country to aid native talent (and, be it said in parenthesis, set a good example to England).

The American Academy at Rome was founded twenty-five years ago for the encouragement of students of art and architecture, and is installed in a magnificent building on the Janiculum Hill. The new fellowship, entitled the Frederic A. Juilliard fellowship in musical composition, is open to unmarried men of American citizenship, and entitles the winner to $1,000 annually, with an additional $1,000 for travelling expenses. The Prix lasts for three years, and each year the fellow is allowed to travel for six months, in order to visit other musical centres. On the plan of the French Academy, the holder of the Prix will be obliged to present a certain number of works, according to the following scheme:

1st year.—One important work for string quartet, also six short pieces for one or more voices with orchestral accompaniment, and separate transcription for voice or pianoforte.

2nd year.—At least two movements of a Symphony for orchestra, with transcription for pianoforte solo or duet; a dramatic scene with English, French, or Italian words, and transcribe same for voice and pianoforte; transcribe a work of the 16th, 17th, or 18th century in modern rhythm and notation.

3rd year.—An oratorio, or Mass, or a choral symphony with soli, chorus, and orchestra in two movements; or a tragic or comic opera in two or more Acts. Part of a symphony or symphonic poem, which may be performed in public after it has been accepted by the professor in charge.

November 2 (All Souls' Day) saw the inauguration of the monumental tomb to Luigi Mancinelli (whose obituary appeared in the Musical Times of March, 1921) in the famous Staglieno Cemetery at Genoa. The tomb is a copy of that of Wagner at Bayreuth, and consists of an immense slab of granite 5 sq. m. in area, surrounded by an ivy wreath. The inscription runs:

'LUIGI MANCINELLI—Orvieto, 1848—Rome, 1921

Of imperishable music

Champion—Interpreter—Creator.'

His biography has just been published, from the pen of Mr. Orefice, of Milan; and on February 2, 1922, Molin will direct a commemorative concert at the Augusteum, a Vessella will give a band-concert of the composer's works on the Pincian Hill.

Mario Costa, one of the most popular song-writers in Italy, has profited in the dead season to bring his works before the Roman public. Besides giving a successful concert in the Exhibition Hall, for the closing of the Biennial Art Show, Costa gave a serata at the Costanzi on October 14, which was repeated on October 18. With a choir of two hundred voices and orchestra, he directed his 'Hymn to Italy,' and represented the dramatic scene 'The History of a Pierrot.' As an additional attraction D'Annunzio's poem, 'La Nave,' was declaimed by one of the actors.

On the evening of Sunday, October 16, the vocal Society 'Constancy and Concordia,' of Leghorn, gave a concert at the Augusteum, under the direction of Vincent Marini, with Giacomo Suggi as violinist.

The summer season of opera is drawing to a close, with the usual somewhat commonplace programmes of 'Rigoletto'

Barbiere,' 'Faust,' &c., which are running at the Morgana and Valle theatres. Amongst the new operas to be presented in Italy during the coming season are Franco Alfani's 'The Legend of Sakuntala' (Comunale Theatre, Bologna); Adriano Lualdi's 'The King's Daughter' (Regio Theatre, Turin); Vincent Michetti's 'La Grazia' and Richard Andonai's 'Romeo and Juliet' (Costanzi, Rome); and Ildebrando Pizzetti's 'Deborah and Jael' (Scala, Milan). It is also announced that Boito's comedy 'Basi e Note' has been set to music by Richard Pick-Mangiagalli, and will be presented during the forthcoming season, probably at Milan.

It is not only prophets who are not without honour save in their own country. The same lot seems to fall to great singers, or at any rate to their memory, if the Caruso commemoration held at the Argentine Theatre at Rome, on October 31, affords a criterion. The commemoration was spoken by the poet Marcheselli, and various people said and sang various things which were supposed to honour the dead singer's memory. The Corriere sums up the success of the evening in a piquant phrase:

'The death of Henry Caruso has procured a new grief for Italian art: the commemoration of the divo which took place yesterday at the Argentine!'

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

Only one concert of any importance has taken place this month. Massey Hall, under the management of Mr. I. E. Mackling, opened the season with a Johnson-Salvi recital. Edward Johnson, of the Chicago Opera Company and a Canadian by birth, who has recently returned from a short visit to Italy, was in his usual pleasing and enthusiastic vein. His programme was light and enjoyable, but rather too uniformly operatic in style to be quite of true recital character.

Mr. Alberto Salvi was certainly a revelation to Toronto musicians, few of whom had realised the possibilities of the arpa as a solo instrument.

The season has seen two notable additions to the musical personnel of the city. M. Henri Czaplinski, a native of Warsaw, comes to us direct from London and the Continent. Dr. Arthur Freidheim, a pianist of Continental fame, is on the staff of the Canadian Academy. M. Szaplinski takes the place of Mr. Jan Hambourg at the Hamburg Conservatory. Both artists are to be heard in recitals during the season.

F. H. A.

THE PALESTRINA MEMORIAL

On Sunday, October 2, the little town of Palestrina, some thirty miles from Rome, was gay with flags and decorations, and its small and tortuous streets were agog with throngs of people arrived to assist at the solemn inauguration of the statue erected in his native place to one of the world's greatest musicians, Giovanni Pier Luigi da Palestrina. The ope was represented by Cardinal Vannutelli, who is also bishop of Palestrina. The Italian Government was represented by the Hon. G. Rosadi, the Under-secretary of State for Fine Arts, and it may be said that the entire musical world was represented by Count Blumenstahl, the Vice-president of the Accademia di St. Cecilia. Some of Palestrina's music was admirably executed by a special Roman choir, under the direction of Mgr. Raphael Casimiri, the director of the Lateran choir, who is steadily accumulating well-merited fame as the first living interpreter of Pier Luigi's music. A slight change was made in the announced programme, as instead of the famous 'Papa Marcella' Mass, the music sung in church was the scarcely so famous Mass known as 'O admirable Commemcium.' Of this work, Palestrina's biographer Baini says:

'It is one of the most harmonious, beautiful, and sublime that Pier Luigi ever wrote: a Mass that never grows old, but which, heard a thousand times, produces always the same effects on its audience, and which in every age appeals to the current taste, as though it were a new production of every composer who actually elevates himself above his contemporaries.'

Immediately after the Mass, the huge throng crowded to the central square of the town for the unveiling of the monument, filling every available space and point of vantage. The statue is the work of Arnaldo Zocchi (who executed the stupendous statue to Columbus recently erected at Buenos Ayres), and is in Carrara marble, measuring, with the pedestal, about 26-ft. in height. The inscription, in Italian, is eloquently simple, and runs:

'To Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina,
The Prince of music.'

Immediately after a discourse by the Mayor, the choir intoned a fine Acclamation, 'Prænestino vita,' for five voices, by Casimiri, and then, in the midst of a frenzy of applause, the bells rang out, the band played, and the sheet hiding the statue was withdrawn, revealing Zocchi's beautiful conception, shining out in its marble purity. The figure of the great musician is represented with the face turned heavenward; the left hand sustains a book of compositions, whilst the right is raised in invocation. The figure is draped in a voluminous mantle of the 16th century.

Immediately after the unveiling, the choir intoned Pier Luigi's Motet for five voices, 'Exultate Deo,' and the representatives of the town of Palestrina and of the Accademia di St. Cecilia advanced to lay a crown of laurels at the foot of the statue.

After discourses by the Hon. Rosadi, Count Blumenstahl, and Cardinal Vannutelli, the representatives adjourned to the schools for the official banquet, and in the afternoon a concert of Palestrinian music was given in the Cathedral, under the direction of Casimiri, with the following programme:

'Laudate Dominum' ... ..	Offertory for 5 voices
'Super Flumina Babylonis' ...	Motet for 4 "
'Vox Dilecti mei' ... ..	" " 5 "
'Bonum est Confiteri Domino' ...	Offertory for 5 "
'Oratio Hiericuaie' ... ..	For 6 and 8 "
'Nigra sum' ... ..	Motet for 5 "
'O quantus luctus hominum' ...	" " 4 "
'Introduxit me' ... ..	" " 4 "
'Exultate Deo' ... ..	" " 5 "

An open-air concert by the band of the Carabinieri, and a display of fireworks concluded a memorable day not only in the history of Palestrina, but in the musical history of Italy: the day when, four hundred years and more after his death, the greatest of her musicians is finally honoured with a worthy monument in the land which gave him birth.

LEONARD PEYTON.

Miscellaneous

The craft of violin-making in this country shows distinct signs of revival, and among British luthiers just now coming into notice Mr. William Robinson, of Plumstead, has already aroused the attention of string players, many of whom would probably welcome an opportunity for hearing and examining the Robinson instruments. Such an opportunity will occur on Saturday evening, December 10, at Edric Hall, S.E., when, by the kind permission of the governing body of the Borough Polytechnic Institute, a trial performance will take place at which string quartets and solos will be played on these instruments. Invitation tickets will be sent to any of our readers who apply in writing to Mr. James Brown, Mus. Bac., at the Borough Polytechnic Institute, Borough Road, S.E. 1.

The Novello Choir gave a musical programme of exceptional brilliancy at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on the afternoon of November 5. Under Mr. Harold Brooke's direction performances were given of the Chorale 'This proud heart' and the Motet 'Jesu, priceless Treasure' of Bach, Robert Whyte's anthem 'O praise God in His holiness,' and Gibbons' 'Hosanna to the Son of David.' Mr. Thomas Fussell gave violin solos; Mr. Harvey Grace played accompaniments and Bach's Prelude on the Chorale 'Farewell I give thee.'

A musical scholarship has been founded at Girton College, Cambridge, and is offered for competition in March, 1922. Candidates will be examined in organ playing, or singing, or composition. The founder, Miss Sophia Adelaide Turle, is the daughter of James Turle, for many years organist of Westminster Abbey.

The Kingston String Quartet is giving chamber concerts at the Memorial Hall, Kingston, on the second Sunday in each month, until April 9. On November 13 the programme included Quartets by Haydn (Op. 75) and Mozart (No. 1, in G). Schubert and Beethoven (the Quintet, Op. 101) are in the programme for December 11.

A lecture-demonstration of the 'Technique' will be given by Mr. R. J. Pitcher at the London Academy of Music on Thursday, January 5, at 8.0. Mr. R. H. Walthew will be in the chair, and the music played will be drawn from Tchaikovsky, Chopin, and Scriabin. No tickets required.

The Sir H. W. Trickett, Ltd., Choral Society opened its season at King's Hall, Waterfoot (near Manchester), on November 9. The programme, given under Mr. George Firth's direction, included Walmisley's 'Music all Powerful,' Elgar's 'The Shower,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Viking Song.'

Elgar's 'For the Fallen' formed the opening of a miscellaneous programme given by the Goldstone Choral Society on November 11, under the direction of Mr. Cyril V. Jenkin.

CONTENTS

Page.

St. Patrick's (R.C.) Cathedral, Armagh. By W. Wooding
Starmor ( illustrated )	827
Charles Kœchlin. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ( continued )	830
Some Italian Composers of To-day. Postludium. By Guido M. Gatti	833
The 'Old Vic.' An Appeal	836
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XXII. Nicholas Ludford. By W. H. Grattan Flood	837
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	838
Gervase Elwes Memorial	839
New Music	840
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	843
Admirable Crichtons: New Style	845
London Concerts	846
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett	848
The Russian Ballet. By Francis E. Barrett	851
Royal College of Music	851 and 863
Royal Philharmonic Society. Presentation of Gold Medal to Sir Henry Wood	851
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	852
Chamber Music for Amateurs	853
The Novello Choir	853
Church and Organ Music	853
Robert Fayrfax Celebration at St. Alban's Cathedral	853
Letters to the Editor	857
Sharps and Flats	862
Sixty Years Ago	862
Royal Academy of Music	862
Trinity College of Music	863
Welsh Musical Festival at Mountain Ash	863
Music in the Provinces	864
Obituary	872
Musical Notes from Abroad	872
The Palestrina Memorial	877
Miscellaneous	877

MUSIC:

'God be in my Head.' Short Anthem. By R. WALKER ROBSON 849

FOUR EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. 'Welcome, Yule.' Ancient Carol, 15th Century. By C. Hubert H. Parry.
2. 'This Day.' Unaccompanied Carol. By Gerrard Williams.
3. 'I sing the Birth was born to-night.' Carol. By Thomas Adams.
4. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BRIDGE, Sir FREDERICK.—"Carol for the New Year." Song. Arranged to the Tune "Green Sleeves." 2s.

CHURCH HYMNAL FOR THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. Words only. With musical expression marks. 3s. net.

DUNN, J. P.—"Ornamentation in the Works of Frederic Chopin." (No. 96, Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series.) 3s.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"O Peaceful Night." Arranged as a Trio. (No. 474, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

GREENISH, F. R.—Twelve Original Tunes set to favourite Hymns. 6d.

HOFMANN, H.—"In the Arbour." From "Kirmess" (Rustic Pictures). Pianoforte Duet. 3s.

MORETON, H.—"God is a Spirit." Introductory Hymn. 3d.

ROBSON, R. WALKER.—"God be in my head." Short Anthem. (No. 946, The Musical Times.) 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 354, contains the following music in both notations.—"Where the bee sucks," Dr. ARNE. Arranged as a Two-part Song. "My little garden." Junior Unison Song. By AGNES VEITCH. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 882. "Up the airy mountain." Two-part Song. G. RATHBONE 4d. 3d.

No. 1306. "Orpheus with his lute." Two-part Song. G. RATHBONE 4d. —

SWABY, R.—Benediction Service. In honour of St. Dominic. 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2374. "I would I were the glow-worm." Four-part Song. For Mixed Voices. HAROLD RHODES. 2d.

No. 2375. "Johnnie Cope." Scottish Song. Arranged as a Four-part Song. E. T. SWEETING 3d.

WALE, W. H.—"Impétuosité." Scherzo-Caprice for Pianoforte. 2s.

WESLEY, S.—"Behold how good and joyful." Short Anthem for A.T.B. (No. 103, Novello's Services, Anthems, &c., for Men's Voices.) 2d.

WEST, JOHN E.—"Love and Summer." Arranged as a Two-part Song. (No. 203, Novello's Two-part Songs for Female or Boys' Voices.) 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

DICKINSON, C.—"When o'er the hills." Flemish Folk-Song. Arranged as a Sacred Chorus. 10 cents (4d.).

GAUL, H. B.—"Comes at times." Anthem for Evening. 12 cents (6d.).

GEVAERT, F. A.—"A joyous Christmas Song." Arranged for Women's Voices by C. DICKINSON. 15 cents (8d.).

HAILING, R. G.—"Holy, Holy, Holy." Anthem for General Use. 12 cents (6d.).

HELD, P.—"Elegie." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

KUHNLE, W.—Communion Service in E flat 12 cents (6d.).

LANSING, A. W.—"Benedictus es, Domine." 15 cents (8d.).

LEFEBVRE, C.—"Pater Noster." Anthem. For Baritone Solo and Chorus. 15 cents (8d.).

—"The Path of the Just." Short Anthem. For Alto or Bass Solo and Chorus. 12 cents (6d.).

—"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace." Short Anthem. For Soprano Solo or Chorus. 12 cents (6d.).

LEMARE, E. H.—"Dream Frolic." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

—"Dream Song." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

—"Inspiration." For Violin and Pianoforte. $1.00 (4s.).

—"Ditto." Arranged for Organ.

—Organ Transcriptions:

"Coming thro' the Rye. 50 cents (2s.).

"Dixie." 50 cents (2s.).

"Faust" (Gounod) $2.50 (10s.).

"Loch Lomond." 50 cents (2s.).

"My Old Kentucky Home." 50 cents (2s.).

"Old Black Joe." 50 cents (2s.).

"Tenting to-night." 50 cents (2s.).

ROBINSON, N.—"Benedictus es, Domine." 12 cents (6d.).

SANDERS, H.—"Glorificamus." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

SCARMOLIN, A. L.—"Canzone Pastorale." 75 cents (3s.).

WEBBE, S., Senr.—"Come and worship" (Angels from the Realms of Glory). Arranged by H. ELLIOT BUTTON. 10 cents (4d.).

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

BY CYRIL SCOTT.

STRING QUARTET

This work is in the form of a SUITE in five short movements:

PRELUDE
PASTORALE
SCHERZO (on an Irish Air)
ELEGY
RONDO RETROSPETTIVO

Score, 7s. 6d. net. Parts, 12s. net.

IDYLLIC FANTASY

FOR

VOICE (SOPRANO), OBOE, AND 'CELLO

Will be performed this season at:

THE CHELSEA "POPS."
THE FOXON FIVE O'CLOCKS
(SHEFFIELD)
SHEFFIELD UNIVERSITY

Price complete, 5s. net.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

NEBBE, W. V.—"Lord, let Thy Spirit." Anthem for Whitsuntide or General Use. 15 cents (8d.).
—"The King shall come." Short Anthem for Advent General Use. 15 cents (8d.).
—"The Lord is my Light." Anthem for Easter or General Use. 20 cents (10d.).
WHITMER, T. C.—"O Land of Beauty." A Hymn to America. 10 cents (4d.).
JIMMERMANN, W. P.—"Andante Sostenuto." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

ESSAY. — A.R.C.O. — "THE RUDIMENTS OF CRITICISM." Four valuable models with hints. Enclose 3s. 6d. Essay," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

MR. CECIL SHARMAN, Mus.Bac. (Dunelm.), F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L., makes a speciality of coaching for the UPPER WORK Sections of the following Exams.:

1. A. and F.R.C.O.
2. L.R.A.M.
3. A.R.C.M.
4. A. and L.T.C.L.

Thorough preparation. Model Workings sent to each pupil. Hints various playing tests. A.R.C.O. Essay. Courses in Musical History, Form, General Knowledge, &c. Advice free. 23, WEST STREET, BROMLEY, KENT.

WANTED, First-rate ORGANIST and CHOIR-TRAINER for St. David's Cathedral, South Wales. Salary £100 a year, and prospect of increase to competent man. Apply enclosing stamped envelope, with particulars, testimonials, &c., to Rev. the Dean, Deanery, St. David's, Pembrokeshire.

ORGANIST WANTED for Oxted Congregational Church. £30. H. Stewart, Bracken Hill, Limsfield.

FOR SALE.—Slab backed VIOLIN. Cremona instrument. Perfect tone, freedom, and volume. £100. Also old Orchestral Violins from £10. May be tried by appointment. Station Road, Harborne, Birmingham.

YORK SERIES 659.

Blessed City, Heavenly Salem.

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.

Price - - Fourpence.

BANKS & SONS, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

ALTO WANTED. Church of England, communicant. Croydon district. £20 per annum. Apply "R. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PEDALS for Piano WANTED. Price and description to Mr. Joy, 64, Leng Road, Newton, Manchester.

STUDIO TO LET. 25-ft. by 11-ft. Gramophone and Piano. Three minutes Clapham Road Tube. Apply 80, Ferndale Road, S.W.4.

NORMAN & BEARD Piano Pedal Attachment, College of Organists' Pattern, concave and radiating. In splendid condition. Also Walnut Organ Seat. No reasonable offer refused. Booth, 7, West Bank, Scarborough, Yorks.

MILLARD THOMPSON, L.T.C.L., Late Principal Tenor, St. George's, Southwark. Available for Sunday and Week-day Services, Oratorios, Concerts, &c. 32, Selwyn Avenue, Highams Park, E.4.

TENOR. £15. St. Michael's, Sutton Court, Chiswick. Good reader essential. Apply Organist, 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

VIOLINS (English), £3 10s., £4, £5, £6, £8, £10, £12. Approval willingly. Write, for particulars (enclosing card), Foucher & Son, 25, Wingate Road, Hammersmith, W.6.

"THE SINGER'S ART."

A. J. LARKCOM, F.R.A.M.

MANUAL FOR SINGERS AND TEACHERS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"The Solitudes of the Passion"

CANTATA

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS (S.A.T.B.)

Price ... Two Shillings.

"A useful addition to the store of Choral Works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well selected. The Music is devotional and very singable,"—Musical Times.

"The Rudiments of Music and Elementary Harmony"

Price ... Five Shillings.

"As a result the Chapters on Time and Intervals will be found especially helpful. An Addendum gives some useful hints and suggestions on adding bar-lines and time- and key-signatures to a given melody. The section of Harmony takes the student as far as the dominant seventh, and includes chapters on modulation and the harmonization of simple melodies. Some useful test-papers are also provided. Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended,"—Musical Times.

"I heard the voice of Jesus say"

ANTHEM

FOR CONTRALTO OR BARITONE SOLO AND MALE-VOICE CHORUS (T.T.B.B.)

Price ... Fourpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW CHRISTMAS CAROLS

No.
394.	CAROL OF THE THREE KINGS...	...	...	2d.
	SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.
395.	GREEN GROWS THE HOLLY TREE ...	...	...	1½d.
	SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.
396.	THE COMING CHRISTMAS ...	...	...	1½d.
	SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.
397.	I SING THE BIRTH ...	...	...	1½d.
	THOMAS ADAMS.
398.	O LOVELY VOICES OF THE SKY ...	...	...	2d.
	W. G. ALCOCK.
399.	THIS DAY ...	...	...	1½d.
	GERRARD WILLIAMS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

MODERN VIOLIN-PLAYING

BY

SAMUEL B. GRIMSON

AND

CECIL FORSYTH.

Medium 8vo. Cloth.

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

THE SOLE AGENCY FOR THE WORLD RENOWNED

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

HAS BEEN ACQUIRED BY

THE AUTOPLAYER CO., LTD.

The Piano House,

126, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

TELEPHONE: GERRARD 2653.

These beautiful instruments maintain that perfection of touch and tone for which they are pre-eminently famous. A full range of Upright and Grand Models is now available.

Please write for catalogues to 126, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, IN E (FOUR VOICES) ... ..	4d.
BENEDICITE, IN E ... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, IN E... ..	4d.
COMMUNION SERVICE, IN E ... ..	1s.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, IN E ... ..	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
CANTATE AND DEUS, IN E ... ..	4d.

ANTHEMS.

IN THE BEGINNING—CHRISTMAS ... ..	4d.
" " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
BEHOLD, I BRING GLAD TIDINGS ... ..	3d.
RISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT ... ..	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
WAS GLAD (FOUR VOICES) ... ..	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.

FIVE SETS OF CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

In Books, Sixpence each. Or in single numbers, One Penny each.

The Composer will be pleased to send Specimens,

Address: 35, CHRIST CHURCH ROAD, NORWICH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise that tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake ... ..	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem ... ..	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
---------------------	-----	---------

Or, separately:—

Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s.	4d.
--------------------------------------	-----	-----

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ... ..	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Vol. Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s.	—
---------------------------------------	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Sentence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use) ... ..	2s	1s. 4d.
--	----	---------

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE ORIGINAL TUNES

SET TO

FAVOURITE HYMNS

BY

FREDERICK R. GREENISH,

Mus. Doc., Oxon., formerly Organist and Director of the Music at St. Mary's, Haverfordwest.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORGAN MUSIC
FOR CHRISTMAS.

NOVELLO'S

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

No. 8.

No.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE, "In dulci júbilo" ... J. S. Bach
2. PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("Christmas Oratorio") ... J. S. Bach
3. QUEM VIDISTES, PASTORES ... W. T. Best
4. VENITE IN BETHLEHEM ... W. T. Best
5. DECEMBER—Christmas Morn ... Frederic H. Cowen
6. FANTASIA ON OLD CHRISTMAS CAROLS... William Faulkes
7. FOR UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN ("Messiah") ... Handel
8. PASTORALE ... Theodore Kullak
9. CHORUS OF SHEPHERDS ... J. Lemmens
10. CHRISTMAS PASTORALE ... Gustav Merkel
11. A CHRISTMAS PASTORAL ... B. Luard-Selby
12. FANTASY ON TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS... John E. West
("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.")

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS;

CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS.

THE VILLAGE ORGANIST.

BOOK 48.

No.

1. FANTASY on Old Christmas Carols ... Hugh Blair
2. PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("The Messiah") ... Handel
3. "IN DULCI JUBILO"—Ancient Carol ... R. L. de Pearsall
4. PASTORALE (8th Concerto) ... Corelli
5. CHRISTMAS (Op. 205, No. 1) ... Max Oesten
6. CHORAL ("Christmas Oratorio") ... J. S. Bach

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

- A CHRISTMAS PASTORALE on the Introit "Hodie Christus Natus est" and the Hymns "Corde Natus" and "Adeste Fideles" ... B. Luard-Selby 2 3
- SIX PIECES (Book 5 of Collection of Pieces) ... W. T. Best 3 0
- POSTLUDE ("Good King Wenceslas") ... G. M. Garrett 2 0
- OFFERTOIRE (Air with Variations) (Modern Organist, No. 9) Lefebure-Wély 3 6
- OFFERTORIUM (Four Pieces, No. 2) ... J. Lemmens 2 3
- VOLUNTARY for Christmas-tide ... F. Ouseley 1 6
- CHRISTMAS SONATA, No. 4, in D (Op. 32) ... Otto Dienel 5 0
- CHRISTMAS BELLS ... G. J. Elvey 1 0
- FANTASIA on Old English Carols ... W. Faulkes 2 3
- RHAPSODIE on an Ancient Christmas Carol ... W. Faulkes 3 0
- TWO CHORAL PRELUDES: 1. In dulci Júbilo; 2. Puer Natus est in Bethlehem ... D. Buxtehude 1 6
- CHRISTMAS CAROL (In dulci Júbilo) (Young Organist) No. 5) ... Pearsall 1 6
- OFFERTOIRE for Christmas Day (Church Organist, Book 8) C. Collin 3 6
- CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "In dulci Júbilo." Sigfrid Karg-Elert 3 0
- THE CARAVAN OF THE MAGI (Approach and Departure). March from the Cantata "Bethlehem" (Maunder). Arranged by E. C. Nunn 2 3
- PHANTASIE on "Adeste Fideles" (Violin, Bells, and Organ) T. Lea Southgate 2 3
- FANTASIA on "In dulci júbilo" ... J. Matthews 3 6
- POSTLUDIUM FESTIVUM ... C. W. Pearce 1 6

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Three Carols by Dr. Walker Robson.

"LO, NEW BORN JESUS."
 "O'ER THE MEADOWS."
 "SLEEP, HOLY BABE."

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SIR CHARLES STANFORD'S GREAT NATIONAL SONG

"A CAROL OF BELLS"

LYRIC BY LOUIS N. PARKER.

"Ring through this dark December."

For Schools and Choirs (S.A.T.B.), 6d. net.

ENOCH &amp; SONS, 58, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

MUSIC FOR ADVENT AND CHRISTMAS

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

BENEDICITE IN D (Just Published) ... .. s. d.
 ... .. 0 4

A MORNING, COMMUNION, AND EVENING
 SERVICE in E minor. Op. 28:

Te Deum and Benedictus ... .. 0 6

Communion Service (including Benedictus and Agnus Dei) ... .. 2 0

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... .. 0 6

ANTHEM. "When the Son of Man shall come" ... .. 0 6

TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

1. "Lowliest! Loftiest!" ... .. } 0 3
 2. "O hearken, all ye sad and lone" ... .. }

ORGAN FANTASIA, "Christmastide" ... .. 3 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

30th 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SONGS BY

HENRY G. LEY.

FOUR ALBUMS.

SYDNEY ACOTT &amp; Co., High Street, Oxford.

"WHITE IN THE MOON THE LONG ROAD LIES."

"FAR IN A WESTERN BROOKLAND."

STAINER &amp; BELL.

SPANISH SCENES

MINIATURE SUITE

FOR PIANOFORTE AND ORCHESTRA.

No. 1. GRANADA.

No. 2. CASTILE.

No. 3. SEVILLE.

COMPOSED BY

JOSEPH H. ADAMS.

Price ... .. Two Shillings and Sixpence net.

Full Orchestra, 5s. net. Septet, 3s. 4d. net. Extra Parts, 6d. net.

Piano Conduct'r, 1s. net.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,

15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

TO CANDIDATES FOR MUS.D.

MS. Notes, Examples, and Workings of several different styles of Eight-Part Harmony (8 pages of MS.).

BY DR. B. BURROWS.

Price ... .. Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

30, HIGHFIELD STREET, LEICESTER.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EURHYTHM

THOUGHT IN ACTION.

THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL THERAPY

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF

TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

M.A., Oxford; M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &amp;c.

Price, Cloth Boards ... .. Nine Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOLK-SONGS

OF

ENGLISH ORIGIN

COLLECTED IN

THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

BY

CECIL J. SHARP

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

SECOND SERIES.

Price Seven Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MINOR MELODIES

Lyrics and Songs for Musical Setting

BY

J. M. STUART-YOUNG.

Ready about May, 1921, through Messrs. T. & A. CONSTABLE, at the University Press, Edinburgh, at 10s. 6d. net per copy, to the general public, first edition of 2,000 copies. 250 pp., Crown 8vo.

NOTE.—Composers may secure single copies on sending one of more of their published songs, as proof of their bona fides, and
 1s. 6d. (to cover cost of packing and postage) to

THE MISSES HARVEY, TYPISTS,

45, ST. ALBAN'S ROAD, SEVEN KINGS, ESSEX.

"MINOR MELODIES" will be followed a few months later by a second volume of Lyrics, this time with more tropical settings
 (Mr. Stuart-Young is permanently resident in West Africa) under the caption of "THE SEDUCTIVE COAST." Composers who acquire "Minor Melodies," and who wish to hold an early reserve on the Lyrics now being written, should ask the Misses HARVEY to note down their wish for the new volume. It will be supplied to composers on the same terms (cost of postage and packing only).

REDUCED PRICE.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a Special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

TEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

Stiff Paper Cover.

A few copies in the original cloth binding are still to be had at the above reduced price.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page distils with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE CHURCH HYMNAL FOR THE CHRISTIAN YEAR

APPROVED BY A REPRESENTATIVE COMMITTEE OF CLERGY.

MUSICAL EDITORS:

HUGH BLAIR, M.A., MUS. DOC. CANTAB.

LISTER R. PEACE, M.A., A.R.C.O.

MUSIC EDITIONS.

NET PRICES 1921. s. d.

Enlarged, No. 1, Complete Indexes. Cloth 7 6

Enlarged, No. 2, For Choir Use. Cloth 6 0

WORDS EDITIONS.

NET PRICES 1921. s. d.

Large Type . . . Cloth 2 6

Small Type . . . Cloth 1 6

Just Published.

WORDS ONLY. Medium type, with musical expression marks.

For Choir Boys and General Use. Price, Cloth, 3s. net.

CHILDREN'S SUPPLEMENT, SEPARATELY.

Music Edition, Cloth, 2s. 3d. Words only, Limp Cloth, 6d. Paper Covers, 3d.

REFEREES:

THE REV. PREBENDARY E. N. SHARPE (Chairman of Committee), The Vicarage, Paddington, W. 2.

VICTORIA LADY CARBERY, 30, Cumberland Terrace, Regent's Park, London, N.W. 1.
whom, as proprietor of the Book, application for grants of books should be made.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SPECIALLY SUITABLE AS PRESENTS

FOR

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR.

HANDSOMELY BOUND IN LEVANT MOROCCO, ETC.

Cathedral Prayer Book, No. 2	...	...	...	£3 13 6, £6 6 0, and £6 16 0
Ditto ditto No. 3, and Hymns A. & M.	...	...	...	£2 10 0 and £6 6 0
Cathedral Psalter, and Hymns A. & M.	...	...	...	£3 3 0 and £9 9 0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

EDITED BY

HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price 5s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE "DISCUS"

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly one thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

MADE BY

WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

SET I.		SET III.
No.		No.
1.	Andante ... .. Alfred H. Allen	1.	Melody ... .. A. Herbert Brew
2.	Spring Song ... .. W. H. Bell	2.	Maestoso ... .. George Calkin
3.	Andante con Moto ... .. G. J. Bennett	3.	Ave Maria ... .. Edward T. Chip
4.	Song of Thanksgiving ... .. Josiah Booth	4.	Interlude ... .. Percy E. Fletche
5.	Church Preludes No. 5 ... .. R. E. Bryson	5.	Intermezzo ... .. Alan Gra
6.	Postlude ... .. H. Elliot Button	6.	Postlude ... .. Alex. Guilman
7.	Postlude ... .. G. Calkin	7.	Sursum Corda ... .. John Ireland
8.	Prelude ... .. Percy E. Fletcher	8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22
9.	Andante ... .. J. W. Gritton		F. Mendelssohn-Barthold
10.	Allegro Moderato ... .. Kate Loder	9.	Andante ... .. Gustav Merke
11.	Allegro. Op. 21... .. Gustav Merkel	10.	Duetto in G ... .. Ernest Newton
12.	Andante. Op. 162 ... .. Gustav Merkel	11.	Cavatina ... .. Joachim Ra
13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn... .. J. T. Pye	12.	Monologue No. 5 ... .. J. Rheinberge
14.	Prelude No. 2 ... .. A. Redhead	13.	Melody in F ... .. Anton Rubinstei
15.	Larghetto and Allegro ... .. J. Varley Roberts	14.	Dreaming ... .. Schuman
16.	Allegretto Pastorale ... .. C. Steggall	15.	The Poet Speaks... .. Schuman
17.	Contemplation ... .. John E. West	16.	Soft Voluntary ... .. B. Luard-Selb
18.	Postlude ... .. John E. West	17.	Menuetto ... .. Berthold Tour
19.	Moderato Maestoso ... .. Kate Westrop	18.	Aspiration ... .. John E. Wes
20.	Andante Pastorale ... .. W. G. Wood	19.	Sketch in C minor ... .. John E. Wes
		20.	Andante con Moto ... .. W. G. Woo
SET II.		SET IV.
No.		No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso ... .. George J. Bennett	1.	Romance ... .. W. H. Be
2.	Church Prelude ... .. R. Ernest Bryson	2.	Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor) ... .. W. Sterndale Bennet
3.	Andante Tranquillo ... .. George Calkin	3.	Canzonetta ... .. César Cu
4.	For Holy Communion ... .. J. Baptiste Calkin	4.	Interlude ... .. Th. Duboi
5.	Postlude ... .. Percy E. Fletcher	5.	Elegy ... .. Edward Elga
6.	Largo ... .. Handel	6.	Allegretto ... .. Niels W. Gad
7.	Berceuse ... .. Oliver King	7.	Judex ("Mors et Vita")... .. Ch. Gouno
8.	Adagio, from Sonatina No. 2 ... .. Kuhlau	8.	Intermezzo No. 3... .. Alan Gra
9.	Allegretto... .. Kate Loder	9.	Chanson de Joie ... .. R. G. Hailin
10.	Andante in G ... .. G. F. Wesley Martin	10.	Hymnus ... .. A. C. Mackenzi
11.	Andanti Quasi Allegretto ... .. Gustav Merkel	11.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44 F. Mendelssohn-Barthold
12.	Cavatina in G ... .. Ernest Newton	12.	Trio ... .. J. Rheinberge
13.	Epilogue ... .. Joseph Rheinberger	13.	Short Postlude ... .. B. Luard-Selb
14.	Andante in A ... .. J. Varley Roberts	14.	Andante Maestoso ... .. B. Luard-Selb
15.	Andante in G ... .. Charles Steggall	15.	Prelude ... .. Henry Smar
16.	March in G ... .. Henry Smart	16.	Fughetta ... .. Henry Smar
17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funebre") ... .. John E. West	17.	Choral Song ... .. S. S. Wesle
18.	Pastoral Melody ... .. John E. West	18.	Lamentation ... .. John E. Wes
19.	Andante ... .. Kate Westrop	19.	Allegretto Pastorale ... .. John E. Wes
20.	Allegretto Grazioso ... .. W. G. Wood	20.	Andante ... .. W. G. Woo

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.

CLOTH, EIGHT SHILLINGS EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOW READY.

THREE PIECES

FROM

THE INCIDENTAL MUSIC

TO

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE

BY

FREDERICK ROSSE.

Prelude. 2. Oriental March. 3. Doge's March.

ARRANGED FOR ORGAN.

PRICE ... .. FOUR SHILLINGS NET.
4s. 2d. Post free.

Of all Music Dealers or direct from

HAWKES &amp; SON,

DENMAN STREET, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON.

AND AT PARIS, TORONTO, AND NEW YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FUGUE IN C MINOR

By J. S. BACH.

TRANSCRIBED FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

By EDWARD ELGAR.

FULL SCORE

Price - - - 10s. 6d.

Orchestral Parts (on hire only).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 96.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

ORNAMENTATION

IN THE WORKS OF

FREDERIC CHOPIN

BY

JOHN PETRIE DUNN

(Lecturer in Music at the University of Edinburgh.)

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

NET.
s. d.

BREVILLE, B. DE.—Stamboul. Rythmes et Chansons d'Orient ... ..	12	0
D'INDY, V.—Pour les enfants de tout âge. 24 pièces d'Étude	8	0
Ille Livre: 9. Ph. Emanuel Bach; 10. Mozart; 11. Rust; 12. Haydn; 13. Auprès de Beethoven; 14. Weber; 15. Schubert; 16. Mendelssohn.
GROVLEZ, G.—Trois valse romantiques...	5	6
KÖCHLIN, CH.—Paysages et Marines. Book I., 6 pieces ...	8	0
LAURENS, E.—Risleriana. Suite, Op. 51... .. complete	16	0
1. Des Farfadets s'ébattent; 2. Au crépuscule des chants rustiques et naïfs s'élèvent (pour main gauche seule); 3. Des Gnomes grouillent et, croassant, grimacent; 4. Des Sirènes rêvent, bercées par les vagues miroitant sous les rayons lunaires; 5. Il fait triste, le vent souffle.
LEKEU, G.—Sonate (G minor) ... ..	8	0
MANZIARLY, M. DE.—Trois Atmosphères slaves ... ..	6	0
PARAY, PAUL.—Thème et variations (B flat) ... ..	8	0
RHENÉ-BATON.—Ballade (A flat, Op. 22)... ..	5	6
— Dans le Style Rococo. Three pieces ... ..	6	0
ROBERT, JEAN.—Mirages. Suite pour piano ... ..	14	0
1. Ce que chante le vent; 2. Obsédante réminiscence de la chanson du vent; 3. Avec l'arécoutchic; 4. Eclaircie.
ROGER-DUCASSE.—Barcarolle No. 2 ... ..	5	6
— Chant de l'Aube ... ..	5	0
— Improptu ... ..	7	0
ROUSSEL, A.—L'Accueil des Muses, écrit pour le Tombeau de Cl. Debussy ... ..	4	0
SCHMITT, FL.—Op. 70, No. 1. À la mémoire de Cl. Debussy	5	0
VOORMOLEN, A.—Éléphants. Étude ... ..	4	0

CHAMBER MUSIC.

BREVILLE, P. DE.—Sonata (C minor). Pianoforte and Violin	20	0
CHAPUIS, A.—Sonata (G minor). Pianoforte and Violin	14	6
CHAUSSEON, E.—Pièce pour Violoncelle ou Viola and Piano, Op. 39 ... ..	4	6
DUPRÉ, MARCEL.—Berceuse enfantine. Cello and Pianoforte	4	0
HENSCHEL, GEORGES.—Thème et Variations, Op. 73. Flute and Pianoforte ... ..	8	0
LABEY, N.—Lied. Cello and Pianoforte, Op. 19 ... ..	5	6
LECLAIR, MONDONVILLE, TARTINI, CORELLI, KENNIS.—Œuv. du 18 <sup>e</sup> siècle. Transcription et réalisation de la Basse chiffrée par C. Saint-Saëns. Violon and Pianoforte ... ..	10	6
MILHAUD, D.—Le Printemps. Violin and Pianoforte ... ..	4	0
RAVEL, W.—Pièce for Flute, Oboe or Violin, and Pianoforte	4	0
RHENÉ-BATON.—Op. 24. Sonate in G. Violin and Pianoforte	10	6
SAINT-SAËNS, C.—Op. 166, Sonate. Hautboy and Pianoforte	10	6
— Op. 167, Sonate. Clarinet and Pianoforte ... ..	10	6
— Op. 168, Sonate. Bassoon and Pianoforte ... ..	10	6
— Op. 158 bis, Prière. Violin and Harmonium ... ..	4	6
VIERNE, L.—Aubade. Violin and Pianoforte ... ..	6	0
VOORMOLEN, A.—Sonata (A minor). Violin and Pianoforte	14	0

ORGAN.

CELLIER, A.—Étude (E minor) ... ..	6	0
CLAVERS, R.—Thème varié ... ..	6	0
DUBOIS, TH.—Ten Pieces ... .. complete	16	0
1. Entrée; 2. Pièce canonique; 3. Déploration; 4. Pastorale; 5. Prélude; 6. Fugue; 7. Evocation; 8. Introduction—Fantaisie, Fughetta, et Coda; 9. Imploration; 10. Sortie (Grand Chœur).
DUPRÉ, M.—Scherzo ... ..	8	0
LE BOUCHER, M.—Sinfony (E major) ... ..	14	0
SAMAZEUILH, G.—Prélude ... ..	3	6

ŒUVRES DES COMPOSITEURS SERBES.

Éditées sous les auspices de la Ligue des Universitaires Serbo-Croato-Slovenes à Paris.

NEUF MELODIES POUR PIANO ET CHANT (textes français et serbe) ... .. Book I.	12	0
BINITCHKI.—Les lilas.
MANOÏLOVITCH.—Mon aimée; Chanson triste.
MILOEVITCH.—D'heure exquise; L'abeille et la campanule; L'adieu; La chanson du vent de mer; Jamais; Le mensonge.
MILOEVITCH.—Dans Mon Pays. Op. 16. Airs et danses pour Piano... .. Book II.	6	0
1. Boiyérka; 2. La jeune fille à la source; 3. Danse tzigane; 4. Que tu as de beaux yeux; 5. Donka est tombée malade; 6. O ma belle.
DEUX DANSES.—Pour Violon et Piano ... .. Book III.	8	0
MANOÏLOVITCH.—Danse des veuves.
MILOEVITCH.—Danse Serbe.
MILOEVITCH.—Quatre morceaux pour Piano. Op. 23 ... .. Book IV.	8	0
1. Vieux conte; 2. Soir mélancolique; 3. Au crépuscule le lys rêvait; 4. Dans le jardin.
— La Légende de Yéphimia. Pour Violoncelle et Piano. Op. 25 ... .. Book V.	5	0
— Melodies populaires serbes. Pour Piano et Chant (textes serbe et français). Op. 19 ... .. Book VI.	8	0
KONYOVITCH.—Deux Morceaux. Pour Violoncelle et Piano. Haidoutchka; Danse ... .. Book VII.	10	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOW READY.

POPULAR ORCHESTRAL EDITION

(ARRANGED BY THE COMPOSER)

OF

A CHILDREN'S OVERTURE

BY ROGER QUILTER

Opus 17.

When first performed by the Queen's Hall Orchestra at the Promenade Concerts, this Overture was received with the greatest enthusiasm. It has since been performed with equal success at the leading Musical Festivals, &c.

The instrumentation of this Popular Edition is as follows:

1st Violin	Oboe ( ad lib. )	1st Cornet
2nd Violin	1st Clarinet	2nd Cornet ( ad lib. )
Viola	2nd Clarinet ( ad lib. )	Trombone
'Cello	Bassoon ( ad lib. )	Timpani, &c.
Bass	1st Horn ( ad lib. )	Harp (or Piano)
Flute	2nd Horn ( ad lib. )
	And Piano Conductor

It will be seen from the instrumentation that this new Edition can, if desired, be effectively performed by quite a small Orchestra.

NET PRICES.

Full Orchestra, 10s. : Small Orchestra, 7s. 6d. : Extra Parts, 1s. each ; Piano Accompaniment, 2s.
Full Score and Parts of the original Concert Version may be hired.

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.
 NEW YORK, SYDNEY, AND MELBOURNE.

IMPORTANT NOVELTIES

G. FRANCESCO MALIPIERO

A CLAUDIO DEBUSSY

PIANO SOLO ... .. Price 1s. 6d. net cash.

OMAGGI

THREE PIECES FOR PIANO SOLO.

1. A UN PAPPAGALLO.      2. A UN ELEFANTE.      3. A UN IDIOTA.

Price ... .. 3s. net cash.

ALFREDO CASELLA

PUPAZZETTI

FIVE MARIONETTE PIECES FOR PIANO DUET.

1. Marcietta.      2. Berceuse.      3. Serenata.      4. Notturnino.      5. Polka.

Cover Design, Frontispiece, and Tailpiece by M. LARIONOW.

Price ... .. 5s. net cash.

Orchestral Version: Miniature Score in the Press.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 947.—Vol. 63
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

JANUARY 1 1922

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

FIFTY-FIRST SEASON, 1921-22

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS CARRIE TUBB.
MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. WILLIAM BOLAND.
MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, AT 2.30 P.M.

HIAWATHA - - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

FULL CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

At the Organ: MR. H. L. BALFOUR, Mus. Bac.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

LENT TERM begins Monday, January 9.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about January 5.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, Saturday, January 21, at 3.

LECTURES by Dr. H. W. RICHARDS, on the "Music of the nineteenth Century" (First Period), will be given on Wednesdays, January 25, February 1, 8, and 15, at 3.15.

ORGAN RECITAL, Monday, January 30, at 3.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1893.)

Telegrams:

"Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone:

"1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Intending Students who wish to enter the College are asked to send their forms of application as soon as possible.

SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE CLASSES have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 8th, 1922.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 1st, 1922.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed Centres in March-April, 1922, and in all subsequent periods. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

An official edition of Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte, and of Music for Violin, and also of Written Papers, is published by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

The Royal College of Organists.

The DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS by the President, Dr. C. MACPHERSON, will take place on Saturday, January 21st, at 11 o'clock.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... .. LANDON RONALD.

Fees for Curriculum, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Single Subjects, from £2 2s. 6d.

THE SCHOOL BEING NOW FULL

It is necessary for Students intending to join for next term (January 9th) to make immediate application.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give an ORGAN RECITAL (1.689th), at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, on January 3rd, at 1 p.m., and during the month will repeat, by request, all the R.C.O. Test-Pieces for the January Examinations.

MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give a BACH RECITAL at St. Stephen's, Walbrook, on January 19th, at 1.10 p.m.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO (Bach) will be given with full Orchestra and Organ, at St. Anne's, Soho, on FRIDAY EVENING, January 6, at 8 p.m. Tickets may be had by sending stamped addressed envelope to Rector, 28, Soho Square, W. 1.

96, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1
TOBIAS MATTHAY
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

for instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of twenty-seven senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This One-Year Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars write, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1920-1921.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18): WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9): SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Thirtieth Year began on October 10.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

Extract from a letter received from

The renowned pianist, POUISHNOFF.

"... short acquaintance with your 'Techniquer' makes it quite clear to me that with care and systematic use it should prove the very greatest help in developing and strengthening the hands.

"LEFF POUISHNOFF."

LECTURE DEMONSTRATION and PIANOFORTE RECITAL, Thursday, January 5th, 1922, at 8 p.m. RICHARD H. WALTHER (Chairman), L.A.M., Princes' Street, W. Admission free.

Full particulars may be obtained from the Secretary,

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O.,

21, Boundary Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

"Hand Development" - 7d.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: His GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. Bac. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

(Staff of Fifty-eight Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London, and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom in APRIL. Last day of entry, March 8.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.
C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
 INTERPRETATION,
 FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
 FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institution have been enrolled as pupils.

Write:

25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System) covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

APPRECIATIONS.

Dame Clara Butt: "I consider the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training very sound."

Madame Edna Thornton: "Excellent and most helpful. I can recommend the 'Simplex' System."

Mr. Ben Davies: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

Mr. Norman Allin: "The 'Simplex' System is undoubtedly novel, interesting, helpful, and thoroughly sound."

For Full Particulars, address: Mr. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O. L.R.A.M.

CANDIDATES for the above cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in "From Brain to Keyboard," to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

- "Far beyond anything I ever expected."
 "I have practically a new pair of hands."
 "The fee you charge is a mere nothing."
 "I am quite unable to express my gratitude."
 "Your discovery marks a new epoch."
 "The best outlay I have ever made."
 "I can play pieces hitherto undreamt of."
 "I have passed my exam. with honours."
 "Your system is simply marvellous."
 "The half was not told me."

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

I. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE.

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION FOR

"FIRST" AND "FINAL" EXAMINATIONS.

- SUCCESSES 10 "First" Mus. Bac.
 10 "Final" Mus. Bac.
 4 "Final" Mus. Doc.

For terms, &c., address:

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
Mus. D. (Lond.)

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL. Telephone: Bristol 3033.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION

FOR
MUS. B. AND MUS. D.

DR. B. BURROWS

(MUS. D. LONDON.)

Terms, Testimonials and Successes:

30, HIGHFIELD STREET, LEICESTER.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLUMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE,

21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C. 1.

APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses have been drawn up by an experienced teacher of this subject. These are non-technical, and are enjoyable to all interested in Music.

Further particulars from Secretary.

MORECAMBE MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL

MAY 11th, 12th, 13th, 1922.

THE COMPLETE SYLLABUS OF THE
COMPETITIONS IS NOW READY,

And may be had (price 7d., post free) from

WM. C. FAWCETT, Secretary,

25, VICTORIA STREET, MORECAMBE.

BOURNVILLE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17th, 1922.

ADJUDICATOR - - - DR. HENRY COWARD.

LADIES' CHOIRS
MIXED CHOIRS
MALE QUARTET

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS
CHILDREN'S CHOIRS
MIXED QUARTET

Syllabus from:

Mr. E. J. FASHAM, Cadbury Bros., Ltd., Bournville.

BEDFORDSHIRE EISTEDDFOD.

Competitive Musical Festival, BEDFORD.

MARCH 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th, 1922.

Full particulars from the Hon. Sec.,
Capt. D. V. GEDGE, M.B.E., 95, Ashburnham Road,
Bedford; or from the Musical Director, Dr. H. A.
HARDING, 42, De Parys Avenue, Bedford.

LEAMINGTON & COUNTY

Open Competitive Musical Festival.

JUNE 22nd, 23rd, and 24th, 1922.

Syllabus now ready, price 6d., from Messrs. Dale, Forty & Co., Leamington and Birmingham; Messrs. Hanson, Leamington and Coventry; Messrs. Priestley & Sons, Birmingham; Messrs. Pass & Co., Birmingham; Messrs. R. F. Durrant, Rugby; or Secretary, Town Hall, Leamington.

HASTINGS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

APRIL 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, 1922.

The SYLLABUS (post paid, 2½d.), may be obtained from the Hon. Secs.,

FESTIVAL OFFICE, STATION APPROACH, HASTINGS.

CHARLES TREE

LECTURE-RECITALS on

THE ART OF THE "BEL CANTO."

Mr. C. W. CLARK, L.R.A.M., writes, Dec. 7, 1921: "A marvellous exhibition of how to sing correctly. His references to so-called voice-productions were painfully accurate. Exquisite artistry from points of production, technique, and tone. His method (the original bel canto) enabled him to articulate clearly, declaim forcefully and sympathetically with the most perfect ease. He held his audience from start to finish. An education on the right lines."

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s. 2d.). (If difficult to obtain this work, write direct to author.)

Mr. HOWARD SYMINGTON, Harboro', writes, Dec. 6, 1921: "An excellent lecture, which in addition to being very entertaining, has a high educational value. If people could be persuaded to follow the simple exercises that you describe in your book the results would soon be noticeable."

Mr. TREE will have ready end of Jan., 1922, "Exercises for vocal placement, nasal resonance, enunciation, &c. (with amplified instructions)."

In this edition of the Musical Times will be found Mr. Tree's sporting offer to Mr. Keay (who disbelieves in "speech into song"), to provide a hall in London for public illustrations by himself and Mr. Keay, the latter to be free from all expense.

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5.

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE

Principal - - - ARTHUR

WHAT RECENT STUDENTS SAY.

MUS. BAC.

I have to thank you very much for the valuable time you spend over my exercises. I am returning one lesson rewritten as requested, and hope there will be fewer mistakes. I am sorry to cause you all this trouble in correcting my lessons.

MATRIC.

It is gratifying to me to tell you that my daughter has been successful at Durham, and I take this opportunity for expressing to you my deep appreciation of your attention and skill bestowed upon her. I have been struck by your excellent methods and have felt all along that success was in store for her.

A.R.C.O.

You will be pleased to hear that I was successful in obtaining the A.R.C.O. diploma last week. I thank you very much for the invaluable help I have received from your course. I had little hope of getting through when I first wrote to you. In fact I merely wanted to go up to see what it was like.

MUS. BAC. (Guarantee Course).

I cannot refrain from expressing my satisfaction with the tuition I am receiving from the Modern Correspondence College. I would not have believed that training of this character could be so systematic and thorough. Whoever my allotted tutor may be nothing appears to him to be too much trouble not only to explain but to reiterate if he observes anything imperfectly understood. Apart, too, from his corrections and numerous explanations, his final comments on the pupil's work are most interesting and instructive. The Guarantee Course of lessons are so well arranged that a pupil can soon begin to realise for himself that he is making progress. Your system is admirable.

L.R.A.M.

I am glad to inform you that my daughter, a student of the Modern Correspondence College, was successful in the Paper-work, Rudiments, Harmony, Ornaments, and Aural Tests, last week. I thank you Mr. McAlister for your coaching, and the staff. I must tell you my daughter created quite a sensation amongst the candidates when she took her place in the theory room. I suppose on account of her youthful age. (Age 15.)

1st MUS. BAC. (Labour of Love.)

Accept my best thanks for the corrections to last paper, and please apologise to my tutor for all the trouble I am giving him. It is certainly a labour of love on his part. However, I'll do him and the school credit yet.

MUS. BAC.

Many thanks for your extremely lucid criticism of the music paper. Have had lessons from some of the best coaches in the country, but never in such a detailed and instructive manner.

MUS. BAC.

I cannot express how pleased I am with your coaching. I have heard from Durham and I find I have got a strong pass in English. I enclose enrolment form for the Mus. Bac. course together with cheque value £3.

I was struck with the number of students coached by you whom I met at Durham.

A.R.C.O.

The Counterpoint is becoming very much clearer to me now. I was in confusion when I first wrote to you, am most grateful for your absolutely splendid corrections. I only hope I shall be as conscientious when I begin to teach.

Foreword

These extracts from recent letters are published here because we realise that they will do more to encourage you than could say concerning The Modern Correspondence College.

¶ The opinions here printed are those of the students and may be seen.

ARTHUR

Modern Correspondence College,
20, Ilkeston Road, Nottingham.

DEAR MR. McALISTER,

I feel it is a duty on my part to write to you concerning the Correspondence Course for the Durham Examination.

The lessons are so admirably given and clear as to be of the greatest assistance.

The fact that my son only began the course in January, and is now so confident of success in January, is a great encouragement.

I shall be pleased for you to make any further suggestions.

FREE -

201, ILKESTON ROAD,

DENCE COLLEGE

CALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.)

By the Principal

Successful Students are published more weight than anything we spondence College.

aneous, and the original letters

LISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

28, SEVERN STREET,

LEICESTER.

November 18, 1921.

press my complete satisfaction with ulation which my son is taking with e corrections and hints are so lucid Student.

urse in July, and that he feels s for your training.

I think well of this letter.

Yours most truly,

ER J. BUNNEY, L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.

IDE TO MATRIC.

JS. BAC., ETC.

WHAT RECENT STUDENTS SAY.

MUS. BAC.

I am delighted that I had the good fortune to place myself under your care. Your work so far has given me absolute confidence in you. I heartily wish you the success you so thoroughly deserve.

"I NEVER THOUGHT I SHOULD DO IT."

I am very pleased to be able to tell you that I have just heard that I have passed the Durham Matric. I never thought I should do it, as circumstances have been so much against me, and all my work had to be done at night, and it was rather strange to me at Durham, never having been in an Exam. room before. I am obliged to you for your careful tuition and encouragement without which latter I should, I feel sure, have been unable to carry through with it.

1st MUS. BAC.

I should like to say that I am more than grateful for this lesson and its lucid explanations. They shed a light on the Counterpoint for me which clears a lot up I did not understand. Many thanks again for the lesson, which is wonderfully clear and I feel sorry to have given so much trouble.

PROOF OF A METHOD.

Please accept my sincere thanks for your coaching which I consider excellent. The proof of a method is in the results achieved.

A.R.C.O.

I feel I must write a few lines to say how much your criticism has helped me. I knew nothing scarcely of Counterpoint when I started with you. Thanks to you, I believe I have greatly improved.

1st MUS. BAC. (September, 1921).

I attribute my success to the unceasing energies of the Music Coach, and also to my carrying out his advice to get both papers finished.

OLD FRIENDS.

You will have received my wire and know of my success ere now, but I am writing to thank you with all my heart for all you have done for me, and to ask you to take to yourself a very great share of my success.

I have worked extremely hard, never in fact, being idle, but I realise that all my work would have been useless, unless it had been done on right lines.

The questions seemed quite like old friends to me, for I had previously worked almost all of them for you and had not only the matter at my pen point, but many well rounded sentences as well.

It will be my earnest endeavour to find you some more pupils, and if at any time you come near Leeds, please let me know, and come to spend a few days with me.

4th ATTEMPT (Matric.).

I am glad to tell you I was successful at Durham last week. This was my 4th attempt, and I do feel that on this occasion I owe my success to the two months' coaching you gave to me.

My great regret is that I did not come to you years ago instead of wasting time with other people.

Whenever opportunity comes, I shall recommend you as an "Arts Coach."

GONE ON FOR YEARS.

As far as I can see he is making much progress under your excellent tuition, but there is such a difference in method compared with his former teacher. It is my firm belief he could have gone on for years before getting even to the standard you have him now. I am very confident that any student who follows your instructions as far as I have seen them is bound to be successful.

NOTTINGHAM.

SINGING LESSONS BY POST

The Finest Vocal Tuition brought
within reach of everyone.

Here is a course that is not a fad or fancy, but the result of twenty-five years' training in the hard school of experience by a man who has overcome all obstacles and won through to success. Here in eight concentrated lessons is the information that will save you years of struggling and disappointment and lead you straight to success. If you are quite untrained, the Course will put you on the right track straight-away. If you are partially trained you will find the information positively priceless to you. Written for the masses but particularly suitable for the teacher or student.

A teacher of Singing writes:

" . . . . Your books put the matter in a nutshell . . . . worth many times the cost . . . will be most useful to me in my teaching work."

The Course is fully illustrated and misunderstanding—given average intelligence—is impossible.

The following are among the subjects dealt with:

Breathing; how to prevent loss of breath; the scientific production of tone; the secret of penetration of tone; how to improve the volume and quality of the voice; how to cure breaks in the voice; the art of singing high and low notes; pronunciation and articulation; how to sing a song; singing for pleasure, profit, and health, &c.

The Booklets are convenient in size for a lady's satchel or gentleman's breast-pocket. Your tutor can thus accompany you anywhere—always at hand for advice or reference. The price of the complete Course of eight lessons is Three Guineas Cash, or One Pound with enrolment form and Ten Shillings a month for six months. A booklet giving full particulars will be forwarded free with pleasure, but the forwarding of either forms below along with name, address, and remittance will serve to put you in possession of this unique tuition by return.

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP.

To the Worth Conservatoire, Beech Avenue, Sherwood Rise, Nottingham.

CASH APPLICATION.

Please enrol me as a Student of the Worth Method, for which I enclose £3 3s. (three guineas) for the Complete Course to be supplied immediately.

GRADUAL PAYMENTS APPLICATION.

Please enrol me as a Student of the Worth Method, for which I enclose £1 (one pound) and agree to pay the sum of ten shillings a month hereafter till £4 (four pounds) in all is paid. Two lessons to be supplied immediately and a further one on receipt of each instalment.

Signature.....

Full Postal Address .....

Date..... Training (if any)..... Voice.....

THE WORTH CONSERVATOIRE (DEPT. W.),
BEECH AVENUE, SHERWOOD RISE, NOTTINGHAM.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES.

COMPLETE AND INDIVIDUAL PREPARATION FOR L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. Bac.,
Mus. Doc., AND ALL DIPLOMAS OF T.C.L. AND R.C.O.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES AT THESE EXAMINATIONS.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

- (1) Durham "First" Mus. Bac. Revision Course for March.
- (2) A.R.C.M. - - - Full Course for April.

These Lessons are designed to give a grip of all vital points essential to success.

PRACTICAL WORK. Personal Lessons in London, Bath, and Bristol.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

MUS. DOC. (LOND.).

Tutor in Music to U.C.C., Cambridge; Examiner in Music to College of Preceptors, London.

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone:
Bristol 3033.

CO FESTIVAL AND CHORAL SOCIETY CONDUCTORS.

EDMUND TELFER (BARITONE)

MAY BE ENGAGED FOR THE RÔLE PART OF

"ELIJAH."

Dear Mr. TELFER,—Just a few lines to thank you for your singing in 'The Messiah.' I did not think you quite did yourself justice on the Friday (after your sea voyage), but on the Saturday you were yourself again, and it was a real pleasure to hear the music so well sung. In following a succession of the best basses obtainable, you had a difficult task before you to please people who judge by the Santley-Black-Manners-Radford, &c., standard, and, being responsible for your engagement, I am glad to find that those of the Committee I have seen so far seem much pleased with your singing on the second night. I enclose you a cutting from the only paper which recorded Saturday's performance. With kind regards, and wishing you and Mrs. Telfer a happy Christmas.

I, Fernbank,
Holywood, Co. Down.

I am, Yours faithfully,
E. GODFREY BROWN.

THE ROYAL COMMAND CHOIR, BARROW MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

Dear Mr. TELFER,—On behalf of the above Society, we have to thank you most sincerely for the able manner you came to our rescue last Thursday evening, in the rendition of 'Elijah.' At our general meeting held last Friday night our members were very enthusiastic about your wonderful performance. Your opening introduction gave inspiration to the choristers, and we hear nothing but praise at every turn. Your interpretation, artistic treatment, emotional and dramatic effect in all your work were really splendid, and we have much to thank you for. We, as a choir, will only be too willing to reciprocate when the occasion arises. With kindest regards and best wishes, believe us to be,

Sincerely yours,

MARY BOURNE (Conductor),
J. W. HARDERN (Hon. Sec.).

MADRIGAL SOCIETY IN "ELIJAH."

Mr. E. Telfer, who came forward as substitute, was responsible for some delightful singing. To the gift of resourcefulness and the excellence of a round and melodious voice, he added good dramatic power. Barrow News, November 19, 1921.

For Terms and vacant dates, apply,

KILNERS PARK, ULVERSTON.

Telephone 53.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

St. Paul's Cathedral.

Tel: Hornsey 603. 73 Stapleton Hall Road, N.4.

MR. JOHN MACLENNAN, Tenor, Oratorios, &c.
185, Loughborough Road, S.W.9. Telephone: Brixton 1702.

MILLARD THOMPSON, L.T.C.L., Late Principal Tenor, St. George's, Southwark. Available for Sunday and Week-day Services, Oratorios, Concerts, &c. 32, Selwyn Avenue, Highams Park, E.4.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

RALPH WILLIAMS

L.R.A.M. TENOR.

Lackham House, Osterley Park, W.

EDGAR DYSON

BASS-BARITONE.

Lay-Vicar, Salisbury Cathedral.

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.

Address: 25, Wyndham Road, Salisbury.

VERNON HARRISS

BASSO CANTANTE.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL

ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.

The Precincts, Canterbury.

(CAPTAIN)

LEWIS STAINTON

(BASS).

ORATORIOS, ETC.

The Cloisters,
Windsor Castle.Telegrams:
Stainton, Cloisters, Windsor.

MR. CHARLES THORNTON

(BASS BARITONE).

Oratorios, Concerts, &amp;c.

"Possesses a magnificent baritone voice."—Recent press notice.

Address: Rook's Nest, Whytecliffe Road, Purley, Surrey.

HERBERT TRACEY

BASS (of Westminster Abbey).

8, Cavendish Mansions, Clapton Square, E.5. London Wall 4033.

MR. R. J. PITCHER

Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,

A.R.C.M. (Double Diploma Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M. (Class A).

Professor Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915.

Special Lecturer on Mus. Appreciation to the L.C.C.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES in "Singing for Teachers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch," "Accompaniment," and a special course on "Musical Appreciation."

Over 500 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &amp;c.

"Recitative and its rendering," 7/6; "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.

Send for Prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

MISS GLADYS UNDERWOOD (L.R.A.M.)

ACCOMPANIST

Is open for engagements at Concerts, Rehearsals, &c.
(Vocalists and Instrumentalists).

7, Hemstal Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND,

PIANIST, A.R.C.M.C.

ASSOCIATE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. Walter Carroll, &c.
Busoni Method.Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation at Wigmore Studios, 110, High Street, Marylebone, and
"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot, in the Referee."

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Easton Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury"

"Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SEVEN YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

PLAINSONG and its ACCOMPANIMENT

COURSE ENSURING THOROUGH UNDERSTANDING AND PRACTICAL EFFICIENCY.

Tuition personally, or by correspondence, by

DR. GEORGE OLDROYD, D.Mus. (Lond.),
c/o "The Faith House," 22, Buckingham St., Charing Cross, W.C.2

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.

L. Mus. T.C.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &amp;c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, and Essay Course with Models. 44 Successes in One Year.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.

(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.

(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-21 ... 180 Correspondence Pupils successful

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-21 ... 45 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.

(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.

(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.

(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
L. ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.

Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice

Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth &amp; Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

MR. J. D. HANDS, Mus. Bac. (Dublin), gives

Lessons, by post, in Harmony and other Theoretical Subjects, and prepares for Examinations. Terms very moderate. 18, Chanters Road, Bideford.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE

TUITION. 302 Successes in Mus D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., &amp;c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

MISS EVELYN JANSZ (Leipzig) Diplômée for

Pianoforte and Composition, Pupil of Professors Teichmüller and Max Regler, receives pupils. 24, Ovington Square, Knightsbridge. Telephone: Kensington 1938.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Hotel, in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Transposition, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen's Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or lessons) on the four-manual pneumatic organ at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes. Streatham Place, S.W. 2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

R. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Recent successes, 1921, after preliminary course in Composition, Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. "Exercises" (7), all at first attempt. Durham, September, 1921: Final Mus. Doc., Final Mus. Bac. (4), 1st Mus. Bac. (3).
over 100 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

R. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Positions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

R. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920), specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Press, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs

ADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the more Hall Studios, 32, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, Form and Teaching, &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils invited and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

R. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) A.R.C.O. Preparation.
(3) F.R.C.O. Preparation.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham

RECENT SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK.

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for JULY F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations will shortly commence. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful at pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a great number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high standard in their work.

Now in these lessons a series of clear and definite rules and principles is given, enforced and illustrated by musical examples, which go to the very root of the matter.

Every pupil is instructed how to write Musical Counterpoint. Numerous examples are given which clearly show that it is quite able to produce good music (from a harmonic and melodic point of view), even under the many restrictions and limitations imposed by laws of Counterpoint.

Special attention is given to the new F.R.C.O. test—Modern Counterpoint.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped need not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability which he is endowed.

MR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O.,

"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

B

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

L. R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing). Ingleside, Goldswong Terrace, Nottingham.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher). Registered Teacher (T.R.C.)—Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, History, Interpretation. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first). Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

VOICE-TRAINING, old Italian Method; speciality preparation for operatic work. Serious pupils accepted by Mr. Keay, 2, Gledstanes Road, W.14.

EXPERT in VOICE-TRAINING, recently settled in London, wishes to co-operate with English teacher having connection. Write, "K. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED, a SOLO BOY, for Choir School in the Country. Board, lodging, and education free. Evelyn Countess of Craven, Ashdown Park, Shrivvenham.

MR. H. SCOTT-BAKER will be glad to hear from Ladies and Gentlemen, Vocalists and Instrumentalists, who are willing to co-operate in promoting a series of concerts. Address by letter only, 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER for Christ Church, Bridlington. Churchman. Modern organ. Salary, £52. List of duties apply Vicar.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Peterhead, Aberdeenshire. Good with men and boys. Voice-production important. Salary, £60-£70. Excellent opening for teaching of singing, violin, pianoforte, &c. Apply, with copies of recent testimonials, to David Troup, Solicitor, Peterhead.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required for United Free High Church, Forres. Good modern 2-manual Norman & Beard organ. Salary, £80-£100. Apply with testimonials to C. M. Fraser, Solicitor, Forres.

ORGANIST-CHOIRTRAINER, Pianist. Twelve years' experience. Church of England. Seeks re-appointment. Dry, healthy climate. Replies to "L. A. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ACCOMPANIST (Certificated Pianist). Studio, Private, or Orchestra. Miss Player, 79, Brecknock Road, Camden Road N.7.

A VACANCY for young gentleman Pianist to learn the Music Trade; exceptional ability at sight-reading most essential. Apply personally to Munt's Piano and Music Stores, St. John's Road, Clapham Junction, S.W.11.

YOUNG LADY (A.L.C.M.) PIANIST (Shorthand-Typist), good Sight-Reader and Accompanist, seeks Engagements or Musical Appointment. G. L. Vassar, 43, Sumatra Road, West Hampstead, N.W. 6.

AGENTS WANTED for the "Worth" Course of Voice-Production by Correspondence. Liberal commission. A profitable side-line for choir secretaries or others who are in touch with musical societies and Festivals. Apply for terms, The Worth Conservatoire, Beech Avenue, Sherwood Rise, Nottingham.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE, 3-Manual Mason & Hamlin American ORGAN. 31 stops. 30 notes compass. Cost £300. Price, 75 guineas. Hondley, Handcross, Sussex.

FOR SALE IN THE NEW YEAR.—Old established PRACTICE in provincial town. Teaching connection and appointments. Excellent opportunity for young professional man. Initial replies to "M. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—DOUBLE-BASS, 3 string. Good tone, and in good condition. Apply, S. D. Cottam, 118, Silverleigh Road, Thornton Heath, Surrey.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

January 9th.—Lent Term begins.January 11th. at 3 p.m.—Inaugural Address by Dr. C. W. PEARCE. Subject: "A Jubilee Retrospect of the Foundation and Growth of Trinity College of Music, 1872-1922."January 18th. at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.January 25th. at 3 p.m.—Pianoforte and Violoncello Recital by MISS EMMELINE MEDD-HALL and MRS. APPERLY.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The Opera for performance at a London Theatre in the Summer Term is "Iolanthe." Conductor: Mr. CAIRNS JAMES. There are a few vacancies. The OPERA CLASS meets on Tuesdays, at 5.30 p.m.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

ENTERPRISING PIANO TEACHERS

SHOULD USE

"YOUNG HEARTS"

(Pieces for Children)

BY

CYRIL SCOTT.

SERIES I. 2s. 6d. net. SERIES II. 2s. 6d. net.

- |                    |                 |
|--------------------|-----------------|
| 1. SEE-SAW.        | 1. MARCH OF A   |
| 2. LAMENT FOR A    | TIN SOLDIER.    |
| BROKEN DOLL.       | 2. SUNDAY MORN. |
| 3. MUSICAL BOX.    | 3. CONCERTINA.  |
| 4. EVENING PRAYER. | 4. LONELINESS.  |
| 5. QUICK MARCH.    | 5. THE BOY WITH |
|                    | THE PIPES.      |

In these pieces Cyril Scott shows how beauty can be wrought with simple materials. He introduces modern idiom in such a clear and attractive way that young pianists acquire a "modern taste" at quite an early stage.

The pieces are issued with Continental fingering, and are excellent from a finger-technique point of view.

ELKIN &amp; CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

And of all Music Sellers.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH &amp; CO., LTD.

BERINGER'S PIANO TUTOR

THE BEST AND MOST UP-TO-DATE.
IT ENSURES SUCCESS.

English Fingering	... ..	complete, 3s. 6d.
"	in 2 parts	each, 2s.
Continental Fingering	... ..	complete, 3s. 6d.
"	in 2 parts	each, 2s.

PRICE REDUCTION.

BERINGER'S PIANO TECHNIQUE

USED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

WE HAVE REDUCED THE PRICES TO PRACTICALLY
THE PRE-WAR FIGURE.

Complete	... ..	5s. net.
"	without Scales	4s. net.
Scales and Arpeggios separately,	English or Continental	Fingering, 2s. 6d. net.
Modulatory Examples, separately,		1s. 6d.

BOSWORTH &amp; Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HENY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS' RAY TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DA TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MU LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 96.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

ORNAMENTATION

IN THE WORKS OF

FREDERIC CHOPIN

BY

JOHN PETRIE DUNN

(Lecturer in Music at the University of Edinburgh.)

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JANUARY 1 1922

THE TRUTH ABOUT BEETHOVEN*

BY ERNEST NEWMAN

It may come as a surprise to the ordinary reader of musical history and biography to be told that more than any other composer Beethoven stands in need of an authentic Life. If there is any composer whose movements, whose correspondence, even whose conversation can be tracked month by month, almost day by day, it is Beethoven. In many ways our information about him is even more pious than our information about Wagner, for in the case of the latter we have none of the Conversation Books that fix for us some of the actual talks between Beethoven and his friends as definitely as if these had been recorded for the gramophone. There are many Lives of Beethoven, many volumes of reminiscences of him, many editions of or selections from his letters, many constructions of him by more or less imaginative literary portrait painters. And yet it is safe to say that hardly one music-lover in a million knows Beethoven as he really was, or can separate the truth from the fiction in the scores of romantic stories that are current concerning him. Everyone knows the ordinary sentimentalised bust or portrait of Beethoven—a Beethoven visibly conscious of the necessity for living up, so far as appearances go, to the general conception of him as a Titan staggering under the too vast orb of his fate. The literary portraits we have of him are, almost without exception, equally sentimentalised. It is time that the man Beethoven was drawn from the life, not evolved out of the inner consciousness of each successive biographer.

We all know the Beethoven of the poetical legend—a sick eagle fretted by crows and sparrows, Prometheus and a Faust in one, a man picked out from the beginning as a target for the evil One, poor, misunderstood, neglected, injured by false friends, and finally broken by the base ingratitude of the nephew to whom he had given himself with a devotion and a self-sacrifice paralleled either in real life or in fiction. This figure touched the sensibilities and the sympathies of men as that of no other composer has done—how, indeed, could anyone refuse sympathy to the tragic spectacle of one of the greatest of composers deprived of his hearing? And, anxious to have full justification for its expenditure of emotion, mankind was willing to go to any length of credulity where a Beethoven anecdote was concerned, so long only as it touched the source of tears. Let a simple example suffice.

The Life of Ludwig van Beethoven, by Alexander Wheelock Tappan. Edited, revised, and amended from the original English manuscript and the German editions of Hermann Deiters and Hugo Mann, concluded, and all the documents newly translated, by Henry Edward Krehbiel. New York, the Beethoven Association: G. Schenker, Novello. 3 vols., £5 5s. net.

One of the best-known legends is that after his return from Gneixendorf to Vienna in the early days of December, 1826, with the violent cold that was the beginning of his fatal illness, he lay ill for some days before he could get medical attention, and then received it only by an accident. According to Schindler, the wicked nephew Karl, instead of summoning a doctor, either deliberately neglected or forgot to do so. He went about his usual sinful pleasures, of which billiard-playing was one; and in the course of a game he happened, some days after, to remember his uncle's commission. He casually mentioned it to the marker, asking him to send a doctor. The marker, being unwell, neglected to do so for some time; but finding himself in a hospital he mentioned the matter to the doctor in charge—one Wawruch, who thereupon repaired to Beethoven. This story, according to Schindler, was told him by Dr. Wawruch himself. But there is not a word of truth in it: Thayer's language is not too strong when he calls it a 'shameless fabrication.' It is disproved by the account of Beethoven's illness (written by Wawruch less than two months after the composer's death, and published in 1842), and by the Conversation Book. 'I was not called in until the third day,' says Wawruch, and Karl's entries in the Conversation Book confirm this. The doctor first visited the patient on December 5. Beethoven had arrived at his lodgings on December 2. In an undated letter to Carl Holz, which was no doubt written on either December 4 or 5 (for he speaks of having arrived 'a few days ago,' and of a previous letter, also written after his arrival, having been mislaid), he refers to his illness in a way that shows he did not regard it as serious,* and says he would be delighted if Holz would come and see him. Karl must have delivered this letter without delay; and Holz must have called on Beethoven at once, sent to Wawruch at once, and secured the immediate attendance of the latter at the Schwarzspanierhaus. Karl's entries relating to the physician's visit end on December 14; and the evidence of the Conversation Book is conclusive that Schindler did not see Beethoven till some time after that date.

A hundred similar cases of error or perversion of the truth could be cited. What is the explanation of them? In part, the errors are honest; events are only dimly remembered after the lapse of many years, and in any case the narrator of an event necessarily saw only one aspect of it. But a good deal of the confusion has come from the pardonable desire of each of the great man's friends to pose as the friend. Schindler's jealousy of the others, and particularly of Holz, is notorious. Now the peculiar relation of Schindler to Beethoven gave him exceptional opportunities for legend-floating. It was known that he had been a sort of secretary to the composer for some years, that he was with him in the last days, and that the famous Conversation Books* had come into his keeping after Beethoven's death. His biography of the composer, therefore (first edition, 1840; second edition, 1845; third edition, 1860), seemed to have every title to be considered authoritative. In the course of time, doubts were cast on many of his statements; but few people realised the full extent of his untrustworthiness. Grove, in his article on him in the Dictionary, says that 'Schindler has been the object of much obloquy and mistrust, but it is satisfactory to know, on the authority of A. W. Thayer, that this is unfounded, and that his honesty and intelligence are both to be trusted.' Nothing could well be more misleading. Thayer's considered opinion of him was this:

* 'Immediately after my arrival, which took place a few days ago, I wrote to you, but my letter was mislaid; thereupon I became unwell, so that I thought it better to stay in bed.'

'Nothing is more common than to find circumstances accepted as undoubted facts on Schindler's authority. The present writer discussed at length Schindler's character as a biographer with Otto Jahn, both of us having known him personally. Our opinions coincided perfectly. We held him to be honest and sincere in his statements, but afflicted with a treacherous memory and a proneness to accept impressions and later-formed convictions as facts of former personal knowledge, and to publish them as such without carefully verifying them.'

Moreover, he revised his book and wrote various articles about Beethoven after the Conversation Books, which would have served to correct many of his unconscious fictions, had passed out of his keeping. But even this opinion of Thayer's, expressed in the second of the present volumes, is modified later to the disadvantage of Schindler. He plainly was not over-scrupulous where his own vanity was concerned. The true story has just been told of the early stages of Beethoven's illness. It is as clear as anything can be that Schindler did not see him till at least a fortnight after the composer's return to Vienna on December 2, whereas Holz was with him on December 4 or 5. Schindler knew that the Conversation Book was decisive on this point; and he has actually 'folded and re-numbered' the pages in such a way that 'the page on which this entry [i.e., Karl's entry recording all Wawruch's visits from December 5 to 14] appears, is made to look as if it preceded others which are filled with evidences of Holz's helpfulness.' After that, we must modify our opinion that Schindler was a bit of a fool, but an honest fool.

The truth is that he was jealous of Karl Holz, the bright and amiable young man who became Beethoven's factotum about 1825, henceforth occupying the place in his affections formerly held by Schindler. The latter consoled himself by spreading false reports about Holz—for instance, that he took Beethoven to taverns where the composer drank more than was good for him. In August, 1826, Beethoven gave Holz a document certifying that he considered him 'competent to write my eventual biography, should such a thing be desired,' and adding, 'I repose in him the fullest confidence that he will give to the world without distortion all that I have communicated to him for this purpose.' Schindler attempts to make out that this permission was 'the result of a surprise sprung upon Beethoven,' and that on death-bed he requested Breuning and Schindler to collect his papers and hand them to Rochlitz for the purposes of a biography—a task which Rochlitz declined. But it is certain that Schindler was quietly edged out of Beethoven's life in the last year or two. It was in the spring of 1826 that Beethoven became noticeably fond of Holz. From March, 1825, to August, 1826, Beethoven and Schindler rarely met. On September 28th the composer went to stay with his brother Johann in Gneixendorf, whence he returned, on December 1st, to what proved to be his death-bed.

Let me give one more instance of the uncritical way in which biographers have condemned the personage in the Beethoven entourage on the strength of the mere word of another member of it. Grove (art. 'Beethoven' in the Dictionary) says that Dr. Wawruch 'appears to have been a poor practitioner and a pompous pedant,' who did not know how to treat the malady from which Beethoven was suffering. Grove gives as his authority for this the reminiscences of Stephan von Breuning. But Breuning was obviously prejudiced against Wawruch, no doubt because Beethoven was one of those irascible invalids who are quite 'impossible' from the point of view of the doctor and the nurse—himself conceived an antipathy against him when he found himself getting no better. Medical opinion of to-day justifies Wawruch in his diagnosis, and he seems to have treated the case—which was evidently hopeless from the first—as scientifically as any physician could have done in those days. Yet, as Thayer says, 'the criticisms of Breuning and others have pursued him through all the books devoted to Beethoven's life.'

The truth about Beethoven could only be arrived at by some investigator who would patiently sift the true from the false or the mistakes in the records of his friends, and—which is still more important—check every statement made by Beethoven about others. It has been too hastily assumed that because he was a great composer and a man of essential goodness of character he was always right and others always wrong in any matter of dispute between them. The fact is that Beethoven was more prone than most men to be unjust to those with whom he came in conflict, precisely because of his sense of the higher morality of his own motives, to say nothing of a character unusually headstrong, obstinate, and suspicious. With all his great gifts, he was not—let us say frankly—particularly intelligent apart from his music. He seems to have admired Goethe; but there is nothing in the whole of his letters to show that his taste in literature and art was particularly ed, or his knowledge of them at all extensive. At the end of his days he had difficulty with the simplest sum in addition. One of the most pathetic pictures we have of him is that of his nephew trying to teach him, on his death-bed, the elements of multiplication. He was prolific in the sentiments of the most unimpeachable order; that sort of excellence can, and often does, go along with something approaching stupidity in intellectual matters. His humour was primitive, his language, for the most part, uncouth and sometimes almost incoherent. He was purely and simply a magnificent musical instrument. It is a priori unlikely that a man who could not calculate sensibly the commonest details of his daily mundane life, who was notoriously suspicious, self-centred, and quick to take offence, could have had all the wisdom on his side in his dealings with those who disagreed with him. It is the habit of biographers, to take a typical case, to assume that Beethoven was the most innocent victim and the greatest sufferer in the affair of the nephew. An impartial study of all the evidence readily lends countenance to that assumption.

* There were originally about four hundred of these. Schindler destroyed many of them. The remainder (a hundred and eighty-three) are now in the National Library at Berlin.

A full and judicial statement of all the facts relating to Beethoven's life is to be found nowhere but in the biography by Thayer that is now for the first time made accessible in English. Alexander Wheelock Thayer was born in Massachusetts in 1817, and died in 1897. In his early thirties he conceived the ambition of writing an authentic Beethoven biography on the basis of the reminiscences of Schindler, Wegeler, Ries, and others. With this purpose in view he went to Europe in 1849, and spent two years making searches in different towns. After a visit to America he returned to Europe in 1854. A study of the Beethoven documents in the Berlin Royal Library convinced him that it was useless to rely implicitly on the published reminiscences of anyone. There was nothing for it but a first-hand examination of all the existing evidence, and the discovery of as much new evidence as possible. The remainder of his long life was devoted to this task. To support himself he had to take the post of American Consul at Trieste, the duties of which once interfered materially with his main work.

He went about his work with the most exemplary thoroughness. He interviewed 'every person of importance then living who had been in any way associated with Beethoven, or had personal collections of him'—Schindler, Hüttenbrenner (whose arms the composer died), Neate, Potter, the widow of the nephew Karl, Moscheles, Gerhard von Breuning (son of Beethoven's old friend, Stephan von Breuning), and many others. The Berlin Royal Library sent the Conversation Books to Trieste for him to study at his leisure. He examined every possible document, followed up every possible clue. In 1865 he had ready the manuscript of his first volume, carrying the record of Beethoven's life down to 1796. This was translated into German by Dr. Hermann Deiters, Bonn, and published in that language in 1866.

The second volume followed in 1872, and the third in 1879, both translated by Deiters; the record was now complete as far as 1816. Then the strain became too much for Thayer: his health worsened, and he never afterwards felt equal to the continuance of a task that had become more and more difficult as it neared the end—although he still had energy for other literary work. A suggestion made by Mr. H. E. Krehbiel that Thayer should complete the biography with the aid of an intelligent secretary fell through.

When Thayer died, in 1897, his papers were sent to his niece, Mrs. Jabez Fox, of Cambridge, Mass. Deiters was willing to revise the three published volumes for a second edition, and to write the fourth. For the latter purpose the papers were gone through by Mr. Krehbiel, and the necessary ones sent to Deiters, who had brought out a new edition of the first volume in 1891. Deiters then decided that before revising the second and third volumes he would complete the biography. This ran to two more volumes. The proofs of the fourth were hardly in his hands when he died, in 1907. The two final volumes were brought out in 1908 under the supervision of Dr. Hugo Riemann, who also produced the revised versions of vol. ii. and vol. iii., in 1910-11.

Then Mr. Krehbiel, at Mrs. Fox's request, took in hand the preparation of an English edition. He condensed the five German volumes, omitting the musical analyses and dissertations of Deiters, abolishing certain appendices and foot-notes, incorporating the substance of many letters in the text, and so on, using as much as possible of Thayer's original manuscript, and adhering to Thayer's purpose as expressed in a letter to Sir George Grove of 1895:

'Being as free as the German editors [he says] in respect of the portion of the biography which did not come directly from the pen of Thayer, the editor of this English edition [i.e., Mr. Krehbiel himself] chose his own method of presentation touching the story of the last decade of Beethoven's life, keeping in view the greater clearness and rapidity of narrative which, he believed, would result from a grouping of material different from that followed by the German editors in their adherence to the strict chronological method established by Thayer.'

Where the German editors differ from Thayer, as a rule Mr. Krehbiel lets the latter speak for himself, the differences being set forth in foot-notes. The material for this English edition was ready in July, 1914. The war delayed publication of it. In 1920 the Beethoven Association of New York, acting on the suggestion of Mr. O. G. Sonneck and Mr. Harold Bauer, devoted the proceeds of its concerts of the previous season to promoting the issue of these handsome and tasteful volumes.

Thayer's patient investigation of facts and unimpassioned statement of them help us to see Beethoven more nearly as he must have been than even the reminiscences of his friends can do. These volumes should give the quietus to many of the legends so dear to the sentimental biographer. It is commonly supposed that Beethoven as a composer had to fight all his life for recognition against an ignorant Press and an indifferent public. The facts are that his genius was recognised from the beginning, that contemporary criticism in general was very laudatory, that from an early stage of his career his name was linked with those of Mozart and Haydn, and that his name was a 'draw' for the Viennese concert-going public. There were dissentient voices, of course, but on the whole Beethoven met with not less but more recognition during his lifetime than falls to the lot of most men of genius. To try to make out that Vienna had no ears for any music but that of the Rossini type is to show a lamentable ignorance of the facts.

Thayer's handling of the affair of the nephew Karl, again, shows it in a different light from the usual one. Almost without exception, the biographers have held that all the virtue was on Beethoven's side in this affair, and all the vice on the side of Karl and his mother. No one can read the full record without feeling that the merits and demerits of each side about balance each other: if there is anybody who deserves our special sympathy it is Karl. The ordinary biographer seems to have found it impossible to place himself at the boy's point of view, still less at that of the mother. Beethoven's prejudice against the latter is well-known. He not only called her the Queen of Night; he made reckless statements about her that in these days would have subjected him to an action for slander, and possibly heavy damages. She was certainly no better than she should have been; but even a bad woman may have a sincere affection for her son, and resent her deceased husband's brother's attempt to assume the sole guardianship of him. It is significant that the Courts of the time, although they knew of her occasional moral lapses, were balanced between her and Beethoven in the matter. As for the nephew, is there not every reason to think that it was precisely Beethoven who unwittingly helped to drive him into evil courses? What sort of a companion was a gloomy, choleric, ill-mannered composer of middle age—and deaf into the bargain—for a high-spirited boy? Could anything be more pathetic than the evidence in Court of this little fellow of twelve at the inquiry into his running away from his uncle? 'Had his uncle maltreated him?' he was asked. He replied, 'He had punished him, but only when he deserved it; he had been maltreated only once, and that after his return, when his uncle threatened to throttle him.' To the question 'Where would he rather live—at his mother's or his uncle's?' he answered, 'He would like to live at his uncle's if he but had a companion, as his uncle was hard of hearing and he could not talk with him.' What boy would not have revolted against so gloomy a life, and conceal a dislike for the man who forced him to endure it. The conventional sentimental biographer will hold it that all the guilt was on Karl's side: Rom Rolland, for instance, thinks it 'a sad phenomenon' that 'the moral grandeur of his uncle, instead of doing him good, made him worse.' So much Mr. Pecksniff have talked. A boy of tender years could not be expected to endure constraint and misery merely because the man who inflicted them on him was the composer of some immortal works; and he would be much less likely to be impressed by the 'moral grandeur' of his uncle than by his moodiness, his frequent ill-temper, and his well-known violence of language when crossed. M. Rolland sees, again, evidence of nothing but Karl's turpitude in what he calls 'those terrible words, where his miserable soul appears so plainly uttered at the time of the boy's attempt at suicide.' 'I grew worse because my uncle wanted me to be better.' Terrible words they are indeed; but surely, to the normal unprejudiced man, they carry as much censure for Beethoven as for Karl. Beethoven's intentions were of the best: but a good deal of suffering has been caused in the world by the good intentions of 'moral' people who thought themselves better than their fellows.

Can we resist the conclusion that Beethoven plumed himself a little too much on his 'moral grandeur' (his letters are rather too full of reference to it), and on the strength of it was unduly given to interfering in the private affairs of other people? His brother Johann was no more fortunate in his matrimonial relations than the brother who was the father of Karl. Johann had had a liaison with a certain Therese Obermeyer, a girl of attractive appearance and, apparently, likeable character. As Thayer puts it, Johann 'became acquainted with her,* liked her, and made her his housekeeper and—something more.' Beethoven's 'moral grandeur' was instantly up in arms. His brother was then a man of thirty-five, shrewd, sensible, and in every way capable of looking after himself. Beethoven, though, as Thayer says, 'had no more right to meddle in his private affairs than any stranger,' went to Linz expressly 'with this purpose in view.'

'To come hither for this express object, and employ force to accomplish it, was an indefensible assumption of authority. Such, at all events, was Johann's opinion, and he refused to submit to his brother's dictation. Excited by opposition, Ludwig resorted to any and every means to accomplish his purpose. He saw the Bishop about it. He applied to the Civil authorities. He pushed the affair so earnestly as at last to obtain an order to the police to remove the girl to Vienna if, on a certain day, she should still be found in Linz. The disgrace to the poor girl; the strong liking which Johann had for her; his natural mortification at not being allowed to be master in his own house; these and other similar causes wrought him up almost to desperation.'

* She was the sister-in-law of the musician who occupied part of the large house owned by Johann at Linz.

Photograph by Hatley Bacon, 41, New Bond Street, W-1.

HAROLD SAMUEL

There was a quarrel between the brothers; the scene, says Thayer, 'was more disgraceful to Ludwig than Johann.' The apothecary did precisely what might have been expected: he married Therese. When the marriage turned out unhappily, Beethoven had only himself to thank for having given Johann the power 'to approach him as the author of his misfortune. Indeed, when the unhappy future came, Johann always declared that Ludwig had driven him into this marriage.' The composer's resentment against his brother endured to the end. Only on that assumption can we account for the misleading account of their final relations that we find in the dutiful pages of Schindler and reunions—an account which Thayer shows from the Conversation Books to be untrue. 'Moral grandeur' without a ballast of good sense, good temper, and ordinary human tolerance, can be a curse both to its possessor and to all who come in contact with him.

Mr. Krehbiel notes—and proves—that Beethoven was guilty of ... a number of lapses from high ideals of candour and justice in his treatment of his friends, and of a nice sense of honour and honesty in his dealings with his publishers; but at no time have these blemishes been so numerous or so patent as they are in his negotiations for the publication of the Missa Solemnis—a circumstance which is thrown into a particularly strong light by the frequency and vehemence of his protestations of moral rectitude in the letters which have risen like ghosts to accuse him, and by the strange paradox that the period is one in which his artistic thoughts and imagination dwelt in the highest regions to which they ever soared.'

Mr. Krehbiel's summary of the matter must be quoted in full:

'He was never louder in his protestations of business morality than when he was promising the Mass to four or more publishers practically at the same time, and giving it to none of them; never more apparently frank than when he was making ignoble use of a gentleman, whom he himself described as one of the best friends on earth, as an intermediary between himself and another friend to whom he was bound by business ties and childhood associations which challenged confidence; never more obsequious (for even this word must now be used in describing his attitude towards Franz Brentano) than after he had secured a loan from that friend in the nature of an advance on a contract which he never carried out; never more apparently sincere than when he told one publisher (after he had promised the Mass to another) that he should be particularly sorry if he were unable to give the Mass into his hands; never more forcefully and indignantly honest in appearance than when he informed still another publisher that the second had importuned him for the Mass ('bombarded' was the word), but that he had never even deigned to answer his letters. But even this is far from compassing the indictment: the counts are not even complete when it is added that in a letter he states that the publisher whom he had told it would have been a source of sorrow not to favour had never even been contemplated amongst those who might receive the Mass; that he permitted the friend to whom he first promised the score to tie up some of his capital for a year and more so that 'good Beethoven' should not have to wait a day for his money; that after promising the Mass to the third publisher he sought to create the impression that it was not the Missa Solemnis that had been bargained for, but one of two Masses which he had in hand.

It is abundantly evident that Beethoven was not the plaster saint the romantic biographers have made of him. No one will think much the worse of him for having been a man of mixed clay like the rest of us; indeed, his 'moral delinquencies,' like those of Wagner, make him a more interesting study to the psychologist. In any case, the whole truth is better than a number of half lies; and students not only of Beethoven but of human nature will be grateful to Thayer and Mr. Krehbiel for having brought the composer and the man into the one focus.

BRITISH PLAYERS AND SINGERS:

I.—HAROLD SAMUEL

THE MAN AND HIS VIEWS

When Harold Samuel plays Bach he has a way of happily focussing the predilections of a dozen different sorts of music-lovers. The lions and the lambs, the simple and the supercilious, meet harmoniously on this ground. Various notions of music find for once a common denominator. The genial pianist has such a way with him that all the disparate types in the group at once amiably compose themselves. 'Now, smile a little, look pleasant!' the photographers say; but this clever focusser gets us, without a word, into the right attitude.

Where did Bach 'come in' before Mr. Samuel's day in the London pianoforte recital? In transcriptions mostly. Liszt's transcriptions of the Organ Fugues almost alone were not beneath the notice of the virtuosos. Then the Chromatic Fantasia and the Italian Concerto had concert properties which brought them the attention refused to the humble suites, partitas, and clavier-fugues. But it was 'the thing' to transcribe; we had the Goldberg Variations transcribed, toccatas, the Chromatic Fantasia, and even the Forty-Eight transcribed. Came Mr. Samuel, with a horror of 'octavising' Bach, also with no disdain for the least of mere two-part inventions. He rashly declined to make the music any more difficult, he even made no fuss about any difficulties at all. There the music was on paper. All to be done was simply to put it down on the pianoforte! One had merely to sit there (such was the illusion, at least) and let the music speak for itself. Wasn't the music good enough? It was so good that we all smiled and looked pleasant; but, so far from the figure of the photographer and his ordeal holding good, everybody liked the focussing, went again and again (six days in succession to Wigmore Hall last summer), and will henceforth, whenever the chance comes.

THE INFANT SAMUEL, PIANIST

The illusion that one has only to think less of himself than the music and that then his Bach will sound like Mr. Samuel's goes, of course, the way of illusions. The illusion gone, people were even left saying, 'I feel I can never again, after that, potter about with the Forty-Eight myself.' The aspirant conceived the possibility of following step by step the way by which Mr. Samuel had gone to reach the consummation of playing the best of all keyboard music with the air of, not an interpreter, but the mouthpiece of the music itself. He affronts and questions, then, the man himself, only to find that the beginnings of Mr. Samuel's art reach back beyond the beginnings of Mr. Samuel's memory.

'Fond relations [he tells the inquirer] have informed me that I began at the pianoforte at the age of eighteen months. At two and a half years I was, I am told, playing the pianoforte, standing on tip-toe. My first teacher was my sister, her lesson lasted an hour, in which time I learnt the names of the notes on the keyboard and on paper. At four I composed a love-song, dedicated to my mother.'

The family, Londoners and Jewish, were not markedly musical, save a great-uncle, Isaac Nathan (see Grove), friend of Byron, Hebrew scholar, opera-singer, and composer of Hebrew melodies, operas, and ballads, such as Why are you wandering here, I pray? He died at Sydney. Harold Samuel was born in London forty-two years ago.

'At seven I had a month of real lessons from Walter Fitton. At that time I knew much of Sullivan, operas like Faust, and Mendelssohn. If I went to a concert I played the programme through on the pianoforte afterwards, and was a disturber of family parties by exclaiming at wrong notes and singers who were out of tune. Raphael Roche, a grandson of Moscheles, taught me when I was nine. He took me through the Beethoven Sonatas and was the first to instil in me a love for Bach.

The "Little" C minor Prelude was my first introduction, and then the F minor Prelude from Book II. of the Forty-Eight—to-day still, for me, one of the lovely treasures of all art. But the real revelation was when I was ten, and in an old shop at Kilburn picked up three of the Partitas for 6d. I threw over Beethoven. I mastered the Partitas in a fortnight, and all my spare coppers (for the family circumstances were narrow) went in buying Bach at that second-hand shop. At twelve I had my first complete copy of the Forty-Eight.'

Isaac Albeniz, visiting London in 1893, gave some lessons to the fourteen year old Samuel, who played as a deputy for his master one night at concert at the Grafton Galleries. (The Evening News the next day announced that 'Señor Albeniz' played with his customary skill and delicacy. 'Albeniz,' says Mr. Samuel,

'... was a consummate musician; indolent; and the most sympathetic, the least intimidating of masters. His teaching was generally musical rather than technical. His own playing was marvellously delicate in Mozart, and he understood a perfectly satisfying rubato.'

The youth's progress was variously chequered. He failed three times to obtain a scholarship at the Royal College of Music. He had the queer and still profitable experience of playing nightly in a London tap-room, accompanying red-nosed comedians and any volunteering vocalist, all for five shillings a week. He conducted in a small Kilburn theatre, innocent of any special skill but helped out by a friendly contra-bassist who undertook to give him the cues. He was seventeen when he eventually entered the Royal College studying composition with Stanford and pianoforte with Dannreuther.

'Dannreuther [he says] was one of the biggest personalities the College has ever known, a head chock-full of learning. In the days when Wagnerians and Brahmsians were in hostile camps he had enough vision to be both Brahmsian and Wagnerian. His teaching was rather in the sense of interpretation than technique. I myself was already a teacher when a College student—I had to teach perforce on account of my budget, and a teacher I have not ceased to be for twenty-five years.'

ON THE PLAYING OF BACH

The inquirer seeks to pin Mr. Samuel down to the question of playing Bach, to his playing of Bach. Can a function so easy-seeming, so natural, lend itself to the subject's conscious analysis? Well, it can be analysed up to a point, and Mr. Samuel amiably does his best. An American critic, an enthusiast for Poe, once wrote a study of The Raven, and in preparation read no author but Poe and no poem but The Raven for three years before. This is precisely not Mr. Samuel's method.

'To do justice in a concert devoted to one man, to Bach or Beethoven, one quite particularly must know well other men and other idioms of the art. He knows not Bach who knows Bach only. The executant can't know about too many sorts of music. I venture that to know about music-hall music and to know what constitutes the difference between a good and a bad music-hall song may be a sort of help to the grasping of some element in Beethoven or Bach. There is much more general humanity in their music than some austere folk would willingly believe. The more you cultivate one man's music in public the more you should in private, for your own enriching, cultivate others.'

And Mr. Samuel is led to aver that he probably knows more Beethoven by heart than Bach, though not primarily reckoned a Beethoven player; and also has unnumbered notes of Mozart and Schubert at his finger-tips.

As for defending the playing of harpsichord music on the pianoforte—the proof of the pudding,' &c. If, in the result, you like his playing, accept this paradox:

'While playing Bach on the pianoforte, remember ever the different instrument for which the music was written. Think of the clavichord as you strike the concert grand. And as you strike with this reserve in your mind, shun, too, any bringing of the music up-to-date.'

Not logical, no doubt; but a compromise that is justified in its fruits—a happy middle course between a pedantic restriction of Bach to the archaic instruments and the gulfs of vandalism waiting on modern transcribers.

And Mr. Samuel's very passion against transcribers is no idle fixe. (Any Frenchman reading will groan aloud at English realism and incapacity for general ideas.) There are cases, says Mr. Samuel—the D major Organ Fugue really sounds better, I think, on the pianoforte.' And he has been known to transcribe certain choral preludes.

Again, in editing Bach, he is generally against additional directions and phrasing. He is anxious himself to set his hand to editing. 'I know, for instance, no satisfactory edition of the Partitas, and I should jump at a chance of publishing them, as I think they ought to be.' Now on actual points of execution:

'Above all, impeccable neatness—an evenness, a ripple. But not too much of a legato ripple. There is commonly too much legato in Bach playing. The right general touch is not pure legato and not actual staccato either—something between. I herewith declare my abomination: rallentandos and pauses in the course of a piece of Bach. It means a softening of the rhythm—softening in the worst sense, as you say, "softening of the brain." It means an expressiveness that belongs to a different kind of music and is outside of Bach's art. It is an enfeeblement, a letting of blood! I also ban it, in the suites, when you get an "alternative" gavotte, minuet, or musette, acting as the trio to a scherso. Don't stop at the end of the first gavotte—there is no cause to pause, nor is there when the first gavotte is taken up again.

'That reminds me that people talk of repetitions in Bach's suites and variations, and even of "endless repetitions." I deny that there is any such thing, any identical repetition. When at a double-bar you go back, the music the second time is not the same. The music is older with all the experience of the first statement. It cannot be the same again. Is your second ascent of a mountain, your second visit to Florence ever "the same" as your first? It is so different that the differences seem more to you than anything.

'Take the Allemande from the D major Partita. At the double-bar you have scaled the peak of the dominant, it is a date in time from which there is no going back. You "repeat," or I at least "repeat" (and shall, for all the words of the whole race of critics!). Is the second climbing of the mountain "the same"? Life, of course, never is the same twice over. I know there are mountains not worth climbing—but hardly in Bach. Does the theme return again late in the D minor Violin Chaconne or the Goldberg Variations? It returns with all a life's experience added to its visage. It said before, "Such-and-such a thing is," and now "Such a thing is, and now you know why it is."

'How is a fugue to be best played?'

'By bringing out the parts without labouring, I suggest. Do not write out the subject in red ink. Especially do not stress it when it is on the top. A little more tone sometimes, when it is in an inner part, but it best stands out by the phrasing that is characteristic of it, not by volume of tone. The differing expression given to the subject is dictated by the significance of the particular harmonies prevailing.'

SAMUEL, THE COMPOSER

Mr. Samuel, whom an occasional word will lure into talking beguilingly about Bach till bed-time, is harder to draw on the subject of another composer, Harold Samuel. His songs, such as the dainty Diaphenia and My Sweeting, are his best-known works. He wrote song-settings for As you Like It at His Majesty's Theatre (1907) and for an unsuccessful play The Two Pins in the next year. A comic-opera, The Honourable Phil, ran for seventy nights, a career which, though respectable, did not rival The Mikado and so drew on it from W. S. Gilbert the witticism, 'The honourable evidently does not fill!'

The mention of the war-time song Jogging Along even brings the faintest of blushes to its composer's cheek. Very solemn people may think it incompatible with a true devotion to Bach! The history of Jogging Along is this: A friend heard Mr. Samuel strumming a tune that had come into his head. 'What a rattling good marching-song for soldiers! [It was early in the war.] Suppose I fit some words to it?' he said, and did. With happy results all round. Nothing to blush about.

The inquirer asks for news of his projects. 'A recital at Paris soon, perhaps,' he said. 'A tour in South Africa next summer—with examinations, recitals, and also a trip to the Victoria Falls. And another week of Bach in London next year sometime.' It will be a week of ascending mountain-tops, not necessarily those of last summer. For a week and for two weeks one could have Mr. Samuel playing Bach, and still leave undrawn on a large hoard in the caverns of his memory.

C.

CHARLES KŒCHLIN

BY M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

(Concluded from December number, page 837)

IV.

Genuinely original, live form (that is, form which is coherent and logical musically, not solely by virtue of mechanically-planned relationships or symbolic and other literary intentions) is always determined by the inherent properties of the primary components—the motives. In other words, original form is something evolved from within; not imposed from without.

The very constitution of a motive that is a live thing, and not a mere fabrication, predetermines certain lines of expansion and working-out as natural—even necessary—and precludes certain others as unsuitable.

These two points, which afford the key to the whole problem of appraising form from the artistic point of view and not merely in accordance with theory, are so often overlooked by those who write on form, that the temptation to harp upon them on every possible occasion is hard to resist. But the baldest statement will suffice so far as we have to deal with form in Kœchlin's works, which afford the widest variety of illustration of the above two-fold principle.

Nothing is more characteristic of Kœchlin than his fondness for long-sustained melodies which seem to continue endlessly, curve following curve and pulsation following pulsation: tunes never artificially protracted, but carried onward by the momentum of their own vitality.

Often in his shorter pieces the form lies solely in the expansion of one design pursuing its natural course of evolution without contrasting episodes or adjuncts. In Paysages et Marines two instances stand out which have already been mentioned for their rare beauty: Le Chant du Chevrier and Poème Virgilien. In the former the melodic arabesque proceeds unremittingly, in broad phrases amply punctuated, until (at the third page) a repetition occurs, heralding the end of the tune, which gently merges into the ultimate vibrations of the harmonic setting. In the Poème Virgilien the composer dallies a while with each arabesque in turn, repeating it once or twice before proceeding further, leading up to a slow, regular, downward progression, and concluding with an ample and definite plagal cadence.

Other pieces in the same set consist merely of a few touches, a succession of simple patterns related by their tonal and rhythmic character and their expressive properties, with no attempt at development. Such is Sur la Falaise (which, if considered not in its expressive character but solely in its build and in certain of its aspects, will be found not unreminiscent of Schönberg in his Op. 19). Others are built in accordance with the rules of ternary form (La Chanson des Pommiers en Fleur), or in variation form (Chanson de Pêcheurs—with which compare the second movement of the fifth Sonatina); or, though representing no type of form included in the usual nomenclature, will consist of the close working-out of one motive or several, generally in pithy polyphonic style (Soir d'Été and various instances in the Sonatinas).

It is when we study the form of the Sonatinas that we see how very much at ease and how versatile the composer can be, resorting to classical modes of development or not, passing from symmetry to asymmetry, in accordance with the true spirit and potentialities of his themes. Here are a few notes which may serve to illustrate the point:

First Sonatina.—Allegro moderato, in simple ternary form. After the first theme has fully unfurled its convolution the second intervenes, affording a marked contrast; but the first soon reappears, and plays the chief part until the end. Then comes a brief Andante, a perfectly classical 'song without words,' followed by an equally brief Allegro moderato, monothematic, which is, in simpler and more symmetrical form, another instance of that play from arabesque to arabesque upon which the Poème Virgilien is founded. The Finale, technically speaking, is just an exposition, which leaves off at the very time when the real fun of working-out according to plan might be expected to begin. Yet it is perfectly rounded, balanced, and satisfactory.

The first movement is in C major, with the second motive in F major; the Andante is in E major, the Allegro moderato in G major, and the Finale in F, with whimsical modulations into the region of sharps. The closing notes, although the harmonies cannot be analysed otherwise than as in F major, unmistakably bring back the feeling of

C major—so that honour is saved. The third Sonatina will show that Kœchlin does not always make a point of saving it in accordance with school rules, although the tonal character of his music is never equivocal or unsteady.

Second Sonatina.—I. First motive exposed in canonic form, followed by a second motive. Three repetitions of this first exposition bring the piece to its close. They vary slightly in length, but there is no working-out, only a few crisp and telling modulations. A study of the cadences to each of the eight statements will show how closely the traditional tone relationships are observed.

II. A Sicilienne in pure ternary form. III. The Finale is the beautiful Andante whose theme was given in the December issue, p. 831, Ex. 1. It is really monothematic; but a fine, very simple, application, within a small compass, of the principle of amplificative variation introduces the following element of contrast:

Third Sonatina.—I. Prelude, Allegro moderato. II. Short monothematic Assez animé. III. Allegretto, in simple ternary form. IV. Finale, Allegro con Moto, whose elements are provided by the tune quoted on p. 831, Ex. 2, the last bar serving as a counter-subject which is played-off against, or in combination with, the opening motive.

The first movement is in B major, the second in G major, the third in E dorian, ending upon the A major triad. The last begins in C major, and, after the polytonal episode of which part is quoted on p. 833, Ex. 12, reverts to C major, but ends as follows:

Fourth Sonatina.—I. Minuet, C major. II. Andante con Moto, F major, ternary. III. Intermezzo, A minor, monothematic (except if we choose to consider as a fresh motive the inversion which makes a brief appearance). IV. Finale, Rondo form, regular, very simple, yet enhanced with bold, effective modulations.

Fifth Sonatina.—I. Allegro moderato, written in polyphonic style, and affording another instance of form conditioned by each arabesque in turn working its way naturally, with the additional point of technical interest that all intervening motives or counter-subjects are closely related to the main theme. II. Andante, colour variations with one brief contrasting element. III. Fugue, with Coda. IV. Finale, which is the longest thing in the Sonatinas and in the whole of Kœchlin's published pianoforte works, and one of the most beautiful. The strict logic and masterful simplicity of the working-out, the close affinities between the various elements, render it specially interesting for the analyst.

From the chief motive:

and from this variant of its second segment (B):

Kœchlin derives a wealth of terse, genuinely imaginative developments. Without going into details, we may note, for instance, that the inversion of the chief motive, far from smacking of perfunctoriness and scholasticism, introduces a fresh and valuable element of interest and buoyancy:

and that even an episode apparently so remote as has its pedigree plainly revealed by this appearance of (c) in slightly altered rhythm:

I have but lightly touched upon the attractiveness of those five Sonatinas, all instinct with humour and tenderness, crisp, exhilarating, glowing. Circumstances compel me to deal even more briefly with the several works which have appeared since the previous instalments of this article were written.

Of these the most important is the first String Quartet. So far as can be judged from a cursory survey of the parts (the score not being published) it shows Kœchlin's imaginativeness at its richest and best, working along lines that are in every respect in accordance with tradition.

L'Abbaye is a suite for chorus, orchestra, and organ, finished nearly twenty years ago—another instance of purely classical writing. What is published consists of an orchestral Prelude, an Ave Maria (for female voices and organ), a Kyrie and Requiem, an organ Prelude, an Ave Verum, an O Salutaris (soprano and tenor soli, chorus, orchestra, and organ), a Benedictus (female voices and orchestra), and a Sanctus. There exists a second part, longer, with an important Finale, which is not yet published.

A set of twelve easy little pieces for pianoforte (included, as is the String Quartet, in the first portfolio of La Musique de Chambre, of which a review is given in another part of this issue) has come to provide the possibility of music by Kœchlin being included in the repertory of the veriest beginners. They are written in the same imaginative, breezy, genial spirit as the Paysages et Marines, and contain a good deal that many besides children will enjoy. From the educational point of view they should be found most valuable, for they contain, among other things, all that is needed to develop the infant student's sense of phrasing and balance.

A few biographical notes will perhaps be found useful.

Charles Kœchlin was born of Alsatian parents at Paris, in 1867. After receiving the usual course of classical and scientific education he entered the École Polytechnique, where he found time to study harmony in private. In 1890, renouncing the higher mathematics, he entered the Paris Conservatoire, where his teachers of composition were Massenet and (afterwards) Fauré. He never entered the competition for the 'Prix de Rome,' and left the Conservatoire without award or diploma of any sort. Since that time he has been hard at work, as the list of his compositions shows. He is very retiring in disposition, and has never taken any steps to speed the performance and publication of his own works, some of which were engraved at his own expense.

Here is the list of his published music:

VOCAL.

Rondels (three books) (Rouart et Lerolle).
Songs (three books) (Rouart et Lerolle).
L'Abbaye (full score and vocal score) (Joanin).

INSTRUMENTAL.

First String Quartet (Sénart).
Twelve Easy Pieces for Pianoforte (Sénart).
Five Sonatinas (Mathot).
Paysages et Marines (two books) (Mathot).

His principal unpublished works were mentioned in the first instalment of this article (Musical Times, November 1921, p. 759).

OUR LOST OPERATIC LEAD

By HERMAN KLEIN

Gone are the vaunted palmy days—and brilliant nights—of the 'Royal Italian Opera' that flourished at Covent Garden in the Victorian era. 'A good riddance, too,' quoth the youthful highbrow who knew them not (and has not, moreover, the smallest idea what they were like). Well, who shall say? Is it better to be wholly bereft of great singers, never to hear consummate vocal art in the theatre, than it would be to put up with 19th-century opera still in a measure clogged, though by no means hide-bound, with old-fashioned tradition? For my own part I have a strong opinion on the subject, and—precisely because I do know—it is entirely at variance with that expressed by the youthful personage above quoted. I have the further satisfaction of being aware that at the present moment some five or six of the larger cities of the United States are backing my opinion by giving opera 'on the grand scale' with the costliest and most eminent artists that Europe can furnish. If we are not doing the same thing here in London it is for a simple reason: we had already begun to 'lose the habit' long before the war; and now we have not only lost it, but we could not afford to indulge in the luxury of resuming it even if we wished.

The particular event which gave rise to these reflections was one which struck me so forcibly that I felt constrained to comment upon it in a letter which appeared over my signature in The Times of December 6. It was the announcement, in a cable message from the New York correspondent of that paper, of the début at the Metropolitan Opera House of a new prima donna of European fame who had never sung in England. It was not the first time, of course, that such a thing had happened. Opera-singers of renown have occasionally in the past been heard in America before being heard in London. Fourteen years ago Chaliapin sang at the Metropolitan, whilst yet a stranger to this country; though that was only because the Grand Opera Syndicate did not choose to pay him the terms which he thought himself worth. The case of the Czecho-Slovakian soprano, Madame Marie Jeritzka, who had such an enthusiastic reception at New York last month, stood upon a different footing. Here was a star, said to be of the first magnitude, whom we could not exploit at Covent Garden if we would; whose extraordinary talent had recently aroused fanatical applause in billion-mark and billion-kronen capitals like Berlin and Vienna: whose lovely face and beautiful voice had combined to make Puccini declare her the most magnificent Tosca he had ever seen, heard, or coached in the part; yet who, like Madame Galli-Curci (but with even greater certainty of success) could afford to skip London on her way across the Atlantic, without troubling to obtain the opinions of English critics, or even the approval of an Albert Hall audience!

Why I felt such a pang of resentment when I read of Madame Jeritzka's New York triumph I can hardly tell, unless it was because I realised for the first time how completely we had fallen from our high estate where opera is concerned. No doubt I ought to have realised it before, for this was not the first time by many (during the past ten or twelve years, let us say) that New York had taken the lead in introducing to the world new singers, new composers, and new operas. But if we could not hold our own we have been at least in a position to compete; whereas now the best we can do is to look on and admire. And in the meantime we are gradually losing touch with the great singers. What do opera-goers in this country know of the wonderful voices and the splendid talent of the contemporary international artists to whom America is willing (and able) to pay millions of dollars every season from November until April? How many people on this side of the ocean know the names of these present-day stars, the majority of whom have never sung here at all?

A few of them are perhaps familiar—for instance, the tenor Martinelli; the even more distinguished baritone, Titta Ruffo; the now-famous American tenor, Orville Harrold; the great soprano leggero Madame Galli-Curci; that charming singer, Claire Dux; the inimitable Emmy Destinn; besides Frau Frieda Hempel, Miss Geraldine Farrar, Madame D'Alvarez, and the much-praised contralto, Madame Matzenauer. But there are some whose names are utterly unknown here. Who has heard, for example, of Signor Beniamino Gigli, of the Metropolitan Opera House, of whom it has been declared on high authority that 'there is no lyric tenor to-day with a voice more beautiful or a more thorough mastery of the art of the bel canto'? No less ignorant are we concerning the rare qualities of Joseph Schwarz, the Russian baritone, said to be 'the most remarkable Rigoletto that ever' &c.; the tenor Muratore, the Italian baritones, Giacomo Rimini and Riccardo Stracciari, the dramatic sopranos, Rosa Raisa and Rosa Ponsella, or the Spanish soprano, Lucrezia Bori. Enough that all these are said to be singers of the first rank, the like of whom we are no longer privileged to listen to at Covent Garden, or, indeed, anywhere else.

Hence it is that I deplore not merely the loss of our lead in operatic matters, which, after all, is only a sentimental question, but the danger of losing our operatic vocal standard, a much more serious thing. That we are unable now—and may not for several years be in a position—to pay the price for these expensive song-birds is obvious enough. Nor are we, happily, compelled to forego the pleasure of listening to opera on that account. We are not exactly pining for operatic stars—far from it. But we must, by hook or by crook, keep up the standard of our singers, and it behoves our native companies, old and new, to avail themselves of the very best talent that they can afford to engage.

This aspect of the question was pointedly dealt with in the admirable article by Mr. H. C. Colles, entitled 'Opera in England,' which appeared in The Times of December 10. He believes that we have enough native talent in the country to make the best operatic artists we can wish for, but that very little of it seems ever to arrive at its destination on the stage. 'There is a hitch somewhere,' and he wisely adds, 'only by removing this hitch, whatever it may be, and beginning to make intelligent and consistent use of the native talent available, will it be possible to face the accusation of "lost standards" without flinching.'

THE BACH-ELGAR FUGUE

BY HARVEY GRACE

Not often is an orchestral work so immediately and emphatically a popular success as Elgar's version of Bach's C minor Fugue has proved to be. So far it has been included in three* programmes at Queen's Hall; on the first and third occasions it was repeated in answer to a vociferous encore, and on the second its reception was sufficiently enthusiastic to have justified a repetition had the conductor been that way inclined. Indeed, at the third concert one felt there was a little danger of an encore becoming a convention as it was for so long with the Jarnfeldt Præludium, the Dvorák Humoresque, and the Solemn Melody.

This warm reception of a Bach Fugue by two widely different types of audience—the first and third concerts were of the Goossens series, and the second a London Symphony concert—suggests a few reflections on the principle of transcription, and on the anomalous position in this country of some of the finest music Bach ever wrote. The latter point arises through the surprising fact that the Fugue was obviously unfamiliar to many of the audience.

First, however, something may be said in reply to the mere handful of critics who shook their heads and turned down their thumbs. So far as their adverse judgment was based on their dislike of the music itself, or on their objection to certain details of the scoring, we hear them with respect. No piece of music, and no method of orchestration is for every palate, and all one can do in such cases is to express sympathy with those whose fastidious taste rejects fare which practically all the other musicians present absorbed with gusto.

But when some of these critics condemn Elgar's version of the Fugue as 'vandalism' they are on ground where they may be challenged. They should make it clear whether the 'vandalism' lies in the details of the scoring or in the mere act of transcription. Probably most of the objections are on the former ground. We have heard the question 'What are the big drum and cymbals, the triangle and glockenspiel, and the harp and tambourine doing in a Bach fugue?' It would be as reasonable to ask what they are doing in the orchestra. Who is to say what compositions should be barred to them? The objection recalls the comment of a Paris Conservatoire professor when d'Indy asked him what he thought of Franck's Symphony: 'That a symphony?' (contemptuously); 'My dear sir, who ever heard of writing for the cor Anglais in a symphony? Just mention a single symphony by Haydn or Beethoven introducing the cor Anglais . . . Franck's music may be whatever you please, but it certainly will never be a symphony!'

If the purists object to the transcription as such, they have but a poor case, seeing that the principle has been sanctioned by time and by the practice of all the great composers. There is no need to labour the point that Bach himself was an old hand at transcription. It will suffice to remind ourselves that a fair portion of his activities in this way were in connection with the organ. In addition to the batch of vocal solos which he changed into chorale preludes (a group that includes the popular Sleepers, wake! piece), he made keyboard versions of his own Violin Fugue in G minor and of about twenty String Concertos by Vivaldi and others—making extensive alterations and repairs in some of the material, the old vandal! As an instance of a move in the opposite direction we have the Adagio of the third Trio-Sonata for organ (or pedal clavicembalo), which he afterwards arranged for flute, violin, and clavier. That his transcriptions were usually from concerted instruments to a solo instrument of the keyboard type was no doubt due to the practical reason that the latter guaranteed more frequent (and better) performance.

* A fourth performance has been given since this was written.

Nor are modern orchestral versions of Bach's organ works scarce. Sir Henry Wood's arrangements of some of the Trio-Sonata movements and of the Toccata in F have long been popular at Queen's Hall. Wetzler has arranged for full orchestra the whole of the Trio-Sonata in E flat. Two Germans, whose names I forget, have scored the Passacaglia and the Toccata in E. Even military bands have begun to play the organ works. I heard recently of a fine performance of the 'great' G minor Fugue by one of our crack bands at Queen's Hall at a Saturday evening concert, given (I think) by the Polytechnic. And a well-known North of England musician tells me that he has in hand some arrangements of the organ fugues for brass bands. So far from creating a dangerous precedent, then, Sir Edward is merely following a well-established custom. Yet who would think so, reading such a comment as this:

... that strange example of bad taste—the Elgar orchestrated version of Bach's Fugue in C minor, for organ. These megaphone devices may be, indeed are, clever; but after all Bach knew something about orchestral composition, and if he had felt his work orchestrally, he could have employed that medium for its expression. The thing is clever, but indecent.

Now this was written by a critic who has been attending London concerts for years. Over and over again he must have heard such things as Wood's orchestral versions of the Bach Toccata, the Trio-Sonata movements, Moussorgsky's Picture Gallery, Arcadelt's Ave Maria, Rachmaninov's C sharp minor Prelude, Raff's Cavatina, &c., &c., and transcriptions by various people of Weber's Invitation to the Valse, the Bee's Wedding and Spring Song, of Mendelssohn, Chopin's Funeral March, and others too numerous to mention. Most of these composers 'knew something about orchestral composition'—rather more than Bach, some of them, for obvious reasons; has this critic protested against any of these transcriptions as 'megaphone devices,' 'bad taste,' 'indecent'?

Apparently what has caused the outcry from a few purists is the freedom with which Elgar has treated the Fugue. His version bears much the same relation to an ordinary musical transcription as a free translation of a book bears to a literal one. Nobody pretends that the latter has any value beyond a scholastic or some other utilitarian purpose. The greater its literal fidelity to the original the less likely is it to be of any artistic importance. We should go too far if we asserted that the rule held good in musical transcription, but we may safely say that it applies far more than is generally realised. A transcription that sounds like a transcription is so far a failure. Had this Bach fugue been transcribed for orchestra on the ordinary 'safe' lines, it would still have been a fine piece of music, and therefore enjoyable, but we should not have been able to forget its origin. We should have been conscious all the time that we were listening to a work that had been haled from the dusk of the organ-loft into the fierce light of the concert-room. The flavour of the 'voluntary' might have been so pronounced as to set ecclesiastically minded laymen among the audience feeling for threepenny bits. The supreme merit of the Elgar version is that its idiom is that of the orchestra, and therefore one gets an impression of a work conceived for orchestra. Yet with all its sumptuous decoration, it contains no note that is not present or implied in the original. The strong harmonic basis and the sinewy counterpoint of Bach are never obscured, hence there is not the feeling of a misfit that results from (say) a folk-tune harmonized with outré chords. Thus, when for the original

Elgar gives us

the passage is essentially the same, plus a flash produced by the whip-up of the violins and woodwind. And equally justifiable (if such good things ever need justification) is this brilliant bit of figuration a few bars later, where, against Bach's given out by the brass, we have this flourish by the strings and part of the wood-wind:

The score contains many such passages, but it should be noted that the sense of growth which is a feature of the fugal form is maintained by such decorative treatment being reserved until the movement is well under way, and even then its richest application is held back until the da capo.

One is tempted to touch on other purple patches, e.g., the amazing demisemiquaver passage for trumpets a few bars before the end (a passage which looks impossible and is no doubt difficult, but which has 'come off' brilliantly on each of the five times I have heard the work); the delicious scurry down the scale by the flutes and piccolo against a harp glissando in tenths just before the middle section; the dramatic treatment of the little chromatic counter-theme in this portion; the shakes for the brass and the use of the percussion just before the da capo, and (too small to be called a patch, but a very impressive point) the first ominous boom of the big drum at the last entry of the subject before the middle section; and so on. In fact, the exposition once plainly delivered, something is always happening. And, knowing old Bach's fondness for experiments in registration and other means of obtaining colour, we may fairly assume that he would have enjoyed every bit of it. Not a hair would he turn at the triangle and tambourine which have so shocked the purists; and as for the glockenspiel, it would merely remind him pleasantly of that which was attached to his Weimar organ, and which he stipulated should be kept in order—and not for mere show, we may be certain!

Spitta says that the greatest of Bach's organ works are the only instrumental essays that are sufficiently grand in conception and perfect in form to be placed beside the symphonies of Beethoven, and, on the whole, the contention is sound. Nevertheless, how many musicians are really familiar with them? What should we think of the musical state of a country in which Beethoven's Symphonies were never heard in concert-halls save in the form of pianoforte solo arrangements? Yet that is the case with Bach's organ works.

When will London follow the example of Paris in this matter? There one may occasionally find an orchestral programme including an organ solo—say, a Bach or Franck work. At Queen's Hall we may hear a pianoforte, violin, 'cello, even a flute solo, but never one on the organ. Yet it is reasonable to suppose that a public which enjoys the '48, the Suites, the Partitas, and the Brandenburg Concertos would take no less delight in the organ works of the composer, seeing that the best of it shows him at his height. As it is, only the handful of concert-goers who happen also to be church-goers or attendants at organ recitals have a chance of hearing these splendid works on the instrument for which they were written. This is another way of saying that they never really hear them at all, for the pianoforte arrangements necessarily fail to reproduce the characteristics that make them so fine on the organ—the sustained tone in the long chains of suspensions, the unyielding pedal points, and the tonal weight the music calls for, specially in the bass. Only an instrument of such ample scale as a big modern organ can answer all these demands. The real greatness of the best of Bach's organ music will never be grasped by the public until it is frequently performed at concerts either as organ solos or transcribed for orchestra.

It is arguable, indeed, that the latter form is to be preferred in the case of a few of the biggest of these works. Even the most enthusiastic organist must feel at times that, fine as the instrument is, it cannot do full justice to such gigantic conceptions as the 'Wedge' Prelude and Fugue, the 'Great' G minor, the B minor, and a few others. An organ of the right ample resources is rare save in buildings so large and resonant that, if the music is played with the power and pace it so often demands, the details are lost. On the other hand, if we decide that the beauty of the polyphony must be shown we can do so only by the adoption of a steady tempo and quiet registration, in which case the impetus of the music is destroyed and its fire damped down. Pianoforte transcriptions do at least retain the animation of the original, though they lose almost everything else. No medium but the orchestra can show to the fullest advantage all the great qualities of these works—their brilliance, texture, growth, and climax. Only when one has heard the Elgar version of the C minor Fugue a few times does he fully realise that Bach's grandest organ music is immeasurably greater than its medium. It can carry the panoply of modern orchestration with ease, and gain in the process, whereas some modern works so treated are merely smothered, and shown to be essentially small, e.g., Weber's Invitation to the Valse, as orchestrated by Weingartner. If we feel this in the case of the C minor Fugue—which, be it remembered, is one of the shorter organ works—what a revelation would be some of the biggest, treated with similar skill! I have heard this Elgar transcription called 'a blazing indiscretion.' Well, we sit through so much music that merely smoulders, or at most gives out an occasional spark, that we may thank Heaven for some that blazes, even at the cost of head-shaking among the purists—indeed, the latter is an additional ground for thankfulness. Let us hope that Sir Edward has a few more 'indiscretions' of the same kind up his sleeve. Given music so vital and treatment so brilliant as in this case, we can do with lots of such 'vandalism.'

THE ORIGIN OF 'SAMSON AND DELILAH'

BY CAMILLE SAINT-SAËNS
(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell)

Some years ago an old melomaniac who was in the habit of visiting me called my attention to the subject of Samson, with a view to the production of an oratorio—a form of music which at the time was in considerable favour. Owing to modern progress, this is a form which can no longer be utilised. . . . Nowadays we have only orchestral concerts. An exception is made in the case of La Damnation de Faust because of its assured financial success.

I had recently made a charming acquaintance, Fernand Lemaire, an amateur poet, who was connected with my family by marriage. Some of his poems I had set to music, and I now suggested to him the writing of an oratorio. 'An oratorio!' he replied, 'no, let it be an opera.' And we decided for an opera. No sooner did the matter get abroad, however, than there was a general outcry of protest. A Biblical opera! All the same, though legendary opera was in fashion, I did not allow myself to become discouraged. My poet had written the first two Acts; I also had scribbled a few notes—legible to myself alone—of the first Act and the whole of the second. Nevertheless—almost incredible to relate—apart from the sketch of the Prelude, the opera existed only in my head, and wishing to give a few friends some idea of it at my home, I wrote down the music of the three rôles, without a note of the orchestral score.

I have forgotten the names of the three singers—whom, naturally, I accompanied from memory, seeing that, with the exception of the vocal parts, nothing whatever had been committed to writing.

The audience, small though specially chosen—among them being Anton Rubinstein—sat there in stony silence. The composer received not the faintest acknowledgment, even of mere politeness.

A little later the same two Acts were played at my house by Augusta Holmès, Henri Regnault—a very good singer possessed of a delightful tenor voice—and Romain Bussine. The result was a little more satisfactory, though so slightly encouraging that I finally decided to do nothing further with so chimerical a work.

Years passed . . .

One day, in Germany, where I had gone to take part in a series of musical festivals presided over by Liszt, just as I was on the point of returning to France and was bidding the great pianist farewell, the idea came into my head to mention the matter to him. 'Finish your opera,' he said to me (though he had heard not a single note of it), 'and I will produce it for you.' As everyone well knows, Liszt was omnipotent at Weimar.

About that time Madame Viardot was in splendid voice, and had given the most brilliant performances at Weimar. It was for her that the part of Delilah was created. At Croissy, on a society stage set up in a garden, she went through half the second Act, along with Nicot and Romain Bussine. The director of the Opéra and a few other Parisians were present: the result was nil. There was no orchestra: only myself accompanying on a grand pianoforte.

Finally the time came to produce the work at Weimar. The translation had been made . . . but the war of 1870 put a stop to everything. It was not till December, 1873, that Samson and Delilah saw the footlights; though, alas! without the collaboration of Madame Viardot. It was too late.

The success was great, though not sustained. At Berlin it was alleged that the Weimar success had no meaning or significance whatever. It was sung at Hamburg, and that was all.

Only after a period of ten years was the opera given in France, at Rouen. Paris would have nothing to do with it. M. Ritt had to hear it at the Eden before he would bring himself to produce it at the Opéra, during the year of the great eruption of Etna. And I had to travel from Paris to Etna and back to be present both at the eruption and at the first rehearsal of Samson!

For the storm in the second Act I had been promised the most wonderful mise en scène. Meanwhile, it had been decided to stage the Walküre immediately afterwards, and all the promises made to me were broken. I actually had to protest violently before I could obtain for the beginning of the second Act a dash of red to represent the twilight!

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XXIII.—JOHN LLOYD

In the closing years of the 15th century, Welsh musicians began to give evidence of their Celtic inheritance, and at this date several of them were either in the service of the Chapel Royal or were attached to the Court as minstrels. Already we have treated of the career of Robert Jones, and now there is question of John Lloyd, a famous priest-composer; yet, save for the very brief notice of him by Sir John Hawkins, no biographical data can be gleaned in our usual books of reference. His name has been written 'Floyd,' 'Fluyd,' and 'Flude'—a not unusual form of the Welsh surname, Lloyd—and although Hawkins places him under Henry VIII., he had previously belonged to the Chapel of King Henry VII., as will be seen.

The first notice of John Lloyd is in the year 1504-05, when he appears as one of the priests of the Chapel Royal, from which circumstance it is fair to conclude that he was born circa 1480. Evidently he soon got into favour, inasmuch as there is an entry in the Patent Rolls dated September 18, 1506, recording his appointment to the parish church of Munslow, diocese of Hereford, void by resignation. (Calendar of Patent Rolls of Henry VII., vol. ii., page 499.)

Probably this appointment to Munslow resulted in Lloyd's leaving the Court for the diocese of Hereford in 1506; and this is the more likely, inasmuch as his name does not appear in the official list of the King's Chapel at the funeral of Henry VII. on May 11, 1509. Nor does he seem to have been recalled to the Chapel Royal on the accession of Henry VIII., for in the Calendar of Letters and Papers of Henry VIII., vol. i., second edition (1920), we do not find his name in the detailed list of the King's Chapel at the coronation on Sunday, June 24, 1509. However, about a year later he was appointed a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, and his name appears as such among those who received liveries for the funeral of Prince Henry on February 27, 1511. Some of his fellow singers on that sad occasion were Dr. Fairfax, Edward Jones, William Crane, William Cornish, Thomas Farthing, and David Burton, whose memoirs will be found in the present series of articles.

On November 12, 1511, there was a warrant issued to give John Lloyd, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, a black chamlet gown (Calendar of Letters of Henry VIII., vol. i., page 478). It may be observed that William Crane, a month later, was given 'a tawny chamlet gown' from the Great Wardrobe. (Probably black chamlet was given to the priest-singers.) Another warrant issued from the Great Wardrobe on April 16, 1512, is proof that John Lloyd (whose surname stands in the Exchequer Roll as 'Floyd') was given 'a black velvet fur coat,' as were also Robert Penn and Thomas Farthing—both of the latter being Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal. These three also received 'gowns' on November 3.

Previous to this, on March 20, 1512, John Lloyd had been granted a 'corrody' in the monastery of St. Augustine's, Bristol, vice Edward Jones, deceased. A year later he joined the members of the Chapel Royal in attendance on King Henry VIII. on his expedition to Terroueume and Tournai, returning to London at the end of October, 1513.

On October 3, 1518, John Lloyd took part in the Grand Mummung which was held at Cardinal Wolsey's Palace at Durham House in the Strand. Two years later, in June, 1520, he was one of the Chapel Royal Choir at the historic Field of Cloth of Gold—a pageant that has been frequently described. About this time he resumed a grant of corrody in the monastery of Thetford.

Meantime several deaths had thinned the ranks of the Chapel Royal, and on December 12, 1520, Thomas Farthing passed away. The last pageants in which Lloyd took part were those held on June 4 and 5, at Greenwich, in honour of the Emperor Charles V. After these he made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem in fulfilment of a vow, and having visited the Holy Places, returned to England. On his arrival he found that William Cornish had retired from the Mastership of the Children of the Chapel Royal after twenty years' service, and had been replaced by William Crane, whose appointment was dated March 25, 1523. On the following day Dr. John Clarke, Dean of the Chapel Royal, was promoted to the Bishopric of Bath and Wells, being succeeded as Dean by Dr. Richard Sampson.

John Lloyd died on April 3, 1523, and his obituary is thus chronicled by Sir John Hawkins:

John Floyd, of Welsh extraction, Bachelor of Music, and a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, temp. Henry VIII. He made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, returned, and died in the King's Chapel, and was buried in the Savoy Church, with the inscription: 'Johannes Floyd, virtutis et religionis cultor. Obit 3 April, 1523.'

Although Hawkins styles him 'Bachelor of Music,' I have failed to discover his name in the Oxford or Cambridge Registers. However, the statement may be correct, as we find Ambrose Payne, Parson of Lambeth, who died in 1528, described on his monument—formerly to be seen in the old church of St. Dunstan's-in-the-East—as 'a Bachelor of Music.'

Certain it is that John Lloyd was a very capable musician and composer. He is said to have written much sacred music, including Masses and Motets, but no doubt most of his MSS. disappeared after the death of Queen Mary. Fortunately, however, in Add. MSS. 31,922 of the British Museum—a fine vellum MS. of the reign of Henry VIII.—there are two pieces by him. This valuable MS. is of added interest inasmuch as the composer is described as having graduated in music: 'in armonia graduat,' plainly pointing to the fact of his having been a Bachelor of Music. No doubt it was examined by Sir John Hawkins, and hence his statement as recorded above. At ff. 25b and 31b will be found these two pieces, set for three voices or instruments, the name of the composer being given as 'John Flude' or Floyd (Lloyd). The MS. also contains compositions by Thomas Farthing, King Henry VIII., Robert Fayrfax, John Dunstable, Richard Pygot, Dr. Cooper, and William Cornish.

MISDIRECTION IN ORATORIO SINGING

BY GEORGE GARDNER

(Archdeacon of Cheltenham)

At the recent Festival held in Hereford Cathedral, a few thoughts on this subject seemed to crystallize in my mind. The process was helped on by some conversations that I had with friends, either professional or amateur musicians. But any criticisms which I shall now venture to offer are not in any way directed against what was heard this year at Hereford. The Festival work last September was carried out with well-directed enthusiasm and with most satisfactory results in every way.

Not seldom, human beings are apt to fall into a condition of stolid acquiescence as regards certain irritations and misfits that are found in life as in art. These anomalies come to be regarded as part of the settled order of things. They are treated in the manner of a 'vested nuisance'—say, like the ringing of a cracked church-bell for half-an-hour before each service. Often a kindly-worded remonstrance might do much to abate the infliction; yet it is no one's business to make any protest. All we do is to harden ourselves to our discomforts, much as eels are alleged to become accustomed to skinning. Possibly it may be easier for an outsider like myself to speak his mind freely about certain matters in connection with oratorio singing than it would be for a member of the musical profession. So with much diffidence I venture to make my grumble, though it might be far more effectively expressed by someone possessing a sound technical knowledge of the whole subject.

As regards solo work: how comes it that so many prominent vocalists at the present day are afflicted with a physical incapacity for hitting accurately the notes at which they aim? Is it from lack of proper training? Or is it due to the emotional tendencies of modern music? Such a wobbling style of song can pass unnoticed when applied to recent Italian operas, such as those of Puccini or Mascagni. These works often demand the kind of intonation suggested by whatever is the Italian equivalent for 'with a palpitating voice.' But these methods, together with the free use of slurring, are absolutely fatal when applied, say, to the music of Mozart. Some years ago I remember hearing distinguished singers give a performance of Don Giovanni at Covent Garden. Not one of the group seemed to me really competent to execute this polished music, save the Leporello—and that was Edouard de Reszke. Things are even worse when such uncertainty of vocalisation is applied to the older forms of oratorio. And we are in the lowest depths when a persistent tremolo (or 'vibrato,' to speak more politely) is displayed. Yet eminent performers about whom some of these accusations are undeniably true are loudly praised in the newspapers. Human beings can, I repeat, get hardened to anything.

Then there is a lack of simplicity in the rendering of much that we hear. The bringing into oratorio music a kind of emotionalism that may be justifiable in a feverishly impassioned work like La Tosca, is as incongruous as the insertion of modern architectural flummies in an ancient church. Bach's solos, for instance, demand first of all complete mastery of the notes and the rhythm. When that has been attained and no sense is left as of a man feeling his way in the dark, a clean and straightforward delivery of the melody is all that is wanted. Bach himself puts the requisite feeling into his music. For the singer to labour after added emotion is, to use a vulgar expression, like putting butter upon bacon. Indeed we can often best realise the wonderful appeal of Bach's treble or contralto arias when they are delivered in the unimpassioned, silvery tones of a few thoroughly well-trained choir boys. Then we begin to understand how this wonderful master can speak to us in a voice 'pure as the naked heavens.' In more modern music—say, like the double quartet, He shall give His angels, in Elijah, or 'The scene by the wayside' in The Apostles—one cannot help feeling that if the great professionals concerned would condescend to listen to, and to take a lesson from, the performance of such items by a first-rate church choir, much would be gained. Somehow, the rendering of the double quartet is apt to smell of the opera-house. And in the excerpt from Elgar, the calm serenity of the whole picture is destroyed when each of the soloists feels it necessary, as he gets up, to declaim his contribution in the accents supposed to be appropriate for the part he is assuming. You cannot see the wood for the trees.

Simplicity of diction is needed in another way. Take, for instance, the Mendelssohnian form of recitative. It is intended to be ordinary speech delivered in a more or less rhythmical shape. We know too well what a fatal inclination there is to prolong certain words, not because of their verbal sense, but because they form a suitable point d'appui for displaying the qualities of a voice. How often we have suffered from this tendency in Ye people, rend your hearts, and in the Air by which it is followed! Of course the exhibition of what the vocal organ can do by the holding on of a long note in the higher registers, has a perfectly legitimate place in some kinds of music. Without referring to the high A's and B's that elicit such frantic applause in the older Italian operas, think how splendidly this means of exploiting noble tones is used in the Prize Song of Die Meistersinger. In the singing of that ravishing bit of declamation by a Jean de Reszke, one might well wonder as to which was the more beautiful, the music or the voice. But when the trick is dragged in everywhere, even to the confusing of innocent recitatives, and the breaking up of straightforward songs—"This is too rich," as the customer said to the young lady, when she handed him a pork-pie, with nothing but fat in it."

Much might also be urged about obscurity of diction. Too often we have to listen to a song when the meaning of what is being sung, well or badly, is wholly unintelligible. Sometimes, even, it might be hazardous to make a guess as to what language is being employed. No doubt the enunciation of English words in musical form presents real difficulties. But, with well-directed effort, the problem of how to do this, and at the same time to produce even and pure tones, can be mastered. Would that more of our singers resolutely set themselves to the sorely needed task! Whatever charm attaches itself to their work would thus be curiously enhanced. I remember the deep satisfaction with which I once listened to a performance of Verdi's Falstaff, when I realised that it was possible to make out every word in the fine singing of the man who took the title-rôle.

In conclusion—a brief attempt to shoot at bigger game. As regards the conductor's part in the rendering of oratorio, things occur occasionally which seem to some of us, perhaps quite mistakenly, to be uncalled for and unwise. I will only touch upon this matter: and here let me again disclaim any thought of reflecting upon the excellent methods employed, on the whole, at Hereford.

In a performance of Bach's B minor Mass which I heard some while ago, under the direction of a distinguished wielder of the baton, innovations were introduced, no doubt with the idea of giving freshness to the whole reading, but which in the results appeared to me quite deplorable. For instance, in the Kyrie, that wonderful picture of one voice solemnly rising after another in prayer to heaven, it was thought advisable to make each entry of the fugue subject go like this:

And in the Crucifixus, where the ground-bass ought to move with something of the still footfall of death, the contra-bassi, in order perhaps to convey an effect of distant thunder, were instructed to play each repetition of their part in this fashion:

Then by way of contrast, the Et resurrexit was driven on at such a headlong pace that all we could distinguish plainly was the clangour of the trumpets. Here is a point that I want specially to insist upon—the undue hurrying of familiar choruses in order that they may sound fresh and exciting. Such practice has become more or less habitual even in parts of Elijah. No doubt it is applauded by some of the newspapers. Paragraphs appear of this kind: 'Dr. Renovator infused marvellous vitality into his presentation of this somewhat antiquated score. He churned up remorselessly the stagnant pools, and he showed convincingly that old stuff like this, when treated in up-to-date fashion, can hold its own with modern work.'

Yet this application of a galvanic stimulus to what is regarded as a poor, dull corpse, never really succeeds. Take, for instance, the chorus Thanks be to God, in Elijah. It is commonly rushed through with what is thought to be overwhelming brilliancy. But an audience can hear things which the conductor, standing in the midst of his orchestra, cannot hear. What happens? The fiddles, in particular, are not instruments of percussion, like the timpani. The latter, the more rapidly you beat them the more noise they emit. But after a certain degree of quickening up, violins (like voices), can only produce tones that are thin and wanting in penetration. In this case, the rather awkwardly written semiquavers of Mendelssohn's accompaniments become absolutely inaudible, and the run down near the end, intended to be the climax of the storm, turns into a poor trickle, though it is marked ff. The more sustained notes of the brass chiefly dominate the whole show. And it is just the same with Bach's choruses. Treat an allegro movement as if it were marked presto, and not only is the dignity of the whole impaired, but the balance of the material employed will be upset.

Here has been given, as I hope, a temperate statement of the disgruntled feelings which afflict some of us at times during the performance of sacred music. Let me add that it may be better to ventilate than to repress a grievance.

NEW FIDDLES FOR OLD

It is a great pity that Mr. W. J. Farrell has considered it necessary to overstate the case for modern violins in his singularly stimulating volume, The True-tone Violin (Cassell). There is little to be gained by exaggeration in the best of causes; protesting too much must needs excite suspicion. If Mr. Farrell were content to tell us that some modern fiddles are infinitely better than some old fiddles, he would win the assent of all sensible people. But he is tilting at shadows when he generalises on 'old violin cranks.' After all, the best judge of a violin is the violinist, and all the greatest violinists have invariably shown a very marked preference for old fiddles. The fact that there is a good deal of misconception and downright deception going on as regards old violins does not alter the fact that not only Stradivari, but Amati, Guarneri, Stainer, Maggini, Guadagnini—to name only a few—produced instruments that experience has shown to be excellent. Nor can the public be blamed if it turn a deaf ear to the claims of certain modern makers, for hardly a modern maker exists who has not 'rediscovered' something of the so-called Cremona secret. The gist of the matter is that not all old violins are good, and not all new violins bad. That is what the public often fails to understand. Stradivari's own violins were new once, and also excellent. Age alone does not constitute a proof of merit. That is the golden rule that the buyer with the limited purse ignores to his cost.

The author has our full sympathy when he pleads for the modern maker, and we quite agree that something ought to be done to open the eyes of the public in respect to the craze for old violins, which has reached absurd proportions. Utterly worthless instruments are sometimes treasured by quite intelligent people in the belief that being in a dilapidated condition they must be old, and because old, therefore good, and worth a fortune. It is a common experience not only for dealers, but for violinists generally, to be shown some disreputable German fiddle labelled Stradivari, with a request to name its present price in the market. Bad violins are worth a few shillings when they are new; when they are old their value is the current price for firewood—not a farthing more. A good modern fiddle is worth any amount of old bad fiddles. But it does not follow that it is also equal to the best of the old fiddles. Mr. Farrell claims that his own instruments are best because constructed as Stradivari himself would construct them to-day. That claim can only be decided by actual test—and time. For if it is true that Stradivari's violins were excellent from the first, some modern fiddles which appeared excellent at first have lost much of their quality after a couple of years' use.

Failing the actual test, it must be said that in his book Mr. Farrell shows at least that he possesses all the qualities of a first-class luthier. Above all things he is not prejudiced by the countless experiments of scientists, which, as we all know, have led nowhere. Stradivari was not a scientist, but a workman endowed with an amount of commonsense and love of his profession that, combined, amounted to genius. Mr. Farrell is also gifted with penetration, commonsense, and genuine affection for the tools of his trade. He is said by those who know him to possess also rare discrimination in the choice of wood and varnish—a most important qualification. Years of experience have taught him that the modern maker obsessed by the fame of the old is apt to forget or misunderstand certain laws. Modern makers, he says, for instance, believe that the old masters 'worked on the principle of how much wood they dare take out,' whereas the principle, according to Mr. Farrell, was of 'how much wood they dare leave in,' for enough wood must be left if the instrument is to stand well the strain imposed upon it by the strings. It is, of course, impossible to follow here all the innovations indicated by the author. They sound logical and reasonable, but if the proof of the pudding is in the eating, the proof of the fiddle is certainly in the playing. If Mr. Farrell's violins confirm his theories and establish his claim, fame will come to him in his lifetime as it came not only to Stradivari, but to Vuillaume and to James Tubbs.

F. B.

STRAVINSKY DAY BY DAY

BY ALFRED KALISCH

Certainly M. Stravinsky is something to be thankful for. The Fire-Bird and Petrushka are gifts of price; but he has done far more to increase the gaiety of nations since he took to explaining himself. Not only is each of his utterances startling on its own account, but the attempt to reconcile it with the preceding one is a fascinating intellectual exercise for agile wits. When we do agree with him, it is generally for reasons the very opposite of those he adduces. We are reminded of the story of Lord Justice C. who, after Lord Justice A. had delivered judgment in favour of allowing an appeal, and Lord Justice B. had said it ought to be dismissed, tersely said that he concurred with Lord Justice A., for the reasons so ably enunciated by Lord Justice B.

Let us briefly review his recent pronouncements. First he told us that he had discovered Tchaikovsky, and in praise of him said things which are, in effect, a scathing denunciation of his own music and that of his followers. Then he told us, through the medium of the Musical News and Herald, that the orchestra is dead, because previous composers—groping, poor things, in outer darkness—knew nothing of 'sonorities' and 'tonal values' and 'individualizing' the various instruments of the orchestra. We ask ourselves what on earth had they been after that they did not find it out sooner—in fact, what did they think they were doing? And then he said that music should be played without expression!

Now we read in Musical America the most important news of all. He told somebody in Spain that 'Beethoven created no music' and that 'music did not advance a single inch through Wagner.'

This requires careful examination, and the more we examine, the more we are bewildered. Stravinsky's argument is, roughly, this: Music has been trying to express moods and philosophies. It has become a means instead of an end in itself. Its true end is 'the participation of auditory impressions.' By neglecting it, music has been hampered for centuries. The Germans, he said, have never understood music; they are philosophers, and deal only in 'musicality,' which is not the same thing as music at all. M. Stravinsky does not deny that Beethoven was a genius, which, indeed, is vastly civil of him; and he admits—more civilly—that Wagner 'lent the orchestra new elements,' but he was 'all that he should not have been. He was neither a philosopher nor a musician.' The reason was that he had learnt too much Greek, and therefore could not take a natural view of music. After this we learn with some surprise that Mozart and Schubert were real, simple musicians, because 'the ear delights in them.'

How much better than the way of such mere clumsy fumblerers is that of Stravinsky, who follows the light, conveying to an eager world 'auditory impressions' which are quite his own and original. His harmony 'is something altogether unconventional and arbitrary' (we suspect a mistranslation here), 'bubbling forth every moment in a different manner.' He will not formulate it, for to do that would be only 'to add another academy to those already existing.' In conclusion 'he is sure that he has opened up new paths'—and he is seemingly amazed at his own indiscretion.

He is, furthermore, convinced that the wealth of folk-song is inexhaustible, and he proudly adds that he 'takes over folk-wise value as it stands.' This, of course, is the most tremendous, the most epoch-making innovation of all. Other composers may have used folk-songs, but has anyone 'taken over a folk-wise value'? Again there seems reason to suspect the translator. I cannot help thinking the German text of Dr. Istel said something about 'Volkswiese,' which only means a 'folk-tune,' and possibly we ought to approach the whole translation with caution.

If M. Stravinsky had not written some really valuable music we should be inclined to dismiss the whole with a shrug of the shoulder; but he has earned the right to be considered seriously, and he deserves that we should make an honest effort to understand him.

M. Stravinsky's verdicts on Beethoven and Wagner are particularly worthy of study. As we have seen, he admits that the former was a 'genius,' but clearly not a musical genius, for he wrote no music. Then what kind of a genius was he? We are told, he 'had a great soul and expressed it in notes which say nothing to the ear.' If notes say nothing to the ear, how can they express a great soul? we may ask. If they express a great soul, what meaning can there be in saying that 'Beethoven created no music'? If Beethoven's music says nothing to M. Stravinsky's ear, we are driven to the conclusion (which some of his latest music supports) that he is endowed with a set of auditory nerves so vastly different from those of the normally musical human being that it is hopeless to argue from him to any other listener. It is clear, too, that he uses the word 'music' in a sense so totally opposite to that which most people give to it that discussion becomes impossible. One has no need to believe that all Beethoven's works are necessarily deathless to say this much.

In the case of Wagner the inconsistency is still more obvious. If the elements he gave to the orchestra were new, surely they must have helped the advance of music. If they did not, what is the sense of saying that they were new? Here, too, M. Stravinsky obviously uses the word 'music' in a purely esoteric and personal, not to say Pickwickian, sense.

Perhaps he will explain still further, and, in particular, tell us how it comes that a race which never understood music could produce a Mozart and a Schubert? It is a mere quibble to reply that they were Austrians, not Germans; and, besides, he has deprived himself of the right to use the argument by the way in which he has mentioned them. Stravinsky the composer commands more respect than Stravinsky the commentator and controversialist.

Occasional Notes

A recent issue of Musical America contained an article by Mr. Francis Rogers on music in London. It was so ludicrously inaccurate that we pigeon-holed it for reference, but have so far been unable to deal with it. Fortunately it met the eye of Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji, who promptly replied to a letter to the Editor. Briefly, Mr. Rogers opined that there was 'nothing doing' in London so far as music was concerned, and he seems to have been led to that view by the fact that just now the operatic stars in their courses prefer America to England—which is not surprising, seeing that America is the only large country with loose dollars lying around. Mr. Sorabji begins by telling the Editor of M.A. that 'it is really staggering to see the impudence with which people who come to London from abroad proceed to wallow in wild generalisations about musical activity here.' He then pointed out that the past year had seen London visited by practically all the outstanding figures in contemporary music, and that we have had performances of new works from all but a very few of the leading composers, many of whom have actually taken part in or conducted such performances. Mr. Sorabji, now thoroughly warmed up, then goes on (with a slap at us poor writers in passing):

This activity in music—as distinct from mere exhibitions of technical funambulism in effete and hackneyed trivialities which pass for music with the worshippers of the fat-box-office-receipts, fiddling, or keyboard-drumming 'star,' which have as much connection with the great world of music as the Grub street journalistic hacks who scribble what with preposterous flattery is called 'musical criticism' have with literature—has been remarkable, and in spite of terribly adverse conditions and crushing expense, which shows a disinterested reverence and love for the art very different from the purely commercial instincts of the purveyors of musical saltimbanquerie whose doings occupy such an inordinate amount of space—duly paid for, let us hope!—in the American musical press.

Mr. Rogers, by the way, backed up his contention that London was dead musically during 1921 by pointing out that 'even the Promenade concerts under Sir Henry Wood did not continue through July'—which is not surprising, as they never begin until the middle of August.

In regard to operá, Mr. Sorabji takes a view that we believe is being more and more held by musicians:

As for Covent Garden—no one among intelligent musicians to-day supposes that the lack of orgies of Puccini, Mascagni, Leoncavallo et hujus generis omnis coupled with similar-brained operatic singers is any loss to Musíc. Of all forms of music with the exception of musical comedy, opera is perhaps the lowest.

A first performance of a new work of Delius is more than consolation for the happy absence of Galli-Curci's, Tetrassini's, and the rest of the laryngologymnasts.

Perhaps there was a little excuse for Mr. Rogers, who was merely on a flying visit here. There was none, however, for Miss Kathleen Parlow, who in the same journal a few weeks later delivered herself of some statements that were—well, let us choose a long and polite word and call them inexactitudes.

To Kathleen Parlow [begins the article] the healthy growth of English music seems threatened by two cankerous spots. . . 'To me [she said] the low standard of English musical criticism is becoming a truly serious matter. This summer I religiously read the English critics, and you would be astounded to see the collection I made of serious statements and unforgivable errors. An example of what I mean is the wholesale and consistent belabouring that English critics gave to American artists.'

Now, if Miss Parlow read our critics as religiously as she says, she could hardly have missed the favourable opinions they expressed concerning the best of the American group—Reginald Werrenrath, Cecil Fanning, Sophie Breslau, Arthur Shattuck, Roland Hayes, Marcia van Dresser, Ethel Frank, and others. Naturally all our visitors were not tip-top, and equally naturally they were told so. On the whole, however, the American visitors had a 'good press,' and it seems to have been left for one of ourselves, so to speak, to suggest otherwise. If Miss Parlow felt so warmly about it in November, 1921, she must have been boiling in the summer of 1920. Why did she not, in the intervals of making her scrap-book of English critics 'unforgivable errors,' drop a line to one of our journals and ask for fair play for the visitors? Perhaps because such a course would have been unpopular here, whereas to an artist setting out on a tour through the States the kind of thing we have quoted is distinctly helpful.

Having made one misstatement, Miss Parlow proceeds to support it by others:

England during the war had little music, and the visits of great artists there since then have been comparatively few; therefore the criticisms to me seemed to be occasioned by distemper. The cause is partly political, and partly because the critics resented the advertising methods of the Americans. But it seems to me that criticism should be above this. Most of the critics in England are reporters who go to music instead of, say, to an athletic event.

There is something in this last sentence, though not quite what Miss Parlow means. We are sure that Mr. Newman, for instance, would infinitely prefer an evening at the National Sporting Club to an average one at the Ionian Hall, and there are others of us whose fancy on an early summer's afternoon lightly turns from Queen's Hall to Lord's or the Oval. But we should not go there professionally, though our editors might do worse than let some of us change places with the sporting reporter occasionally. E.N. on a boxing match would, we are sure, be no less stimulating than when dealing with concerts.

However, let English critics be thankful for Miss Parlow's next remark: 'I do not believe that English critics could be bought, as they can be in France.' To what extent English critics can be bought in France we know not, but we do know that they are not for sale on this side of the Channel—which is what Miss Parlow really means, of course. We leave her to settle with our French colleagues.

So much for Cankerous Spot No. 1. Miss Parlow is on safer ground when dealing with No. 2—the ballad concert. Still, she must not forget that England is not the only country with a fourth-rate song literature, and she will not be long in America before finding out that in the way of producing wishy-washy ballads America can give us a start and a beating. Perhaps when she has heard a few of the worst 'winners' she will tell Musical America about their cankerous spot. On the other hand, perhaps not.

But the best proof of Miss Parlow's want of accuracy is her remark on the English reception of Pizetti's Violin Sonata:

Last year Miss Parlow gave the first performance of Pizetti's new Sonata, which raised pandemonium among the critics. Speaking of this, Miss Parlow said, smiling: 'I suppose I'd better keep away from sonatas for a time. It is just as Sir Henry Wood put it to me, "the critics are constantly after you for something new, and then when you give it them, they are at you tooth and nail." As for the Pizetti work, despite the critics it is going to live.'

Now, as a matter of fact, of all the new works produced in London last year, few, if any, had a more favourable reception from the critics than this Sonata, so much so, that Mr. Scholes has during the past few days been moved to make an attempt to show that the laudatory critics and public were wrong. (He does this by quoting the motives, and calling attention to their poverty. But there are too many examples of fine works evolved from insignificant material to make this method other than risky. It is judging at the wrong end. The proof of the pudding lies in the eating thereof, not in a critical dissection and inspection of its ingredients.)

On the whole, it is not pleasant to reflect that a musician of Miss Parlow's standing will be touring the States for the next few months, shedding interviews such as the one we have quoted.

On page 55 appears an account of a remarkable performance of The Messiah at Oundle School. The idea of forming the audience into a kind of extra choir is one with great possibilities. It has been proved, we believe, that in the strongholds of choralism such familiar choruses as the 'Hallelujah' can be sung from memory by an average audience. Perhaps some enterprising conductor will experiment further on the Oundle lines, bringing in the audience at such phrases as 'And He shall reign,' 'Wonderful, Counsellor,' 'For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it,' &c. No doubt some of our composers will soon develop the possibilities of a broad theme sung by the audience against a faux-bourdon by the choir proper. After all it is only what many church choirs and congregations are now doing successfully with hymns. A start might be made by the use of material already well known, such as popular song refrains. We have received from Miss Carrie Tubb, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Norman Allin, and Mr. Edward Carwardine (of the L.S.O.) written impressions of the performance. All alike give glowing accounts of the thrilling results of the use of what may be called the cantus firmus choir, as well as of the choral singing as a whole. It may be of interest to give particulars of the time spent in preparation, so here they are: chorus, nine hours; orchestra, sixteen hours; chorus and orchestra combined, three hours; full school chorus, three hours, forty minutes; full school chorus and orchestra combined, four hours; trebles alone, six hours; altos alone, five hours; tenors and basses together, three hours; audience-choir, thirty minutes. One two-hour full rehearsal with soloists. Total, a little over fifty hours—a very modest amount of time for so fine a result. We congratulate Mr. Spurling and his players and singers, old and young—especially the latter.

The Musician's Bookshelf

Mr. W. J. Turner's Music and Life (Methuen, 7s. 6d.) has its somewhat dull title accentuated by a garish 'dazzle' wrapper that hits one in the eye. Let it be said at once that this coat of many colours is the true index to the contents. The title is so Smilesian in its ordinariness as to suggest that Mr. Turner, hard pressed as to the naming of his book, impatiently settled the matter with 'Title? Oh! any old tag you like. Call it Travels in Siluria, Critical Evolutions and Revolutions, Music and Life—stay! as the book contains a good deal about music, let's have the last.' And it was so. Really, of course, the volume is all about Mr. Turner and his relations and reactions to music and other arts. That is what makes it so well worth having. People who tell us that criticism is a purely personal matter, and therefore of no value, have grasped just half of the truth. Criticism is purely personal, and its interest lies in that very fact. To put it bluntly, the only critic who counts is the man with pronounced likes and dislikes, plus the literary gift that enables him to tell us all about them. If you think that this is an over-statement, ask yourself why we still enjoy reading what Johnson, Lamb, Hazlitt, and others wrote about Shakespeare. We probably don't agree with all their pronouncements—especially those of Johnson—nor do they add anything much to our knowledge of the poet or his works. But we shall go on reading their essays on Shakespeare even if we are never to see another performance of the plays, or even if we give up reading them. Nor does the interest—and therefore to a great extent the value—of criticism depend greatly on our interest in the subject. Take Johnson's Lives of the Poets, for example. The volumes are mainly concerned with writers who are as dead as mutton. Not three out of a dozen educated persons could give anything like a complete list of the writers concerned. Yet the Lives being on the whole the best critical work Johnson ever did, and full of the strong common-sense and felicity of expression that made his conversation what it was, are even to-day second in interest only to that conversation as retailed by Boswell. Mr. Turner has immensely strong likes and dislikes, coupled with the gift of being able to write about them in a way that interests us all the time and annoys us most of it. For Mr. Turner lays about him with no respect for reputations. He is one of those levelling fellows who, for two pence, will even speak disrespectfully of the Equator. And perhaps Mr. Turner does us most good when he annoys us most. At such moments we badly want to discuss things with him, and as that is impossible we usually proceed to discuss them with ourselves. This is another way of saying that his book stimulates thought, and when you come to think of it, that is an all-too-rare quality in a book or music. Books that tell us all manner of more or less unnecessary things concerning music are as plentiful as blackberries, whereas those that set us thinking about it are a far more rare and refreshing fruit.

The chapters in Music and Life are touched-up articles, most of which have appeared in the New Statesman. As is usually the case in such reprints, a few papers come through the ordeal none too well. This is natural enough, for the qualities that go to the successful making of a magazine article are often the very ones that are undesirable in a book. However, as most readers will not agree as to which essays should have been omitted, Mr. Turner is perhaps justified in having put them all in, just as the compiler of an anthology proves his selection to have been right by the fact that all his readers grouse about it, but no two grouse for the same reason.

Right here, as they say across the water, the reviewer's difficulty comes along. I had turned down pages on which were passages to be quoted or discussed, but there are so many of them that the thing can't be done without taking up a great deal more space than is available. I can only advise you to get hold of this annoying and rattling good book. If you don't find its two-hundred-odd pages the most engrossing you have read for many a long day, your experience will be different from mine. Just now it rains books on 'musical appreciation,' and the defenceless reader is hard put to it if he wishes to avoid being told how to distinguish the cor Anglais from the bassoon, or how to make sure that the entry of the second subject doesn't escape him. Mr. Turner's book has little to do with such trivial and hindering facts as these. It deals with music, and as the author is a musician and a poet who can also write live and direct prose, shot with humour, it is calculated to do more to help a reader to enjoy and appreciate music than any of the avowed signposts, or even all of them put together. H. G.

SOME BOOKS FROM VIENNA

A batch of booklets reaches us from the Wiener Literaris du Anstalt, which forms part of a series entitled, Theater und Kultur, edited jointly by Richard Smekel, Hermann Bahr, and Hugo Hofmannsthal (it will be noticed that he has democratically dropped the 'Von'). In these the musical interest is secondary, but the parcel also includes a monograph on Hugo Wolf, by Edmund Hellmer, and a volume of Reminiscences by the well-known singer, Anna Bahr-Mildenburg.

Frau Mildenburg is a dutiful wife, and copies the somewhat pleonastic and, what used to be called orchidaceous style of her husband. But she is an interesting personality, and her reminiscences of her life on the stage make good reading. She made her first appearances under Mahler, at Hamburg, and went with him from there to Vienna; she throws a good deal of light on him. Far the most interesting pages of the book are those which are devoted to recollections of her stay in London, when she was here to give her well-remembered performances of Klytemnestra in Elektra. Her sketch of Dr. Ethel Smyth is life-like, and her judgment of the British public is worth reproducing. She said to Mr. Sargent when he was sketching her:

'You will not easily find a public so fond of music, with such an insatiable appetite for music, as the British. They crowd everywhere where music is to be heard, they form the largest section of the public at any musical festival on the Continent, and the need for music penetrates to every class of society . . . But their judgments on music are mostly undifferentiated. It is, so to say, music in general for which they long, yet this longing for music but rarely leads in a definite personal direction, and ready as they are to yield themselves to music as a whole, so little are they inclined to concern themselves with detail or to trouble themselves about fine shades, by which after all the degree of merit of a performance is ultimately fixed . . . that the artist who makes a strong impression on them never owes this to any one detail in his work, but it is always the total impression on which they rely. And they have a very sure intuition of the sincerity of an artistic achievement . . . they obviously think themselves to be not judges of art, but enjoyers of art.'

With this attitude she contrasts that of the Vienna public, which is critical first and last. A large part of the book is devoted to Frau Mildenburg's work in nursing the Austrian wounded.

Herr Hellmer speaks of Hugo Wolf with unbounded enthusiasm, but is not blind to his faults as a man. The book gives many details, believed to be hitherto unpublished, as to the origin of his madness. Hellmer saw the composer on the day before he had to be removed to an asylum, when he was under the delusion that he had been appointed Director of the Vienna Opera. There is an interesting account of Wolf's only interview with Wagner, when he was a mere boy. Wagner said he could give no opinion of the boy's music, adding, 'I am really no musician.' 'Oh, you are too modest,' replied Wolf. M. Stravinsky, by the way, has recently said, too, that Wagner was no musician. There is an interesting selection from Wolf's table-talk and candid remarks, from which I will select only one piquant remark about Brahms. He was defending him against a violent attack, and said he must not be condemned wholesale, but there was one quality that he lacked which was the mark of the truest greatness 'he could have no joy in his art—never and nowhere. He could lament loud enough, but exult never.' The German word jubilieren is practically untranslatable. The book will be welcome to the large number of Wolf lovers.

The other books may for the reason given be dismissed briefly. In his Round about the Magic Flute (Rund um die Zauberflöte) Max Pirker deals chiefly with the libretto, and with vast erudition traces its connection with the Vienna popular theatre, the aristocratic 'Barok Theatre,' philosophy and masonry, and shows how its influence has persisted even down to the librettos of Hofmannsthal. It must be confessed that so weak a butterfly hardly needs breaking on so large a wheel. It is difficult to believe that Schickeneder's play can really be a milestone in the road of civilization.

Richard Smekel's little book on Ferdinand Raemund, and Hermann Bahr's monograph on the Burg Theatre of Vienna, are of purely local interest, and deal solely with drama.

There is a good deal of general interest in Erwin Rieger's book on Offenbach and his Viennese imitators, and the writer's explanation of the way in which Offenbach, the German, became the very embodiment of the Paris of the Second Empire, is instructive. Still, it was rather Meilhac and Halévy, his librettists, who were responsible. There is not much musical criticism in the book, but some good remarks on the music of Millöcker, Suppé, Strauss (Johann, not Richard), and even Lehar.

Smekel's collection of Old Viennese Theatre Song, taken from the most popular operettas, makes diverting reading. The book is somewhat flattering to our national vanity. There is nothing in it even remotely comparable to W. S. Gilbert, and even Adrian Ross need fear no comparisons with some of these Viennese writers, who, somehow or other, have achieved a cosmopolitan reputation. A. K.

TWO BOOKS FOR PIANISTS

To the many writings on the Pianoforte Sonatas of Beethoven Mr. C. Egerton Lowe adds a book Beethoven's Sonatas, No. 95 of Novello's Music Primers, 5s.)—a book primarily analytical and pedagogic, 'with hints on rendering, form, &c.' It is the strange fate of the thirty-two Sonatas to have become matter for pedagogy; a perverse fate, considering that of all keyboard music in the world this of Beethoven is least apt so to be subjugated, considering that of all music Beethoven's—and of Beethoven's the pianoforte works above all—can chime in only with the grown mind, the adult imagination.

Beethoven the imperfect and sublime, Prometheus in torment, deaf and frustrated, a boor and god-like—Beethoven is not a book to be put in the hands of young girls. Why, when Busoni is away we have hardly a pianist left who can actualise the music of the Sonatas. Who doubts but that, with a few obvious exceptions, the Sonatas will be less and less played? Naturally they will be strummed privately by those who do not read; for of course one must have them in one's head. There the Sonatas will live for ever, in men's heads rather than their ears. When you have the Adagio of Op. 106 well in your head do you ever crave to hear it? You hear it at your peril, and the divine music in your mind recovers only as the effect of the hearing fades.

It cannot be doubted that Mr. Egerton Lowe has them in his head, all the quiring thirty-two. He sets out to be sternly analytical: not so much to write a book as to collect useful information, which is here in quantity. But there is in him a lyrical vein, which as the catalogue proceeds comes frequently to light. The author is a single-hearted lover of the Sonatas, and as we glean informative hints on comfortable fingerings for this or that crabbed passage, we are also well infected with the author's enthusiastic wonder, as one fresh beauty eclipses another in the august procession; with his sense of triumph before the Sonatas of the middle period, with his awe before the 'last five.' So far is Mr. Egerton Lowe's analysis from suggesting one of the missing books of Euclid. He is a much-known and long-successful teacher, so one must bow, with however little respect, before the practical value of one singular proceeding he recommends. It is the association of a line or two of verse with a theme, and this 'is often of wonderful assistance in gaining the true rhythmical and metrical accents.' Here is an example from the C sharp minor Sonata, Op. 27:

EX. I.

Why drag in the Queen of the May? Here, alas, is a consequence of Beethoven's fate destining him to be a 'subject' in young ladies' boarding schools. And why drag in Joan of Arc? What had Joan to do with Beethoven or music of any sort? Mr. Egerton Lowe suavely recommends us to think of Joan of Arc in prison during the Adagio of Op. 110. But Joan, if she had music in prison, probably had Organum all in consecutive fifths, and we cannot imagine Beethoven going to that length, though (as this book does not fail to point out) Beethoven did not always shun that relation, vide the Andante of the Sonata Appassionata.

These are lapses, and Mr. Egerton Lowe honourably supplies a corrective by quoting what Beethoven himself replied to a foolish friend who wanted the 'meaning' of some movement. 'I have written the notes, it is for you to discover their meaning.' The notes of course are the meaning. It was not Beethoven but Schiller and Tennyson whose 'line' it was to write about Joan of Arc and the Queen of the May.

CHOPIN'S ORNAMENTATION

The second book is on Chopin's Ornamentation, by John Petrie Dunn (Novello's Music Primers, No. 96, 3s.). The author's chosen plot is smallish but judiciously tended. His excellent pages so well prove taste, thoroughness, and a devotion to Chopin that the reader asks that they be part of a general study of Chopin playing, on which there remains much to be said. Meanwhile Chopin's Ornaments—'pearls from diamonds dropped,' like Cordelia's tears—are significant in their least minutiae; of Chopin's essence, and yet commonly mishandled. Mikuli himself, Chopin's pupil and editor, said, 'Shakes he generally began with the auxiliary note,' and on this Mr. Dunn points out, first, that simple shakes are rare in Chopin; secondly, that, with a few almost self-evident exceptions, they must begin with the principal, not the auxiliary, note, else tautology or ugliness will result. 'So much for the trustworthiness of such traditions as we possess.' Mr. Dunn, then, deduces principles from internal evidence. His main principle is against anticipation; that is, transient shake (pralltriller), acciaccatura, appoggiatura, and the rest must nearly always 'come on the beat,' borrowing their time from the note ahead, not that behind.

This softening of the blows of the principal notes makes Chopin's melody pianoforte melody. The statement of the notes of a melody, however beautiful, does not necessarily make pianoforte melody, and we listen to the opening of the divine Adagio of Beethoven's Op. 10, No. 3, trying always to imagine it coming from an instrument that could truly rise to such a demand. The softening of the pianoforte's dull blows in Chopin's ornamentation takes us to the core of art—to the appropriateness of the material to the form, which is one solid principle at least amid the dubieties of æsthetics. Chopin knew his material—a knowledge that is a life-giving property to his work. His music was not like a house which is designed irrespective of whether it is to be carried out in wood or stone; there are such bad houses and bad music.

In the chapter on the Arpeggio Mr. Dunn judiciously recommends slight anticipation of an arpeggio for the left hand. On Appoggiaturas: 'When the note following an appoggiatura is identical with the latter, the appoggiatura is anticipated.' The transient shake (pralltriller) may occasionally be anticipated when it stands over the first note of a phrase. Examples are given, thus the opening phrase of the A flat Impromptu. Illustrations in music-type are most generously scattered over the book.

C.

MISCELLANEOUS

Received too late for notice last month, but still not quite out of season, is Dr. J. W. Phillips's Carols: Their Origin, Music, and Connection with Mystery Plays (Routledge, 6s.). The book is the outcome of a series of lectures given by Dr. Phillips at various times. The subject—always an attractive one—is dealt with in a human and popular way, with many musical and textual examples. Sir Frederick Bridge adds a Preface, and there are some pleasant black and white drawings.—The issue for 1922 of that useful annual, A Kalendar of Hymns Ancient and Modern and The English Hymnal, is now obtainable (Humphrey Milford; and Mowbray 6d.).—The Yattendon Hymnal has long since made a high place for itself among hymn books that are also literature. Here is its text, under the title of The Small Hymn Book, edited by Robert Bridges (Humphrey Milford, 2s. 6d.). It contains just a hundred hymns, most of them being from ancient sources. In the case of some translations from the Latin the original is also given.—John Newton's Sixty-five Dont's for Church Organists (Cambridge: Heffer & Sons, 1s.) suffers from several disabilities. Its title is ugly, and moreover makes us ask 'Why only sixty-five? and Why only "Dont's," since there are so many "Do's" that still seem to be in need of a little propaganda?' A further flaw is the casual method of punctuation, and the general air of 'it doesn't matter how you say a thing so long as the thing itself is sound.' Of course it matters very much indeed. Sometimes it makes all the difference between intelligibility and the reverse. For example:

DON'T play every verse, cease playing at least once in every psalm and hymn, and not once only throughout the whole Psalter, for the 17th verse of Psalm 115 I think it is; it certainly is not verse 13 of Psalm 18!

Mr. Newton is given to the use of commas when semicolons are required—a trick he has perhaps caught from parish magazines. (These little journals are a law unto themselves in punctuation and English generally—a fact worth noting, as they are usually written or edited by Masters or Bachelors of Arts.) Mr. Newton's precepts are useful and sound as a whole. We part company with him here and there, however. For example, when he says 'DON'T sing the Gloria Patri full, but treat it as an ordinary verse,' he may be right from a rubrical point of view, but he is wrong from a musical one—which after all is important. The Gloria Patri is not a part of the psalm, but a pendant. Common-sense suggests that we should look on it as a kind of chorus. This aspect of it, as well as the need for an effect of finality at the close of a psalm, seems to call for full rather than antiphonal treatment. Moreover, in places where plainsong is used and the psalms are chanted antiphonally by cantor and choir, the treatment of the Gloria Patri as an ordinary verse will often lead to its second half being sung as a solo—a miserable

(Continued on page 37.)

PART-SONG FOR FOUR VOICES.

Words by LAURENCE BINYON.*

Music by GEORGE RATHBONE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Slow and sustained.

SOPRANO. p The night wind o - ver the great downs . . . Streams . . .

ALTO. p The night wind o - ver the TENOR. p The night wind o - ver the great downs . . . Streams . . .

BASS. p The night wind o - ver the

ACCOMP. p (For practice only.)

. . a - long, streams a-long the sky, a - long the sky;

streams a - long,

great downs Streams a-long the sky; . . In the sol - i - tude . . of the

. . a - long, streams a-long the sky; In the sol - i - tude . . of the great downs Streams a-long the sky; In the sol - i - tude . . of the Copyright, 1921, by Novello and Company, Limited.

* By permission, from "The Secret," (Elkin Matthews).

tenderly.

There is on - ly you and I, there is on - ly you and I, you . . and I.
 hill - side . . There is on - ly you and I, . . . on - ly you and I.
 hill - side . . There is on - ly you and I, . . . you and I.
 hill - side . . There is on - ly you and I, . . . you . . and I.

Più mosso. f cres. Slower. p

The night wind leaps and rush-es, Black in the trees, that cry As
 The night wind leaps in the trees, that cry As Then the night wind leaps and rush-es, Black in the trees, the trees, that cry As
 The night wind leaps and rush-es, Black in the trees, that cry, in the trees, that cry

Più mosso. f cres. Slower. p

Molto cres. e poco accel.

if their tra - vail ech - oed . . . The world's e - ter - nal "Why?"

if their tra - vail ech - oed The world's e - ter - nal "Why?"

if . . . their tra - vail ech - oed, ech - oed The world's e - ter - nal "Why?"

As if their

As if their tra - vail ech - oed The world's e - ter - nal "Why?"

Molto cres. e poco accel.

Slow and sustained.

pp

Clouds have bu-ried the old moon, . . . The moon, The sunk light Clouds have bu-ried the old moon, . . . The Clouds have bu-ried the old moon, . . . The

pp

Clouds have bu-ried the old moon, . . . The Slow and sustained.

pp

Clouds have bu-ried the old moon, . . . The sunk light cow - ers shy; tenderly.

sunk light cow - ers shy, the light covers shy; There is on - ly you and covers, sunk light cow - ers shy; . . In a world of stumbling and dark - ness . . There is sunk light cow - ers shy; In a world of stumbling and dark - ness . . There is sunk light cow - ers shy; In a world of stumbling and dark - ness . . There is

ppp

I, there is on - ly you and I, you and I.

ppp 2 on - ly you and I, . . . on - ly you and I.

ppp 2 on - ly you and I, . . . you . . . and I.

ppp 2 on - ly you and I, . . . you . . . and I.

ppp 2

(Continued from page 32.)

anticlimax, especially in the not infrequent combination of a jubilant psalm and a cantor who has seen his best days! In this and a few other matters we add a sixty-sixth 'Don't' to Mr. Newton's sixty-five: 'DON'T be pedantic.'—The Canson Book by Percy Dearmer and Martin Shaw (S.P.C.K., 6d.) is a collection of seventeen hymns and songs suitable for use at meetings and services of a non-liturgical nature. The melody is given in each case, and the vigour and quality of the music may be gauged from the fact that the tunes are drawn chiefly from the English Hymnal, the Public School Hymn Book, and the Motherland Song Book. The words are mainly such as may be conscientiously sung by a Communistic sceptic whose relations towards Christianity continue to be friendly.—A useful addition to the growing list of practical handbooks issued by Musical Opinion is The Pneumatic Player: the Regulation and Repair of some Modern Types, by Harry Drake (2s. 6d.). Mr. Drake discusses in detail the best-known types of player-pianos, ending with a chapter dealing with various defects and their remedy. H. G.

New Music

DR. SAINT-SAËNS'S NEW WORKS: SONATAS FOR WOOD-WIND

In his eighty-seventh year Dr. Saint-Saëns's neat and nimble pen flows on as blithely as it has done at any time since about 1850—senectus non impedit—and this interesting activity gives us a group of newly-published Sonatas, Opp. 166-168, for reed instruments and pianoforte (Durand, Paris). A gift of charming generosity in a direction rarely so blest. The venerated composer may be fancied as having cast his eye back over seventy years, inquiring whether there were not yet some modest section of our community left unenriched by his lifetime's largess. He long ago wrote solo pieces for the horn, and more recently for the tenor trombone. There was a trumpet part in one celebrated chamber work (Op. 65). But oboe and clarinet had been neglected, save for a Caprice on Danish and Russian Airs (with flute and pianoforte), and the bassoon had been neglected altogether. Each of the three instruments was accordingly endowed with a sonata.

Understand sonata in the least pompous sense. The clarinet's is the most extended of the three, and even so it disclaims any sort of relationship with the Clarinet Sonatas of Brahms's Op. 120. The French master indeed has not sought, because he was writing a 'sonata,' to put on the lips of the honoured instrument the soaring and discursive eloquence appropriate to the strings and pianoforte. Such a confusion of means may render the wood-wind a sad visitation in chamber music; but Dr. Saint-Saëns's sense of style leads him into no risks. The instrument here pipes its brief, appropriate strain, and ceases too soon to weary us with the inhuman simpleness and sameness of tone which still naively bespeaks the first wood-windmen—fauns and dryads of old Arcadia. With a hand light and sure the composer fits the rôle of each to its character, so a pastoral improvisation for the oboe (opening of second movement), a wooing appeal for the clarinet, opening and closing the second Sonata, and for the bassoon—the voice surely of Pan himself—two movements of honest dignity separated by a 6-8 Allegro Scherzando of bassoonish fun. 'Cellists will seize on this last Sonata (Sonatina might have been the word), which only once or twice goes below the 'cello's C string.

C.

A PORTFOLIO OF MUSIC ANCIENT AND MODERN

Messrs. Sénart (Paris) have just issued the first portfolio of La Musique de Chambre, a half-yearly publication, which promises to constitute a first-rate library for the practising musician. This first issue consists of five sets:

Pianoforte music.—(a) Modern: the twelve easy pieces by Kœchlin, mentioned on another page of this number; works by Mompou, Déré, Bazelaire, Fourdrain, M. Maurice-Lévy, and Opol Ygouw. (b) Ancient: pieces by Ph. E. Bach, Le Bégue, A. L. Couperin, and E.-J. de la Guerre.

Songs.—Modern songs by Max d'Ollone, Déré, Pillois, Trémois, and others; arias by Dalayrac and Philidor.

Instrumental music.—Violin Sonatas by Le Guillard and Honegger, Violoncello Sonatas by M. Emmanuel and A. Ceillier, Kœchlin's first String Quartet and Jean Huré's second, Migot's Mouvements d'Eau for String Quartet, F. Bousquet's Poème for Pianoforte Quintet, a Pianoforte Trio by R. Gerhard, and various works by Vivaldi, Geminiani, San Martino, Dalayrac, and Baillot.

As regards the works for bowed instruments, the reviewer's task is complicated by the fact that they are issued in parts only. Kœchlin's Quartet is referred to on a previous page. Migot's Mouvements d'Eau looks very attractive, straightforward, and poetic. Huré's second Quartet is not a work which can be judged at a cursory glance; he is a fine musician but extraordinarily uneven, whose works call for particularly careful study. Honegger's Sonata is an impressive and thoughtful work, which will be reviewed shortly, together with the arrangement for pianoforte duet of his Pastorale d'Été, issued by the same publishers. Among the other examples of chamber music the Trio by Roberto Gehard, a pupil of Pedrell, calls for special notice. Earnest and scholarly, founded on fine themes reminiscent of Church music and folk-song, and carefully worked out, it is altogether classical in spirit and free from conventional tricks. Straightforward enough, though less original, is Laurent Ceillier's Violoncello Sonata, a pleasing instance of sound workmanship and balance.

To review a collection of this kind in a body is perhaps not the best way to be fair to all the works which it comprises—works which call for very different standards of appraisal.

The collection is planned so as to contain music which will appeal to various tastes and to various classes of singers and players; it is conceived and carried out in a spirit similar to that which directs the organizers of our Promenade Concerts. Some of the lesser items included may be quite good of their kind, and likely to do more than a little towards popularising the collection as it stands; yet one can hardly speak of them and of Kœchlin's or Honegger's contributions in the same breath. Let it be emphasised, however, that the portfolio contains a considerable proportion of really interesting things of various kinds, small or big. It is tastefully and carefully got up. The ancient works are edited by adepts such as Henri Expert, L. de la Laurencie, E. Bosquet, and others. M.-D. C.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

The arrangements for two pianofortes of Albert Roussel's Pour une Fête de Printemps (Durand) will be very welcome to all those who have read accounts of that work's performance at Paris, in its original orchestral form. Roussel's music, which is always well constructed and substantial, reads very well in the arrangement, which should help to popularise that thoughtful and poetic work pending the time when it will be produced at one of our symphony concerts.

Florent Schmitt's two suites, Antony and Cleopatra, in pianoforte duet arrangement (Durand), are hard nuts to crack, but seasoned players should derive a good deal of fun from them, especially from the Orgie et Danses in the second. Other numbers like the beautiful Le Tombeau de Cléopâtre are easier to tackle. The music is instinct with a fine dramatic and poetic sense throughout, and is very characteristic of Schmitt. It is to be expected, therefore, like the composer's previous works, it will delight many, but exasperate more.

We may feel confident that with Saint-Saëns's Feuillet d'Album, Op. 169 (Durand), we are on safe ground, and that all will share that peaceful enjoyment which the piece invites.

If we want a little more excitement we shall easily derive it from Manuel de Falla's charming Danse de la Muñeira, an excerpt from The Three-Cornered Hat (Chester). And should we incline towards a more introspective mood, a mood of tenderness and reverie, we shall turn with good purpose to Maurice Delage's Schumann (Durand), in which the pupil of Ravel—already known to us by his four delightful Poèmes Hindous—skilfully and fervidly attunes his fancy to that of the master to whom he is paying honour.

M.-D. C.

ORGAN MUSIC

The taking of the various parts of a great cathedral as a basis for a set of organ pieces seems so obvious a thing to do that one is surprised it has not long since been done. Perhaps it has, but at the moment I can think of nothing in that line but Silas's excellent Meditation in a Cathedral, which, of course, is a good way off the idea. Here, however, is Henri Mulet with a set of ten pieces entitled Esquisses Byzantines (Paris: Leduc), bearing the inscription: 'En mémoire de la Basilique du Sacré-Cœur de Montmartre, 1914-1919.' The sketches are concerned with the Campânile, Nef, Chapelle des Morts, a Chant Funèbre, Noël, In Paradisum, &c., the result being a set somewhat above the average of the Leduc albums that we know so well. The idiom is not that of the Dubois or Guilmant schools, Mulet being rather a disciple of Franck, though he succeeds in capturing the chromaticism rather than the loftiness of the composer. (The Chant Funèbre recalls Franck startlingly, not only in its harmony, but in its main theme, which is practically identical with that of the slow movement of the Symphony.) There is some really original writing at times, and the conventional organ style receives yet another blow, especially in the delightful Rosace and the brilliant Procession. The piece descriptive of the nave has the right sense of impressive space, though it is short and on the quiet side, and the belfry piece gives us the swaying suggestion of bells instead of the more obvious imitations of chimes that are now getting rather well worn. The pieces vary considerably in difficulty. The most exacting call for a fine organ and player, and all demand taste and fancy.

The collections of Twenty Short and Easy Pieces issued by Messrs. Novello during the past few years have been so popular, that there is no need to do much more than mention the appearance of a new volume—Set IV. As usual, the compilers have cast their net wide, drawing on W. H. Bell, Sterndale Bennett, Cui, Dubois, Elgar (a delightful little string Elegy arranged by John E. West), Gade, Gounod (Judex), Alan Gray, Hailing, Mackenzie, Mendelssohn (an arrangement of one of the best of the later Songs without Words), Rheinberger (a Trio), Luard-Selby, Smart, S. S. Wesley, John E. West (two of the best of his short pieces), and W. G. Wood. As there is something for practically every taste and for most stages of technical skill, the book, like its predecessors, is useful alike for study, voluntary, and recital purposes.

H. G.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

Apropos of the madrigal records discussed in last month's notes, I am glad to hear that the Gramophone Company has just issued a booklet entitled Elizabethan Madrigals and English Folk-Dances (No. 6 of the Education Series). It contains an article on the Madrigal by Dr. E. H. Fellowes, and the text of the examples so far recorded, together with brief biographical and other notes concerning the composers and the works. There is also a note from Mr. Cecil Sharp on English Country Dances, followed by particulars of the folk-dance records. This excellent pamphlet should be obtained by all those who are using the gramophone as a means of keeping in touch with the present great revival of this delightful old music. I understand that copies may be had free.

From a batch of new H.M.V. records I mention first the two 12-in. d.s. of the Enigma Variations. D578 gives us the Theme and Variations 1-5; D582, Variations 6-10. Presumably the remaining movements are on the way. I find the second of these two records far clearer than the first. However, the more I have to do with the gramophone the less dogmatic I am disposed to be. Records vary, and perhaps your D578 may be clearer than mine. Anyhow, the movements so far available have given me keen pleasure. The wonderful No. 7 (Troyte) retains an astonishing amount of the exciting quality that makes it one of the most stimulating things heard in the concert-room. The delicate Dorabella is also very successful. I should add that the performances are conducted by Sir Edward himself.

Saint-Saëns's popular G minor Concerto, played by Arthur de Greef and the Albert Hall Orchestra under Landon Ronald, is very successfully recorded on a couple of 12-in. d.s. No. D583 contains the first movement, and 584 the Scherzo and Finale. These two movements are amongst the best records of the brilliant type that I have come across.

Some composers 'record' well, just as do some singers. I have yet to hear an Edward German record that leaves much to be desired in the way of clearness. There is a reason for this, of course. German's music is not complex, and the scoring is of the right type for gramophone purposes—not too heavy and with plenty of telling passages for wood-wind. Well up to the standard is D 579, which bears on its two sides the Harvest Dance from The Seasons and the Valse Gracieuse from the Leeds Suite, with German conducting.

Chamber music is represented by D 502 and 08099. The former is a d.-s. of the Largo from Haydn's D major Quartet (Op. 76, No. 3), and the Minuet and Trio from Beethoven's A major (Op. 18, No. 5), played by the Catterall Quartet. The latter is a single-sided record of the Minuet from Mozart's Quartet in E flat, the performers being the Elman Quartet. All these movements come out well. So far as musical interest is concerned, however, the truly delightful Mozart is easily first.

Those in want of good violin records will find them in D581 (Isolde Menges playing Rimsky-Korsakov's Hymn to the Sun and Tod Boyd's Serenade); 3-07947 (Heifetz at his best in Sarasate's Gipsy Airs); and 3-07941 (the same player excelling again in the Canzonetta from Tchaikovsky's Concerto).

Why does the gramophone apparently jib at contraltos? I have heard records of our finest voices of this type, but in every case the result has been more or less of a caricature. There is evidently something in the timbre of a contralto voice that adversely affects recording, just as the quality of some instruments is at present an obstacle to perfect results. This is very hard on contraltos, from the point of view of gramophone royalties. Galli-Curci may thank her lucky stars she is a soprano. The contrast between the recording of the soprano and contralto voices could not be better shown than by 04393, a record of I waited for the Lord, sung by Alma Gluck and Louise Homer. The soprano comes out beautifully, both as to tone and words, but the contralto is strident and indistinct. It is, as I suggested above, a matter of timbre rather than of compass, for the disparity is no less marked when the two voices are singing the same notes.

After all, it is not unnatural that as the flute is perhaps the best of all instruments for recording, the voice that most nearly approaches it in character should also be successful. Hence the success of clear sopranos. Appropriately, the next record I take up is one of Galli-Curci singing Io son Titania from Mignon, with orchestral accompaniment. It is a typical Galli-Curci success, and among its most delightful moments are those in which the flute is also prominent, especially a brief passage towards the end where singer and flautist do a little back-chat, so to speak. The passage is worth noting because both voice and instrument are using middle and low notes—further evidence that on the gramophone timbre counts far more than pitch.

Last, but a long way from least, is a record of Caruso in Rachel! quand du Seigneur la grâce tutélaire, from La Juive. Fine, but far too powerful for a small room. You will want a soft needle, and perhaps a cotton-wool buffer as well.

The Music Club is faced with financial difficulties owing to deficient membership, which has not yet recovered from the effect of war-time. The present membership of two hundred and fifty must be doubled if the Club's activities are to continue. No other organization can so fittingly perform the Music Club's task of giving social entertainment—representative of our musical world—to distinguished musicians from abroad or at home. The subscription is only two guineas for ordinary members and one guinea for professionals, and the hon. secretary is Mr. R. K. Farebrother, 19, Berners Street, W. 1.

Music in the Foreign Press

VIOLINS OLD AND NEW

Le Monde Musical (November) publishes an account of the competition which takes place every year at Paris in order to compare modern violins with well-known specimens by old masters:

Seven modern violins, selected by ballot out of twenty-three submitted, were pitted against one by Stradivarius, one by Amati, one by Guarnerius del Gesù, two by Guadagnini, and one by Maggini. The same piece was played twice on all by M. Alfred Brun, professor of violin at the Paris Conservatoire, under conditions which made it impossible for both performer and audience to identify the instruments. A select jury of thirteen violinists, among whom was M. Brun, awarded the first place to the Stradivarius with 66 points, the second to a modern violin by Le Lyonnais with 61 points, the third to a Guadagnini with 46 points, and the fourth to another modern violin by Joseph Aubry with 38 points. But the ballot in which the whole audience took part gave first place to Joseph Aubry's violin with 1,090 points, the second to Le Lyonnais's with 1,040, the third to the Stradivarius with 1,000 points, the fourth and fifth to the Guadagninis with 822 and 799 points respectively.

The result of the competition confirms what the previous competitions had shown. After making full allowance for possible irregularity in the playing and for other accidental factors, it would seem that even for expert violinists the difference between old instruments and new is comparatively small. Le Monde Musical recalls that at Berlin, in 1907, Jacques Thibaud and Kreisler were unable to tell the tone of their own violins (a Stradivarius and a Guarnerius) from that of a modern instrument. In the present case the jury comprised, besides M. Brun, MM. Maurice Kayot, Joseph Debroux, and Carembout Senior, the violin-maker. All four placed modern instruments above the old ones or on a par with them.

GREGORIAN SONG IN FRANCE

In Le Ménestrel (November 25) Louis Laloy comments upon the Pastoral Letter from Cardinal Dubois enjoining that no other Gradual and Antiphony be used in the diocese of Paris than those published by the Benedictines of the Isle of Wight (formerly of Solesmes):

In the course of the Middle Ages plainsong came into contact with polyphonic music and gradually deteriorated. The soli were curtailed, the vocalises reduced or suppressed, the rhythms reduced to symmetry, and the modes disfigured by the introduction of sharps or flats with a view to facilitate accompaniment by the organ. Those errors, embodied in the so-called Medicean edition of 1614, were propagated throughout the 17th and 18th centuries, until a climax was reached with the Ratisbonne (or Regensburg) edition in the 19th. It is to Dom Guéranger, Dom Pothier, and Dom Mocquereau that the return to genuine tradition is due. Cardinal Dubois's Pastoral Letter, enforcing the application of the principles promulgated by Pius X. in his Motu proprio of 1903, comes as a further recognition of the invaluable service rendered to Church music by the monks of Solesmes.

AN OLD ORGAN

Le Monde Musical (November) contains the description of an organ, supposed to have belonged to Rheims Cathedral, or, at least, to be quite similar to one which stood in the choir of that Cathedral until 1837. It is a chest of sculptured wood, 3-ft. high, 3½-ft. broad, and 5-ft. 4-in. long. The chest contains three hundred and forty-three pipes, divided into six stops.

LEFT
Coppel	...	8-ft. drone (wooden).
Flôte	...	4-ft. open (wooden).
Prinzipal	...	4-ft. diapason, first octave open (wooden), the remainder of metal.
RIGHT
Octave	...	2-ft. flute, open.
Quint	...	A Nazard, a fifth above the foregoing.
Mixtur	...	A double mixture stop, giving the ground-tone and fifth.

(Although the names are given in German, the instrument is not supposed to be of German manufacture.)

The keyboard comprises four octaves, from C to C. The pitch is normal, and the tone excellent.

MORE ABOUT THE FRENCH 'SIX'

In Musica d'Oggi (November) Henri Prunières writes :

The designation the 'Six' corresponds to nothing more than a label, a trade-mark for propaganda and advertisement purposes. Cocteau's manifesto, Le Cog et l'Arlequin, which is sometimes alleged to express the group's art theories, is at best a statement of Auric and Poulenc's views, coupled with Cocteau's own. Neither Milhaud, nor Honegger, nor Durey, nor Germaine Taillefer write music in conformity with Cocteau's tenets. Durey has withdrawn from the group, and the ideals of the remainder are so dissimilar, that one cannot help wondering whether others will not follow suit. On the other hand, composers such as Andrée Vaurabourg and Robert Casadesus are asserting tendencies similar to Honegger's and Milhaud's, so that the 'Six' can hardly be said to represent the whole of revolutionary tendencies in France. The group comprises at least one musician of uncommon merit—Honegger. Milhaud's music is a medley of excellent stuff and deplorably bad stuff. Poulenc is a born musician, as yet very immature. It is a pity that while such a fuss is being made around these 'Six,' other interesting musicians should remain ignored. For instance, Georges Migot, Roland Manuel, and, first and foremost, Charles Kœchlin.

HOW CONTEMPORARY MUSIC IS DIFFUSED

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (second November issue) Dr. Georg Göhler writes :

So far as contemporary music is concerned, even the educated musicians and music-lovers stand in need of expert professional guidance. What is it that plays the greatest part in bringing good new music to the buyers' notice? The composers generally believe that it is public performance. This may be true, to a degree, with regard to dramatic and symphonic works, but certainly not with regard to pianoforte pieces or songs. The best propaganda is that of the teacher who introduces modern works in his pupils' curriculum. The teacher may play an all-important part, and bears a heavy responsibility. It is a pity that among the best-known and most fashionable teachers, so many do not realise what their duty is in this respect, or lack the capacity to fulfil it. Many rely upon the old stock, and never think of teaching their pupils anything modern. The lack of enterprise and the ignorance of many retailers also does much harm. There should be in every big German town at least one retailing firm whose thoroughly competent staff would be able, not only to supply all information desired by customers, but eventually to direct their attention to the best in contemporary output.

These remarks may be found useful outside Germany.

AN OLD-TIME ORGANIST

In Il Pianoforte (November) Dino Sincero describes the life and activities of Francesco Landini (1325-97), the first of Italian organists.

ADOLF SCHREIBER

In Der Merker (November 15) L. Andro devotes a short article to ten songs by Adolf Schreiber recently published at Berlin :

Schreiber, we are told in a pamphlet by Max Brod, was born at Prague, and committed suicide at Berlin last year. His songs are described as instinct with delicate tenderness, proceeding from Brahms, but showing traces of more modern influences, and well worthy of attention. They are difficult, and call for the co-operation of a soulful singer and a responsive, poetically-gifted pianist. Many other songs by Schreiber remain unpublished, and he has left a number of bigger works, none of which has been published or performed.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

London Concerts

THE GOOSSENS CONCERTS

The third concert (November 23) opened with the Bach-Elgar Fugue, played twice, and much better the second time than the first. Quasi-novelties were Holbrook's The Wild Sea-Fowl and Cyril Scott's Aubade, the former showing Holbrooke at his best, the latter so uniformly grey as to suggest anything but the right kind of morning feeling. Manuel de Falla's three Dances from the Ballet El Amor Brujo were heard for the first time here, and proved to be as spicy and brilliant in rhythm as we expected. Debussy's Rondes de Printemps and Rimsky-Korsakov's Antar Symphony completed a fine programme, brilliantly played.

Bach opened the ball again on December 12 with the delightful Suite arranged by Sir Henry Wood from the organ works. John Ireland has so little orchestral work to his credit that more than ordinary interest attached to the first performance of his Symphonic Rhapsody. It has fine rhythmical energy, and is full of the bracing roughness that marks his works generally. The middle section left us doubtful. Was the writing for the brass too consistently chordal and heavy, or did the playing make it seem so? The composer had a hearty reception. The interest in Malipiero's Oriente Imaginario, three studies for small orchestra, lay in the manner rather than in the matter. Stravinsky's Symphony for wind instruments, in memory of Debussy, and Le Sacre du Printemps, were the other items. The former gave us one more acute reason for regretting the French composer's death. It was received with rapture by the left wing of the audience. The right as a whole refrained from unseemly demonstration during its performance, only a few members coughing richly from time to time. The centre party found the work dry and monotonous—the unforgivable sin in music. We can, and do, endure and even enjoy the extremest of dissonance: the Wind Instrument Symphony will be a failure not because it is discordant but because it is dull to a degree attainable only by one of the despised classical composers on his offest of off-days.

H. G.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

At the concert on November 28 interest was centred in Elgar's Falstaff. Mr. Coates gave a performance that made the most of the purple patches at the expense of the work as a whole. Its success with the audience, however, was unmistakable, and composer and conductor were called and recalled. Falstaff seems at last likely to take the place so long denied it. The rest of the programme consisted of Leonora No. 3, Rachmaninov's C minor Concerto (M. Pouishnov), and Scriabin's Divine Poem.

On December 5 a choral concert drew a crowded house. The Brahms Requiem and the Grail Scene from Parsifal at a sitting proved somewhat heavy fare. A group of small unaccompanied items would have provided the necessary relief, and would have enabled us to estimate the quality of the choir in a way that no work with orchestra can do—especially when the scoring is so persistent and aggressive as that of the Requiem. The classical composers and the worst type of organist join hands in their refusal to drop the accompaniment at times and give the voices a chance. These Philharmonic singers have decidedly 'come on.' They are alert, prompt in attack, and excellent in tone. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Mr. Herbert Heyner, and Mr. Norman Allin.

C. W.

Photo by]

[Sydney J. Loch

GUSTAV HOLST

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

Mr. Gustav Holst lives and works hard in the heart of London, and yet manages to be a recluse. Outside his special haunts—Hammersmith, the R.C.M., and Waterloo Road—he is personally unknown, and he is the last man in the world to court Press notoriety. It speaks then remarkably for his music, that—even when quite new, like his ballet music The Perfect Fool (Philharmonic Society,

D

December 11)—it 'goes' home' not only with the knowing few but also with the bulk of an audience who mostly need some personal clue to the bearings of a new composer. Anyhow, The Perfect Fool brought Mr. Holst pretty well as much recognition as came to the hero of the evening's Concerto (the hero, the admirable Pablo Casals; the Concerto, Schumann's Op. 129). The ballet comes from an opera, we hear, a comic opera—but more we are left interestedly guessing. But with a number in it like this—quite on the bravest, soaring Russian scale—it must be a sort of its own. The brass first utters an unaccompanied Invocation, an utterance that runs through the three dances of Spirits of Earth, Water, and Fire. These are Holst in his full maturity of power, vitality, and invention. The mastery of it showed up crudities and 'holes' in the scoring of Victor de Sabato's symphonic poem Juventus, which indeed was palpably young. It was worth having, as earnest of the new Italians' brave intentions, though it did not outshine a good many of the doings at our Patron's Fund Rehearsals. Mr. Albert Coates conducted.

OTHER ORCHESTRAL MUSIC

The Queen's Hall Orchestra gave a symphony concert under Sir Henry Wood on November 19, with Heldenleben and Casals in a Haydn Concerto as matters of greatest importance. At the Robert Newman benefit concert of December 3 there was great violin playing by M. Toscha Seidel.

Mr. Edward Clark has opened a series of orchestral programmes at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, which, to judge from the empty seats, are rather too 'classy' for the neighbourhood.

Mr. Adrian C. Boulton's Sunday afternoon concerts at the People's Palace have run their excellent course, although the necessary rule of crowded houses has not been observed. On November 27 the symphony was Schubert's C major and the British work Holst's Beni-Mora. Strauss's Don Quixote was given on December 11, with Bliss's Mêlée Fantastique and a work by Frederick Laurence.

W. MCN.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

The concert given by the above choir, on December 13, provided an object-lesson of what can be accomplished by any choir which has the good fortune to be directed by a conductor of knowledge, enthusiasm, and taste. The choir itself consists obviously of average elements, yet from it were drawn effects that would have done credit to a body of far longer standing and greater pretensions. It is true that the acoustics of Bishopsgate Institute, where the concert was held, are specially good—perhaps better than those of any other hall in London—and this may have covered defects that would have been apparent elsewhere; but, as I heard it, I thoroughly enjoyed the performance of Mr. Harold Brooke and his singers.

The programme, one of quite rare distinction, included Sweelinck's Hodie, Madrigals by Weelkes and Wilbye, a Ballet of Morley (sung with engaging lightness), folk-song arrangements by Vaughan Williams (in one of these, Just as the tide was flowing, the rhythm was badly held up by over-expression of the words—almost the only instance of misjudgment that I observed), a cantata, God so loved, of Bach, and the Choral Fantasy on old carols, Christmas Day, by Holst.

Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Joseph Farrington lent valuable assistance as soloists. Miss Marguerite Swale was an excellent accompanist, and at the organ Mr. Harvey Grace provided occasional support and played solos. C. K. S.

THE BACH CHOIR

The opening concert of the forty-sixth season (December 14) found Dr. Vaughan Williams in charge for the first time. Three of the Church cantatas, Jesus took unto Him the Twelve, Stay with us, and The Sages of Sheba—formed the bulk of the programme, and showed us a side of Bach that is still too little known. There were no thunders or hammer strokes, but much quiet beauty. The choir after a rather tame start gave some excellent soft and mezzo-forte singing, and the longer the concert went on the better they sang. The instrumental side consisted of the genial fifth Brandenburg Concerto (Harold Samuel, W. H. Reed, and Daniel Wood), the E major French Suite (Harold Samuel), and an Organ Prelude (Harold Darke). The vocal soloists were Miss Lilian Berger, Mr. Steuart Wilson, and Mr. Clive Carey. H. G.

ORIANA CHRISTMAS CONCERT

The Oriana Madrigal Society, at its Christmas concert (Æolian Hall, December 15) seemed to have more than recovered from the general choral set-back of the dark years. The singing and the music that was sung were a pure refreshment to ears that, anticipating respite after three crowded months of concerts, might perhaps have been excused a certain jadedness towards any music whatsoever! Such music—Byrd's from the past, Holst's from the present—offered (with so much else) a reminder of one sure dwelling-place of the spirit of the art, which often, it must be allowed, appears to have fled from the main machinery of instrumental performances. The programme, the order of which again bore evidence of Mr. Kennedy Scott's fine taste, was sung through entirely by heart. The great Byrd was on the first page with three motets, Cast off all doubtful care, the Lullaby which is coming to be quite often sung, and then the grandly affirmative and exultant This Day Christ was born (six parts, from the 1611 book). Holst's Ave Maria (women's voices, eight parts) was one of the composer's first strong proofs of genius, and one can bear testimony that its manifold beauties have overcome the ordeal of a score of hearings at a competitive festival. The Oriana women's voices gave it the tone both rich and clear of a Tuscan altar-piece. Holst's Four Songs from a Mediæval Anthology, for voice and violin, were sung with rare truth by Miss Norah Scott Turner, only the violin line in Jesus sweet should have been firmer.

There were arrangements of old carols, both devout and jolly, by Vaughan Williams, Geoffrey Shaw, Kennedy Scott, and W. G. Whittaker, belonging to that body of new English part-songs which are not unworthy of the land that produced the madrigalists of 1600. Corpus Christi carol was by Peter Warlock, a newcomer, we fancy, in this field. His ancient text is sung by contralto and tenor solos, accompanied wordlessly by the chorus. Imagination was felt to be in the work, and also musical cunning. The mysterious text in itself approaches music, so evocative is it with the vaguest of verbal information; and the actual music with its latter-day methods managed to enhance its 'Gothic' mysteriousness. C.

OTHER CHORAL CONCERTS

In The Music-makers and The Golden Legend on November 26, the Royal Choral Society seemed determined to give of its best for the sake of Mr. H. L. Balfour, who was conducting in the place of Sir Frederick Bridge. There was some sensitive singing in Elgar's work, and the choir's volume of tone did good service in Sullivan's. The solo parts were taken by Miss Doris Vane, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Charles Tree.

Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society, under Mr. Allen Gill, did excellent work in Judith at the Northern Polytechnic on November 26. The choral singers seemed thoroughly familiar with the music, some of which is by no means easy.

Ealing Philharmonic Society (Mr. E. Victor Williams) opened its season with two performances of Elijah, on November 28.

The London Choral Society (Mr. Arthur Fagge) did strenuous work at Queen's Hall on November 30. The singers vociferated Burns for a hundred pages, in Mr. J. St. A. Johnson's setting of Tam o' Shanter. The task was hopeless. No choir or composer can do anything with such words. King Olaf followed.

The Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock) has given Tom Jones and a miscellaneous programme. The latter—on December 10—included Wilbye's Sweet Honey-sucking Bees and Bach's Sleepers, wake.

M.

TO THE GLORY OF WILLIAM BYRD

When Dr. Fellowes put forth the three volumes of Byrd last year in his English Madrigal School (Stainer & Bell), we sanguinely hoped to see the fame of the old master—'never without reverence to be named of the musicians'—spread about like wildfire. It has not happened quite so quickly, but the good work is on the way. The sextet of English Singers (Æolian Hall, November 30), chose motets and madrigals from the 1588 and 1611 collections, singing as they sat round a table, one voice to a part; absolute music! There would be much to say of details in the execution (good, and now and again touching on perfect felicity), but an urgent point is that this sort of thing be done more and more widely, even though with less accomplishment. This way music lies! It means the refinement of ear and brain, of the senses and the sensibility; it is the music of the sacred grove, which will give us the measure of the battering music of the circus.

Pure polyphony on this evening was relieved by dainty accompanied duets gathered from Purcell's garden, and by some of those modern English arrangements of folk-songs as unaccompanied part-songs—the happiest form, no doubt, into which our folk-songs can be cast, a form in which men like Holst, Vaughan Williams, and Whittaker, have done the jolliest, most cunning, and engaging things, like music of no other time or clime. C.

THE TUDOR SINGERS

A new group of performers, who are to be thanked for steering clear of the average recital rut. As an ensemble they are not uniformly good, and confirm the view that it's better to have one exclusively composed of category D singers than one which ranges over the alphabet.

Space demands a concise boiling-down of impressions: the over-weighting of the strings in the Byrd carol (what a lovely 'Amen' this work has!); the feeling that an immense amount of spade-work will have to be done before the madrigal makes its right appeal to a modern audience—and that far less conventional methods will have to be employed; that Mr. Gerald Cooper has found his true vocation as a harpsichord player; the unfairness of inserting Eine kleine Nachtmusik in the middle of things; Holst's lovely arrangement of a folk-song (I sowed the seeds of love), and the bottomless stupidity of another (Bobby Shaftoe's gone to Sea), which, of course, had to be repeated.

A separate and concluding paragraph for the Bach Chorale, Awake us, Lord, we pray Thee, from Cantata No. 22. Mr. Anthony Bernard, whose string orchestra accompanied, set much too fast a pace for my liking. Perhaps he felt it that way. This is one of those perfect creations where tempo markings avail nothing. Five interpreters might interpret in five different ways and all be right. The spirit endureth.

R. L.

MR. JOHN COATES

Even our enemies—perhaps, indeed, they more particularly—have recognised a fundamental national attribute of ours which, for want of a better word, we term 'humour.' Nothing, it appears, can uproot the British propensity to make play with the events of life—at a pinch, with death itself. Our fine frenzies are finest when they contain an element which, if it does not appear as comedy, at least bears witness to a keen sense of proportion. The existence of this trait is not a convenient theory, but a fact within the cognisance of all in everyday life as we live it. We are intolerant of the 'solemn ass.'

Some such reflections emerge on a leisurely consideration of both the matter and the manner of Mr. John Coates's English song recitals at Chelsea Town Hall. At the earlier ones, devoted to contemporary products, one could not always smother a sneaking suspicion that it was the gift of comedy, or proportion, or what you will, in the singer alone which lifted some numbers out of the ruck of asinine solemnity. Deficiencies of proportion, let alone humour, one felt, might have been conspicuous on dispassionate analysis of the material. They lacked flesh and blood. It was far otherwise when he came to deal, on December 1, with the period 'Purcell to Parry.' The very absence of the suspicion confirmed its previous substantiality, though, in instituting comparisons, allowances must be made for the fact that the twenty songs heard on this occasion were the cream of two and a half centuries. The peculiar facility which this singer possesses of placing his mind on intimate terms with those of his hearers was given full rein, and a degree of entertainment succeeded for which profound is not an extravagant term. One felt that one was listening to the very voice of Britain. What more typical and succinct expressions of the national views on sentiment could be found than Henry Purcell's Knotting Song ('Phyllis, without a frown or smile, sat and knotted all the while') in one manner; John Blow's setting of Edmund Waller's The Self-Banished in another; the immortal Drink to me only with thine eyes; Linley's Autolycus' Song from Shakespeare's Winter's Tale, or Parry's Take, oh take those lips away? But these are all love songs. True. The fact is that Mr. John Coates is adept in every shade of the philosophy of love, and beguiles us into thinking that he is illustrating for us in a comprehensive fashion every phase of life. And who shall say that he is not justified? Is it not our own proverb that says 'It's love that makes the world go round'? Mr. Berkeley Mason's accompaniments were, as ever, masterly in their aptitude and flexibility.

H. F.

MISS STELLA MURRAY

Miss Stella Murray (Æolian Hall, December 3), a contralto from New Zealand, lately a pupil of Mr. Plunket Greene, gave peculiar joy to the listener who in these days pretty well abandons hope at a singer's 'first appearance.' Here was a voice, not prodigious but certainly full enough, truly even, and above all animated, flexible—not always lolling back in the usual contralto divan. Here, too, was a vivacious understanding, giving an intelligible picture to each song. Montevidé, Dvorák, and some German songs were sung in English, English that really was acceptable as such. Mr. Harold Craxton left his accustomed place as accompanist for a few moments, and played some solos—Purcell and Arne. The playing was exquisite, matching the music. This is a field—old English harpsichord music—which Mr. Craxton is clearly called to cultivate further. He has it almost to himself, and he proves himself the right man.

C.

MISS DOROTHY SILK

Miss Dorothy Silk (soprano) has given 'concerts of old music' at Steinway Hall (November 19 and December 10), and more are to come—'old' music in one sense, no doubt, but the inherent youth of much of it, of Dowland, of Purcell's Expostulation of the Blessed Virgin, of Bach, really overrode the pedantic facts of date. Pepusch, of Beggar's Opera fame, of whom Mr. John Goss sang a solo cantata, is, on the other hand, old, and probably always was; a vieille perruque. Miss Silk's singing commands the regard of the musical—fine, dainty singing, the silvery utterance of a rare instrument. We applaud Mr. Goss's intelligence, and wish his technique matched hers. Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse's consummate playing of Bach (B flat Partita) on the harpsichord made an exquisite interlude at the second concert.

C.

MISS URSULA GREVILLE'S CONCERT

Miss Greville sung with notable skill and taste at Queen's Hall (December 16) in an exacting programme that included the Queen of the Night air, from the Magic Flute, Bliss's Rhapsody for soprano, tenor (Mr. John Coates), and orchestra, and airs from Le Coq d'Or and Stravinsky's Rossignol. Her voice and style, however, are better suited by smaller and more intimate surroundings; Queen's Hall and an orchestra were occasionally too much for her. Ansermet gave us some of the most vivid and finished orchestral playing heard in London for many a long day. A new work by Honegger, Horace Victorieux, was heard—probably outside as well as inside the hall, so noisy was it. But it had at least one merit lacking in post-Sacre Stravinsky—it was very much alive, even though it showed the fact by the primitive process of kicking.

H. G.

OTHER VOCALISTS

Among the other vocalists one remembers, first and foremost, Mr. Plunket Greene in Dichterliebe and songs of Stanford, and Miss Olga Haley in Lieder and new English songs. Mr. George Baker takes high rank with his two recitals, and Mr. Gale Gardner showed gifts as a refined singer of English song. He introduced some new songs, with violin accompaniment, by Miss Phyllis Norman-Parker. One of these, A Sussex baby-song, is a gem. Madame Lily Payling had the advantage of accompaniment by Mr. Landon Ronald and his orchestra at the Royal Albert Hall on December 3. Others who have made good are Miss Una Bates and Miss Dorothy Moulton.

CHAMBER CONCERTS

The Catterall Quartet played Novacek, Howells, and Beethoven for the London Chamber Concert Society on November 22. A week later the Allied String Quartet gave Quartets of Ravel and d'Indy. At this concert M. Louis Aubert accompanied Mlle. Radiana Pazmor in his rather superficial Six Poèmes Arabes.

The Classical Concert Society brought M. Siloti, Madame Adila Fachiri, and Mr. Felix Salmond together in two Trios at Wigmore Hall on November 29. All individualists, they made an excellent ensemble. The London Trio has played Ravel and Schumann in d' minor. The Philharmonic Society Quartet continues to make Chelsea its centre.

The new Kruse String Quartet opened a series at Wigmore Hall on December 10. Prof. Kruse, a colleague of Joachim, will be remembered by some as one of London's musical leaders for many years.

VIOLINISTS

Close upon Mr. Sammons's interpretation of the Elgar Concerto came Kreisler's, on December 6. If one had not heard the first, he might never have felt a lack of warmth in the second. Kreisler gave superb violin playing and a beautiful exterior to the music. The Englishman was more intimate. A word of praise is due to Mr. Landon Ronald for his sensitive accompaniment to Kreisler's interpretation. Kreisler was at the Royal Albert Hall on December 11, and added a recital at Queen's Hall on December 16.

Among the violinists—apart from Kreisler—Mlle. Jelly d'Aranyi and her sister, Madame Fachiri, take precedence. Both gave recitals at Wigmore Hall, and showed that all-round faculty that will bring out all that a mercurial modern work contains and the next moment play pure Bach.

PIANISTS

Cortôt's playing of the Chopin Etudes at Wigmore Hall on November 26 was illuminating. It showed that these works could be greatly admired for half a life-time and still be incompletely understood. No other pianist from abroad has made such an impression as this during the month, although the closing recitals of Rosenthal's series fall within the period. Siloti gave an improvised pianoforte recital at Wigmore Hall on December 7 while the audience was waiting for a belated Casals to appear. When the violoncellist did arrive (an hour late) he played superbly. The afternoon was good value for money. Three recitals by Mr. Walter Rummel have shown his waywardness—a clever pianist, apt to reduce music to noise. Mr. Ralph Lawton, at two recitals, proved that he has far greater claims on the public than it acknowledges.

Of our own pianists Howard-Jones has been the most conspicuous, for he gave a notable performance of John Ireland's Sonata (the one which Lamond first produced) at Wigmore Hall on December 1.

There has been the delight of a recital by Harold Samuel—Beethoven, Schubert and Bach; Mr. Edward Mitchell has been steadily working through Scriabin at Central Hall, Westminster; Mr. Lamond introduced some typical Reger to a fairly small audience at Queen's Hall, in the form of Variations and Fugue on a theme of Bach, Op. 81.

Ireland's For Remembrance and Amberley wild brooks, and J. B. McEwen's Vignettes pleased everybody as played by Miss Joyce Ansell on December 1. Miss Freda Cahill, on the same day, showed her liking for modern pianoforte music, English and foreign.

VARIOUS

For violoncello music we have been dependent upon, chiefly, Casals, M. Salmon, with his revived old music, and Miss Beatrice Harrison with a new Sonata by York Bowen (in F major). Almost a new-comer, Miss Marie Dare showed promise high above the average at Æolian Hall on December 6. She was completely at ease in Elgar's Concerto.

M.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

CARL ROSA EXPERIMENTS: GILBERT AND SULLIVAN REVIVAL

On December 10 the Carl Rosa Company brought to a close what Mr. Alfred van Noorden in a valedictory speech described as 'the longest and most ambitious season of opera in English ever given at Covent Garden.' I fear, nevertheless, that no new ground has been broken. The season has shown that the public are quite ready to support opera in English, and by the public I mean those who come from the great majority and fill the upper circle and gallery night after night. This is the section of the public it is necessary to reach, and the Company may claim to have reached them, save when the bill was completely filled by an unfamiliar work, when the paying factor was not well represented. Still, as things are, we cannot expect miracles.

The features of the eight weeks' season have been the special performances of Wagnerian operas, including the major portion of the Ring and some not very well-guided endeavours to augment the repertoire. Three such examples have been seen. One was The Angelus, by Dr. E. W. Naylor, which gained the Ricordi prize twelve years ago, and was produced at Covent Garden; another was a short affair, Thais and Talmae, composed by Mr. Colin M. Campbell, and the third, La Chant Fatal, by M. Georges D'Orlay. In turn they represent the cantata, the extended duet, and the illustrated, orchestral tone-poem; not one of them is an opera. Indeed, it is difficult to see how the British composer can learn what operatic style is since he hears so little opera, so it is not fair to blame him exclusively. Had Dr. Naylor's music, for example, been set to illustrate an English country-side story it might have passed muster, but as an illustration of a theme dealing with monks, magic herbs, visions, and mysteries, the whole tinged with the atmosphere of a religion that is not now the common religion of the English people, it misses its point. Mr. Campbell's work shows ability somewhat misdirected if he imagines that a prolonged duet in semi-darkness constitutes an opera. The effort of M. D'Orlay had been heard before in concert form. It does not improve by being transferred to the stage, for though he can make his music boil in a way that might make it operatic, he can command no intermediary stages. He either gives us the coldest of cold water in the shape of commonplace tune that sounds like a Viennese waltz played too slowly, or he rants and roars in the manner of Strauss made familiar in his tone-poems. I am convinced that an English opera to succeed must deal with an English subject.

A NEW DON GIOVANNI

Actually the most satisfactory piece of work in the direction of grand opera during the month has come from the Old Vic., in the form of a new English version of Mozart's Don Giovanni. It has been made by Mr. E. J. Dent, and the new form his enthusiasm for Mozart opera takes is particularly helpful. He has given a version of Da Ponte's book that can be understood by all. The effect is to make all the characters very much more like human beings, and to lead to an understanding of the story and therefore an appreciation of the music. As part of this new and helpful version the original Finale after the death of the Don is restored. Its effect is to remove the element of tragedy from what is in reality a comic opera. With the assistance of Mr. Clive Carey as producer and as the Don, Miss Vallings, Miss Winifred Kennard, Miss Muriel Gough, Mr. Sumner Austin, Mr. Arnold Beauvais, and Mr. S. Harrison, the production was received with delight by the audience, and their enjoyment, I felt, arose from the fact that for once they really understood what the opera was 'all about.'

SULLIVAN'S FIRST OPERA

A feature of the much-appreciated performance of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas at the Princes Theatre was the revival, on November 28, of Sullivan's first opera, Cox and Box, written to Burnand's version of the famous farce. It was vastly appreciated, and everything was done by the exponents to win that approval. Mr. Sydney Granville as Cox, Mr. Leo Darnton as Box, and Mr. Darrell Fancourt as Bouncer, played the piece in the right spirit. It is interesting to note in the music the promise of the individuality that was afterwards to expand to such a wonderful vein. All there is of the later Sullivan is an occasional rhythm that was individual and the use of the chord of 6-4-2, which was in later years to become a hall-mark. In all else there is nothing to show that it is the work of the composer of The Mikado. The style freely parodies that of Italian opera of the day with which, as we know, Sullivan had a very intimate acquaintance, since he once held the position of organist at the Royal Italian opera. The audience took to the piece most kindly, and I do not blame them, since melody is becoming a more precious thing every day. The Sorcerer followed, so that there was an evening of early Sullivan, and one greatly appreciated. The following week The Yeomen of the Guard was put on, to the delight of a succession of crowded audiences, and at Christmas came The Mikado. In connection with these works I should like to mention—although really it is out of my province—the issue of an excellent little work, Gilbert and Sullivan Opera: A History and a Comment, by H. M. Walbrook. It was just what was wanted at this time, when there are so many new adherents to the Savoy colours, and it has just the intimate touch that gives a new complexion to an old story. A Foreword, by Sir Henry Wood, hits the nail on the head, and I hope that some of the fingers of some of our 'moderns' may be imposed between that nail and Sir Henry's hammer. It will do them good.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Accompanist (lady) would like to practise with singer or violinist. London, S.W. district preferred.—M. G. H., c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman pianist wishes to meet three or four stringed instrumentalists with view to mutual practice of advanced chamber music.—L.R.A.M., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist and viola players are invited to join a musical party (voices and strings). Rehearsal, Thursdays, 7-9. Central London.—Apply, 'ENTRE NOUS,' 43, Great Russell Street, W.C.1.

Soprano and tenor required for small party on quartet basis, with own orchestra. Practice room, New Oxford Street, Thursday evenings.—Write secretary, 12, Sandmere Road, S.W.4.

Lady pianist would like to meet 'cellist and violinist for practice.—L. B. B., 24, Acol Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

Pianist desires to meet violinist in Beaconsfield or Gerrard's Cross district for practice of violin sonatas, &c., classical and modern.—'DIGIT,' c/o Musical Times.

Young enthusiast would be glad to meet instrumentalists with a view to forming small orchestra. Rehearsals could be held at Slough or Windsor.—'DATCHET,' c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist. Good amateur wanted to join violinist and pianist for the practice of trios, classical and modern.—G. F. H., 224, Reddings Lane, Hall Green, Birmingham.

Amateur orchestra would welcome string and wood instruments at a South London Parish Church. Practice and one service weekly.—S. C. C., 59, Waleran Buildings, Old Kent Road, S.E.1.

Gentleman, baritone, would be glad to meet a capable pianist (gentleman) for mutual practice in Manchester or Hightown districts.—S. CARLTON, 57, Peter Street, Hightown, Manchester.

Violinist, violist, and harpist would give services. Church, orchestral, or chamber music.—Address, S. B. S., 6, Hauberk Road, London, S.W.11.

Lady pianist would be glad to meet capable violinist and 'cellist for chamber music practice.—Miss RITZ, L.R.A.M., 266, Elgin Avenue, W.9.

B. W. A. (North-Finchley) is fond of playing pianoforte accompaniments, and would be glad to meet a singer (amateur or professional) for the purpose.—B. W. A., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur Orchestral Society in North London (Stoke Newington and Clapton) has vacancies for good instrumentalists. Second season commenced Monday, October 24.—Write for particulars to A. W. ROBINSON, 113, Brooke Road, N.16.

Orchestra (Brixton Brotherhood). There are vacancies for all stringed instruments, and cornet, flute, clarinet, and oboe. Rehearsals on Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock, St. Matthew's Church Schools, Church Road, Brixton, commenced October 27.—Apply, E. G. MEDLEY, Free Press Office, Brixton Road, S.W.

Amateur solo violinists and amateur orchestras required to co-operate in musical recitals at St. John's, Clapham Rise, on the second Sunday evening in each month and on the last Monday evening of each winter month.—WALLACE G. BREACH, organist and choirmaster, 42, Honeybrook Road, S.W. 12.

Pianist, Leeds district, desires to meet violinist for practice of classical sonatas, &c., or vocalist for practice of classical songs, Wolf, Schubert, &c.—A. F., c/o Musical Times.

Ladies and gentlemen, all instruments, with good orchestral experience, are invited to attend the symphony rehearsals held every Tuesday, at 7.30 p.m., at the Philological College, 248, Marylebone Road, N.W. (near Great Central Station).—EDWIN C. WHITE, Principal.

Claremont Orchestra.—Required immediately, leading violin, 'cello, double-bass, brass, and wood-wind.—Write, V. B., 34, Frances Street, Battersea, S.W. 11.

Soprano singer, having recently studied in Italy, would be glad to meet accompanist for mutual study, Manchester or Altrincham district.—B. H., c/o Musical Times.

Mezzo-soprano, with some professional experience, would like to meet accompanist for practice. Crystal Palace district.—F. C. W., c/o Musical Times.

A string orchestra is being formed at the Working Men's College, Crowndale Road, Camden Town (near Mornington Crescent tube station, Hampstead Railway). Players of all string instruments are required; rehearsals will commence in the middle of January on Thursday evenings, 7.30-10.—MR. WALTER YEOMANS, Director of Music Studies, Working Men's College, Crowndale Road, N.W.

Young tenor wishes to meet a good pianist, lady or gentleman, for mutual practice. S.W. district preferred.—H. M. W., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wanted to form trio or quartet to play chamber music. S.E. London district.—C. B., c/o Musical Times.

Wanted for Sunday evenings during the musical service, good amateur musicians (two violins, viola, and violoncello) to form a string quartet for Whitefield's Church, Tottenham Court Road, W. 1.—Apply, SPENCER SHAW, 690, Barking Road, Plaistow, E. 13.

South Hampstead and St. John's Wood, N.W. There are vacancies for good amateur instrumentalists in the Amateur Orchestral Society. Meetings on Thursday evenings in the Lecture Hall of the New College Chapel, Adelaide Road entrance. Low fees. Music provided.—Apply, WATSON HARDING, 6A, Upper Park Road, N.W. 3.

Church and Organ Music

MODERN ORGAN MUSIC

The Yorkshire Post of December 8 contained a long letter from Mr. H. Mathias Turton on the above subject. Mr. Turton says a good many things that need saying, so we quote the following passages:

Probably one of the strongest reasons why organ recitals are not very popular is that, whilst the audience at a concert is able to see the actual performance of a pianist or violinist, it is a rare thing to find the console of an organ sufficiently visible to allow any considerable view of the operations of the performer. There are probably scores of musical people at Leeds who have not the slightest idea that an organist has a keyboard on the floor of his instrument, on which he plays with his feet. The modern concert organist has, as a regular thing, to play highly elaborate and extremely rapid pedal passages which would tax a moderately good pianist to play with his left hand.

This ignorance of the public as to the technical demands of organ playing seems incredible, but it is true. When Mr. Pattman and his organ made their first appearance at the Coliseum a few years ago, the writer heard amazed comments all round, such as: 'Oh, look! he's playing with his feet,' 'He plays on two or three keyboards at the same time,' and so on. And probably most organists have taken uninitiated musical friends to their console, and have been amused at the surprise with which the uninitiated beheld rapid pedalling and stop-control.

The reasons for the lack of understanding and appreciation of the organ, compared with that of other solo instruments, are well put by Mr. Turton:

A century ago, the violin, as an instrument, was exactly what we see it to-day; the pianoforte (thanks to such artist-manufacturers as our English Broadwood) was quickly approaching the instrument so familiar to all of us as the 'household orchestra'; but the organ (from a mechanical point of view) was an unwieldy, clumsy, and hopelessly inartistic thing. On the Continent, especially in Germany, the art of organ-building had already reached considerable heights, and it is to this fact that we owe that amazing series of preludes and fugues, choral preludes, &c., which the mighty genius of J. S. Bach (1685-1750) gave to the world of music. We English people are so deliciously and absurdly conservative in our opinions that we often still think of the organ as a sort of religious machine, which patiently draws out Psalms and hymns on Sundays, not realising (as the Americans and the French have long since done) that it is really an instrument capable of affording an almost unlimited variety of tone and colour. It is safe to say that the art of the organist has simply leapt forward during the last three or four decades.

The repertory of the organ is often underrated merely because such composers as Beethoven and Wagner wrote nothing for the instrument. On this point, Mr. Turton says:

Some few years ago the well-known musical critic of the Yorkshire Post remarked, in one of his weekly articles, that 'very few composers of the highest class had written much organ music.' Possibly they were deterred by the inadequacy of the instrument as a means of expression (in performance). With the aforementioned improvements in mechanical construction we find to-day (especially amongst the French composers) a real desire to make up for lost time, and several musicians of the highest powers are writing organ works of a calibre not one whit inferior to the best work of composers for any other instrument, or combination of instruments. As an instance, the four Organ Symphonies of Louis Vierne show a command and knowledge of the resources of tonal art which place him at once amongst the great composers of our time. Incidentally they make tremendous demands on the executant, but their remarkable difficulty is quickly forgotten in the superlative beauty of the music itself. The music is not for the people whose idea of an organ performance is bounded by the excitement of 'Storms at Sea' (and elsewhere), with hymns for safe deliverance from same (usually tooted out on the vox humana stop), patrols, Russian, Turkish, and other varieties, things which artistically are on a par with the Maiden's Prayer and the Battle of Prague. No, the fact is that we have not discovered as yet that the organ (given, of course, a good instrument) is a solo instrument par excellence, and that there is a wealth of organ music of the highest class which ought to be heard, but is not.

As to players:

There are great concert organists (to mention off-hand such names as Lemare, Goss-Custard, Bonnet, Dupré, and Vierne) whose musical equipment is quite equal to that of great concert performers on other instruments.

This country is exceptionally rich in fine organ soloists at present. One need not think very hard to be able to add to the English names in Mr. Turton's group. There are Ley, Cunningham, Wolstenholme, Hollins, Ellingford, Darke, Walton, and others, who would take a place by pianists and fiddlers of high rank but for the fact that they do their splendid work out of sight, and on an instrument about which most people know very little.

There can be no doubt that the organ, its players, and its music, are more honoured in France than in England, despite the fact that fine organs and organists are far more plentiful on this side of the Channel. Mr. Turton, after speaking of the excellence of the French school, says:

It is sincerely to be hoped that no one will see in this letter any attempt to extol French composers or organists at the expense of the English or other schools. No one rejoices more than the writer to see the younger school of English composers giving some attention to the organ. . . . We cannot, however, ignore the fact that France is leading the way at present in organ composition, and it would simply be absurd wilfully to close our eyes to the immense importance of the organ music that is coming to us from France.

An excellent letter concludes with a word which we hope critics will take to heart:

One cannot see why there should be any greater sign of genius or musical culture in a new quartet or piano-forte work than in a new work for the organ; but until English writers on matters musical are ready to estimate the musical value of new organ compositions in precisely the same degree, and with the warmly appreciative attitude they display towards the work of a new composer in any other branch of the art, so long will the great musical public remain unaware of what is being accomplished in the world of organ composition and organ playing.

VOLUNTARIES IN PARIS CHURCHES

Our readers may be interested in the following list of voluntaries played by the Paris organists on two recent Sundays (November 2 and December 4):

- La Trinité* (Charles Quef)—Two Chorale Preludes, Bach.
St. Pierre de Montrouge (M. Blazy)—Choral No. 2, Franck; Prelude in G, Bach; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.
St. Elisabeth (M. R. Blin)—Toccata in D minor, Blin.
St. Charles de Monceau (M. E. Lacroix)—Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Prelude, Samazeuilh; Prelude, Boëllmann; Pièce, Palestrina; Pièce, Laparra; Communion, Gigout; Sortie, Saint-Saëns.
St. Séverin (M. Lambert-Monchagne)—Prelude, Clérambault; Pastorale, Franck; Implication (from ten new pieces), Dubois; Finale from fourth Sonata, de la Tombelle; Benediction Nuptiale, Dubois; 'Sur un thème Breton,' Ropartz; Elévation et Marche Religieuse, Saint-Saëns.
St. Ferdinand des Ternes (M. Georges Jacob)—Toccata, Merulo; Concerto in D minor, Handel; Invocation, Menuetto, and Finale from first Symphony, Guilmant.

This list confirms an impression we have long had—that French organists draw very little on the music of other countries. Bach seems to be the only German organ composer for whom they have any use. One could hardly expect Reger to appeal to them, but the pick of Rheinberger and Karg-Elert is surely worth their attention. And it will have been observed that Bonnet and Dupré, when touring in this country, play no English organ music save a few short pieces by such old composers as Byrd or Purcell—works which, strictly speaking, are not real organ music, being written indifferently for any keyboard instrument.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The distribution of diplomas by the president, Dr. Charles Macpherson, to the successful candidates for Fellowship and Associateship will take place on Saturday, January 21, at 11 o'clock. Members and friends are cordially invited to attend. No tickets are required.

A Festival service under the auspices of the Canterbury Diocesan Choral Union was held at All Saints' Church, Maidstone, on November 12, two hundred and sixty choristers taking part. The responses were sung in the original version of Thomas Tallis in five parts; the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were Charles Macpherson's in D; and the anthem was Luard-Selby's New every morning.

At Brighton Parish Church on November 22, on the occasion of the seventieth 'anthem and organ recital,' an Elgar programme was performed, consisting of The Spirit of England, the Prelude to Gerontius, and the Imperial March. Mr. Chastey Hector was at the organ. The recital was so much appreciated that it was repeated by general request on December 11.

An excellent performance of Brahms's Requiem was given at the Parish Church, Faversham, on December 14, by the church choir, augmented. Miss D. Nunns and Mr. F. Noakes (Canterbury Cathedral) sang the solos. The accompaniments were provided by two pianofortes and timpani. Mr. W. J. Keech conducted.

Mr. Henry Riding, who has completed forty-one years' work as organist of Chigwell Church, has been presented with an illuminated address, a cheque for £450, and a beautiful old picture of Chigwell Church and Dickens's 'Maypole.'

The Hymn of Praise was sung at Redland Park Church, Bristol, on November 25, by the combined choirs of Redland Park and Trinity Presbyterian Churches, totalling seventy, and a small orchestra. Mr. C. W. Casley conducted.

Parts 1, 2, and 3 of the Christmas Oratorio were announced to be sung at Albion Church, Ashton-under-Lyne, on December 18, with Dr. T. Keithley at the organ.

Dr. A. H. Mann, who has been organist at King's College, Cambridge, since 1876, and University organist since 1897, has been elected a Fellow of King's College.

Mendelssohn's Lauda Sion and Hear my Prayer were sung at St. Stephen's, Bournemouth, on November 24, Dr. Holloway accompanied.

Mr. Herbert Hodge is giving a Bach recital at St. Stephen's, Walbrook, at mid-day on the third Thursday in each month.

ORGAN RECITALS

- Mr. Paul Rochard, St. John's, Hammersmith—Concerto in G, Bach; Pastorale, Recitative, et Corale, Karg-Elert; Passacaglia, Cyril Scott. Kendal Parish Church (two recitals)—Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in B minor and Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach.
 Mr. Wallace G. Breach, St. John the Evangelist, Clapham Rise—Legend and Final Symphonique, Guilmant; 'Starlight,' MacDowell.
 Mr. H. Timothy, St. Vedast Foster, E.C. (four recitals)—'Wachet auf,' Bach; Suite No. 1, Borowsky; Cantilène, Quef; Fugue in G minor, Krebs; 'Holsworth Church Bells,' S. S. Wesley; Andantino, Franck.
 St. Augustine's, Highgate—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude and Finale (Sonata in F minor), Rheinberger; Toccata, Dubois.
 Mr. D. E. Roberts, St. Andrew's Cathedral, Inverness (two recitals)—Fugue in C, Bach; 'Finlandia'; Toccata, Dubois; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Choral Prelude, 'St. Anne,' Charlton Palmer.

- Mr. R. Meyrick Roberts, St. Lawrence Jewry (two recitals)—Choral Prelude on Croft's 136th, Parry; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley.
- Mr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church (three recitals)—Aubade, Bernard Johnson; Toccata, d'Evry; Postlude on the 'Old Hundredth,' Harvey Grace; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn. St. John's, Hammersmith—Grand Cortège, Lemare; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Diaton, Chastey Hector; Bridal March and Finale, Parry.
- Mr. James M. Preston, St. George's, Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne (four recitals)—Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; 'Curfew,' Horsman; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Fantasy-Prelude, Farrar; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne; Carillon, Elgar.
- Mr. Albert Orton, St. Mark's, Southampton—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Sonata in F, Silas; 'Clair de Lune,' Karg-Elert. Claremont Central Mission, Pentonville—'Pomp and Circumstance' in D, Elgar.
- Mr. Fred Gostelow, Luton Parish Church—Fantasia-Symphonique, Gostelow; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn. Parish Church, Southend—Fugue in D, Bach; Funeral March and 'Hymn of Seraphs,' Guilmant. High Town Primitive Methodist Church, Luton—'Finlandia'; Toccata in D minor, Holloway.
- Mr. Andrew Dall, Dysart Parish Church—Fugue in G, Krebs; 'Curfew,' Horsman; Funeral March and 'Hymn of Seraphs,' Guilmant.
- Mr. A. E. Jones, Town Hall, Bolton—Finale (Sonata No. 2), Guilmant; March for a Church Festival, Best.
- Mr. Purcell J. Mansfield, Wellpark United Free Church, Dennistoun, Glasgow—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Concert Scherzo, Mansfield. Bar Congregational Church, Scarborough—Sonata No. 3, Guilmant; Cradle Song, Mansfield. Brixton Independent Church—Humoresque, 'L'Organo Primitivo,' Yon; Funeral March in A minor, Grieg. St. John's, Hammersmith—Sonata, Reubke; Coronation March, Tchaikovsky.
- Mr. Malcolm C. Boyle, St. Stephen's, Norbury—Toccata and Fugue, Bach; First movement (Sonata in E flat), Rheinberger; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Two Choral Preludes, Bach.
- Mr. J. Gray, Adam Smith Hall, Kirkcaldy—Suite in E minor, Borowski; 'Noel,' Wolstenholme; 'Pomp and Circumstance.'
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church (two recitals)—Preludio (Sonata in E flat minor), Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Evening Song, Bairstow; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Prelude on 'Old 104th,' Parry.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Prelude, Clerambault; Psalm Prelude No. 3, Howells; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; 'Finlandia.'
- Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary Abchurch, E.C. (four recitals)—'Sursum Corda,' Elgar; 'Farewell,' Stanford; Barcarolle, Wolstenholme; 'Gothic' March, Salome. St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (five recitals)—'In Memoriam,' P. J. Mansfield; 'Angel's Farewell' ('Dream of Gerontius'), Désespoir; Quef; Overture in C, P. J. Mansfield.
- Mr. Leitch Owen, Edge Hill Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Grand Chœur No. 2, Hollins; 'Pomp and Circumstance' No. 1.
- Mr. H. Goss Custard, Newcastle Cathedral—Étude Symphonique, Bossi; Pastorale, Franck; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; First movement (Symphony No. 6), Widor.
- Mr. H. A. Bennett, Newcastle Cathedral—Toccata in F, Bach; Chorale Preludes by Bach, Brahms, and Parry; Sonata, Elgar; Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford.
- Mr. Eric Brough, St. Lawrence Jewry—Choral No. 1, Franck; 'Chant de Mai,' Jongen; Passacaglia, Bach; Rhapsody No. 3, Howells. Jackson's Lane Wesleyan Church, Highgate—Introduction and Passacaglia, Rheinberger; Three Choral Preludes, Bach; Choral Fantasia, Darwall's 148th, Darke; Marche Pontificale, Widor.
- Miss Emmie Bowman, Parish Church, Barkway—Choral No. 3, Franck; Villanella, Ireland.
- Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta (three recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in A minor and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Adagio (Sonata No. 1), Mendelssohn; 'In Memoriam,' Rheinberger; Fantasia on 'St. Michael,' West; Finale in E flat, Healey Willan.
- Mr. Thomas Grosch, Highgate Unitarian Church—Duetto, Rheinberger; Gavotte and Musette, Bach; Triumphal March, Faulkes.
- Mr. R. Buchanan Morton, House of Hope Presbyterian Church, St. Paul, Minn.—Introit, R. B. Morton; First movement, Sonata Celtica, Stanford; 'In dulci jubilo,' Karg-Elert; Grand Chœur, Franck.
- Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, Barking Parish Church—Sonata in C minor, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach.
- Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Introduction and Fugue, Mozart; Fugue in C, Best.
- Mr. H. G. Bishop, All Saints', Worcester—Madrigal, Lemare; Rondino, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Margaret's, Whalley Range—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; 'Finlandia'; Prelude, Clerambault; 'Imperial March,' Elgar.
- Mr. George Pritchard, St. Mary's, Widnes (two recitals)—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; 'Finlandia.' Victoria Road Wesleyan Church, Widnes—Finale (Sonata No. 4), Mendelssohn; Fugue in D, Bach; 'Curfew,' Horsman.
- Mr. G. Thalben Ball, Temple Church—Short Prelude and Fugue in F, Bach; Toccata and Fugue, 'The Wanderer,' Parry; Canzone, Karg-Elert; Allegro Appassionata, Harwood.
- Mr. A. E. Howell, Parish Church, Trowbridge—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Allegretto Grazioso, Frank Bridge; Choral Fantasia, Darwall's 148th, Darke.
- Mr. H. A. Fricker, Canadian College of Organists' Annual Convention—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Theme and Variations, Bossi; Epilogue, Healey Willan.
- Mr. J. E. Adkins, Preston Parish Church—First movement Sonata in D minor, Rheinberger; Minuet in C, Smart.
- Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Psalm Prelude No. 2, Howells; Rhapsody in A minor, Saint-Saëns. Christ Church, Bala—Madrigal, Lemare; Gavotte, Pullein; Choral Preludes, 'Canterbury,' Pullein and 'Rockingham,' Parry.
- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Ave Maria, d'Arcadelt; Caprice Héroïque, Bonnet; Nocturne, Bairstow.
- Mr. C. F. Waters, St. Saviour's, Croydon (two recitals)—Sonata No. 3, Guilmant; Andante Cantabile, Widor; Choral Melody, Waters; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Sonata in F sharp minor, Rheinberger; Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley. Immanuel Church, Streatham Common—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns.
- Mr. Herbert A. Carruthers, Park Church, Glasgow (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in A minor and Toccata in F, Bach; Fantasy Prelude, Macpherson; Sonata in F sharp, Rheinberger. St. John's, Hammersmith—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Variations on an old English Melody, Stuart Archer.
- Miss Christina Chalmers, St. Lawrence Jewry—Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Fugue in G, Bach; Prelude, d'Indy; Postlude, 'Old Hundredth,' Harvey Grace.
- Mr. Arthur Clements, St. Andrew's, Cheddar—Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Overture to 'Occasional' Oratorio.
- Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—Fugue in G (Pastoral Sonata), Rheinberger; Grand Chœur, Henniker.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Liszt; and a Bach programme.
- Mr. William Ellis, St. Cuthbert's, Darlington—First movement (Sonata No. 1), Mendelssohn; 'Sleepers, wake' and Fugue in G minor, Bach.
- Mr. Arthur Haydn Leary, St. Cuthbert's, Darlington—Triumphal March, Faulkes; 'Finlandia'; Barcarolle, Leary; Funeral March and 'Hymn of Seraphs,' Guilmant.

- Dr. Arthur Kitson, St. Cuthbert's, Darlington—Song of Triumph, West; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Carillon, Vierne; Three Choral Improvisations, Karg-Elert.
- Mr. Herbert Walton, St. Cuthbert's, Darlington—Concerto No. 5, Handel; Fantasia Rustique, Wolstenholme; Symphony No. 2, Widor; Fugue in G minor, Bach.
- Mr. G. Bernard Gilbert, Town Hall, Stratford—Allegro Maestoso ('Water-music'), Handel; Allegretto, Lemmens; Festive March, Bossi.
- Dr. H. C. L. Stocks, Holy Trinity, Leamington Spa—Fugue in G minor and 'Sleepers, wake,' Bach; Andante, S. S. Wesley; Evening Song, Baird.
- Mr. Allan Brown, Wesleyan Church, Dartford—Mélodie in E, Rachmaninov; Fantasia on 'O Sanctissima, Lux; Finale (Sonata in F minor), Rheinberger; Finale, Wolstenholme. Jerusalem Chapel, Ton—Canon in B minor, Schumann; 'Finlandia', Fugue, Reubke; Finale (Symphony in D minor), Guildmant.
- Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (two recitals)—'Sleepers, wake,' Karg-Elert; 'Une Larme,' Moussorgsky; Prelude in B, Scriabin; Fugue in E minor, Bach; Basso Ostinato, Arensky; 'In Modo Dorico,' Stanford.
- Mr. Cyril Pearce, St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich (three recitals)—Improvisation, Rheinberger; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Prelude in G flat, Scriabin; Finale in B flat, Franck; Allegro Maestoso (Sonata), Elgar; Three Preludes on Welsh Hymn tunes, Vaughan Williams; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Fantasy, after Rheinberger, Harvey Grace; and a Bach programme.
- Mr. Arthur Sharp, St. Margaret's, Whalley Range—First movement (Sonata No. 6), Guildmant; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Gavotte (Sonata No. 12), Martini.
- Mr. Harry S. Greenwood, St. Agnes', Birch—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Allegro Cantabile, Widor; Grand Chœur in A, Salome.
- Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Central Hall, Westminster—Andante in B flat (Sonata No. 1), Peace; Gavotte in D, Peace.
- Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church—'Elegiac Romance,' Ireland; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. Martin Kingslake, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary Woolnoth, Lombard Street.
- Mr. Albert Orton, organist and choirmaster, St. Saviour's, Paddington.

SPOHR AND HIS INFLUENCE

By C. À BECKET WILLIAMS

If there is any thing in the history of music of which one becomes more convinced as time goes on it is the immense influence which Spohr wielded in the last century. I am sure due recognition has not been paid to this, and perhaps I may be permitted in a few lines to call attention to certain aspects of the work of this composer which have quite probably escaped the reader.

Spohr was born at Brunswick in 1784, and was the son of a well-to-do physician. Like his friend and contemporary Mendelssohn, he thus had the doubtful advantage of affluent circumstances, and enjoyed a career more successful than that of most composers. His life was full of interest, but as I do not wish this to be a biography, I will merely finish him off, so to speak, by saying that he died in 1859, through a skating accident. The cause of his death is, I think, significant. He was always an energetic and vital man, traits hardly appearing in his music, which is apt to suggest the pale and the romantic.

I have already called attention to one likeness between him and Mendelssohn. They were very similar in other ways. For instance, they both wrote autobiographies. I have not read that of Spohr, but it is said to be very amusing. They are both coupled in the public mind as pre-eminently writers of oratorios; both are considered by musicians to be essentially writers of 'sugary' music. The fact that both were great technicians and contrapuntists too often escapes notice. It is pretty generally believed that Mendelssohn had more influence than anyone on the later 19th century composers. But it is not generally acknowledged that Spohr must have had the greatest influence on Mendelssohn, who was born twenty-five years later, and came under Spohr's influence when the latter was at the height of his powers.

But undoubtedly the greatness of Spohr consists in his originality. He was most decidedly an innovator, and stands out as such in an age of conventionalists. Let us consider him briefly from this point of view.

Whether to his credit or not is beside the question, he practically 'invented' the luscious, sugary style which is so characteristic of him. He had a mania for chromatics and enharmonic changes, and these mannerisms are apparent in all his work. Think of his influence on our Stainers, Barnbys, Monks, and Dykes! What would the A. & M. Hymn Book have been without him? Perhaps stronger and less sentimental, but it takes all sorts to make a world, and I am not one of those super-spirits who scoff at all sentimentalism.

Spohr freely introduced the romantic element into oratorio. I refer particularly to the 'Last Judgment,' which is undoubtedly the greatest of his sacred compositions. Sobriety of style has always been regarded as an indispensable characteristic of sacred music of the highest order, and the introduction of this element of romance without detriment to the result is surely a remarkable tribute to the genius of the composer. May I suggest that 'Parsifal' and 'The Dream of Gerontius' owe not a little of their existence to this innovation?

Again, it must be remembered that 'programme music,' so-called, though not invented by him received a considerable contribution to its waning health by the production of his symphony, 'Die Weihe der Töne.' Also his opera 'Jessonda' shares with Weber's 'Euryanthe' the honour of introducing for the first time accompanied recitative throughout, in place of spoken dialogue.

He also invented various forms of composition, e.g., the double string quartet, the quartet concerto, the symphony for two orchestras, &c. He wrote a famous Method for the violin, and was himself a virtuoso on the instrument. And last, but not least, he was the first to direct an orchestra with a baton.

Is it not astonishing that a man who possessed the diverse genius of Spohr should cut such a small—I might say execrated—figure in modern musical criticism? Why is it? In his time he enjoyed a Continental reputation, and even musicians like Mendelssohn, Wagner, and that other neglected composer, S. S. Wesley, professed the highest admiration for him.

Probably his mannerisms upset people. Too many cakes make one dyspeptic, and Spohr was even a more sickly confectioner than Mendelssohn in this respect. Nevertheless, justice is not done him nowadays. There are many who say that they see in ultra-modern music the romantic element carried to its logical conclusion. If so, Spohr was the spiritual grandfather of Stravinsky. What an arresting thought!

Letters to the Editor

THE IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT PLACING OF THE VOICE

SIR,—In your issues for August and September last I read with interest the letters of Messrs. Tree and Keay on methods of so-called 'voice placing.' Since I retired from my literary and editorial work in London ten years ago, I have devoted most of my leisure to an investigation of Italian, French, German, Austrian, and Polish vocal methods, both theoretical and practical. I was already fairly familiar with English and American systems, not only as an author, but also as a public lecturer of thirty years' standing, using vocal and instrumental illustrations. I can therefore speak as one who has had considerable experience, and has sought in vain until quite lately for a vocal system which completely covers the ground and solves the problems which have hitherto baffled both students and teachers. I confess I was astounded at what Mr. Tree rightly terms the 'chaos' existing among the text-books and teachers; and I both saw and experienced some of the tragic results of this chaos in time, money, and the best years of one's vocal life wasted, not to mention the all too-frequent irreparable damage done in thousands of cases. I myself spent hundreds of pounds during nine years of futile search and effort, narrowly escaping complete ruin of what voice I had left at the hands of so-called maestri in Paris and Italy. I owe it to Siegfried Wagner's wise advice that I did not try Berlin in 1913. About eighteen months ago I saw in an American magazine an advertisement of a vocal academy in one of the principal cities, teaching a new method by correspondence. I quite expected it might prove to be one of the many quack systems existing in that country, but a little investigation dispelled that idea. The academy was opened in 1916, and is already working on a large scale. The principal has spent some twenty years in teaching and research in Europe, covering all the ground I had been over and much more besides. He has embodied his discoveries in a series of thirty lessons, making a book of six hundred and forty pages, and these are sent out at the rate of about one every fortnight, according to the student's progress, for a moderate inclusive fee. I began the course after I came to India, and completed it within a year, my previous experience enabling me, of course, to go fast and omit certain details. It solved all problems, and enabled me to locate and correct errors. For the first time in the history of vocal science the whole thing is placed upon a firm basis of unimpeachable scientific fact, and nothing but ordinary intelligence, a correct ear, and hard and patient work are necessary to attain the desired results.

One discovery of vital importance this authority has undoubtedly made, and that is that the really great voices are due to unusual strength in a certain muscle whose function in voice was not even suspected by previous writers and teachers, although it occupies a commanding central position in the vocal mechanism. Both the old Italian maestro Mancini and the eminent laryngologist Morell Mackenzie record their observation of certain exceptional voices which were entirely free from the usual breaks and registers. In these rare cases they said the singer was able to carry the full calibre of the middle tones (Mancini calls it 'chest-tenor') to the top of the range. Morell Mackenzie says that this exceptional capacity seems to be a 'special gift of nature,' and does not attempt to explain how it is done. But a knowledge of the function of the muscle I have referred to effectually disposes of the 'gift of nature' theory, and reduces the problem to nothing more occult than the development of the right muscle by a simple exercise against a suitable resistance. Hitherto it has been taken for granted that the small muscles inside the larynx are the only ones that can stretch the vocal cords; but these are quite inadequate for the powerful stretching required in the production of big upper tones. For these a more powerful action outside the larynx is necessary, and this is performed by the muscle I have mentioned.

Every student knows that the most troublesome 'break' in the voice occurs at about upper F, above which it is difficult to carry the full body of tone without great strain and tension. It is usual to avoid this by having recourse to the so-called 'head' register, in which, as Browne and Behnke correctly state, only 'the thin inner edges' of the cords are used, and the tone is consequently lighter and thinner. The explanation is that the aforesaid external muscle is not sufficiently developed to stretch the entire mass of the cords (which include three reinforcing ligaments) to the extent necessary for higher notes, and so recourse is had to the weaker muscles which can stretch only the thin edges. Caruso's laryngologist recently stated that he could deliver a high C sharp 'from the chest.' This was an example of exceptional strength in the external muscle which enabled him to stretch the whole mass of his cords up to the top of his range. He and other great singers were born with that strength; but now it can be acquired by anyone.

I spent years trying to develop the 'head' tone, but although I got the action correctly and reached high C, no amount of practice produced any real power or body. It was not until I learnt about the external cord-stretching muscle that I understood the reason for this. This muscle can be isolated, controlled, and developed by the will, like the fingers of a pianist, but the ligaments inside the larynx cannot, for their action is involuntary and subsidiary. There are, however, several sets of muscles, notably the powerful chewing muscles, which can, and usually do, interfere with the action of the right one. These have to be known and their action carefully eliminated.

Thus correct production is entirely divested of all mystery and uncertainty, and the development of a homogeneous tone to its fullest possibilities becomes a matter of simple calisthenics, given a normal musical equipment. And let me add from long and bitter experience that the usual scales and exercises are worse than useless if the wrong muscles are being used, for they serve only to fix bad habits. It is safer to base production on the speaking voice, as Mr. Tree does, than to try and 'place' the sung tone without exact knowledge of the vocal mechanism. The system I have briefly outlined in fact does this, and demonstrates that the speaking and singing tone must be produced in the same way, by the same muscles, or else one or the other is wrong. I have not named this all-important muscle because I consider it is my latest teacher's discovery, and I have paid for my own use of it. Let those who think it worth while do likewise. For them I have given the Editor the address of the institution.—Yours, &c., Lahore, India.

November 23, 1921.

BASIL CRUMP.

[In order to escape an avalanche of inquiries we give the name of the institution referred to by Mr. Crump, 'The Perfect Voice Institute, Chicago.'—ED., M. T.]

SIR,—Mr. Keay still does not publicly disclose his identity and still refuses to show publicly this 'classical method of voice production' he talks about. He has publicly attacked that simplicity I am advocating, which is merely the ease of obtaining the bel canto. I now therefore make Mr. Keay a sporting offer—I will engage a hall in London, give my lecture-recital in the usual way, and allow him forty minutes in which to show the public where I am wrong and where he is right. But he must sing half a dozen or so songs to prove that his own voice is, as he says, 'as fresh as in the late 'eighties.' He being the challenger must surely accept any reasonable conditions of the challenged, and I contend that having brought the matter up publicly he must in all fairness 'face the music' publicly. If Mr. Keay will send me dates from which to choose, I will immediately book the hall.—Yours, &c.,

14, Courtfield Gardens,
Kensington.

CHARLES TREE.

[The correspondence on this subject had been closed, and we reopen it to include the letter from our reader in India, and to allow Mr. Tree to issue his challenge.—ED., M. T.]

HAND DEVELOPMENT FOR THE PERFORMER

SIR,—That a comparatively new invention should provoke inquisitiveness and even incredulity, one can understand, but that a person should go to the length of forming an opinion and even delivering himself of the same in a musical journal without having had an opportunity for testing that which he is at pains to condemn, is surely, to put it mildly, not playing the game. The paper which has caused Mr. Head so much perturbation was read at Messrs. Novello's rooms in Wardour Street, at one of the meetings of the Musical Association, and not at the Royal Academy.

The 'Techniquer' stands on its own merits with or without the approbation of any musical institute. It is not a machine, and is not 'designed for the mastery of agility touches.' Its use is not confined to pianoforte students, but it aims to flex and develop the hands of all instrumental players. The statement that 'not one hand in five hundred is formed by nature for playing an instrument' is a quotation taken from no less a person than Von Bülow, but it is also my own opinion, based on experience. Mr. Head is surely confusing two positions of the hand—normal and extended—with 'forty-two easily classified (sic) touches.' Touch, or normal or extended hand positions, are hardly synonymous. Our contention is that ten minutes at the 'Techniquer' are worth two hours' finger exercises at the instrument—the desired result being that of full muscular development and control. I leave it to your readers to decide which method would be the more likely to produce an 'automata-like' player. Keyboard drudgery is actually detrimental to the æsthetic side of music, and the 'Techniquer' surely justifies its existence if it can be proved to be a valuable substitute for this drudgery. Schumann never used any actual apparatus, and the late Mr. Franklin Taylor told the writer that he fully believed that had Schumann used a 'Techniquer' he would have accomplished his object without injury to his hand. The distance at which Mr. Head lives does not preclude his becoming acquainted with the 'Techniquer,' for a great many 'Techniquers' have gone to Australia, and we have a factory for their manufacture in New Zealand and an agent who is intimate in touch with Australia.

Its merits do not rest on any claims I make for it personally. The opinions of such authorities as Lamond, Pouishnov, Fryer, Spencer-Dyke, Reddie, Beringer, Walenn, and a host of others are so convincing, that even Mr. Head would do well to pause and experiment with it himself before offering his criticisms.—Yours, &c.,

December 7, 1921.

R. J. PITCHER.

PROVINCIAL NEWS IN THE MUSICAL TIMES

SIR,—In your December number you outline certain changes of policy regarding the records of provincial concerts in your columns. As a reader of your paper for fully half a century, I trust you will allow me to make one or two suggestions on this point. Under present conditions it is a wearisome task to attempt to read many of the contributions headed, 'Music in the Provinces.' Half-a-dozen or more will record the doings of a touring concert party whose only claim to notice is that a certain prima donna—the most useless member of the profession—has done her best to ruin local concert enterprise by raiding the big towns, taking away all the money available, and devoting in return a quarter or half an hour in poisoning the well-springs of the art, thus working incalculable harm to music itself and to genuine music-lovers. In this nefarious scheme you play an unsatisfactory part through devoting an appreciable portion of your available space to eulogising her performances in the towns A, B, C, and succeeding letters of the alphabet. What have such concerts to do with music? Other events of real value to music are allocated only two or three lines. The promoters are thereby discouraged, and readers in other districts are misled as to the importance of the event. Would it not be better to ignore the speculative concerts (where money-making is the main object) altogether, and devote the space thus obtained to fuller records of real concerts? The readers of daily papers get full details of the money-making concerts: is it conceivable that any reader of the Musical Times at Bradford wants to read anything about the appearance of Madame Midas at, say, Birmingham or Bristol?

But there are musical institutions up and down the country which are doing notable work, and whose activities are followed with keen interest by music-lovers all over the kingdom. Record in fairly full measure such societies, and you are doing good work and will gradually increase your circle of readers and subscribers, while most certainly increasing your influence for good. Why devote more than a few lines to performances of familiar works anywhere? A performance of The Messiah or Elijah, Carmen or Faust, whether in London or Liverpool, should surely not receive more than a couple of lines in any serious music journal. The local daily press deals adequately with such every-day matters, and space thus gained would be really valuable if devoted to more enterprising efforts. Besides, all such performances are purely local in their influence and interest.

—Yours, &c.,

S. MIDGLEY.

12, Oak Avenue, Bradford.

December 10, 1921.

TRAINING IN OPERATIC ART

SIR,—I was surprised to read in your December number that the excellent work of the Carl Rosa Opera Company had been achieved 'by people to whom the whole thing, as an art, is totally strange.' Further, to find it asserted that 'all this has been done "off their own bat," so to speak, because operatic art in this country is a branch our schools of music do not teach. The would-be operatic singer has to be thrown on the stage to sink or swim, supported only by such gifts as the gods may have endowed him with. He has no technique acquired in school to rely on . . . ' and so forth.

Your contributor may, of course, be using the expression 'as an art,' in some unfamiliar rhetorical sense, but if his statements are meant to be taken literally I must emphatically traverse every one of them. Operatic art a branch that the schools do not teach? This is indeed new hearing. I was under the impression that our schools of music all expended more time, skill, and money over serious opera than the limited demand justified. Certainly, of the two principal London musical institutions, one has taught it for ninety years, with an imposing list of brilliant students to its credit, and the other, during about a third of that period, has produced even more gratifying results in the way of semi-public performances of unfamiliar works. In the early 'thirties of the last century the Royal Academy placed before the world, fully trained, the two Seguinis and their brides; during recent times there has never been a light or serious opera company without some members in it who have been trained, not merely as singers, but as operatic artists, within its walls. I refrain from giving names, for I should not know where to stop, but the D'Oyly Carte companies at least will not forget for how many brilliant artists they are indebted to the R. A. M., nor the Thomas Beecham Company (now being managed by an R. A. M. boy who has long made his mark), and the company which has made the 'Beggars' Opera' such a permanent success was at first almost entirely recruited from the same institution. To the Royal College, London owes some performances of Cornelius's Barber of Bagdad, Schumann's Genoveva, and other interesting operas, which challenge comparison with anything hitherto performed by the late Covent Garden Syndicate. Both schools, and also the Guildhall School of Music, have expended much money over the preparation of special stage accommodation in view of an expected 'boom' in opera, which thus far has not materialised. Meanwhile, it should be common knowledge that there is a sufficient, if not abundant, supply of adequately-trained operatic aspirants ready to step from the schools straight on to the public boards. Adequately trained, I say; the schools can, and do, give them proper technical training. An artist is made only by the experience which time, and time alone, supplies. Teaching institutions don't profess to stock geniuses.

I am not concerned to advertise anything or anybody, but I would ask Mr. Barrett to reconsider his words, and to do bare justice to the schools of music to which England is more heavily indebted than she is ever willing to admit.—Yours, &c.,

YOUR OLDEST CONTRIBUTOR.

13, Albion Road, South Hampstead, N.W.

December 3, 1921.

MUSICAL APPRECIATION

SIR,—I believe that the chief obstacle in the way of musical appreciation, so far as the average provincial concert-goer is concerned, is not so much lack of education or apathy as lack of acquaintance. We have heard a great deal about 'beastly tunes' and so on in the last few months, but I doubt whether the real reason for their popularity has yet been found. What appears to be the only satisfactory explanation is that these tunes, being simple and easily grasped, are at once apprehended and appreciated by the average 'unmusical' person, while more advanced works are rejected as 'too difficult.'

One of the most interesting and instructive occasions for the man who wishes to ascertain the real musical tastes of the masses is to mix among the enormous crowds that assemble at any of our great inland or seaside provincial towns, to 'hear the band' on Saturday afternoons or evenings. We all know the symptoms of rapturous enjoyment which pervade the crowd when the strains of 'The Lost Chord,' Mendelssohn's 'Spring Song,' Dvůřák's 'Humoresque,' or even 'Un Peu d'Amour' are wafted on the breeze; the tapping toes that accompany the 'Sylvia' Pizzicato (usually played with fearful agility by a perspiring solo cornet); the murmuring voices that sing in undertones to the airs of 'The Gondoliers.' The superior critic may find it unworthy of his notice, but it is really of profound interest because the enjoyment is so obvious and so patently sincere. They are not trying to ape their more educated brethren; they are in their own element and completely free from affectation. And why do they like these works? Partly, no doubt, because they are tuneful, but chiefly, I am certain, because they know them as old and intimate friends.

And it is the same with concerts in a hall. We deplore the greater popularity of ballad concerts than that of more serious affairs. But the attraction of a ballad concert for the average man is the secure knowledge that the programme will contain at least one or two items that he knows, and that all the others will be so easy to grasp that he will always be able to recognise them after one or two hearings.

The only real remedy is repetition. The other day I attended a Beethoven concert at Edinburgh given by Lamond. The large audience was composed almost entirely of people who were evidently music-lovers rather than advanced musical experts. At the end of each of the three Sonatas, one heard such comments as 'Isn't that beautiful! I should like to hear it again.' There are many people who would willingly pay to hear great music repeated within a reasonable space of time from their first hearing. Is it too much to hope that one day a great artist—pianist, violinist, conductor, or organist—will announce a series of three or four subscription concerts of great music, the programme at each concert being exactly the same? It is only thus that the average musical amateur will really come to know and love the great masterpieces of music so that there shall be a popular demand for them. For the busy amateur who has no time to give long and detailed study to the scores of classical works, frequent hearing is the only method of becoming really familiar with such works. I believe, moreover, that the decrease in the size of an audience at such repeated concerts, caused by the absence of the dilettanti, the lukewarm, and the superior, would be more than compensated by the increase of real musical ardour and keenness, coupled with the sense of having achieved a real educational object.—Yours, &c.,

J. W. HUNTER BLAIR.

Eaglescarnie, Haddington, Scotland.

November 14, 1921.

SCALES AND TONALITY

SIR,—Mr. Ainslie Hight, on pages 859-60 of the December issue, animadverts against Equal Temperament whilst adopting, for Just Temperament, 'the simpler ratio of the minor seventh (7/4)'—instead of its actual ratio 16/9. Apparently the fact was overlooked that this minute difference, 63:64 (which Helmholtz and Prout consider negligible), is nevertheless rather wider than the greatest difference between E. T. and J. T., viz., 1.666:1.681 at the major sixth = 111:112. The ratio 7/4 is virtually an augmented sixth, 224/128 (.225) where the minor seventh = 228-230/128. For your correspondent this surely is a very serious matter, for, if the ear is still to be more vitiated by J. T. than by E. T., wherewithal shall we be saved?

Something would appear also to have gone wrong with that part of the instruction where we are invited 'to feel the fourth (4/3) as the minor third of the supertonic (27/20). Can Mr. Ainslie Hight have meant 32/27? There are obviously pitfalls in this field of knowledge.—Yours, &c.,

Chesham Bois.

GEORGE E. PRINCE.

December 8, 1921.

MODERN SCALES AND ACOUSTICS

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to the letter from Mr. J. E. Sainsbury in your December issue, in which he states that Prof. Rankine is 'at present experimenting at the Northern Polytechnic with apparatus by which he will be able to register the quality of a musical sound.' I must ask your courtesy kindly to correct this statement, as Prof. Rankine is on the staff of the Imperial College at South Kensington and has never carried out any experiments at the Northern Polytechnic. The confusion probably arose from the fact that he and I both read papers on the same day at the Convention of the Federation of British Music Industries held in 1920 at Scarborough.—Yours, &c.,

R. S. CLAY

(Principal, Northern Polytechnic Institute Holloway, London, N.7).

December 2, 1921.

WHY USE WORDS?

SIR,—The article by 'G. M. C.' contains many truths, but is yet not quite convincing. The writer says that he does not need to know German in order to enjoy a Brahms lied. No one does. The point is that such enjoyment is that of abstract music—not of a song per se. But it is the literary content of the song that supplies the composer's creative impulse, and this is handed on to the hearer, he the words banal or even 'Greek' to him. A song-writer has not laboriously to search for suitable words to set to his music, as 'G. M. C.' postulates. That is the method of the uninspired writer of pot-boiling stuff. Certainly neither Brahms, nor Schubert, nor Schumann, ever composed songs that way. 'G. M. C.'s' analogy of the picture and the frame is also a little unhappy. Artists do, in fact, paint to fit frames; but it is not the frame that inspires them: it is the phenomenon of nature to which their beauty-sense responds.

A song without words is therefore not a song proper. It is instrumental music—the voice being regarded as an instrument; and that is right and proper enough. Some years ago—in the days of your predecessor, Sir, I think—I submitted an article to the Musical Times on 'Wordless Opera.' But I was before my time; the 'difficulty of vocables' put the idea out of court. 'G. M. C.' disposes of that difficulty easily enough, and he also points out that in opera the eye co-operates with the ear, and thus apprehends the dramatic element. This was my point in the suggestion of wordless opera: words are substituted by pictures. Except by a fortunate accident, words are not much heard in opera; but the action is obvious to all, and by action I mean not only movement, but passion and emotion. Thus the necessary 'programme' for the music is secured. Opera is appreciated in no other way. The words are negligible except in the brilliant case of Gilbert and Sullivan—where, however, the objective is not upon the high plane of grand opera of the Wagner type.

That music and action can run in double harness without mutual disqualification is beyond dispute. Music need not be the handmaid, as in the cinema: it can be the mistress, as in the ballet. Let the thing be tried. If any composer would care to look at a scenario for wordless opera which I prepared when writing the aforesaid article, I should be flattered in acceding to his request. But I maintain that wordless songs are anomalous.—Yours, &c.,

Walden, Cheam, Surrey.

F. C. TILNEY.

GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

SIR,—It may interest you to know that now records of the old English Madrigals are procurable I was able recently to give a modest little gramophone recital of old English music to a few guests, much to their delectation. With the exception of Nos. 1, 4, and 6, it was possible to follow the music from printed copies, and with the help of Dr. Walker's book, Mr. Davey's book, and a copy of old Thomas Morley's book, we spent an enjoyable evening. We barred scratching of matches and the entrance of refreshments at importunate times, and I dislocated the wires of the night-bell—to my great content. I give you the programme of the music :

Solo Harpsichord	(1) 'Nobody's Gigue' ... ..	...
	(2) Three English Folk-Dances ... ..	...
	MRS. GORDON WOODHOUSE.
Song ...	'Have you seen but a whyte lillie?' ... ..	...
	MISS ALMA GLUCK.
Madrigals ...	(1) 'Lullabie' ... ..	Byrd
	(2) 'Silver Swan' ... ..	Gibbons
	THE ENGLISH SINGERS.
Solo Harpsichord	Gavotte ... ..	Purcell
	MRS. GORDON WOODHOUSE.
Song ...	'Arise, ye subterranean winds' ... ..	Purcell
	MR. ROBERT RADFORD.
Solo Violoncello	'Sonata in G minor' ... ..	Eccles
	MR. W. H. SQUIRE.
Song ...	'The lass with the delicate air' ... ..	Michael Arne
	MISS ALMA GLUCK.
Part-songs	(1) 'When for the world's repose' ... ..	Mornington
	(2) 'By Celia's arbour' ... ..	Horsley
	THE GRESHAM SINGERS.
Song ...	'Tom Bowling' ... ..	Dibdin
	MR. HARRISON.
Part-Songs	(1) 'Hail, smiling morn' ... ..	Spafforth
	(2) 'Come, let us join the roundelay' ... ..	Beale
	THE SHEFFIELD CHOIR.

The gramophone was an old horn-type, but with a 'top-hole' sound-box. You will naturally say, 'Ah, yes! A programme of old favourites.' Yes, I grant it; but it is a beginning, and it is not going to be the end.—Yours, &c.,
Seascale, Cumberland. R. T. RICHMOND
November 23, 1921. (Country Doctor).

THE MUSICAL PRESS

SIR,—You have intimated that my complete reply to your remarks of last month is too long, and has reached you too late, for inclusion in the present issue. Rather than hold over that full reply until your next issue I suggest that you insert this briefer one now. Personal friends as we are, it is, I think, distasteful to both of us to have a public discussion long continued—especially one on a point of ethics.

I am still quite opposed to 'dealing discreetly' with the reviews of goods advertised, 'making concessions however slight,' 'passing over the feeble ones,' and so forth. Pass over all feeble music if you like (as the Music Student does, or tries to do), but treat advertisers and non-advertisers exactly alike. This is a British way, and, I personally feel, the only honest way.

You make the point that any expression of this sort on my part is 'mere rhetoric' because (you say) the Music Student does not review music. But it does review books, and many authors and publishers could witness that it does so very bluntly and with no distinctions as to advertisers or non-advertisers. In reply to your suggestion I send you privately the name of a firm whose advertisements we completely lost by our policy of straightforwardness; but it is fair to say that this is, so far as I know, the only case, publishers as a body being quite sportsmanlike enough to appreciate the value of impartial reviewing.

Your strictures upon 'The Month's Best Music' are fully answered in the letter for which you have no room. Here I wish only to say that this feature is entirely in the hands of a very well-known musician, whose name is given at its head, in whom we have always had the greatest confidence, and whose reputation can take care of itself. The omissions of certain information mentioned by you are, as you know, unusual—probably due to a slip on the part of printer or proof reader. The lists do not vary in standard, according to the quality of the month's output, as you suggest (this would be absurd), but they do vary in length according to that quality—all the way from a third of a page to a full page.—Yours, &c., PERCY A. SCHOLES.

[We are at one with Mr. Scholes in a desire to end this 'much ado about nothing.' Meanwhile, we are not a bit ashamed of our slight and benevolent bias in favour of our clients. It is as British as the Scholesian ideal; it need be no less honest; and it is a good deal more human. We need hardly say that our 'strictures upon "The Month's Best Music"' were concerned with the system, not with the compiler of the list. In fairness to the Music Student we add that Mr. Scholes has convinced us that this system was not adopted with a view to evasion of any kind. We continue, however, to doubt its utility, for the reasons given in our December issue.—ED., M. T.]

Sharps and Flats

Mr. Algernon Ashton's prophecy of the future remembrance of those 'three of the most sterling musicians that have ever lived,' Hummel, Clementi, and Czerny, would have had more appearance of vraisemblance had he added that they will be remembered by people like Mr. Ashton.—Kaikhosru Sorabji.

She is touching every human motion in her song. At times she seems to sing away care; then, gently wooing an elusive strain that is almost fairylike, crescendos into tragedy, going into a crashing climax that diminishes into an ending—searching, yearning, and wistfully sad... What a sensation she would make in America with a little advertising!—Charles Chaplin.

I am convinced that we stand at the threshold of an overwhelming reaction in favour of German music in this country. It will go too far. It will do a lot of harm. But the reaction itself is not altogether unreasonable.—Francis Toye.

Heldenleben was preceded by the Bach-Elgar Fugue and followed by Holst's The Planets. It was a sandwich with the meat outside.—Edwin Evans.

The Bach-Elgar Fugue in C minor is a typical example of vandalism and bad taste, theatrical, pretentious, and pompous, recalling other public demonstrations of the instrumentator.—Leigh Henry.

I think we must admit that there is hardly any really great singing, and little enough good singing to be heard... We have, of course, a few great singers, but they are passed or passing, and there do not seem to be any to take their places.—N. B. S. in Musical News.

Does 'N. B. S.' live in the backwoods of Mayfair that he dares to say that there is no good singing to-day? I am a little surprised that in a paper so sound as yours you should print such remarks as 'We have, of course, a few,' &c.—Ursula Greville in a letter to the Editor of Musical News.

Sabati's Youth is the sort of work that makes you wonder why some people take to music when there is such a scarcity of good clerks and commercial travellers... How many of these poor souls the critic meets with in a year's work... Rarely does he show... what he feels... though I confess that one alleged singer a little while ago made me say, when I was asked my opinion of her, that I thought she would have made an excellent wife for Landru.—Ernest Newman.

Mr. Josef Holbrooke won considerable success at Munich with his orchestral concert of his own compositions on November 24. He conducted his Bronwen Overture and Fantasia Wild-Fowl, and was pianist in the Gwynn-ap-Nudd Concerto. The programme included Goossens's Tam o' Shanter.

Barclay's Bank Musical Society gave a choral and orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on December 15. Mr. H. W. Pierce conducted the choir in part-songs and madrigals, and Mr. H. J. Rouse conducted the orchestra in Wormser's L'Enfant Prodigue Suite, MacCunn's Land of the Mountain and the Flood, and Coleridge-Taylor's Bamboula.

G. E. R. Musical Society and Miss Dorothy Clark gave Brahms's Alto Rhapsody at Hamilton Hall on November 30. Dr. Stanley Marchant's setting of Arthur Locker's Ode by a Christmas Pudding at Sea was given for the first time.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of January, 1862 :

GIFT-BOOK, NEW.—Songs and Tunes for Education, edited by JOHN CURWEN. The Harmonies by JAMES TURLE, Esq., Organist of Westminster Abbey. The Pianoforte edition in handsome cloth binding, with gilt title, price 2s. 6d. This work is the fruit of the Editor's residence in Germany. He collected books of music for young people in every town he visited. With the aid of Mr. James S. Stallybrass, the whole of this collection was analysed, and the choicest translated or adapted for English use. The Editor, however, never preferred a German piece when an English one would do as well. He aims to educate the feelings and sympathies of childhood by the habit of singing good songs. This he considers the proper office of music in schools. He takes care that the three school ages (childhood, boy- and girl-hood, and youth) are suited with songs on the following subjects: Country Scenes, the Seasons, Fancy and Humour, Kindness to Animals, Home Sympathies, Patriotism, Industry, Integrity, Religion, &c. There are two hundred and sixty-seven songs. This work will doubtless supersede the Editor's widely-known 'School Music' and 'School Songs.'

ORGAN PLAYING.—It is much to be regretted that in this great Metropolis—so rich in many things, so poor in more—there can be maintained no organ of the first-class in a locality more suitable than a factory, and more accessible than a church, which might on certain days of the week be exhibited by the best players as a settled attraction of London. This, it may be recollected, the 'Apollonicon' was for many years.—Athenæum.

WANTED, an ORGAN for a congregation of a thousand. Apply, giving dimensions, &c., to Ezra Miller, Grocer, Sunderland.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

A. W. MARCHANT, Mus. Doc., Oxon., at Stirling, on November 23, aged seventy-one. His book of Five Hundred Fugue Subjects and Answers was typical of the energy and thoroughness that for many years he put into valuable editing and compiling for the benefit of students. His text-books, too, were of great worth. His career as a church organist took him to Mansfield, London, Denver (Colorado), Sevenoaks, Huntingdon, Dumfries and Stirling. He composed music for church choirs and male-voice choirs, a number of two-part and three-part vocal pieces, and voluntaries.

CHRISTINE NILSSON (Dowager Countess de Casa Miranda), at Stockholm, on November 22, aged seventy-eight. As Madame Nilsson retired from public singing before her fiftieth year, it is only the older generation that will remember her great impersonations of Violetta, Marguerite, Ophelia (in Thomas's Hamlet), and Elsa. Her singing especially appealed by its charm and intensity combined with perfect coloratura.

GILBERT H. BETJEMANN, at the age of eighty-one. Violinist (in the Covent Garden orchestra of 1858) and teacher, he was a man of many friendships and had many memories of notable people of the last century. For some years, in his later life, he conducted the Highbury Philharmonic Society.

H. B. BRANDRETH, on December 3, at the age of fifty-two. As general manager of Carl Rosa Opera he did valuable work in developing and co-ordinating the work of the Company, and he endeared himself to all who came in contact with him.

JOSEPH LAUDY, founder and proprietor of Laudy & Co., music publishers. He was born at Sittard (Holland) in 1862, and came to London in 1886. He was for some years in charge of the foreign music department at Messrs. Novellos, at that time in Berners Street.

J. GEORGE MORLEY, on November 22, at the age of seventy-four. A maker of harps, he was moreover an enthusiast and an artist, and he had a wide circle of friends in the profession.

IVAN CARYLL, born at Liège in 1861, the composer of Little Christopher Columbus, The Duchess of Dantzic, and many successful Gaiety pieces, often in collaboration with Mr. Lionel Monckton.

ROBERT TURNBULL, music critic of the Glasgow Herald, on November 17, aged fifty-five. His all-round knowledge, his breadth and penetration, and his clear, happy style, infused his writing with much literary charm.

CAMILLE SAINT-SAËNS died at Algiers on December 16, at the age of eighty-six. An article dealing with his career will appear in our next issue.

ENGLISH SACRED FOLK-SONG

The new session of the Musical Association opened auspiciously on November 1 at 160, Wardour Street, with a paper by Dr. Charles W. Pearce, Director of Studies at Trinity College of Music, whose subject was 'English Sacred Folk-song of the West Gallery Period (circa 1695-1820).' After alluding to folk-song in general, the lecturer defined sacred folk-song as melodic settings of 'psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs,' which, having been continually on the lips of the people, became treasured in their minds and stored in their memories. Its origin took us back a long way. Dr. Pearce was inclined to believe that some phrases of ecclesiastical song may have become sufficiently popular in various ways to have been sung or hummed by the people. Ritual song was succeeded by the stately metrical tune of the Day and Ravenscroft period. A generation or two later a fresh type came into existence, in which the tunes were more free in rhythm, more florid in their melodic outline, and brighter and more cheerful in their general tonal atmosphere. This particular school of English sacred folk-song flourished during the century and a quarter from the death of Purcell to the death of George III.

The Wessex novels of Thomas Hardy contained many references to the Church music of that period. In 'The Ladicean' one of the characters recognises that an old tune, 'New Sabbath,' appertained to '... the old west gallery period of Church music anterior to the great choral reformation and the rule of Monk—that old time when the repetition of a word, or half-line of a verse was not considered a disgrace to an ecclesiastical choir.'

The allusion here was to the late Dr. W. H. Monk, the first musical editor of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern.' His so-called rule—although largely anticipated by Turle, Goss, and Hopkins—was that which he persistently carried out of reducing the music to one dead level of rigidly uniform rhythm. Several tunes originally written in triple time were ruthlessly cut down to duple. All word-repetition and part-imitation were abolished; the square-cut four-part harmony was unrelieved by a rest for any voice. The 'great choral reformation' was the abolition of the west gallery choir of mixed-voices and unskilled orchestra, and the introduction of a more or less inefficient choir of men and boys in the chancel, accompanied by a harmonium or small pipe-organ.

The lecturer said he wanted to suggest that some of these old tunes were possible or even suitable settings of the mediæval office hymns translated by Neale. Sung to their proper plainsong melodies, many of which were extremely florid in character, these ancient hymns failed somehow to secure congregational participation. Sung to standard tunes—such as 'Melcombe'—the unfamiliar words challenged unfair comparison with popular hymns which by traditional usage had a prior claim to association with the well-known music.

Very often these old florid tunes had their orchestral preludes and interludes, and many of them finished with a vociferous Doxology. Such a tune was 'Falcon Street,' by Isaac Smith (1740(?)–1800). Obviously the orchestras would vary considerably in the number and character of the instruments used from time to time. The return of some bandsman invalided from the wars might have temporarily brought a trumpet into the west gallery for a Sunday or two. At any rate, in many of the old tune-books published during this period we found melodies distinctly founded on the familiar trumpet-harmonic series, as for example in 'Portsmouth New,' though, like many tunes of the present day, it really suited only the first verse of the hymn.

Let us take, say, ten tunes of the period, such as 'St. Bride's,' 'Bedford,' 'Rockingham,' 'St. Magnus,' 'St. James,' 'Melcombe,' 'St. Stephen's,' 'Abridge,' and 'Wareham,' which are constantly sung somewhere or other. They represented a home-made art-form as essentially English in its individuality as the glee and the anthem, and there was no need for us to worship the German chorale, which after all owed so much of its present popularity to the glamour of a great name like that of J. S. Bach. We had no name of that magnitude to back up our traditional sacred folk-song of the west gallery period; and indeed it was only within the last few years that prominent musicians—like the late Sir Hubert Parry—had recognised the fitness of so many of these grand old tunes of ours for choral prelude and other treatment for the organ after the manner of Bach. If we placed by the side of the above ten English tunes, ten German chorales selected from the 'English Hymnal,' we should be compelled to admit that the smooth, graceful elasticity of our native productions completely put into the shade the Teutonic stiffness and angularity of the square-cut melodies made in Germany.

After alluding in considerable detail to many tunes and tune collections, Dr. Pearce went on to animadvert severely on the present fashion of employing secular folk-song—especially that of Welsh origin—in the place of hymn tunes written as such. The 'English Hymnal' was full of secular importations. This practice conjured up most undesirable associations. Would it not be in every way better to make a more liberal use of sacred west-gallery melodies?

Illustrations to the paper were contributed by a small choir of ladies from Trinity College of Music, and there was a discussion in which the Rev. W. J. Foxell (chairman), Dr. Spooner Lillingston, Mr. Theodore Walrond, Dr. Froggatt, Mr. Herbert Westerby, and the lecturer took part.

A NOVEL PERFORMANCE OF THE MESSIAH

It is not often that a public school undertakes the production of a big oratorio, and if it does so, it is probably with the aid of a select choir, a very small orchestra or the organ alone providing the accompaniment. The idea of giving every boy in the School a part in the production is, to say the least of it, uncommon, if not hitherto unknown; and twenty years ago such an idea would have been laughed at. Yet this is what has actually been done at Oundle School, on Sunday, December 11, with a performance of The Messiah, in which every single boy in the School—some five hundred and thirty strong—had his part to play: surely a sign of the more important position accorded nowadays to music in the life of a big school.

A performance of The Messiah was first suggested by Miss Carrie Tubb (Mrs. Oliveira), whose son is in the School: and she not only promised herself to assist, but also undertook to bring other soloists. The performance having been decided on, Mr. C. M. Spurling, the director of music, hit upon and developed the idea of giving the audience a part in the singing.

At first the idea was almost staggering, but the apparently impossible was undertaken, with an amazingly good result. Both choir and orchestra threw themselves with spirit into their work, and soon began to get a real grip of it. What presented a somewhat bigger problem was the training of the 'non-choir,' i.e., all boys not in the choir or orchestra. Certain passages in some of the choruses had been chosen, in which they were to join as well as the regular choir—passages like: 'Wonderful, Counsellor . . . ' in 'For unto us a Child is born,' and 'King of Kings and Lord of Lords' in the 'Hallelujah' chorus. But the 'non-choir' responded nobly, and soon knew its parts well. Of the actual performance a short account will perhaps suffice.

The first chorus, 'And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed,' was sung with a good grip and swing, the 'non-choir' coming in with considerable effect in such passages as 'For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it' and 'All flesh shall see it together.' Of the solos it will not be necessary to speak in detail—they were given by Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Norman Allin, and were immensely appreciated by the audience. The orchestral accompaniment was good throughout, but exceptionally so in Miss Carrie Tubb's solo, 'Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion.' The audience was greatly delighted by Mr. Norman Allin's reading of 'Why do the nations?' and 'The trumpet shall sound,' in which Mr. John Solomon played the trumpet solo. The other choruses sung were 'Oh, thou that tellest,' 'For unto us,' 'Glory to God,' 'Surely He hath borne our griefs,' 'And with His stripes,' and the 'Hallelujah.' The 'non-choir' took part in all of these, except 'Oh, thou that tellest' and 'Surely He hath borne our griefs.' The interpretation of the choruses was extremely good on the whole. They were a little spoilt by a tendency of certain parts to hurry—notably the tenors in 'And with His stripes'—and the reverse in a small section of the 'Hallelujah' chorus; but apart from these slight faults the choral singing deserves high praise. The entry of the 'non-choir' in the 'Hallelujah' chorus at 'King of Kings and Lord of Lords' produced a remarkably telling effect.

At the close of the performance the headmaster, Mr. F. W. Sanderson, addressed the audience. He expressed great gratification at the result produced, and complimented all those who had taken part. In recalling Miss Carrie Tubb's suggestion to him that the School should undertake The Messiah, he warmly thanked her and all those present for their help, and went on to express his gratitude to the conductor, Mr. C. M. Spurling, without whose indefatigable energy and direction the wonderful result could never have been secured. He also thanked the organist, Mr. G. W. Brewster (senior mathematical master), for the help he had given both in the performance and at the practices. Mr. Sanderson thought those present would be interested to know that the total time devoted to practices had been only about fifty hours. He also mentioned the fact that the performance had been transmitted to any stations within range by wireless telephony. A concert of gramophone music given in the Hall that afternoon had been heard at The Hague, two hundred and twenty miles away, and he hoped the evening's performance had likewise been heard. He named in this connection the boy who had worked untiringly at the wireless apparatus, H. L. Fletcher. Bouquets were then presented to Miss Carrie Tubb and Miss Margaret Balfour, and cheers were given in turn for the other principals. Miss Carrie Tubb addressed a few words to the audience, saying how extremely pleased she was with the result achieved. Mr. Ben Davies, speaking on behalf of the other soloists 'owing to his extreme youth,' told the School how pleased he was to be there helping in the production of this great work. He said he was sure they would always find pleasure in recalling the fact that they had sung in The Messiah, and he added, 'you will never forget this wonderful, majestic music.' Finally he congratulated every one upon the amazing result secured by so short a time of practice.

A. S. MACPHERSON.

THE ART OF THE BALLAD

BY GERRARD WILLIAMS

Did you know that it is a very difficult thing to write a sentimental ballad? Until very recently I had imagined, from the profusion of the genus and from other symptoms, that to turn out best-sellers was far from being anything of an artistic achievement, and I dare guess that such has been your opinion also. Now, however, I have been converted, and the instrument of my conversion has been the perusal of an article on the subject in an esteemed contemporary. I find that it is necessary for the ballad writer not only to possess the art of the every-day poet or composer, but also, through many tribulations, to be able to place his finger accurately on the pulse—sorry! I mean pulse—of the great public; and I am astounded at the realisation of the vast number of super-artists who have achieved this dual goal. But perhaps—in your ear—there is a big conspiracy afloat to prove that we really are a musical nation, and the never ending stream of these popular songs is actually the output of a small handful of the elect writing under many different names?

The article in question deals mainly with the writing of the lyrics, but there are a few general observations provocative of deep thought. First, the would-be ballad writer must 'study the style of the popular ballads of recent times'; he will then discover that 'while there is much diversity of style and individuality in the different pieces, they are one and all imbued with simplicity and natural charm.' When he has passed through this difficult and laborious apprenticeship he is up against a burning problem, to be solved only by further travail, as to whether the words or the music should be written first. Our author is of opinion that only a 'talented minority' have the 'dual gift of poetry and music,' and that in any event most composers prefer to take the lyric as the first step. He then definitely confines himself to consideration of the difficulties in writing or selecting the lyric. In this matter there is not the blessed and easy-going freedom permitted in the case of ordinary songs; the ballad lyric is hedged round with all kinds of restrictions and essentials. There should not be more than three verses and a chorus; corresponding lines must be of equal length, as any irregularity of metre disturbs the rhythm of the music; a refrain should be sought for having a different metre from that of the verses. Clearly no small talent is needed to surmount such obstacles—any but the finest artists would be floored every time. Even the subject is arrived at by strictly defined laws; it must have a definite message (not too original, though), and contain 'a strong love interest, a human touch all through, and perhaps a note of pathos.' The lyric is of great importance, for 'no vocalist of any standing would condescend to sing a ballad the words of which were of a poor standard, no matter how beautiful the music might be.' Sic transit another common delusion—that such questions were a matter largely, if not entirely, of £ s. d.

It might have been thought that the difficulties already enumerated were sufficient, but our author goes on to remark that the demands of the music are even more exacting than those of the lyric. After a few generalities (referring to the various approved methods of composing—on paper, at the pianoforte, on the violin, &c., with a 'singer to try over the air before you go any further'), he leaves us with the promise of a subsequent article and expresses the hope that what he has already written may be of some value.

It is; so much so that I have succumbed to the temptation to try and anticipate some of the points in his next article. I may probably be wrong (I have not served the necessary apprenticeship), but I should like to try.

First, select a simple key in which to write, and from the collection of ballads which you have made during your study of the popular style choose a quantity in this key. This will give you an ample diversity of chords and progressions which you will be safe in using. If these ballads happen also to be in the same rhythm as the lyric you are setting, your task will be somewhat easier. But try not to let this last question bother you too much; you must remember that if necessary triple time can always be converted into quadruple by (for instance) repeating a crotchet in each bar or changing it into a minim. You will find there are two methods of working, dependent on whether you prefer to compose at the pianoforte (or on the violin, &c.) or on paper. In the former case you will have carefully to memorise all your chosen examples so that you can start playing at any given point; then take from them various fragments, fitting these together mosaic-wise to suit your lyric; and finally transfer the result to paper bit by bit. In the latter case you can dispense with the memorising and copy your assorted fragments straight on to the paper. This last is not so simple as it appears, for you will probably find, when you come to play what you have written, that it will not fit together as well as you could wish and will need considerable re-shuffling of its component parts. It must be remembered that the air must be sufficient unto itself without any artificial aid from the accompaniment, and that you are restricted in the accompaniment to a definitely limited number of progressions (as exemplified in your models) to which the fitting together of your fragments must conform. As regards the air, there are also certain principles to be observed, chief of which perhaps is the necessity for a long-held high note at the end; and it has been found from experience that this is most effective on some such word as 'and,' 'of,' or 'the.' This is a hall-mark of success, and is one of the greatest factors in finding for the ballad its 'way into every home in England, from the lordly manor to the humble cottage.' The publisher looks at it lovingly, whether the ballad be otherwise good or bad, and it is often the touchstone in deciding whether he shall accept or reject a manuscript.

When you have surmounted all these difficulties, and the many others which our contemporary will shortly disclose, send a fair copy of the result to Charing Cross Road, or some other quarter where 'winners' are turned out, and then sit down and gather in your royalties till the time is ripe for another effort.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

An orchestral concert was given at Queen's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, December 7, the Principal conducting. The concert opened with Tchaikovsky's Piano-forte Concerto in B flat minor, the first movement of which was played with brilliancy and vigour by Miss Olga Thomas, while in the remaining two movements Miss Dorothy Rivett showed that she was the possessor of much musicianly feeling as well as an excellent technique. An interesting performance was that of the first movement of a MS. Violin Concerto in D, by Paul Beard—the composer playing the solo part. The work is one of considerable promise, the solo instrument being written for with both knowledge and skill. The vocal items included a Recit. and Air by Handel (Miss Dorothy Collins), Hiawatha's Vision, by Coleridge-Taylor (Mr. Roy Henderson), and L'Adieu from Tchaikovsky's Joan of Arc, sung with much dramatic power by Miss Hilda Neale. The other instrumental pieces were Elgar's Cockaigne Overture, of which the orchestra gave an admirable reading, and a lively Rhapsody on Ukrainian Themes for the pianoforte by Liapounow, brilliantly played by Miss Anita Harrison.

The Lent term opens on Monday, January 9. A course of four lectures upon the history of music during the middle of the 19th century will be given by Dr. H. W. Richards. The first lecture will be on Wednesday, January 25, in the Duke's Hall.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The following new subjects have been added to the Associateship examination for 1922: (1) Pianoforte accompaniment, (2) elocution and declamation, (3) the teaching of aural training, sight reading, and musical appreciation.

An excellent spirit pervades the work done by the operatic class. It is so arranged that different casts appear at different performances of the same opera; most of the operatic students thus get to know the work in its entirety. The third Act of Carmen has been given in the Parry Theatre in this way, the members of the two casts providing their own dresses and make-up. In the use of this latter they have been instructed by Mr. Cairns James. Mr. Adrian C. Boulton conducted the orchestra, which consisted of College students, and the opera was produced by Mr. Clive Carey.

The following have been awarded Exhibitions: Joan E. Spink, Lily E. Parker, Edna M. Garrard, Nora B. Townend (pianoforte), Henry S. Taylor (composition), and Lillie W. Morrison (violin). The London Musical Society's prize for singing has been obtained by Ursula J. Gale, and the Edmund Grove Exhibitions by Helen T. Young (organ) and G. M. Corry Smith (pianoforte). M. J.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

A most useful course of lectures by Mr. Alec Rowley on 'Music Teaching for Children' including 'Musical Appreciation,' have during the term covered the ground indicated by the following headings: General principles of teaching; Teachers' difficulties; Pupils' faults; Use of pedals in pianoforte playing; Expression; Graded pieces, &c. Teachers attending this course were given facilities for the practical application of their note-book and memory knowledge by means of the classes conducted by Dr. Warriner on Saturday mornings, the syllabus of which included lessons to children (instrumental and vocal) under supervision. Identical opportunities will recur from term to term, as it is proposed to continue both lectures and classes.

The first fortnight of December was a particularly busy one. In addition to the preparation for the usual fortnightly concerts at the College, students who were members of the chamber music class, the choir, and the dramatic class, worked hard for what proved a much appreciated combined concert at Steinway Hall; and it was quite delightful to watch the earnest interest taken by the members of the orchestral class (with the student soloists) in the finishing bi-weekly rehearsals for their Queen's Hall concert which took place on December 8.

On December 7, a pianoforte recital was given by Mr. C. Budden-Morris, a professor of the College.

The following awards have been made: Grosvenor Gooch Prizes, Alfred Gibbs and Gilbert V. Surton; Messrs. Chappell & Co.'s Prize to May Gough; Talent medal to Lilian Mann; Nasmith medal to Frank Idris Bilbe; and the Dando medal to Francis J. Britton. This last medal results from a gift by the parents in memory of their daughter, a former scholar of the College. These prizes and medals will be presented on the occasion of the inaugural address to be given by Dr. C. W. Pearce, on January 11, who has chosen for his subject 'A Jubilee retrospect of the Foundation and Growth of Trinity College of Music, 1872-1922.' As may be gathered from this title, the College is now about to celebrate the fiftieth year of a successful career as a teaching and examining body.

The evidence of success in the matter of its scheme of Local (pupils') and Higher (teachers') examinations is accumulative, for we find that at centres both at home and abroad the number of candidates presenting themselves has increased from year to year. For instance, at the recent distribution of certificates which took place at Brighton, under the presidency of Councillor F. Mott Harrison, it was stated that at the March examinations a record for the centre had been made, and that far from this being in any way attributable to the lowering of musical knowledge standards or slackening of examiners' methods, the exact opposite was the fact. It was the high standard of musical training and the consequent value of the awards that had earned for the College examinations the esteem in which they were held by teachers and students of music. In this connection an interesting and far-reaching innovation may be cited. It consists of the practice of sending a selected few of the College scholarship holders to such functions as that mentioned above, with the special purpose of performing examination syllabus music. This was done recently at the Portsmouth centre, where Dr. C. W. Pearce gave a short introductory address.

Other centres at which influential meetings for the distribution of certificates have been held, were Birmingham (where Dr. E. F. Horner attended on behalf of the College), Glasgow, Southport, and Golders Green, London (where Sir John McClure, chairman of the College Corporation and headmaster of Mill Hill School, presided).

It is with pleasure that we record Mr. Alfred Mistowski's success in obtaining the D. Mus., Oxford, degree, for his early training was gained as a scholar at Trinity College.

The Mewton Choir, Melbourne, gave an excellent programme of unaccompanied music, under Mr. W. A. Laver, on November 9. The composers represented were Morales, Dowland, Morley, Wilbye, Atterbury, Purcell, Bach, Coleridge-Taylor, Bantock, and Elgar.

Music in the Provinces

BELFAST.—It is generally believed here that the Philharmonic Society's performance of the Choral Symphony, on November 25, was the first in Ireland. In any case, the performance was a good one, which reflected great credit on Mr. Godfrey Brown, the conductor. On December 10, after a performance of The Messiah by the Philharmonic Society, Mr. Brown was presented with a clock and a sum of money in appreciation of his work.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Choral Union sang Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens and Elgar's The Spirit of England on November 19, with Miss Emily Breare as soloist. The Orchestra played the Rosamunde Overture and Ravel's Pavane for a Dead Infanta. Mr. C. W. Perkins gave an organ solo—a Fantasia by an almost forgotten composer, C. E. Stephens. Mr. Richard Wassell conducted.—The City Orchestra's programme on November 27 included Gluck's Overture to Iphigenia in Aulis, Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto (Mr. Paul Beard), extracts from Sullivan's Tempest, and Charpentier's Impressions of Italy. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted.—Mr. Rutland Boughton's Bethlehem was given its first concert performance by the City of Birmingham Choir on November 28. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted, and the soloists included Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Mary Foster, and Miss Dorothy D'Orsay.—On December 3, the Choral Association, under its conductor, Mr. Joseph H. Adams, gave Boito's Mephistopheles, with Mr. James Howles, Mr. Walter Ottéy, Mr. Ronald Brooke, Madame Parkes-Darby, and Miss Mary Macqueen as soloists.—On the same evening the City Orchestra included in its scheme a couple of works by Arthur Bliss—Rout (Miss Grace Crawford) and the Storm Music written for The Tempest, conducted by the composer.

BOURNEMOUTH.—At the Symphony concerts during the past few weeks Mr. Dan Godfrey has given, in addition to more or less familiar works, Francesco Picciati's Pianoforte Concerto, Poema Gregoriano (with the composer at the keyboard), a new Pianoforte Concerto by Arthur Hinton (Miss Katherine Goodson), Malipiero's three Studies for small orchestra, Grieg's In Autumn, Sullivan's Masque from The Merchant of Venice, Svensden's Norwegian Carnival, and the Intermezzo from The Boatwain's Mate, Dr. Ethel Smyth receiving a warm welcome on coming forward to conduct the last-named. Among the soloists who have been heard are Miss Marie Hall, Mlle. Juliet Folville, Siloti, Arnold Trowell, Albert Cazabon, and Lamond. Miss Vera Horton and Mr. Franck Mullings sang in a concert devoted to works by Granville Bantock.

BRADFORD.—Mr. William Baines gave a recital of his own compositions on November 24, at the Mechanics' Institute, the event being under the auspices of the British Music Society.—A young local pianist of promise, Mr. Geoffrey Tankard, played to a large audience on December 1 in an exacting programme, including Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Chopin's Funeral March Sonata, and a couple of Paganini-Liszt Studies.—At the Subscription Concert on December 9 Mr. Hamilton Harty obtained fine performances of the Götterdämmerung Finale (with Miss Agnes Nicholls singing the part of Brunnhilde), Strauss's Don Juan, Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade, and Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings.

BRISTOL.—Verdi's Requiem and Rossini's Stabat Mater were sung by the Choral Society at its second concert on November 19, with Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Robert Radford as soloists. The orchestral work was the Unfinished Symphony. Mr. George Riseley conducted.—The New Philharmonic Society (Mr. Arnold Barter) drew a large audience to Colston Hall on December 3, when, as usual, the programme was off the beaten track: Bach and Saint-Saëns pianoforte duets by Misses Irene Scharrer and Myra Hess, some Boughton songs by Miss Dorothy Silk, and a couple of choral works, Walford Davies's The Five Sayings of Jesus, and Handel's St. Cecilia's Day. Miss Silk and Mr. Stuart Wilson were the soloists. To mark the twenty-first birthday of the Society, and to show appreciation of Mr. Barter's work on behalf of modern music, the members have presented him with a grand pianoforte.

BROMLEY.—The Choral Society was in good form at its concert on November 29, when it was heard in an Elgar programme—King Olaf, and a couple of choral songs from the Bavarian Highlands. The soloists were Miss Sophie Rowlands, Mr. Walter Glynn, and Mr. Joseph Farrington. Mr. Frederic Fertil conducted.

CARLISLE.—On November 17 the Choral Society, with a band and chorus of two hundred and fifty, gave a successful concert in the Drill Hall, Dr. F. W. Wadely conducting. Miss Agnes Nicholls was the soloist in Schubert's Song of Miriam and Mendelssohn's Hear my Prayer. The main choral item was Elgar's The Black Knight. The orchestra played the Eroica.

CROSSHILLS.—The Choral Union sang A Tale of Old Japan and Stanford's Songs of the Fleet on November 26. Soloists: Miss Flora Woodman, Miss Emilie Chapman, Mr. William Laycock, and Mr. Frederick Taylor. Mr. Clement Waddington conducted a very successful concert.

DUBLIN.—Bach provided the bulk of the programme of a concert given on December 8 in aid of St. Ultan's Hospital—the B minor Violin Sonata (Captain Watson, violin, and Mrs. Ellen Duncan, pianoforte), the Concerto in E, and 'Slumber, Beloved' from the Christmas Oratorio, sung by Miss Baird, who also gave a group of songs by Mallison.

EDINBURGH.—The Dunfermline Choir (Mr. James A. Moodie) gave a finished performance of madrigals and part-songs in Usher Hall on November 19, the programme including Wilbye's Thus saith my Chloris bright and Walmisley's Sweete Flowers. Among the solo items was a Bach Prelude and Fugue for organ, played by Mr. H. T. Collinson. The Paterson Orchestral Concerts opened their season on November 14, when the Scottish Orchestra under Mr. Landon Ronald gave a Beethoven programme, with Mr. Rosenthal as soloist in the Emperor Concerto. The second concert was devoted to Brahms and Wagner, and the third presented a more varied scheme—Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Rubinstein's D minor Concerto (Mr. Josef Hofmann), Ravel's Mother Goose, and works by Schubert, Turina, &c. The following week was again a blend of classical and romantic—a Mozart Symphony and Violin Concerto (Miss Jelly d'Aranyi), Berlioz's Carnaval Romain, Holst's Beni Mora, &c. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted the third and fourth concerts. The Amateur Orchestral Society entered on its fiftieth year's work on December 6 with a concert at Usher Hall, Mr. Paul Della Torre conducting good performances of the Magic Flute Overture, Weber's Jubilee Overture, Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto (Mr. J. J. Inlay), and a work of his own, The Death of Hercules, the latter making a very favourable impression. On the same evening the Edinburgh Trio (Mr. John Petrie Dunn, Mr. W. Watt Jupp, and Mr. Bernard Beers) gave a Beethoven concert, playing to an appreciative audience Trios in G major, E flat, and B flat. The Bach Society had a crowded room on December 10 for its second concert of the season. The programme consisted of the Organ Toccata and Fugue in D minor, the Overture in D, and a couple of Church cantatas. Mr. Douglas Dickson conducted.

GLASGOW.—The Choral and Orchestral Union gave its fourth popular concert on December 3, at St. Andrew's Hall, a crowded audience showing keen enjoyment of fare that included Mozart's Symphony in C, the Magic Flute Overture, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto (Miss Jelly d'Aranyi), and Holst's Beni Mora. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted.

HASTINGS.—Purcell's Dido and Aeneas was sung with great success on December 7 and 8 by the girls of St. Mary's Convent School, Baldslow.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir gave its annual concert at the Town Hall on November 19, singing splendidly in Jenkins's The Assyrian came down, Walford Davies's Storm Joy, Boughton's Little Billie, German's O Peaceful Night, Hegar's Phantom Host, &c. The soloists were Miss Megan Foster and Mr. Albert Fransella. Encores came thick and fast. Mr. Irving Silverwood conducted.

KEIGHLEY.—The Keighley and District Orchestral Society opened its season with a successful concert, playing Berlioz's Marche Hongroise, the Egmont Overture, Eric Coates's Summer Days Suite, a selection from Iolanthe, &c. Mr. Arthur Lloyd conducted, in the absence (through illness) of Mr. J. B. Summerscales.

KENDAL.—A successful recital was given in the Town Hall on December 1 by Mr. Osmond Davis, tenor, and Mr. Gerrard Williams, assisted by Miss Sybil Cropper. The programme consisted of five groups of songs and a group of Gerrard Williams's pianoforte works. Encores were frequent, so much so that Mr. Williams by request played a second group of solos.

KIDDERMINSTER.—The Choral Society deserves credit for getting off the beaten track and choosing such a work as Hamilton Harty's Mystic Trumpeter for its concert on December 1. Mr. James Coleman sang the solo. The orchestra played the Hebrides Overture, the Entr'actes from Rosamunde, and (with Mr. A. Chatfield at the keyboard) Guilman's Organ Concerto. Mr. J. Irving Glover conducted.

LEEDS.—The Choral Union gave a splendid performance of Hiawatha on November 16, conducted by Dr. Coward. The soloists were Miss Caroline Hatchard, Mr. Sydney Coltham, and Mr. Arthur Cranmer, and the Leeds Symphony Orchestra rose to the occasion with the chorus.—Mr. Eugène Goossens was in charge of the Leeds Saturday Orchestral concert on November 19. The orchestra was heard to great advantage in the Egmont and Prince Igor Overtures, the Peer Gynt Suite, and Mozart's G minor Symphony. Mr. John Dunn gave a fine performance of the Elgar Violin Concerto, and some solos.

LINCOLN.—At the Lincoln Musical Society's annual concert on November 23, Carmen was very successfully performed under the direction of Dr. G. J. Bennett. The band and choir numbered two hundred and fifty. There was an overflowing and enthusiastic audience. At the final rehearsal of the chorus, Dr. Bennett was presented with a cheque for £50, in recognition of his twenty-five years' devoted service as conductor.

LIVERPOOL.—At the Philharmonic Society's concert on November 29, Mr. Eugène Goossens conducted a comprehensive programme ranging from Bach and Cherubini to Manuel de Falla (Three-Cornered Hat Suite) and Ravel (La Valse). M. Siloti joined the orchestra in the fifth Brandenburg, and also played the Schubert-Liszt Wanderer Fantasia. Mr. Mullings sang a group of Bantock songs.—The Post Office Choral Society did good work at its concert on December 7, singing especially well in Bantock's Cruiskeen Lawn and Elgar's Weary Wind of the West. The singers drew on Handel for the first half of their programme—a string of extracts from The Messiah. Mr. Arthur Davies conducted.—At the Crane Hall recital on the same evening Miss Monica Scott sang songs by Frank Bridge, Martin Shaw, Herbert Hughes, and other native song-writers. Miss Ethel Atwood accompanied, and played solos.—Humour in choralism is sufficiently rare to make the concert of the Wallasey Musical Society, on December 10, something of an innovation. Having sung the kind of music one expects such societies to sing, it proceeded to unbend with a chorus called The Pump (C. T. West), in which is satirised a parish council debate, with interruptions said and sung. Further amusement was caused by a performance of Roddie's Jamie Shaw, in which the words 'Jamie Shaw, lend me your saw,' are treated alla oratorio. Mr. Wilfred Shaw conducted.—The Rodewald Society's concert on December 12 was provided by the Catterall Quartet, which gave excellent performances of Quartets by Hadyn (G major), Franck, and Howells (Lady Audrey Suite).

MALVERN.—Mr. F. H. Shera conducted the opening concert of the Orchestral Society on December 1, capital performances being given of works by Mozart, Schumann, Howells, Vaughan Williams, and Quilter.

MANCHESTER.—Casals was evidently the main attraction at the Hallé concert on November 17. He played the Schumann Concerto and a Sonata by Sammartini-Salmon, with the inevitable Bach extra. The orchestral items were the Barber of Seville Overture, Casella's Le Couvent sur l'Eau, and Beethoven's fourth Symphony. Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted.—The C. W. S. Choir concert on November 24 was notable for fine choral singing in Bantock's Villon Ballade and Balfour Gardiner's Cargoes. Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Harold Williams sang solos, and the Catterall Quartet played some Beethoven and Tchaikovsky.

—At the Hallé Concert on November 24 the Symphony was Tchaikovsky's No. 4. Mr. Josef Hofmann was the soloist in Rubinstein's D minor Concerto, also playing a group of pieces by Rachmaninov, Chopin, and Liszt.—At the Brand Lane Concert on November 27 Sir Henry Wood conducted a programme that included the Overture and Venusberg music from Tannhäuser, the Meistersinger Overture, Till Eulenspiegel, the Emperor Concerto (M. Moritz Rosenthal), the Peer Gynt Suite, &c.—Mr. Baguley Walters conducted the New Mills Subscription Concert on November 30, the programme including Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, and solos by Miss Olga Haley and Mr. Archie Camden (bassoon).—Mr. Granville Bantock conducted his Omar Khayyam (Part I) at the Hallé concert on December 1. The soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Frank Mullings (who owing to illness was unable to sing more than a small part of his rôle), and Mr. George Parker. Mr. Hamilton Harty was at the pianoforte, and also conducted the performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony that completed the programme.

MORLEY.—The Choral Society, assisted by a contingent of the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, sang effectively in Samson, on November 30, with an adequate group of soloists, and conducted by the Society's trainer, Mr. John Groves.

NEWCASTLE.—The Y.M.C.A. Choral Society, two hundred strong, gave a good performance of Elijah on November 23. Mr. James M. Preston skilfully supplied the accompaniments on the organ, and Mr. Arthur W. Lambert conducted.—The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union opened its thirty-fourth season on November 30, singing three movements of Bantock's Vanity of Vanities, Bach's Come, Jesu, come, and some Handel choruses. Miss Margaret Fairless—a native of Newcastle—played the Franck Sonata (with Miss Annie Eckford), and a group of solos, Mr. James Preston played organ pieces, and Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.—The McConnell Wood Northumbrian Select Choir gave its second subscription concert on December 6, being heard to great advantage in part-songs by Elgar and Coleridge-Taylor. Mr. W. McConnell Wood conducted.—The Glee and Madrigal Society gave its last concert of the year on December 8, before a crowded audience. It was a happy thought to mark the centenary of Callcott by singing a group of his glees. Mr. R. W. Clarke conducted.—The Philharmonic Orchestra, at its concert on December 11, delighted a large audience with a varied scheme that included Vaughan Williams's Wasps Overture, the Unfinished Symphony, and Beethoven's G major Pianoforte Concerto (Miss Annie Eckford). Mr. Edgar L. Bainton conducted.

NOTTINGHAM.—Admirable choral singing was heard at the Albert Hall on December 3, when the two choirs trained and conducted by Mr. William Turner—the choir of the Philharmonic Society and the Ladies' Choir—joined forces at his annual concert.

OXFORD.—The Sheldonian Theatre was filled on December 4 when the Bach Choir, under Sir Hugh Allen, gave excellent performances of Bach's Come, Jesu, come, and Mozart's Requiem. Mr. Maurice Besley took charge during a spirited performance of Handel's G minor Organ Concerto, with Dr. W. H. Harris at the keyboard.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Philharmonic Society flew at high game on December 8, when it was heard in Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony, but the excellence of the performance showed that the singers had not been unduly ambitious. The programme included also Stanford's Songs of the Fleet. The soloists were Miss Grace Crawford and Mr. Clive Carey. Mr. Hugh Burry conducted a fine evening's work by all concerned.

RAUNDS.—The Wesleyan Choral Society (conductor, Mr. W. W. Hall) successfully presented Elijah on November 17. The soloists were Miss Florence Mellors, Miss Edith Furnedge, Mr. Leonard Lovesey, and Capt. Horace Stevens.

RIPON.—The evergreen Maritana, eked out by miscellaneous items, received an excellent concert performance by the Choral Society on December 9. The principals were Madame Mabel Tomlinson, Miss Emily Fildhouse, Mr. John Perry, Mr. Reginald Shackleton, and Mr. E. Woodhouse. Mr. R. Pfaff conducted. The hall was packed, and many people were turned away.

ROCHESTER.—Beethoven's Choral Symphony was introduced to this part of Kent on November 23, when the Choral Society gave an admirable performance under the baton of Mr. Hylton Stewart. Mr. W. H. Reed was the leader of the orchestra, which included a contingent from the L. S. O. The soloists were Miss Florence Mellors, Miss Elsie Chambers, Mr. Hubert Eisdell, and Mr. Samuel Mann. The programme was completed by Leonora No. 3 and Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast.

SALISBURY.—A Choral Society of about a hundred and fifty voices has recently come into being. It gave its first performance at the Cathedral on December 7 to an audience of three thousand, Dr. Alcock conducting a fine performance of The Hymn of Praise. The new choir, which has the backing of the Orchestral Society, has started its career in most auspicious style. Something of what is due to Dr. Alcock was expressed at the final rehearsal when he was presented with a cheque from the members of both societies.

SHREWSBURY.—The Philharmonic Society opened its third season on December 8 with The Golden Legend, Mr. F. G. Rowland conducting. The solos were sung by Miss Laura Evans-Williams, Miss Elsie Chambers, Mr. John Terry, and Mr. Harold Williams. The band was drawn chiefly from the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BERLIN

The eighth Fortbildungskursus für Schulgesang in the old Meistersinger town of Nuremberg was visited by teachers, organists, choirmasters, and chorus-masters, along with academic and practical musicians from all parts of Germany, as well as from Sweden and Finland, who sought and obtained instruction and suggestions. He who came not as a fanatic adherent to any method but as an inquirer, returned satisfied and the richer by what he had seen and learned. The director of the course was Oberlehrer Joseph Schubert, singing-master at the Girls' High School at Nuremberg.

The Protestant Church Music Society for the province of Saxe has held a large Church music Festival at Halle. The chief attraction was the performance of a new play, Der Thomaskantor, by Arnold Schering. The author chooses Bach's fifty-third birthday for the time of the action. This permits the introduction of the Cantor's wife, his children—especially Friedemann and Philipp Emanuel—his friends, pupils, and enemies. Intense historical study was demanded in the writing of the play, and the Leipzig life and atmosphere of 1737 have been reproduced. The musical portions are all chosen from Bach. The work was presented by professors and students of the University of Halle.

Musical culture at Darmstadt has progressed for three years under Herr Balling, and concerts are now well attended and economically run. At his last concert Herr Balling produced two novelties. An Orchestral Suite from Richard Strauss's Bürger als Edelmann was sometimes easy to follow and sometimes puzzling. Its dramatic basis seemed to spoil it as concert music. A Violin Concerto in G minor, by Arnold Mendelssohn, proved a valuable addition to the repertoire. It has sincerity, melody, and life. Herr Drumm (leader of the orchestra) played it magnificently.

A Life of Brahms, by Walter Niemann (Berlin: Schuster & Löffler), is new in so far as the author has written a fearless critical study. The book contains an arresting biography and a valuable analysis of Brahms's works.

In performing Ariane et Barbe-bleue of Maeterlinck and Dukas the Aachen town theatre did not so much desire to build bridges as to show characteristic specimens of Western art. This work is interesting, but it does not warm. The German does not love gentle contours; he longs for dramatic life.

A novel experiment was made at the last concert of the Berlin Philharmonic Society, by providing all string players from the first violin to the contra-bassist with instruments that had been improved according to the Ohlhaber Veredlungsverfahren. The inventor, who does not divulge the process, claims that he can give to any ordinary fiddle the tone-quality of the old Italian violins. He has on several occasions submitted his invention to professional players, with, in almost every instance, astonishing results. At the above concert it had to be acknowledged that the string tone was, at any rate, not less powerful than when the members of the Society played on their accustomed instruments.

Bayreuth is in danger of being a thing of the past. The festival plays that before the war had achieved a high degree of perfection, cannot be carried on unless funds are forthcoming to lighten the responsibility of Wagner's descendants. The sum of three million marks is urgently needed if the performances are to be renewed in the summer of 1923. Those who purchase 'Patronatscheine' from the Richard Wagner Verein, Leipzig, will enjoy special advantages.

Another appeal comes from Eisenach, where the house in which Johann Sebastian Bach was born is in urgent need of restoration. It is feared that it may be necessary to pull it down unless money is immediately subscribed for repairs. The house, built in the 17th century, contains the Bach museum, with its many priceless treasures. Contributions towards a restoration fund should be sent to Prof. Straube, organist, Leipzig.

F. ERCKMANN.

PARIS

Despite the deplorable conditions prevailing—which are accurately described in the quotations from Louis Laloy and L. C. Battaille in last month's Musical Times (page 838)—concerts of all kinds are taking place in ever-increasing numbers. The wealth and variety of modern works performed speak volumes for the faith and industry of concert-givers.

At the Concerts Colonne the principal modern works have been: Le Conciliabule des Fleurs, a short tone-picture by D. V. Fumet; Fanelli's Impressions Pastorales; Pierné's Paysages Français; and Le Chant de Schéhérazade, by Mario Versepuy. The excitement caused a few years ago by the 'discovery' of Fanelli, who was living unknown and poor in a suburb of Paris, and the subsequent performance of excerpts from one of the numerous symphonic works he had written, will perhaps be remembered. Whether he is interesting as a precursor only, or whether his works will survive, is difficult to decide from the five pieces now performed. Pierné's Paysages Français proved very delightful.

At the Concerts Lamoureux were played on December 10 three fine Chorals by Kœchlin, and on December 4 a Suite by Niverd. Among other examples of contemporary French music recently performed have been Ravel's Tombeau de Couperin in orchestral form and d'Indy's Trilogy Wallenstein (Pacheloup), and Louis Aubert's Habanera (Conservatoire).

Koussevitzky's concerts at the Opéra have provided a good deal that is attractive: among other things Honegger's Horace Victorieux (its reception in the Press was very mixed), a fine choral work written in memory of the heroes of the great war by Kastalsky, and Moussorgsky's Rout of Sennacherib.

It is when turning to recitals and chamber concerts that one finds it difficult to omit no event of importance. The Parent Quartet at the Salon d'Automne, the Œuvre Inédite at the Salle Touche, the Revue Musicale at the Vieux-Colombier, the Heure Musicale at the Salle Gaveau, the Société Musicale Indépendante (S.M.I.) at the Salle Pleyel, the Samedis Musicaux at the Salle Albert I., along with countless soloists or groups in every concert hall large and small, are doing excellent work, and it is impossible to acquire the remotest idea of the true musical life of Paris unless one follows all these events pretty closely.

To show how difficult and how important it is to do so, a few of the contemporary works, French and foreign, performed recently, may be named: Grassi, Pianoforte Suite, Les Equinoxes (Œuvre Inédite); Milhaud, Violin Sonata (Parent) and Poèmes Juifs (Bertha Albert); Roussel, songs, pianoforte pieces, and chamber works (Parent); Poulenc, La Bestiaire (Revue Musicale) and Le Gendarme Incompris (Wiener concerts); Migot, Mouvements d'Eau, for string quartet, and Blais Fairchild, Persian Songs (S.M.I.); Marcel Bernheim, Poèmes Arabes (Heure Musicale); A. Kulmann, Violin Sonata (Samedis Musicaux); Bartók, Pianoforte Suite, Op. 14 (Wiener concerts); Schönberg, Pierrot Lunaire (Wiener concerts—the method rendered famous by Bülow's duplicate performance of a Brahms Symphony was, not unwisely, resorted to); and, on various occasions, works by new-comers such as L. Bousseret, G. Bas, A. Tansman, Marguerite Canal, &c.

As regards British music, the list is not particularly rich. Let us record, however, a performance at the Salle Pleyel of Ireland's Pianoforte Sonata, by Lawton.

Excellent concerts have been given by Blanche Selva (pianoforte works by Bordès, de Séverac, and Albeniz); Vera Janacopulos (French and Russian songs, Koussevitzky's Concerto for double-bass, played by the composer); the Chanteurs de Saint-Gervais (choral music and part-songs, ancient and modern); Jane Kufferath (contemporary French songs); Yvonne Péan (contemporary French songs and chamber music). Considerable interest attached to the concert given in order to introduce new bowed instruments constructed by a French luthier, Léo Sir. These are intended to take place above and between the usual five, and comprise a 'super-soprano' whose pitch is higher by one-fourth than that of the violin, a mezzo-soprano, a contralto, a tenor, and a baritone (both playing one octave lower than the viola), and a bass playing two octaves below the violin. The new timbres thus provided have induced composers such as Milhaud, Mariotte, Honegger, and others to write works where those instruments are used together with violin, viola, and violoncello. More cannot be said within the compass of this column.

A. BOLD.

ROME

The Augusteum (the city's chief temple of art, as Romans love to style it) fell on evil days when it was lent to the Fascists for their third congress at the beginning of November. These earnest politicians had a grand time in the theatre. They built fires on the stage, and fed them with the gilded seats of the orchestra stalls, shattered electric lamps in the dome with revolver shots, and explored the inner mysteries of the organ. The total damage has been estimated at about two hundred thousand Italian lire, and naturally, the opening of the winter concert season has been delayed. Nevertheless, it was hoped to begin on December 13; and the cartellone has been published, with announcements of promised visits from Nikisch, Albert Coates, Walter Bruno, Vaclav Talich (the Bohemian), Furtwangler, Carl Flesch and Albert Spalding (violinists), Rosenthal and Casella amongst the pianists, and Bossi and Nadia Boulanger amongst the organists. Mr. Coates's visit promises to be interesting, seeing that he is to conduct works of Purcell, Delius, and Holst. And apropos of Purcell, the organist of the Lateran confided to me recently that he is preparing a programme of organ music of English composers of the 16th and 17th centuries. A good sign of widening views—may good fortune wait upon his venture.

The programme of the Costanzi also promises many good things. The novelties announced for the season are Romeo and Juliet of Zandonia, La Grazia, of Michetti, Isabella Orsini, by the Florentine maestro, Renato Brogi, and Emiral, by Bruno Barilli, the well-known critic of the Tempo. The Italian operas represented will be Tosca, Falstaff, Rigoletto, and Puccini's Trittico, Andrea Chénier, Barbière, and Hallo in Maschera, along with Mascagni's Marat. Foreign opera will include Die Meistersinger and Tannhäuser, Rosenkavalier, and Boris Goudonov. Amongst the conductors to visit the Costanzi are Fritz Renier, of the Dresden Opera, Mascagni, Zandonai, and two new Italian maestri, Vincent Belleria and Gabriel Santini.

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

The season here is now safely under way, musician, music-lover, and the general public having had ample opportunity during the past two months to satisfy variable or precise taste, as the case may be. From a novelty point of view, the Scotti Grand Opera Company's production of Leon's L'Oracolo (first performed at Covent Garden in 1905) and Massenet's La Navarraise attracted a good deal of interest. The intensity of characterisation displayed by Antonio Scotti himself in the part of Chim Fang will not easily be forgotten. The other operas given were La Tosca, La Bohème, and The Barber of Seville. Alice Gentle, Joseph Hyslop (Chicago Opera Company), Stracciari, Martino, Mario Laurenti, Queena Mario, Anna Rosella, Italo Picchi, and Angeles Ottein were worthy of particular notice.

Chamber music has been specially favoured by the first appearance in this city of the Letz String Quartet (in conjunction with the new Chamber Music Society) and the second of the London String Quartet, which is on tour in America. Most interesting was the difference in programme and style of the two bodies—the one delicate, artistic, and dainty, yet giving a sound reading of the works, the other bold, manly, yet refined, with a masterful interpretation as remarkable as it was perfect. The English critics need have no fear that this Quartet is deteriorating. In its present condition it will always satisfy an appreciative audience.

The first two of Mr. Campbell McInnes's Nine O'clock recitals were particularly well attended and appreciated. The series of four comprise 'The Art Song from the 15th to the 18th century,' 'Folk-Song (Traditional Ballads, Songs, and Melodies of the British Isles),' 'The Polyphonic Period (Bach),' and 'Schubert's song-cycle, The Winter's Journey.' Both as an education and as a lesson in interpretation this series is creating a deep impression.

Concert recitals have been given by Madame Louise Homer and Miss Cora Chase, Madame Galli-Curci, Henri Czaplinski (of the Hamburg Conservatory), Ferdinand and Madame Fillion (of the Toronto Conservatory), Paul Kochanski, Arthur Friedheim (of the Canadian Academy), Madame Helen Stanley and Edmund Burke, Madame Lazzari and Bauer.

A concert under Mr. Damrosch on November 9 provided Rachmaninov's second Symphony, Le Rouet d'Omphale, Tannhäuser, and the Andante from the String Quartet in A (Op. 8, No. 5) of Beethoven. Miss Bertha Crawford, a promising young Toronto coloratura, showed a distinct and unusually refined style in the hackneyed 'Caro Nome' from Rigoletto.

In conclusion a few words about the new Chamber Music Society would perhaps be of interest. At the end of last season the organization was formed under the presidency of Mr. Vincent Massey, and the direction of the leading musicians of the city, both professional and amateur. Local artists are to be heard in all except two concerts each season. This year the Letz and the Flonzaley Quartets are the visitors. It is a rule at each general concert that a work of a modern British composer be heard. Last year Frank Bridge and Dr. Healey Willan were the favoured. A practice room and library are in course of preparation.

Rehearsals of the following organizations are now in full swing: The Mendelssohn Choir (Mr. H. A. Fricker), the National Chorus (Dr. Albert Ham), and the Oratorio Society (Dr. Edward Broome).

NEW YORK

While certain minds are exercised with the question 'Who will take Caruso's place?' it would seem that his share of popularity has fallen upon the soprano, Amelita Galli-Curci, whose first appearance at the Metropolitan made a sensation.

The more critical music crowd waited for the premiere of Korngold's Dead City, presented at the first matinée. This opera was first heard at Vienna about two years ago, and since then it has been given a number of times in smaller cities on the European continent and has met with partial but not overwhelming success. The same verdict has been pronounced at New York. For a boy of twenty it is certainly a remarkable composition, but its remarkable qualities are principally disclosed by his knowledge of how to do it and not by what he has done. His erudition is boundless. He shows an intimate acquaintance with the great masters of composition who have preceded him, but originality on his part is not the result. A master of orchestration, he has twined and intertwined phrases and ideas of one composer after another in a marvellous way, with no clear and definite idea of Korngold himself left on one's mind. The vocal part of the score is tremendously difficult. The rôle of Marietta was so well sung and acted by Mlle. Marie Jeritza (who created the part at Vienna) that one must acknowledge the success of the new singer to be far greater than that of the opera itself. The rôle of Paul (the lover who sees in Marietta a reincarnation of his dead wife) was entrusted to Mr. Orville Harrold, who did wonderfully well considering his various handicaps, not the least of which was his being unaccustomed to sing in the German language.

The Dead City was the first opera to be given in German at the Metropolitan since that tongue was barred in 1917, and it was quickly followed by a performance of Tristan and Isolde, given also in German. Its fine performance last year in English will be remembered. The cast of last season reappeared—Matzenauer, Gordon, Sembach, and Whitehill, two Americans and two Germans, and Miss Gordon had to re-learn her part, having never sung Brangäne except in English. To those who, like the writer, believe that every opera should be given in the language of the country where it is performed (as is done in Germany and in Italy), it seems a great pity to put Tristan back into German again. Perhaps it was done to satisfy the clamour of the German element among music-lovers; but Germans who make their home here should first and foremost be Americans, and make no demands and ask no favours of that kind.

In the concert halls the two pianists who have attracted the most attention are not new-comers, but old favourites reappearing after long absences. William Bachaus last played here eight years ago, and although he then received almost unstinted praise from his most critical listeners, yet he has climbed still higher on the ladder of fame. His sincerity and modesty remain unchanged, and are even more remarkable in the face of almost insurmountable technical difficulties which he conquers with absolute ease as if the word 'difficult' was unknown to him.

Ernest Schelling returns to us after an absence of four years of war duty, but neither the roaring of guns nor life in the trenches has dulled his brain nor stiffened his fingers. He was an artist of the first rank before he left us, and his forced retirement from his pianoforte has but served to increase his artistic ability. In his able playing of compositions by Bach, Schubert, and Chopin he also showed that he possesses a rare sympathy with and understanding of Spanish music. He was heard in compositions by Enrique Granados.

A Caruso Memorial Concert was given at the Metropolitan Opera House on the afternoon of Sunday, November 27. The house was sold out at opera prices, and the receipts—about 12,000.00 dollars—were given to the Verdi Home for Aged Musicians at Milan. A bronze bust of Caruso was unveiled and presented to the Metropolitan, on behalf of Mrs. Caruso. (It is sad to have to confess that the bust bears no resemblance to the great tenor.) M. H. F.

Miscellaneous

At Timaru, N.Z., on October 13, the Orpheus Choir, under Mr. A. W. V. Vine, sang Elgar's After many a dusty mile, Lee Williams's Song of the Pedlar, and many other part-songs.

The Index of Volume lxii. (January to December, 1921) of the Musical Times is now ready, and can be had, post free, by subscribers, on application to the publishers.

H. R. H. Princess Beatrice has been pleased to accept a copy of Madame Agnes Larkcom's book, The Singer's Art.

CONTENTS

	Page
The Truth about Beethoven. By Ernest Newman...	11
British Players and Singers I.—Harold Samuel ( with Special Portrait )	15
Charles Koechin. By M.-D. Calvocoresi ( concluded )	18
Our Lost Operatic Lead. By Herman Klein	20
The Bach-Elgar Fugue. By Harvey Grace	21
The Origin of Samson and Delilah . By Camille Saint-Saëns	23
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XXIII.—John Lloyd.
By W. H. Grattan Flood	24
Misdirection in Oratorio Singing. By George Gardner	25
New Fiddles for Old	27
Stravinsky Day by Day. By Alfred Kalisch	27
Occasional Notes	28
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	30
New Music	37
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	38
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoresi	39
London Concerts ( with Portrait )	40
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett	44
Chamber Music for Amateurs	45
Church and Organ Music	46
Spohr and his Influence. By C. & Becket Williams	49
Letters to the Editor	50
Sharps and Flats	53
Sixty Years Ago	54
Obituary	54
English Sacred Folk-Song	54
A Novel Performance of The Messiah . By A. S. Macpherson	55
The Art of the Ballad. By Gerrard Williams	55
Royal Academy of Music	56
Royal College of Music	56
Trinity College of Music	57
Music in the Provinces	57
Musical Notes from Abroad	59

Music:

The Night Wind . Part-song for Four Voices. By GEORGE RATHBONE	33
---	----

THREE EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. Portrait of Harold Samuel.
2. Serenade Choral Song for S.A.T.B. By Edward Elgar.
3. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BACH, J. S.—"Iesu Dyrchafedig" ("Jesu, meine Freude"). Motet. Welsh adaptation by REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS. 2s.

BAXTER, F. N.—"Spirit of our God." Vesper Hymn. 1d.

BISSELY, J. G.—"Cold the winter wind is blowing." Christmas Carol. 1½d.

BRIDGE, SIR F.—"The Old Cryes of London." With numerous illustrations and musical examples. 7s. net.

CHAMBERLAIN, N.—"Benedicite, omnia Opera," in D flat. 2d.

DALE, B. J.—"Before the paling of the stars." 1st Violin, 1s. 6d.; 2nd Violin, 1s. 6d.; Viola, 1s. 6d.; Violoncello, 2s. 3d.; Basso, 1s. 6d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

HAILING, R. G.—"Covenanters' March." (No. 86, Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series.) 1s. 6d.

HALLWARD, EVAN.—"Lead, kindly Light." Sacred Song. Two Keys. 2s. each.

HAMILTON-GELL, F. A. W.—A Christmas Carol ("See amid the winter's snow"). 1d.

HULBERT, H. H.—Eurhythm (Thought in Action) The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy. 9s. net.

HULBERT, H. R.—"Rest." Part-Song for S. A. T. B. 6d.

JAKUES-DALCROZE, E.—Rhythmic Movement. Vol. II. 7s. 6d.

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, W.—"Hush! hush! He sleeps" Christmas Carol. 1d. each, or 2s. 6d. per 50.

RATHBONE, G.—"The Night Wind." Part-Song for S. A. T. B. (No. 947, The Musical Times.) 2d.

REED, W. H.—"A reasonable woman." Part-Song for T. T. B. B. (No. 575, The Orpheus.) 4d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 355.—"The Lullaby of Mary." Melody by D. CORNER (1649). With varied Accompaniment by W. MCNAUGHT. "Christmas comes but once a Year." Melody by R. L. DE PEARSALL. Arranged for S. S. A., unaccompanied. 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS: DALE, B. J.—"Before the paling of the stars." Christmas Hymn for Voices and Orchestra. 1s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES: No. 2376. "O lovely voices of the sky." Carol. For Mixed Voices. C. HARRIS. 2d.

PUBLISHED FOR THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BILBRO, M.—Southern Negro Spirituals. No. 1. "Whisper in ma yeah." No. 2. "By the weeping willow." Each, 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

FORSYTH, C.—"Idyll." For Contralto Solo and Three-part Chorus of Women's Voices. 10 cents (4d.).

GAUL, H. B.—"I saw one star." Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

HALL, W. H.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in F. 25 cents (1s.).

JAMES, P.—"By the waters of Babylon." Anthem. 15 cents (8d.).

KNUDSEN, C.—"Glory be to God on high" ("Gloria in excelsis"). 20 cents (10d.).

LEMARE, E. H.—"Christmas Bells." For Organ.

LESTER, W.—"In a Cloister Garden." (Idylle.) For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

SARMOLIN, A. L.—Canzone Pastorale. For Organ.

WEBBE, W. Y.—"Ecstasy." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

WHITMER, T. C.—March for a Festival. For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

ZIMMERMANN, W. P.—"An Evening Idyl." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

— "A spring day." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

— "On a rainy day." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

— "Scherzo." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

— "Song of Triumph." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O.—"THE RUDIMENTS OF CRITICISM." Four valuable models with hints. Enclose 3s. 6d. to "Essay," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

EXPERIENCED ACCOMPANIST, disengaged, desires regular work with singer or orchestra. Terms moderate. "E. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

MISS RITZ, L.R.A.M. (trained in Paris), has a few VACANCIES for the Easter Term. Pianoforte, Solfège, Theory, Harmony. Preparation for Examinations. Apply, 266, Elgin Avenue, W.9.

MACDOWELL, POET AND MUSICIAN.

SOME FAMOUS PIANO ALBUMS.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
FOREST IDYLS, Op. 19 ... ..	4	6	FIRESIDE TALES, Op. 61 ... ..	4	6
LES ORIENTALES, Op. 37 ... ..	3	0	NEW ENGLAND IDYLS, Op. 62
TWELVE STUDIES, Op. 39			Complete	6	0
Two Books, each	3	6	(Or in Two Books, 3s. 3d. each)
WOODLAND SKETCHES, Op. 51			FORGOTTEN FAIRY TALES ... ..	3	0
Complete	5	0	SIX FANCIES ... ..	3	6
(Or in Two Books, 3s. each)			FROM THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY
SEA PIECES, Op. 55 ... ..	6	0	(Transcriptions of Harpsichord and
(Or in Two Books, 3s. 3d. each)			Clavichord Pieces) Two Books, each	4	6

"MacDowell has in his music proved himself as great a poet of Nature as Wordsworth proved himself in verse. One has only to think of the SEA PIECES, WOODLAND SKETCHES, NEW ENGLAND IDYLS, FORGOTTEN FAIRY TALES, and a new world of romance is opened up."—From Musical Opinion.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

MUS. B., F.R.C.O., experienced choir-trainer, recitalist, communicant, desires POST. North or Central London. Sung Eucharist, Anglican or Gregorian. Apply "H. R.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSTEL ORGAN.—Gentleman, Amateur Musician, desires to hear Recital of, say, 1½ to 2 hours' duration, by professional musician, in or near London, on a two-manual Mustel organ (without celeste). To include, if possible, some Trios, i.e., with Piano and Violin or 'Cello. Reply, stating terms, to "Unda Maris," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED, Second-hand SCORES of well-known OPERAS. Norris, Silverleys, Broxbourne, Herts.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy "Songs of the Night" (Oakley). Two sets: Nos. 1 to 4 and 5 to 7. Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

WANTED.—1st and 2nd Violin, 'Cello, and Pianoforte Parts of "Grasshopper Dance," by Buccolossi. Steel, 31, Bow Street, London, W.C.2.

PIANO PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR SALE, with Box Music Stool. What offers? Apply 4A, Odessa Road, Harlesden, N.W.10.

GROUNDWORK OF MUSIC AND EAR-TRAINING by Arthur Mangelsdorff, L.R.A.M. A.R.C.M. Price 1s. 6d. Winthrop Rogers, Berners Street, London, or Arthur Ellarshaw, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MUSIC PRINTING of every description. Large or small quantities. Quick delivery. Alfred Adair, Dept. 3F, 21, Bedford Row, London, W.C.1.

WANTED.—A Pair of TIMPANI, in good condition, and cheap. H. Carlton, Horncastle.

ERARD PIANOS PARIS.

THESE BEAUTIFUL INSTRUMENTS NOW ON VIEW.

Full particulars on application.

S. & P. ERARD,

18, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

MUSIC-ROLLS, 65, 88 notes. New and second-hand. Write for lists and New Year offer to purchasers of 3 new Rolls, Oliver Trading Co., Cromwell House, Holborn, W.C.1.

COMPOSERS' PROBLEMS SOLVED.

PAXTON'S COMPOSERS' DEPARTMENT, Staffed by Experts, is at the Service of all Composers, and undertakes the following work:

CRITICISM OF COMPOSITION.	ORCHESTRATION.
SLIGHT REVISION OF COMPOSITION.	COPYING (SAME KEY).
REWRITING AND IMPROVING.	TRANSPOSITION FROM ONE KEY
WRITING LYRICS.	TO ANOTHER (OLD NOTATION).
SETTING MUSIC TO LYRICS.	TRANSPOSITION (OLD NOTATION TO TONIC SOL-FA).
ADDING ACCOMPANIMENT.

ALSO ENGRAVING AND PRINTING MANUSCRIPTS.

LOWEST TERMS. EFFICIENT SERVICE.

Send your Manuscripts for Production to

W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., COMPOSERS' DEPARTMENT,
22, High Street, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.2.
Stamps for return should accompany all MSS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RHYTHMIC MOVEMENT

VOL. II.

Bars of Six to Nine Beats, with a Chapter on the Application of Rhythmic Movement to Pianoforte Technique.

BY

EMILE JAQUES-DALCROZE.

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE

MOTET

BY

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling,

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE # CHURCH HYMNAL

FOR THE

CHRISTIAN YEAR

JUST PUBLISHED.

A NEW EDITION

OF THE

WORDS

Medium type, with musical expression marks.

For Choir Boys and General Use.

Price, Cloth, Three Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SPANISH SCENES

MINIATURE SUITE
FOR PIANOFORTE AND ORCHESTRA.

No. 1. GRANADA.

No. 2. CASTILÆ.

No. 3. SEVILLE.

COMPOSED BY

JOSEPH H. ADAMS.

Price ... .. Two Shillings and Sixpence net.
Full Orchestra, 5s net. Septet, 3s. 4d. net. Extra Parts, 6d. net.
Piano Conduct'r, 1s. net.

THE JOSEPH ADAMS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO.,
15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NEW SACRED CANTATA

"Elisha and the Shunammite"

BY JOSEPH ELLIOTT.

A PRODUCTION OF OUTSTANDING MERIT.

Also the following have attained GREAT SUCCESS
SHEPHERD OF MEN.

THE SCENE ON CALVARY.

CHRIST THE CONQUEROR.

O. N., 2s.; Sol-fa, 1s. 25% discount for 6 copies or more post free.
SAMPLE OF ANY WORK SENT FOR 1s. HALF-PRICE TO INTRODUCE.

(C DEPT.) JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,
188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT

— SACRED SONG —

BY EVAN HALWARD.

An appropriate and attractive Setting of JOHN HENRY NEWMAN'S immortal words.

Price 2s. net. Published in 2 keys.
By NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, London.

GUIDE TO A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMINATION IN THE ART OF TEACHING

By A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.

Price 1s. 8d. post free.

VIDE PRESS, ETC.

"A handy brochure; gives a clear idea of what is expected."—
Musical Record.

"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.

"Most original and encouragingly helpful."—J. H. Thomas, Esq.
L.R.A.M. And many others.

3, THE CRESCENT, ROUNDHAY, LEEDS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FUGUE IN C MINOR

By J. S. BACH.

TRANSCRIBED FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

By EDWARD ELGAR.

FULL SCORE

Price - - - 10s. 6d.

Orchestral Parts (on hire only).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FULL FATHOM FIVE. Madrigal for Male
Quartet, by Arthur Mangelsdorff. Price 4d. Novello & Co., Ltd.,
160, Wardour Street, London, and from Arthur Ellarshaw, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

A NEW BOOK

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

COMMANDER OF THE ROYAL VICTORIAN ORDER.

GRESHAM PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.

Dedicated to SIR JOHN JAMES BADDELEY, Lord Mayor of London.

THE OLD CRYES OF LONDON

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS AND MUSICAL EXAMPLES

AND A

COLOURED FRONTISPIECE.

Eighty-Eight Pages, Crown 4to ... .. Price Seven Shillings net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

REDUCED PRICE.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a Special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

TEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

Stiff Paper Cover.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

MUSIC STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC FOR LENT, EASTER,

AND OTHER SEASONS

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, IN F (CHANT FORM) ... ..	3d.
BENEDICITE, IN F ... ..	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, IN F... ..	4d.
CHANT TE DEUM, IN E MAJOR ... ..	4d.
BENEDICITE, IN E ... ..	2d.
CHANT FORM—
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, IN E ... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, IN E ... ..	4d.
CANTATE AND DEUS, IN E... ..	4d.

COMMUNION SERVICE, IN E MAJOR ... ..	1s.
--------------------------------------	-----

ANTHEMS.

LENT—LEAD ME IN THY TRUTH (FOUR VOICES) ... ..	3d.
.. STORY OF THE CROSS ... ..	3d.
.. 130TH PSALM, "OUT OF THE DEEP" ... ..	1s.
EASTER—IF WE BELIEVE (FOUR VOICES) ... ..	4d.
.. " " TONIC SOL-FA ... ..	2d.
.. THE GOOD SHEPHERD (FOUR VOICES) ... ..	6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"The Solitudes of the Passion"

CANTATA

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS (S.A.T.B.)

Price ... Two Shillings.

"A useful addition to the store of Choral Works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well selected. The Music is devotional and very singable."—Musical Times.

"The Rudiments of Music and Elementary Harmony"

Price ... Five Shillings.

"As a result the Chapters on Time and Intervals will be found especially helpful. An Addendum gives some useful hints and suggestions on adding bar-lines and time- and key-signatures to a given melody. The section of Harmony takes the student as far as the dominant seventh, and includes chapters on modulation and the harmonization of simple melodies. Some useful test-papers are also provided. Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

"I heard the voice of Jesus say"

ANTHEM

FOR CONTRALTO OR BARITONE SOLO AND MALE-VOICE CHORUS (T.T.B.B.)

Price ... Fourpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHURCH MUSIC

BY

MATTHEW KINGSTON.

HO! EVERYONE THAT THIRSTETH (Solo Bass and Chorus) ... ..	3d.
TE DEUM IN A FLAT (Festal or General) ... ..	4d.
BENEDICTUS IN A FLAT ... ..	3d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN A FLAT ... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D (Short Festal) ... ..	3d.
COMMUNION SERVICE IN A FLAT, complete ... ..	1s.
CONGREGATION'S MELODY TO ABOVE COMMUNION SERVICE (Treble Clef throughout) IN A FLAT ... ..	3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PENITENCE
PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."
Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."
Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."
Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 3s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W. 1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

YORK ANTHEM SERIES 659.

Blessed City, Heavenly Salem.

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, MUS. DOC.

Price - - Fourpence.

BANKS &amp; SONS, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK

BACH'S CHORALS

PART III

THE HYMNS AND HYMN MELODIES OF THE ORGAN WORKS

BY

CHARLES SANFORD TERRY

Litt. D., Cantab.

Crown 4to, 30s. net.

"In this wonderful piece of scholarship is set forth the design and purpose of the Little Organ Book. The volume will give all who play or hear the choral preludes a new interest in these finely expressive works. . . . A great work well done."—The Music Student.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

FETTER LANE, LONDON, E.C.4. C. F. Clay, Manager.

Lenten Anthems by Dr. Walker Robson.

"WEEP NOT FOR HIM."

"O THOU THAT HEAREST PRAYER."

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered

PRICE NINE SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

- I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM.
- II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT. Science of games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games.
- III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonicity—Position of attention—Special exercises for correct poise.
- IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games.
- V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement—feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonetics.
- VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH.
- VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
- VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure.
- IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS.
- X.—THE LARYNX.
- XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs; balance exercises, jumping, and marching.
- XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THAYER'S LIFE OF BEETHOVEN

THE FIRST ENGLISH EDITION

CORRECTED, REVISED, AND EDITED BY

H. E. KREHBIEL.

The best biography of Beethoven, although it was originally written in English, has hitherto been obtainable only in German. This was the work of who wrote it while he was stationed at Trieste as Consul to the United States of America; to which circumstance no doubt must be attributed the fact that his work was first published in the German language from a translation by H. Deiters, of Bonn.

ALEXANDER WHELOCK THAYER

The first three volumes of the Biography were published by Weber, of Berlin. Vol. I. in 1866, Vol. II. in 1872, and Vol. III. in 1879. Vols. IV. and V. appeared later, and they were compiled respectively by Dr. Deiters and Dr. Riemann from a mass of notes left by Thayer at his death in 1897.

Referring to the original German edition the late Sir George Grove in his Dictionary remarks:

"When the work is completed it will be a mine of accurate information, indispensable for all future students. With some condensations an English edition would be very welcome."

Not only has the work been completed, but an English edition, with the desired condensations, is now published under the auspices of

THE BEETHOVEN ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, U.S.A.

The English edition has been revised and corrected by Henry Edward Krehbiel, the well-known critic and musical scholar of New York, from the original manuscript and other material entrusted to him by Mr. Thayer's heirs, and used in the spirit and with the purpose indicated by the author before his death.

It consists of Three Volumes containing in all 1,137 - xxxix. pages; many appendices and reproduced documents, which encumber the German text, being advantageously omitted.

By arrangement with the Beethoven Association of New York, Messrs. Novello & Company have undertaken the publication of the work under a Sole Agency Contract for Great Britain and the Colonies (other than Canada).

PRICE - - £5 5s. NET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHORAL ORCHESTRATION

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

Author of "A History of Music," "Orchestration,"
"Music and Nationalism," &c.

Octavo Size. Cloth.

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE EDITION OF THE WORKS OF ## British Blind Composers

Published for the Institute by

RYALLS & JONES, LTD.,

107, GRANGE ROAD, BIRKENHEAD.

This Edition, published under the auspices of the National Institute for the Blind, is exclusively devoted to selected works of high artistic value by Blind Composers.

OBTAINABLE THROUGH ANY MUSIC DEALER.

"Teachers of the Piano should certainly make a point of examining this Edition, for they will find in it a number of graceful ideas involving useful technical practice. Some of them might very suitably be used as test-pieces for Competitions or junior examinations."—The Times.

Catalogues may be had from the Publishers, at above address, or

NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE BLIND,

224, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Music Department, Tel.: Museum 6460,

where the Edition may be inspected, free of charge.

THE "DISCUS"

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly one thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

MADE BY

WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

17, WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

SELECTED EDITION.

SONGS AND BALLADS.

(VOLUMES I. AND II.)

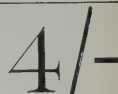

Price ... .. Eighteen Shillings each.

PREFACE.

THIS Selected Edition will contain in one complete series of volumes those songs, ballads, carols, chanteys, &c., from the Author's Collection of traditional music which, in his opinion, are the most characteristic and most suitable for purposes of publication.

The Collection is the product of twenty years' work in the towns and country districts of England and among the English inhabitants of the Southern Appalachian Mountains of North America, and comprises—counting variants, and dance, as well as vocal, airs—some five thousand tunes. A certain number of these have been published from time to time during the period of collection, but, as the Somerset Series, in which the bulk of these appeared, is now out of print, and as, moreover, further additions are unlikely to be made to it, the Collection can now be reviewed as a whole unfettered by past commitments.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE   NINTH  MUSIC TO THE VALUE OF £2 : 5 : 0 FOR  POST FREE, 4s. 6d.

 STAR FOLIO OF PIANO MUSIC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

240 pages of well-varied, popular, and carefully edited Pianoforte Music.

CONTENTS.

Abenlied (Op. 85, No. 12) ... ..	... Schumann	In the Lovely Month of May (Op. 25) ... ..	... G. Merkel
Adieu ( F. Schubert ) ... ..	... Stephen Heller	Maypole Dance (Op. 45) ... ..	... S. Smith
Album Leaf (Op. 99) ... ..	... Schumann	Mélodie D'Amour (Op. 600) ... ..	... H. Engelmann
Andante in G ... ..	... E. Batiste	Morgenblätter Waltz (Op. 279) ... ..	... J. Strauss
Au Bord D'une Source ... ..	... F. Liszt	Nachtstück (Op. 23) ... ..	... Schumann
Auf Flügeln des Gesanges ( Mendelssohn ) ... ..	... F. Liszt	Perle du Nord, La ( Mazurka ) ... ..	... J. Archer
Battle of Prague Fantasia ... ..	... Katzwarr	Prelude (Op. 8, No. 1) ... ..	... H. Packulski
Berceuse (Op. 57) ... ..	... Fr. Chopin	Prelude (Op. 28) ... ..	... Chopin
Berceuse ( Wiegenlied ) (Op. 49, No. 4) ... ..	... J. Brahms	Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 1 ... ..	... F. Liszt
Caprice (Op. 33) ... ..	... H. A. Wollenhaupt	Rock of Ages Hymn Transcription ... ..	... T. P. Ryder
Christmas Bells ( Descriptive Piece ) ... ..	... G. D. Wilson	Rondo Alla Turca (Op. 68, No. 3) ... ..	... F. Burgmüller
Coucou, Le ( Rondo ) ... ..	... C. Daquin	Rondo Brillante ( La Gaité ) (Op. 62) ... ..	... C. M. von Weber
Douce Réverie (Op. 39, No. 21) ... ..	... Tschaiakowsky	Rondo in G (Op. 51, No. 2) ... ..	... L. van Beethoven
Entr'acte Gavotte from "Mignon" ( A. Thonias ) ... ..	... Oscar Verne	Saltarelle ... ..	... S. Clark
Fairy Footsteps Mazurka Brillante ... ..	... L. Williams	Serenade ... ..	... Schumann
Fantastic Legend, No. 2 (Op. 12, No. 7) ... ..	... H. Pachulski	Silver Trumpets ( Grand Processional March ) ... ..	... F. Viviani
Fur Elise ... ..	... L. van Beethoven	Siren's Song, The ... ..	... A. Lindahl
Galop di Bravura (Op. 17) ... ..	... J. Schuloff	Swing Song ... ..	... C. Fontaine
Grande Marche Militaire (Op. 31) ... ..	... H. A. Wollenhaupt	Tendresse ( Morceau Mélodieux ) (Op. 53) ... ..	... J. A. Pachier
Impromptu (Op. 25, No. 1) ... ..	... A. Arensky	Toccata in A (Sonata No. 6) ... ..	... P. D. Paradies
Valse (Op. 39, No. 8) ... ..	... ..	Tschaikowsky	...

INDISPENSABLE TO THE AMATEUR, THE STUDENT, THE CINEMA OR CONCERT PIANIST.

Paper Boards, 5s.; Cloth Boards, 6s.

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS, OR THE PUBLISHERS:—

W. PAXTON & Co, Ltd., 22, High Street, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.2.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No. 5.
1.	Interlude .. .. .	Jour de Noces .. .. .
2.	Chanson de Matin .. .. .	Festival Prelude on "Ein' feste Burg" .. .. .
3.	Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata" .. .. .	Legend .. .. .
4.	There is a green hill far away .. .. .	Allegretto Pastorale .. .. .
5.	Marche Triomphale .. .. .	Benediction Nuptiale .. .. .
6.	Ave Maria .. .. .	Sursum Corda .. .. .
7.	Grand Chœur No. 2 .. .. .	Alla Marcia .. .. .
8.	Andantino in D flat .. .. .	Adagio Cantabile .. .. .
9.	Chanson Triste .. .. .	Fanfare .. .. .
10.	Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I .. .. .	Intermezzo .. .. .
11.	Romanza .. .. .	Easter Morn .. .. .
12.	Allegretto in E flat .. .. .	Finale in B flat .. .. .
	No. 2.	No. 6.
1.	Chanson de Nuit .. .. .	Nocturne .. .. .
2.	Alla Marcia .. .. .	Postludium .. .. .
3.	Minuetto .. .. .	Andante Tranquillo .. .. .
4.	Lied .. .. .	In Springtime .. .. .
5.	Barcarolle .. .. .	Madrigal .. .. .
6.	Spring Song .. .. .	Triumphal March .. .. .
7.	The Curfew .. .. .	Allegro in B flat .. .. .
8.	Pastorale in E .. .. .	Choral Prelude on "Rockingham" .. .. .
9.	Ave Maria d'Arcadelt .. .. .	Præludium Pastorale .. .. .
10.	Cantique d'Amour .. .. .	Romance in F minor .. .. .
11.	The Seraph's Strain .. .. .	Romance in A flat .. .. .
12.	Le Carillon .. .. .	Festal Commemoration .. .. .
	No. 3.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).
1.	Scherzo in A flat .. .. .	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) .. .. .
2.	Melody .. .. .	Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) .. .. .
3.	Serenade .. .. .	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) .. .. .
4.	Bridal March .. .. .	Funeral March .. .. .
5.	Berceuse .. .. .	Funeral March ("Saul") .. .. .
6.	Melodie in E .. .. .	I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") .. .. .
7.	Aubade .. .. .	Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") .. .. .
8.	Nocturne in C sharp minor .. .. .	O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") .. .. .
9.	Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin") .. .. .	Marche Solennelle .. .. .
10.	Passacaglia .. .. .	Marche Funèbre .. .. .
11.	Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cenam Agni" .. .. .	Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" .. .. .
12.	Allegretto in A flat .. .. .	Lament .. .. .
	No. 4.	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1.	Arietta .. .. .	Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" .. .. .
2.	Souvenir de Printemps .. .. .	Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") .. .. .
3.	Andante in D .. .. .	Quem Visitis, Pastores .. .. .
4.	Pavane in A .. .. .	Venite in Bethlehem .. .. .
5.	Harmonies du Soir .. .. .	December—Christmas Morn .. .. .
6.	Grand Cortège .. .. .	Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols .. .. .
7.	Allegro alla Marcia .. .. .	From unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") .. .. .
8.	Visione .. .. .	Pastorale .. .. .
9.	Chant sans Paroles .. .. .	Chorus of Shepherds .. .. .
10.	Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger") .. .. .	Christmas Pastorale .. .. .
11.	Allegro Pomposo .. .. .	A Christmas Pastoral .. .. .
12.	Canzona .. .. .	Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") .. .. .

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.	No.	Book IV.
1. Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. "Elevation"—Andante e Legato .. .. .	Thomas Adams
2. Andante .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
3. Largamente .. .. .	George J. Bennett	3. "Simplicity"—Andante .. .. .	Barry M. Gilholy
4. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	4. Largamente .. .. .	R. G. Hailing
5. Andantino .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	5. "Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Charles H. Lloyd
6. Adagio Cantabile .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Andantino .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchant
7. Larghetto .. .. .	Charles J. May	7. Con Moto Moderato .. .. .	William Sewell
8. Andante con Moto .. .. .	John E. West	8. Andante Amabile .. .. .	William Sewell
9. Andantino quasi Allegretto .. .. .	John E. West	9. Andante .. .. .	Clement M. Spurling
10. Andante .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Sostenuto .. .. .	F. Cunningham Woods
No.	Book II.	No.	Book V.
1. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. "Invocation"—Andante Grazioso .. .. .	Thomas Adams
2. Con Moto .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Percy E. Fletcher
3. Moderato .. .. .	H. A. Chambers	3. Poco Adagio .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
4. Marziale, poco Lento .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	4. Andante Espresso .. .. .	Ignace Gibsons
5. Moderato .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	5. Adagio .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
6. Andantino .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Poco Lento .. .. .	Charles H. Lloyd
7. Adagio .. .. .	Charles J. May	7. Andante Dolente .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchant
8. "Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto .. .. .	John E. West	8. Andantino con Tenezza .. .. .	William Sewell
9. Andante Serioso .. .. .	John E. West	9. Andante con Moto .. .. .	Clement M. Spurling
10. Adagio .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Adagio Molto .. .. .	F. Cunningham Woods
No.	Book III.	No.	Book VI.
1. Moderato e Legato .. .. .	Thomas Adams	1. Dolente .. .. .	Edmund T. Chipp
2. Moderato .. .. .	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Sostenuto .. .. .	Myles B. Foster
3. Andante con Moto .. .. .	George J. Bennett	3. Andantino .. .. .	R. G. Hailing
4. Andante .. .. .	H. A. Chambers	4. Con Moto .. .. .	Alfred Hollins
5. Grazioso molto Espresso .. .. .	Myles B. Foster	5. "Communion"—Cantabile .. .. .	J. Lemmens
6. "Song without Words"—Con Moto .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	6. Andante Religioso .. .. .	Arthur W. Marchant
7. Andante .. .. .	Alfred Hollins	7. Lento .. .. .	Charles J. May
8. Andante Dolente .. .. .	John E. West	8. Larghetto .. .. .	Albert Robins
9. Andante Pastorale .. .. .	John E. West	9. Adagio e Mesto .. .. .	William Sewell
10. Adagio .. .. .	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Affettuoso .. .. .	William Sewell

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

SET I.

No.
1.	Andante ... ..	Alfred H. Allen
2.	Spring Song ... ..	... W. H. Bell
3.	Andante con Moto ... ..	... G. J. Bennett
4.	Song of Thanksgiving ... ..	... Josiah Booth
5.	Church Preludes No. 5 ... ..	... R. E. Bryson
6.	Postlude ... ..	H. Elliot Button
7.	Postlude ... ..	... G. Calkin
8.	Prelude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
9.	Andante ... ..	... J. W. Gritton
10.	Allegro Moderato ... ..	... Kate Loder
11.	Allegro. Op. 21... ..	Gustav Merkel
12.	Andante. Op. 162 ... ..	Gustav Merkel
13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn... ..	... J. T. Pye
14.	Prelude No. 2 ... ..	... A. Redhead
15.	Larghetto and Allegro ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
16.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	... C. Steggall
17.	Contemplation ... ..	... John E. West
18.	Postlude ... ..	... John E. West
19.	Moderato Maestoso ... ..	... Kate Westrop
20.	Andante Pastorale ... ..	... W. G. Wood

SET II.

No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	George J. Bennett
2.	Church Prelude ... ..	R. Ernest Bryson
3.	Andante Tranquillo ... ..	George Calkin
4.	For Holy Communion ... ..	J. Baptiste Calkin
5.	Postlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
6.	Largo ... ..	... Handel
7.	Berceuse ... ..	... Oliver King
8.	Adagio, from Sonatina No. 2 ... ..	... Kuhlau
9.	Allegretto... ..	... Kate Loder
10.	Andante in G ... ..	... G. F. Wesley Martin
11.	Andanti Quasi Allegretto ... ..	Gustav Merkel
12.	Cavatina in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
13.	Epilogue ... ..	Joseph Rheinberger
14.	Andante in A ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
15.	Andante in G ... ..	Charles Steggall
16.	March in G ... ..	... Henry Smart
17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funebre") ... ..	... John E. West
18.	Pastoral Melody ... ..	... John E. West
19.	Andante ... ..	... Kate Westrop
20.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	... W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.
1.	Melody ... ..	A. Herbert Brewer
2.	Maestoso ... ..	George Calkin
3.	Ave Maria ... ..	Edward T. Chipp
4.	Interlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
5.	Intermezzo ... ..	... Alan Gray
6.	Postlude ... ..	Alex. Guilmant
7.	Sursum Corda ... ..	... John Ireland
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
9.	Andante ... ..	Gustav Merkel
10.	Duetto in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
11.	Cavatina ... ..	... Joachim Raff
12.	Monologue No. 5 ... ..	J. Rheinberger
13.	Melody in F ... ..	Anton Rubinstein
14.	Dreaming ... ..	... Schumann
15.	The Poet Speaks... ..	... Schumann
16.	Soft Voluntary ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
17.	Menuetto ... ..	Berthold Tours
18.	Aspiration ... ..	... John E. West
19.	Sketch in C minor ... ..	... John E. West
20.	Andante con Moto ... ..	... W. G. Wood

SET IV.

No.
1.	Romance ... ..	... W. H. Bell
2.	Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor) ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
3.	Canzonetta ... ..	... César Cui
4.	Interlude ... ..	... Th. Dubois
5.	Elegy ... ..	... Edward Elgar
6.	Allegretto ... ..	Niels W. Gade
7.	Judex ("Mors et Vita")... ..	... Ch. Gounod
8.	Intermezzo No. 3... ..	... Alan Gray
9.	Chanson de Joie ... ..	R. G. Hailing
10.	Hymnus ... ..	A. C. Mackenzie
11.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
12.	Trio ... ..	J. Rheinberger
13.	Short Postlude ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
14.	Andante Maestoso ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
15.	Prelude ... ..	... Henry Smart
16.	Fughetta ... ..	... Henry Smart
17.	Choral Song ... ..	... S. S. Wesley
18.	Lamentation ... ..	... John E. West
19.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	... John E. West
20.	Andante ... ..	... W. G. Wood

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FIVE SHILLINGS EACH SET.
CLOTH, EIGHT SHILLINGS EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

This Supplement is part also of the January issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 162.

NORTH LONDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

BY JOHN GRAHAM.

Chorally the North London second Festival was a great advance upon the first Festival. From forty-nine the choirs and string orchestras jumped to seventy-nine. From a total of three thousand performers there was a leap forward to five thousand. Progress was seen in the numbers entered in all the classes, and only one competition out of eighty-five fell through. The choice of music as a whole was excellent, though in the pianoforte section an inexperienced committee chose not too well. In the gold medal classes for singing and pianoforte, the competitors themselves had a turn at the naming of their tests; they also in some cases chose neither wisely nor well. As one of the adjudicators said, 'Think of these selections, and look ahead to the music that will be chosen at this Festival ten years hence.' It is only a baby Festival, and because it is a big baby it is subjected to hard knocks. After all, the adverse criticism applied only to five or six classes.

At the prize concerts no less than ten challenge shields, twelve silver cups, and a hundred and fifty medals were displayed, and six hundred and fifty certificates were distributed by Lady Sydenham and Mr. Alexander Dow (hon. vice-president of the Federation of British Music Industries). In spite of the usual London November weather, the audiences were larger than last year, and the competitions lasted daily and nightly for nine days. No money prizes were awarded, and another special feature was the combined singing of the choirs on several evenings. For this purpose the large hall of the Northern Polytechnic Institute is well fitted. The adjudicators were Messrs. Frederick Corder, Ernest Fowles, Granville Humphreys, Frederick Moore, Arthur W. Payne, Dan Price, Hugh S. Robertson, and Stanley Roper, and Miss Katie Thomas. The local committee, with Mr. Herman Klein as chairman and Mr. John Graham as hon. secretary, took a greater share than before in manipulating the machinery of what is at present the third largest Festival in the country in point of entries. Commendable enterprise was shown by choirs from Nottingham, Portsmouth, Bedford, and St. Albans in competing with the local choirs, and their success was seen among the most important results.

May I, at this Christmas-time, come to the hearth of a few festival workers, and look into the blazing log to see a vision of one of these festivals in its after-effects. The shout of victory of winning performers soon dies down. Tired officers and stewards begin to wonder 'was it all worth while'? The treasurer looks at the balance-sheet, and finds that subscribers are slack in their payments—the entrance fees and the prices of tickets are at pre-war rates. On the expenditure side everything has increased. The committee is called, the correspondence from grumblers is read, difficulties loom ahead. It is best to get this feverish time over quickly. An optimist like St. Paul knew how to deal with such a situation when he said, 'Let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.' The festival movement is a fine school for finding out the men and women of grit and worth.

The writer just quoted hit the other sort hard by saying: 'If a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself; but let every man prove his own work.' Every competitor is put to that test. To some thousands of performers in North London there has come a rude awakening. When spring returns, they will find all's right with the world, and by next November they will be eager for the fray.

The following were the chief awards:

MIXED CHOIRS.

Open Class.

Tests: 'The Evening Star' (George Tootell).
'London Town' (Edward German).

- 1st. Bedford Madrigal Society (Capt. P. Burke).
- 2nd. Portsmouth Clef Club (Mr. T. E. Plater).

Local Class.

Tests: 'My love dwelt in a Northern land' (Elgar).
'Allen-a-Dale' (John B. McEwen).

- 1st. Free Church Musical Society, Golders Green (Mr. W. C. Webb).

Small Choirs.

Tests: 'O Tender Sleep' (Montague F. Phillips).
'Welcome, Yule' (C. Hubert H. Parry).

- 1st. Gipsy Club Choir, North Finchley (Mr. Thomas J. Crawford).

LADIES' CHOIRS.

Open Class.

Tests: 'The Death of Trenar' (Brahms).
'The Bells of Aberdovey' (arr. Percy E. Fletcher).

- 1st. Bedford Ladies' Choir (Capt. P. Burke).
- 2nd. Mr. William Turner's Ladies' Choir, Nottingham.

Local Class.

Tests: 'Stars of the summer night' (John E. West).
'The Cloud' (Percy E. Fletcher).

- 1st. Free Church Choir, Golders Green (Mr. W. C. Webb).

MEN'S CHOIRS.

Open Class.

Test: 'Devil's water' (Edgar L. Bainton).

- 1st. Bedford Liberal Club (Mr. E. Storr).
- 2nd. Wood Green Adult School (Mr. S. B. Goode).

CHURCH CHOIRS.

Men and Boys.

- 1st. St. Faith's, Stoke Newington (Mr. H. G. Luckings).

Mixed Voices.

- 1st. Holly Park Wesleyan (Mr. T. C. Merry).
- 2nd. Crouch Hill Presbyterian (Mr. Harold Bristol).

GIRLS' CLUBS.

- 1st. Downhills E.C. Girls' Club, Tottenham (Mr. L. G. Newton).
- 2nd. Elthorne Hall, Upper Holloway (Miss D. L. Ogilvie).

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CHOIRS.

Girls (Large Schools).

Tests: 'The peaceful western wind' (C. Wood).
'Pan' (Granville Bantock).

1st. Gillespie Road (Miss G. M. Hutchings).

Boys (Large Choirs).

Tests: 'To Music' (C. Wood).
'I saw a ship' (McLeod).

1st. Chase Side, Enfield (Mr. Harry D. Vincent).

Girls (Small Choirs).

1st. Culvert Road (Miss C. Wakefield).

Boys (Small Choirs).

Tests: 'England' (C. Hubert H. Parry).
'The Primrose' (C. Wood).

1st. Duncombe Road, Hornsey Rise (Mr. H. Wooding Monk).

SIGHT-SINGING.

1st. York Road School Choir, King's Cross (Miss G. Sullens).

OTHER JUNIOR CHOIRS.

Boys.

1st. St. Ignatius College, South Tottenham (Rev. A. Colvin).

Girls.

1st. Tottenham High School (Miss L. M. Ballard).

2nd. Enfield County School (Miss Ethel Woods).

Sunday Schools.

st. Holly Park Wesleyan (Miss D. Flear).

STRING ORCHESTRAS.

Test: Prelude, Saraband, and Cebell (Purcell).

st. The Myrtle Orchestra (Miss H. Aldridge).

nd. Metropolitan Academy of Music Intermediate Orchestra (Madame M. Masters).

School Bands.

st. Metropolitan Academy of Music Junior Orchestra (Madame M. Masters).

Elementary School Bands.

t. Hoxton Central School (Mr. H. H. Bray).

SOLO SINGERS.

Old Medals won by Mr. Frank Watts, Eltham, and Miss Beatrice Girdwood, Palmer's Green.
Twenty other first prizes in solo-singing classes.

INSTRUMENTAL SOLOS.

Old Medal (Pianoforte Solo).—Miss E. Vera Rimmington, Crouch End.

olin (Seniors).—Miss Grace C. Scott, Holloway; (Intermediate) Frank Bilbe, Marylebone; (Juniors) Jacqueline Townshend, Cricklewood.

loncello.—Mr. Reginald F. J. Kilbey, South Tottenham.

gan.—Mr. Ivor Davies, Highgate.

irty-five other first prizes in solo, duet, trio, and quartet classes, also elocution and musical composition.

BIRMINGHAM.—May 6-20.

This biennial Festival has attained such dimensions that the syllabus embraces a hundred and eleven competitions, and three halls are to be occupied for thirteen days.

The new features include:

(a) Championship choral classes, open to choirs that have won a prize or first-class certificate in an open class at any leading British festival in 1917-22. The test-pieces are:

Female-voice.—'To the evening star' (Bantock),
'The death of Trenar' (Brahms).

Male-voice.—'Sea-fever' (Cyril Jenkins), 'Lucifer in starlight' (Bantock).

Mixed-voice.—'Be not afraid' (Bach), 'Sweet honey-sucking bees' (Wilbye).

(b) A competition for conductors under twenty-five years of age. After entries have closed a list of short orchestral works—including symphony movements—will be made known. Each competitor will conduct the City Orchestra in one of these pieces, the choice being made by lot immediately before the competition.

[It will be interesting to observe how this works out. We have a suspicion that the conditions (perhaps the only ones possible during a Festival) will tend to level the genius and the duffer. It is easy to beat time while high-class professional players pull you through. The true test—too troublesome to arrange, perhaps—would be in rehearsing works unknown to the orchestra.]

(c) Children's International Dances. We have an idea what is meant, but will not undertake to explain it.

(d) Children's dances in rhythmic expression. The music will be a prescribed piece, an own-choice piece, and an improvisation (by an official pianist?). This is progressive, and one of the competitions we would make certain of witnessing. A battle-ground for Dalcroze and his rivals.

Among the special features of the syllabus are the 'Dale Forty' Musical Scholarship (at the Midland Institute School of Music), which is open for pianists to win; the chance of winning an Entrance Scholarship at the University of Birmingham; and an exceptional offer on the part of Mr. Barry Jackson, of the Birmingham Repertory Theatre, to watch the solo-singing competitions in the hope of discovering talent for opera.

The committee has decided to abolish money prizes, not because it considers them wholly bad any more than we do, but because money prizes provoke a good deal of mistaken adverse criticism.

Lastly, we come to the most engrossing problem of the Festival—public support. On this subject we let the Festival authorities speak:

'The committee, taking into account the conditions prevailing, was prepared for some falling off in the attendance of the public in 1920 compared with that at the last pre-war Festival; but the general apathy displayed was unlooked for, and extremely disappointing, and resulted in a deficiency of such magnitude (being over £500) that the continuance of the Festivals was in jeopardy. However, two or three friends came forward with generous donations to enable the committee to hold the Local Competitions this year, and it had the extreme gratification later on of finding that the value of the Festivals was recognised by such bodies as the "Feeney Trustees" and the "Trustees of the Francis Pearman (Music) Trust," both of whom have made generous grants to the funds of the Society. The grant of £500 from the former was sufficient to wipe off the deficiency on the 1920 Festival, and the latter grant has been used in the purchase of the three Shields bearing the name of the Trust.

'The committee was also greatly encouraged by the active co-operation of the Birmingham Education Committee in the School Competitions held this year. It did everything within its power to enable and encourage the teachers and scholars to attend the competitions, both as competitors and listeners, which was enthusiastically responded to, with the result that thousands of children attended in either one capacity or the other. It only remains now for the general public to show, by becoming members of the Society, and by attending the Competitions in the future, that it also realises what a very valuable asset to this community the Festivals are, and consequently how essential it is that they should become permanently established.'

It remains to add that there are thirteen adjudicators, and that the address of the hon. secretaries (Midland Competition Festival Society, Ltd.) is Queen's College, Birmingham.

We will give further particulars of this interesting syllabus in a later issue, if space permits.

A 'Grand Chair' Eisteddfod was held at Central Hall, Westminster, on November 17. The prize of £25 for mixed-voice choirs in the tests, 'By Babylon's wave' and 'The lee shore,' was won by the Cecilian Glee Society, Middlesbrough. In the male-voice class the prize of £75 was divided between Llanrwst and Trefriw Male Choir and Barclay's Bank Musical Society.

No. 1301.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.
(SECOND SERIES.)

Price 4d 6d.

TO MY FRIEND PERCY C. HULL, HEREFORD.

SERENADE

CHORAL-SONG FOR S.A.T.B.

ADAPTED FROM THE RUSSIAN OF MINSKY BY

ROSA NEWMARCH*

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(OP. 73, No. 2.)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegretto (comodo).

SOPRANO.

ALTO.

TENOR.

BASS.

(For practice only.)

mf Dreams all too brief, p Dreams with-out grief, mf Once they are bro-ken,

mf Dreams all too brief, p Dreams with-out grief, mf Once they are bro-ken,

mf Dreams all too brief, p Dreams with-out grief, mf Once they are bro-ken,

Allegretto (comodo). ♩ = 100.

mf p mf cantabile. mf A -

p pp

come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Dreams with-out grief,

p pp

come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Dreams with-out grief,

p pp

come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Dreams with-out grief,

cantabile. mf

p pp

May be sung
a semitone higher.

* By permission of Mr. Elkin Mathews.

Copyright, 1914, by Novello and Company, Limited.

( 3 )

SERENADE.

- cross the sky the dark clouds sweep, And all is dark and

Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why should you scat - ter them in

Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why should you scat - ter them in

Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why should you scat - ter them in drear a - bove ; The bare trees toss their arms and weep . . .

vain ! . . . Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain,

vain ? . . . Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain, vain ? . . . Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain,

The image shows a page from a music book with a vocal melody and piano accompaniment for the song "The Rose Tree." The vocal part is written in treble clef with a key signature of one flat (B-flat) and a 2/4 time signature. The piano accompaniment is written in bass clef. The lyrics are: "Rest on, and do not wake, dear Love. Dreams all too brief, Once they are broken, come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Once they are broken, come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Once they are broken, come not a - gain." The music features various dynamics including p (piano), pp (pianissimo), and f (forte). The piano part includes chords and arpeggiated figures. The page is numbered 100 in the bottom right corner.

100

più mosso.
ppp
 Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,
f
più mosso.
ppp
 Dreams with - out grief, Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,
f
più mosso.
ppp
 Dreams with - out grief, Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,
f
più mosso.
ppp
 Dreams with - out grief, Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,
f
più mosso.
ppp

SERENADE.

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in . . vain?

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in . . vain?

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in . . vain?

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in . . vain?

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in . . vain?

Tempo 1mo. pp

Tempo 1mo. pp

Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief, Once they are bro - ken,

Tempo 1mo. pp

Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief, Once they are bro - ken,

Tempo 1mo. pp

Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief, Once they are bro - ken,

Tempo 1mo. pp

Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief, Once they are bro - ken,

SERENADE.

cantabile.

p

Hap - py is he, when Au - tumn falls, Who

pp

come not a - gain. Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why

pp

come not a - gain. Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why

pp

come not a - gain. Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why

p

feels the dream - kiss of the Spring; And hap - py he in should you scat - ter them in vain? . . . Once they are bro - ken, should you scat - ter them in vain? . . . Once they are bro - ken, should you scat - ter them in vain? . . . Once they are bro - ken,

SERENADE.

pris - on walls . . . Who dreams . . of free - dom's come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Once they are bro - ken,

come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Once they are bro - ken,

come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Once they are bro - ken,

poco rit.
pp

f
pp
poco rit.

f
pp
poco rit.

f
pp
poco rit.

f
pp
poco rit.

res - cu - ing ; . . . But woe to him who come not a - gain, Dreams with - out grief. But woe to him who come not a - gain, Dreams with - out grief. But woe to him who come not a - gain, Dreams with - out grief. But woe to him who

accel. . . . al . . . più mosso.
ppp

accel. . . . al . . . più mosso.
ppp

accel. . . . al . . . più mosso.
ppp

accel. . . . al . . . più mosso.
ppp

accel. . . . al . . . più mosso.
ppp

accel. . . . al . . . più mosso.
ppp

accel. . . . al . . . più mosso.
ppp

SERENADE.

cres. molto. molto allargando.

vain - ly calls Through sleep - less nights for ease from

cres. molto. molto allargando.

vain - ly calls Through sleep - less nights for ease from

cres. molto. molto allargando.

vain - ly calls Through sleep - less nights for ease from

cres. molto. molto allargando.

vain - ly calls Through sleep - less nights for ease from

Tempo 1mo.

ff pain ! . . . . .

Tempo 1mo. p pp

pain ! . . . . . Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief,

Tempo 1mo. p pp

pain ! . . . . . Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief,

Tempo 1mo. p pp

pain ! . . . . . Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief,

Tempo 1mo.

SERENADE.

rit. pp

Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain. . . . .

rit. pp

Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain. . . . .

rit. pp

Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain. . . . .

rit. pp

(Hadley Green, 1914.)

If you have room for an upright piano you have room for : : :

The Weber Small Grand Piano

Length:
4 ft. 10 ins.
Width:
4 ft. 10 ins.

This instrument is the latest product of the famous Weber factory at Hayes, Middlesex. It is a triumph alike for its producers and for British craftsmanship, for never have any foreign makers succeeded in obtaining so rare a tone in an instrument of such limited proportions. Less than five feet in length, it occupies almost the same space as an ordinary upright piano, but has all the advantages of tone and :: appearance that characterise the Grand type of piano ::

The tone of the Weber Concert Grand Piano has made that instrument the choice of the world's chief pianists, and in this miniature model all the beauties of the Weber tone are preserved. This wonderful new piano may be seen and played in our showrooms; it is obtainable upon easy payment terms that make it as accessible as an upright piano.

THE AEOLIAN COMPANY, LTD.,

(Formerly the Orchestral Co.).

Aeolian Hall, 131-7, New Bond St., LONDON, W. 1.

ROGERS

To the inexperienced all good pianos sound very much alike, but the practised pianist at once appreciates the remarkable range of expression of which the ROGERS piano is capable. This is one of the reasons why the ROGERS has obtained such a pre-eminent reputation in musical circles.

Mr. Ernest Fowles, F.R.A.M., writes: "That the ROGERS piano has become the musician's instrument par excellence, there can be no doubt whatever."

Be sure that your new piano is a ROGERS, and your choice will be approved by every one of your musical friends.

A post-card will bring you Catalogue.

GEORGE ROGERS & SONS,

60, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Marshall & Rose

SUPERB GRAND & UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES

THE PIANOS WHICH INSPIRE

THOSE who purchase the Superb Marshall and Rose Pianoforte can always be confident that their instrument will win the highest measure of praise on account of its superlatively sympathetic qualities. The Marshall and Rose Pianoforte in the making has been treated with the same care and tenderness as a rare violin; it is the supreme outcome of years of experience and steady striving after an ideal; every part of it has literally been trained towards perfection, and the result is an instrument which is almost human in its responsiveness.

The artist who avails himself of this wonderful instrument as a means of self-expression will find that his message never fails in its appeal when given to an audience in such an exceptional manner. Real connoisseurs of Music are convinced that the magic and beauty of the immortal works of the great Composers can only be adequately realised when interpreted on the Piano of Perfection—the instrument which bears the name of MARSHALL AND ROSE.

The Marshall and Rose Grand and Upright Pianofortes can also be obtained containing THE WORLD-FAMED ANGELUS PIANO-PLAYER, which gives you a Piano possessing every musical quality and the ability to play it.

Kindly call or write for Illustrated Catalogue No. 112 to the Manufacturers

SIR HERBERT MARSHALL & SONS, LTD.,
Angelus Hall, Regent House, 233, Regent St., London, W.

GRAND AND UPRIGHT PIANOS

UNRIVALLED FOR

PURITY OF TONE,
DELICACY OF TOUCH, AND DURABILITY.

CHAPPELL

Acknowledged by consensus of musical opinion, to be world supreme—the standard by which all other Pianos are judged.

CHAPPELL PLAYER-PIANOS—GRAND AND UPRIGHT.

Agents in all the Principal Towns.

AMAZING GRAMOPHONE INVENTION AT CHAPPELL'S.

Call at our Gramophone Salons and hear your favourite selections reproduced by the "Cliftophone"—the wonderful instrument which is acclaimed as the ultimate evolution of the gramophone. The "Cliftophone" plays ordinary gramophone records with an extraordinary effect of reality.

THE CHAPPELL PIANO CO., LTD., Showrooms: 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.-1.

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

3 9999 08819 011 9

JUL 25 1927

